"Merger" in the criminal law occurs where the same act of crime is within the definition of a misdemeanor and likewise a felony, or of a felony and likewise of a treason; and the rule is that the lower grade merges in the higher. That is, an act cannot be both a felony and a misdemeanor—a doctrine which applies only where the identical act constitutes both offenses. * * * Subject to whatever exception may be found in the doctrine of merger, a criminal person may be holden for any crime, of whatever nature, which can be legally carved out of his act. He is not to elect, but the prosecuting power is. If the evidence shows him to be guilty of a higher offense than he stands indicted for, or of a lower, or of one differing in nature, whether under a statute or at the common law, he cannot be heard to complain; the question being whether it shows him to be guilty of the one charged." State v. Smith, 90 S. W. 440, 444, 190 Mo. 706 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. Cr. Law [7th Ed.] §§ 786, 791).

MERINO WOOL

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K, par. 349, relating to wools, the words "merino blood, immediate or remote," convey an unmistakable meaning, and include wool in which the presence of merino blood is marked, though of inferior quality. United States v. American Express Co., 177 Fed. 735, 739.

MERIT

MERITORIOUS DEFENSE

Where a complaint alleged execution by defendants of a penal bond, the condition of which was that defendants would make certain repairs to a building for plaintiffs that they had failed to perform, and a default judgment was entered thereon, an answer admitting the execution of the bond and failure to perform, but alleging that the building was leased to defendants for gambling purposes, does not on a motion to set aside the default judgment set up a "meritorious defense," within Mills' Ann. Code, § 75, authorizing relief under such circumstances. McConnell v. Schultz, 128 Pac. 876, 877, 23 Colo. App. 194.

The word "meritorious," as used in connection with a "meritorious defense," means that the defense is good and lawful, and, when pleaded properly in time, must be recognized as a good lawful defense. While any defense given by statute is meritorious, it does not follow that for that reason it has merit equal to any other defense, thus removing from the courts the right to discriminate between different defenses, so that, where it appears that a defense otherwise meritorious when offered for the first time in an amended pleading if allowed would work an injustice instead of a justice, the court should refuse it. O'Neill v. Jones, 123 N. W. 495, 496, 24 S. D. 79.

MERITS

As a technical legal term, "merits" has been defined as a matter of substance in law as distinguished from matters of form, and as the real or substantial grounds of action or defense, in contradistinction to some technical or collateral matter raised in the course of the suit. Wolfe v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 65 S. E. 62, 63, 6 Ga. App. 410 (citing 5 Words & Phrases, p. 4493).

"The term 'merits' has been defined as meaning the strict legal rights of the parties as distinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself and from all matters which depend upon the discretion or favor of the court—matters of substance in law as distinguished from matters of form." Smoot v. Judd, 83 S. W. 481, 519, 184 Mo. 508.

The act of the trial court in an election contest in changing the case from the jury docket to the nonjury docket at a subsequent term, after an order had been made placing it upon the jury docket, but on the faith of which no steps had been taken, is within the discretion of the trial court, since the rule that trial judges cannot, at subsequent terms, change orders made at former terms does not apply to mere practice points, but only to the "merits of the controversy," which term is not confined to points in actual litigation. Taylor v. Carr, 141 S. W. 745, 748, 125 Tenn. 235, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 155.

In November, 1903, at the instance and request of plaintiff's counsel, a stipulation was entered into embracing the facts relevant to all the issues except one. Such stipulation was entered into in good faith, without fraud or any attempt to deceive plaintiff's counsel, and after most careful consideration. Defendant's counsel in good faith relied upon such stipulation for nearly six years. In March, 1908, the cause was tried and submitted upon such stipulated facts and certain testimony relevant to the issue not covered by the stipulation. In May, following, the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law favorable to plaintiff, and ordered judgment accordingly, which was entered pursuant thereto on May 14, 1908. Defendant's counsel thereafter took steps to settle a statement of the case preparatory to appealing to the Supreme Court, and on July 25, 1908, on application of plaintiff's counsel, an order was made requiring defendant to show cause why an order should not be made vacating and setting aside such findings of fact, conclusions of law, and order for judgment, and judgment, and also why plaintiff should not be relieved from a portion of such stipulation of facts, or why such stipulation of facts should not be modified by eliminating such portion, or why the parties should not be relieved in toto from such stipulation. Upon the return of such order to show cause, and after due hearing, the order complained of was made vacating the findings, conclusions, order for judgment, and judgment. It was held that such order, in so far as it vacates the findings of fact, and relieves the parties from such stipulation, is appealable under subdivision 4, § 7225, Rev. Codes 1905, upon the ground that it "involves the merits" of the action or some part thereof. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Barlow, 126 N. W. 233, 237, 20 N. D. 197, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 763.

Amendment of pleading

The term "merits," in Code Civ. Proc. § 11, giving the right of appeal from an order involving the "merits," embraces more than the questions of law and fact constituting a cause of action or defense, and, whenever a substantial right of a party to an action material to obtaining a judgment is denied, a right of appeal lies. An order requiring plaintiff to amend his complaint by stating what of the acts charged were negligent and what willful is appealable. Lynch v. Spartan Mills, 44 S. E. 93, 95, 66 S. C. 12 (citing Blakely & Copeland v. Frazier, 11 S. C. 122).

Change of venue

An order granting a change of venue in a civil action involves the merits, and is appealable, under Rev. Codes 1899, § 5626, providing that an order is appealable when it involves the merits of an action or some part thereof. Robertson Lumber Co. v. Jones, 99 N. W. 1082, 13 N. D. 112 (citing White v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 41 N. W. 780, 5 Dak. 508).

Dismissal

Where there is conflicting evidence as to a question of fact on which plaintiff's right to recover depends, the court may not dismiss the case "on the merits" under Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1561, c. 580, § 249), authorizing such dismissal where, at the close of the whole case, the court is of the opinion that plaintiff is not entitled to recover as matter of law. Bowen v. Farley, 99 N. Y. Supp. 205, 113 App. Div. 767.

Where a defendant is discharged because there was not sufficient evidence to hold him for trial, that is a "dismissal on the merits" within the meaning of Liquor Tax Law, § 25. People ex rel. J. & M. Hoffman Brewing Co. v. Clement, 124 N. Y. Supp. 102, 105, 139 App. Div. 502.

The precise meaning to be given to the words "on the merits" in an order or judgment has never been very clearly defined. It has been said that they are to be regarded as referring to the strict legal rights of the parties as contradistinguished from mere questions of practice. It is, however, not of controlling importance whether or not the judgment is declared to be on the merits; the real question being whether it is in fact an adjudication on the merits. A judgment dismissing a complaint on demurrer was one on the merits where there was no formal or technical defect or omission in the complaint, and it was obvious that it contained every allegation necessary to establish a cause of action if the contract sued on was lawful and valid. Hirschbach v. Kitchin, 81 N. Y. Supp.

957, 959, 40 Misc. Rep. 306 (citing St. Johns v. West [N. Y.] 4 How. Prac. 329).

The dismissal of a bill to set aside certain tax bills for alleged illegality after hearing and the awarding of a judgment for costs in favor of the defendant is a judgment on the merits, and is conclusive against a subsequent attack on the validity of the tax bills in a suit between the same parties. Pond v. Huling, 101 S. W. 115, 117, 125 Mo. App. 474.

Judgment on the pleadings

A judgment on the pleadings is conclusive, if it determines the merits of the controversy, as distinguished from the merits of the pleadings attacked, as the term "merits" is used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1005, providing that in every case other than those specified in section 1004 the judgment must be rendered on the merits. Glass v. Basin & Bay State Min. Co., 90 Pac. 753, 754, 35 Mont. 567.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, prescribing when an action may be dismissed or a nonsuit entered, and section 582, providing that in every other case judgment must be rendered on the merits, a judgment on the pleadings is a judgment on the merits, so far as its conclusiveness is concerned. Bailey v. Aetna Indemnity Co. of Hartford, Conn., 91 Pac. 416-419, 5 Cal. App. 740.

Quashing writ of mandamus

A motion to quash an alternative writ of mandamus on the ground of its insufficiency does not "involve the merits," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2075, providing that an alternative writ cannot be quashed on motion for any matter involving the merits. People ex rel. Ajas v. Department of Health of City of New York, 123 N. Y. Supp. 294, 297, 138 App. Div. 559.

Striking out pleading

An order, striking out most of defendant's answer embracing new matter relevant and material, held an order "involving the merits, and necessarily affecting the judgment," within Rev. Codes 1905, § 7081, including in the judgment roll "all orders and papers in any way involving the merits and necessarily affecting the judgment," and hence reviewable on appeal from the judgment. State v. Meyers, 124 N. W. 701, 705, 19 N. D. 804.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

One of the distinguishing features of the "merry-go-round" is the inspiring music which it furnishes. A "scenic railway" being a railway on which cars are run for the purposes only of amusement, where the track is elevated for a considerable distance at the place of beginning and built on an incline, the cars being propelled by the force of gravity, is not "such place of public amusement" as a "merry-go-round," and is not prohibited from being kept open on Sunday, by Rev. Codes, § 6825. Ex parte Hull, 110 Pac. 256, 18 Idaho, 475, 80 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465.

MERTON

See Statute of Merton.

MESNE

MESNE PROCESS

"Mesne process" is defined by Bouvier's Law Dictionary as "process which is issued in a suit between the original and final process." Moredock v. Kirby, 118 Fed. 180, 185.

MESNE PROFITS

The words "mesne profits," within the rule that "mesne profits" only and not damages for trespass are recoverable, under Code 1896, § 1555, in ejectment, mean compensation for use and occupation. Henry v. Davis, 43 South. 122, 123, 149 Ala. 359, 13 Ann. Cas. 1090 (citing Prestwood v. Watson, 20 South. 600, 111 Ala. 604, 610).

The common-law rule that only nominal damages are recoverable in ejectment has been modified by statute authorizing a recovery of "mesne profits," which, under Civ. Code 1896, § 1555, are damages from the commencement of the tortious withholding to the time of the verdict, except as modified by sections 1535, 1540, defining the liability of a tenant asserting his right to possession under a lease and the liability of a person holding under color of title in good faith. Scott v. Coulson, 47 South. 60, 61, 156 Ala. 450.

METALLIC CIRCUIT

Where an electric current travels its entire course upon wires without coming into contact with the earth, it is known as a "metallic circuit." Smith v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 87 S. W. 71, 73, 113 Mo. App. 429.

METALLURGICAL COKE

"Metallurgical coke" is coke suitable for the smelting of iron. Hotchkiss v. Bon Air Coal & Iron Co., 78 Atl. 1108, 1114, 108 Me. 34.

METHOD

See Bench Method; Business Methods; Catalogue System or Method.

METHYL ALCOHOL

"Methyl alcohol" is obtained by the distillation of wood, and is the "wood alcohol" of commerce. People v. Bowen, 74 N. E. 489, 493, 182 N. Y. 1 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster's International Dict.).

METIORITE

As property, see Real Property.

MEXICAN ONYX

Dutiable as onyx, see Onyx.

MFG.

The letters "Mfg." are an abbreviation of the word manufacturing and a corporate signature employing such letters instead of the word "manufacturing" is sufficient. Selberling v. Miller, 69 N. E. 800, 802, 207 Ill. 443.

MICANITE

"Micanite" is a trade-name given to a substitute for mica, which has established for itself a recognized place in the electrical art. It is cheaper, more uniform as to dielectric strength, has a less possibility of flaws, can be easily molded or cut so that it can be had in required sizes larger than mica. Mica Insulator Co. v. Union Mica Co., 137 Fed. 928, 933.

MICROPHONE TRANSMITTER

Every "microphone transmitter," as commonly understood in the telephonic art, is an instrument having carbon electrodes in loose or feeble contact. But a transmitter may still be a microphone without having carbon electrodes, provided the electrodes are of solid material, and so capable of embodying microphonic action. American Bell Tel. Co. v. National Tel. Mfg. Co., 119 Fed. 893, 898, 56 C. C. A. 423.

MIDDLEChannel or river

The western boundary line of Tennessee, declared and fixed by treaties and legislative enactments to be "the middle of the Mississippi river," means a line along the river bed equidistant from the visible, defined, and substantially established banks confining the waters on either side, and does not mean the center of that part of the river which is deepest and constitutes the channel of commerce. This construction has become a rule of property and should not be disturbed. State v. Munice Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 441, 119 Tenn. 47.

In international law and by usage of European nations, the term "middle of the stream" as applied to a navigable river is the same as the middle of the channel of such stream. State of Louisiana v. State of Mississippi, 28 Sup. Ct. 408, 421, 202 U. S. 1, 50 L. Ed. 913 (quoting Iowa v. Illinois, 13 Sup. Ct. 239, 147 U. S. 1, 37 L. Ed. 55).

The middle of the main channel of the river is what is meant by the words "the middle channel of said river" in the act of February 14, 1859, admitting Oregon into the Union, with the Columbia river as its northern boundary. State of Washington v. Oregon, 29 Sup. Ct. 631, 632, 214 U. S. 205, 53 L. Ed. 969.

The middle line of a nonnavigable river at low-water mark is not the center of the channel, which means the continuous course of deepest water, but is a line equally distant from all points on the opposite banks at right angles with the thread at low-water mark. Micelli v. Andrus, 120 Pac. 737, 740, 61 Or. 78.

MIDDLEMAN

A middleman is a broker whose duties are limited by his contract to finding and procuring a purchaser able, willing, and ready to accept his client's terms or to effect a transaction with his client on any terms satisfactory to both, the term "middleman" being merely descriptive of the nature of the contract of employment, he being in no fiduciary relation to his principal nor under any obligation not to receive compensation from the opposite party to the transaction, while a broker, in addition to the duties of a middleman, is employed to use discretionary authority for the benefit of his employer and to act for his best interests, and therefore may not accept a secret double employment or commissions from both parties. Langford v. Issenhuth, 134 N. W. 889, 893, 28 S. D. 451.

MIDDLINGS

See Wheat Middlings.

"Middlings" are the parts of a kernel of grain next to the skin of the berry, which, by the later milling processes, are reground so as to form a very fine flour, with larger and more uniform granules than that from the first grinding; also, the coarser particles resulting from milling, intermingled with foreign matter used for stock food. State v. Weller, 85 N. E. 761, 762, 171 Ind. 53.

MIDSHIPMAN

See Cadet Midshipman.

MIDWIFE

Both medical and popular lexicographers define "midwife" as a female obstetrician. Commonwealth v. Porn, 82 N. E. 31, 196 Mass. 326, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 13 Ann. Cas. 569.

MIDWIFERY

Both medical and popular lexicographers define "midwifery" as the practice of obstetrics. Commonwealth v. Porn, 82 N. E. 31, 196 Mass. 326, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 13 Ann. Cas. 569.

MIGHT

"The word 'might,' as defined by Webster, denotes not alone possibility, but also ability and capability. 'Could' denotes ability and capability." Hence instructions which used "might" and "could" interchangeably held not erroneous as allowing the jury to enter the realm of conjecture. Nelson v. Boston & Montana Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 88 Pac. 785, 786, 35 Mont. 223.

A warning given by an officer to one in his custody, which was in the usual form, with the exception of the use of the word "might" instead of "would or could," the officer telling the one in custody that any statement he might make "might" be used against him, was sufficient. Garrett v. State, 91 S. W. 577, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 235.

In an action for assault on a passenger by fellow passengers, in an instruction stating the duty of the conductor to protect the party assaulted if he "anticipated that such assault might be made," it was not error to use the word "might" instead of "would," since the law requires that a carrier use the highest degree of diligence to protect passengers from assault which may be reasonably anticipated, and the word "might" is used in place of "may" when referring to past time or a past event. Louisville Ry. Co. v. Wellington, 126 S. W. 370, 371, 137 Ky. 719.

An instruction defining the term "feloniously" as an intent to commit a felony, or an intent to commit a wrongful act which "might" result in the commission of a felony, was erroneous, as the jury was in effect told that a person is presumed by law to intend all the possible, rather than the reasonably probable, consequences of his voluntary wrongful act. State v. Denny, 117 N. W. 869, 870, 17 N. D. 519.

Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, § 123, provides that any person aggrieved by any decision of the county commissioners in any proceeding relating to highways may appeal therefrom, etc., and that such appeal shall be tried de novo, and may be had as to any issue tried, "or that might have been tried," before the county board. Held, that the last clause only authorizes the trial of such issues on appeal as might have been tried under issues made before the board, and does not authorize the trial of issues not presented to the board. Ætna Life Ins. v. Jones, 89 N. E. 871, 872, 874, 173 Ind. 149.

MIGHTY FAST

While the expression "mighty fast" is a term of relative meaning, when applied to the speed of a street car it is sufficiently definite to enable the jury to say whether or not the car was traveling in excess of seven miles an hour. In an action against a street railroad for injuries to a passenger, evidence that the car was going "mighty fast" was sufficient to render it error to exclude an ordinance limiting the rate of speed of a street car to seven miles an hour. Moore v. Northern Texas Traction Co., 95 S. W. 652, 653, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 583.

MIKE

"Mike" is not universally recognized abbreviation of "Michael," but is, strictly speaking, a mere diminutive or nickname. Ohlmann v. Clarkson Sawmill Co., 120 S. W. 1155, 1158, 222 Mo. 62, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 432, 138 Am. St. Rep. 506.

MILCH COW

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2395, which exempts to every family from forced sale "five milch cows and their calves," heifers which had never been milked but which were with calf when the levy was made, and which the debtor, who was the head of the family, was keeping as his milch cows, are exempt. Patterson v. English (Tex.) 142 S. W. 18.

MILE

See English Geographical Miles; Knot; Marine Miles.

"The statute, or English, 'mile' was adopted as the standard of land measurement in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, 1593. * * * The statute 'mile' measures 5,280 feet on the land." In the Muscongru Grant by the council of Plymouth in Devon, England, made between 1620 and 1635, after the inauguration of the geographical or marine mile, granting certain land, etc., within three miles of the mainland, the three-mile limit is to be measured by the geographical or marine mile or knot, and not by the statute "mile." Lazell v. Boardman, 69 Atl. 97, 99, 103 Me. 292, 13 Ann. Cas. 673 (citing Rockland, M. D. & S. Steamboat Co. v. Fessenden, 8 Atl. 550, 79 Me. 140).

In a prosecution under Code 1907, § 7787, for failure to work on a public road after legal notice given to one living "within three miles" thereof, the distance, in view of Code 1907, § 5804, means on an air line, where there are no barriers between impassable by ordinary means, and not a computation of the distance according to the practicable and usual way of travel. Howell v. State, 54 South. 542, 543, 171 Ala. 62.

MILEAGE

As Fees, see Fees.

As salary, see Salary.

Mileage is compensation allowed to public officers for their expenses while traveling on public business. Board of Com'rs of West-on County v. Blakely (Wyo.) 123 Pac. 72, 77.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7335, which provides that a sheriff shall tax and charge the fees provided by law on account of services performed by him, the fees and amounts so charged to be designated "sheriff's costs," which shall be the property of the county, and section 240 which provides that words and phrases used in a statute shall be taken in their plain, ordinary, or usual sense, but that technical words and phrases shall be understood according to their technical import unless such a construction would be repugnant to the legislative intent or to the context of the statute, the amounts charged and collected by a sheriff as statutory mileage in the service of writs, summonses, notices, etc., are to be considered as fees provided by law on account of service in the discharge of official duties, and not as a reimbursement to him for expenses incidentally incurred in the service of such writs, so that when collected they belong to the county, and not to the sheriff personally. Roberts v. Board of Com'rs of Brown County (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1015.

MILEAGE BOOK

"A 'mileage book' is a contract of carriage having attached thereto coupons, one for every mile; each coupon being in two parts, one part for the passenger's fare, the other for his baggage. When the baggage is checked, the baggage portion of every coupon according to the distance is torn off, and no more baggage can be checked upon the mileage book, unless the remainder of these coupons, representing the carriage of the passenger, has been detached." One who leaves trunks in a baggage room by permission of the baggage clerk upon a statement that he will depart on a train the next day, and will then check them, cannot hold the railway company responsible as a carrier of baggage for the destruction of the trunks by fire, though he holds a mileage book good for transportation on the railway company's trains. Southern R. Co. v. Rosenheim & Sons, 58 S. E. 81, 82, 1 Ga. App. 768.

MILITARY

MILITARY EXPEDITION OR ENTERPRISE

The term "military expedition," as used in Rev. St. § 5286, denouncing the organization of a military enterprise in the United States to be carried on against any foreign prince or state, does not contemplate an expedition or enterprise in matters of pleasure, commerce, or business, of a civil nature, unattended by the design of an attack, invasion, or conquest, but rather a hostile intention connected with the act of beginning or setting on foot the expedition or enterprise. United States v. Ybanex, 53 Fed. 536, 537.

MILITARY PURPOSE

Armories are primarily intended for "military purposes," but the term "military purposes" must be understood to comprehend all such uses as may be said to be incidental to the general purpose to conserve the military needs of the regimental organization. Military balls and other entertainments which are frequently given at armories cannot be said to be for "military purposes," except in the sense that they contribute to the interest and good feeling of the members of the military organization. In that sense they are clearly consistent with the general purposes for which the armory buildings were intended. On the other hand, an armory cannot properly be devoted to a purely commercial use in disregard of military needs. Hamill v. Dungan, 68 Atl. 1096, 1097, 74 N. J. Eq. 251.

MILITARY RESERVATION

In creating the Lake Superior land district in 1847, Congress reserved from the lands open for sale certain lands for school purposes, and also such reservations as the President should deem necessary for public purposes. Pursuant to the authority so given, the President, in order to have time to ascertain what lands were necessary for public purposes, reserved a number of tracts temporarily, one of which, consisting of half a township, included Ft. Brady on St. Mary's river, together with the reservation on which it stood, and also a small tract previously reserved to the Indians by treaty for a camp, together with other lands. By a subsequent executive order in 1852, the reservations were more narrowly defined, and all the remaining lands so temporarily reserved, "except the military reservation at Ft. Brady," were released from reservation. The Indian right was extinguished by treaty in 1855. Held, that the exception in the order of release of the "military reservation at Ft. Brady" included only the original reservation as defined prior to 1847, and not the entire temporary reservation of that year which was the contemporaneous construction of the order by the department, so that in any event the Indian reservation became public lands, subject to disposition by the government after the treaty of 1855, and a patent subsequently issued therefor is valid. United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Water Power Co., 152 Fed. 25, 34, 81 C. C. A. 221.

MILITARY ROAD

"The only 'military roads' belonging to the United States within the states are in the military reservations." Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western U. Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, 17, 24 L. Ed. 708.

The "militia" of the state is an arm of the state government, and is in no sense such a county institution or establishment as that any particular county can, exclusively, be required to impose taxes for its, or any part of its, maintenance. *State ex rel. A product of a patented chemical process for treatment of milk, called "concentrated milk," diluted by water, does not constitute "milk," within Rev. Laws, c. 56, § 55, prohibiting the keeping for sale of milk to which water has been added. Commonwealth v. Boston White Cross Milk Co., 95 N. E. 85, 87, 209 Mass. 30, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 386.

A provision of a sanitary code adopted by a city board of health that no owner, lessee, or occupant of any restaurant, etc., which shall purchase milk or cream from any person or corporation not having obtained a license as therein provided, shall use, sell, or dispose of any milk, cream, or ice cream without obtaining a license, only requires a person selling ice cream to obtain license where it is made from milk or cream purchased from an unlicensed person or corporation, and not where the ice cream itself is so purchased, since, while "ice cream" is mostly cream or milk, it is a manufactured article with other ingredients, and is not covered by the term "milk or cream." Syracuse Ice Cream Co. v. City of Cortland, 138 N. Y. Supp. 388, 389, 153 App. Div. 456.

MILL

See Cotton Seed Oil Mill; Public Mill; Roller Mill; Saw Mill; Spinning Mill; Water Mill.

The word "mill" has two definitions, primary and secondary: (1) A complicated engine or machine for grinding and reducing to fine particles grain, fruit, or other substance, or for performing other operation by means of wheels and a circular motion as a gristmill for grain, a coffee mill, cider mill, and bark mill. The original purpose of mill was to comminute grain for food, but the word "mill" is now extended to engines or machines moved by water or steam for carrying on many other purposes, as oil mills, sawmills, slitting mills, bark mills, fulling mills, etc. (2) The house or building that contains the machinery for grinding. Inhabitants of Norway v. Willis, 72 Atl. 733, 734, 105 Me. 54 (citing State v. Livermore, 44 N. H. 386, 387).

The word "mill" does not ordinarily indicate a place or building in which goods are stored for hire. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 947, 230 Ill. 623.

Where a plaintiff purchased of defendant a sawmill and all machinery connected therewith located on certain land, reserving everything on the land, except timber, sawmill, and machinery, the term "sawmill" was limited to a machine constructed for the purpose of sawing logs, and therefore did not include the shed covering the mill. A sawmill is a machine for sawing logs, whether or not it is accompanied by a shed, and a shed covering such a mill is not a part of the sawmill, but is a part of the real estate to which it is attached. A saw is "a tool for cutting," and a "mill" is "a machine for grinding." According to the standard lexicographers, the first meaning of "mill" is a machine or device for grinding, cutting, etc. The particular purpose for which it is designed is usually designated by a prefix, such as sawmill, gristmill, etc. The term "mill" necessarily carries with it the idea of a machine, device, or tool, but it does not necessarily convey with it the idea of a shed or house. The term "mill" is frequently used to designate not only the machine used for grinding, cutting, etc., but also in a general and comprehensive sense to designate the house or shed where such machinery may be in operation, and many lexicographers give this as the secondary meaning of the word. Alexander v. Beekman Lumber Co., 95 S. W. 449, 451, 78 Ark. 169 (citing Thesaurus Dict. Eng. Language; Worcester Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Webster Int. Dict.).

A plant for mixing the materials used in making asphalt pavement, consisting of machinery mounted on an open or flat car, moved from place to place as required, is not a "factory, mill, or workshop" within the meaning of Laws Wash. 1905, c. 84, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 205, providing for the protection and health of employes in factories, mills, and workshops, and requiring the boxing or guarding of machinery and shafting therein, etc. Casey v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 192 Fed. 432, 437.

A gasoline engine, used, in connection with machinery consisting of belts, pulleys, and cogwheels, to pump water through pipes to supply the inhabitants of a city, is not a "manufacturing establishment" or a "mill," within the meaning of these terms in section 4632, Gen. St. 1909. Wind River Lumber Co. v. Frankfort Marine Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 196 Fed. 340, 345, 116 O. C. A. 160; Ward v. City of Norton, 122 Pac. 881, 882, 86 Kan. 906.

Under section 5 of the act entitled "An act concerning private corporations," as amended in 1873, which provides for the creation of private corporations for the conversion and disposal of agricultural products by means of "mills," etc. (Laws 1873, pp. 137, 139, subd. 36), a corporation may be created "to build and maintain a flouring mill." Ginrick v. Patrons' Mill Co., 21 Kan. 61, 63.

The title of the act of 1873 (Gen. St. 1873, c. 44; Comp. St. 1911, c. 57), "An act relating to mills and milldams," is sufficiently broad to admit of legislation in regard to mills of all kinds that are of public utility and having "machinery to be propelled by water." Lucas v. Ashland Light, Mill & Power Co., 138 N. W. 761, 763, 92 Neb. 550.

MILL AND ITS CONTENTS

Where a contract between a railroad company and plaintiff authorized the latter to erect a stave mill on the right of way and exempted the railroad company from liability for the destruction of the "mill and its contents" by fire, the railroad company is not liable for damages to staves piled on the right of way near the mill, where it appeared that the use of a part of the right of way was necessary for the piling of the staves; the staves on the right of way appurtenant to the mill falling under the designation of

"mill and its contents." Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Saulsbury, 90 S. W. 624, 627, 115 Tenn. 402, 5 Ann. Cas. 744.

MILL BUILDING

See Planing Mill Building.

MILL PRIVILEGE

"Mill privilege," as contained in an assessment of property for taxes described as "the mill privilege at Salmon Falls," meant the land and the dam situated as they were, with the capacity to hold the water of the stream and create power, but not the power or the water. Saco Water Power Co. v. Buxton, 56 Atl. 914, 98 Me. 295.

MILL RACE

As used in a deed conveying a certain piece of land for a "mill race," and also a "privilege of a road to cross the said race near said gristmill to the land thus described," may be construed to mean either the head or the tail race; parol evidence being admissible to show what was meant. Place v. Proctor (Pa.) 2 Penny. 264, 269.

MILL SEAT

The word "mill seat" is synonymous with "mill site" and means where the mill sits. "A 'mill site' comprehends not only the site of the mill building but also the water power connected therewith for milling purposes." The granting of a mill site conveys by implication the water power and the right to maintain a dam for the beneficial appropriation of the water. State v. Sutton, 51 S. E. 1012, 139 N. C. 574 (quoting in part definition in Miller v. Alliance Ins. Co., 7 Fed. 651; Curtiss v. Smith, 35 Conn. 153).

As used in Laws 1905, p. 1022, c. 824, provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to hedge or fish with traps in the waters of a certain creek between the mouth of the creek and the "J. mill seat in L. county," the word "mill seat" was synonymous with "mill site," and included the millhouse, dam, and appurtenances used for operating the mill by water power and the ground on which they stood. State v. Sutton, 51 S. E. 1012, 139 N. C. 574.

Under Laws 1905, p. 1022, c. 824, a person, though entitled to maintain wire fences or hedges on the sheeting of the mill under the roof of the millhouse to catch fish coming out of the pond, was not entitled to maintain such hedges or fences in ditches below the millhouse and on both sides of the millrace, by which fish coming up from the mouth of the creek would be stopped before reaching the dam and mill seat; and this, though the owner of the millhouse also owned the land for 75 yards below the mill. State v. Sutton, 51 S. E. 1012, 1013, 139 N. C. 574.

MILL SHED

An insurance policy covered lumber "piled in mill building, on cars, under mill sheds and in sheds adjoining to said mill building." The "mill sheds" where lumber was piled were situated some distance from the mill. The roof of the mill itself extended out 10 or 12 feet over the tracks on either side of the mill to protect the lumber and men loading or unloading cars. It was undisputed that these projections or sheds were erected simply to cover the tracks, were open at the ends and sides, and were not intended to be used as lumber sheds. Held, that the words "mill sheds" in the policy should be construed as indicating the sheds located some distance from the mill, and not those projecting from the building, and the quoted clause of the policy should be construed as though it read, "On lumber in mill building; on lumber on cars; on lumber under mill sheds and on lumber in sheds adjoining to said mill building." Wolverine Lumber Co. v. Palatine Ins. Co., 102 N. W. 991, 992, 139 Mich. 432.

MILL SITE

MILLDAM

While chapter 184, Laws 1862, limiting the time for bringing actions for damages for flowing lands by the maintenance of milldams, applies only to milldams in the proper and strict sense of that word, and although a dam which is part of and necessary to a general scheme for the improvement of the navigation of a river, so as to make it a public highway, is not a "milldam," although the power created thereby is used to operate mills, a dam erected to create power to operate mills, which power is used exclusively for that purpose, is a "milldam," although the ownership of the dam and of the mills may be in different persons. Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co. v. Telulah Paper Co., 122 N. W. 1062, 1065, 140 Wis. 417 (citing Arimond v. Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co., 35 Wis. 41).

MILLING

The term "milling" is synonymous with "manufacturing." Lucas v. Ashland Light, Mill & Power Co., 138 N. W. 761, 763, 92 Neb. 550 (quoting Lamborn v. Bell, 32 Pac. 989, 18 Colo. 346, 20 L. R. A. 240).

MILLING IN TRANSIT

"Milling in transit" refers to cases where freight is shipped a long distance, and the carrier will at his own cost defray the expense of its change in form en route, because of the easier handling in the more compact shape. Under Laws 1899, p. 301, c. 164, § 13, providing that any carrier charging one person more than another for the same service is guilty of discrimination, a railroad company carrying raw material to factories cannot charge a factory which agrees to ship the manufactured product by the same road less for the same service than it charges a factory which will make no such agreement; the carrier not being in a position to justify under "milling in transit." Hilton Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 48 S. E. 813, 816, 136 N. C. 479, 1 Ann. Cas. 52.

MIMEOGRAPH COMPLAINT

A "mimeograph complaint" may be described as a form of complaint applicable in a general way to a particular class of cases. It is therefore nothing more than a blank which, before it can be of service in a special instance, must be properly filled out. Berus v. New York City Ry. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 748, 749, 52 Misc. Rep. 181.

MIND OF A NON COMPOS

The "mind of a non compos" is to be taken prima facie as insane and nondisposing. A person who is adjudged a non compos and placed under guardianship is thereby rendered prima facie incapable of making a will while the adjudication remains in force. In re Cowdry's Will, 60 Atl. 141, 142, 77 Vt. 359, 3 Ann. Cas. 70.

MINE

See Coal Mine; Fully Developed Mine; Known Mines.

Appropriation of claim, see Appropriation.

Waste water from mine, see Waste Water.

A "mine" is an excavation in the earth to obtain minerals, an excavation, properly under ground, to take out some useful product, and a mining right is a right to excavate in the earth to obtain minerals or other useful products. People v. Bell, 86 N. E. 593, 594, 237 Ill. 332, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 15 Ann. Cas. 511.

The term "mines" is not limited to mere subterranean excavation or workings, nor is "minerals" limited to the metals or metaliferous deposits, whether contained in veins that have well-defined walls, or in beds or deposits that are irregular and are found at or near the surface, or otherwise. Nepht Plaster & Mfg. Co. v. Juab County, 98 Pac. 53, 55, 33 Utah, 114, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043.

In ordinary parlance, a "mine" is a certain part of the soil or of the earth's surface in which there are mineral deposits and in which a person obtains not only a full right of ownership of the soil but a right to remove the minerals therefrom and to dispose of them as he sees fit. Crichfield v. Julla, 147 Fed. 65, 66, 77 C. C. A. 297.

The word "mine" includes the whole mass or vein of coal contained within the land. Ammons v. Toothman, 53 S. E. 13, 16, 59 W. Va. 165, 115 Am. St. Rep. 908.

In an action under the mining act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 93), for the death of an employé by defendant's violation of section 4 in failing to have flanges on the drum of a hoisting engine used in sinking an air shaft, special findings that death was caused during the construction work preparatory to opening a coal mine, and that the shaft was not in use in connection with the mining of coal or for ventilating in coal mine or for an escapement shaft, do not bring defendant's property within section 34, defining "mine" and "coal mine" as all parts of the property of a mining plant which contribute directly or indirectly to the mining of coal, and defining "shaft" as any opening which is or may be used for ventilation or escapement, or for hoisting men in connection with mining, and are therefore so inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff that judgment for defendant is proper. Moore v. Dering Coal Co., 89 N. E. 674, 675, 242 Ill. 84.

Whether a coal mine is within the provisions of Ky. St. §§ 2731, 2733, requiring the ventilation of coal mines to secure the safety of persons employed therein, is not dependent on the fact that the mine has progressed to such an extent that coal is being marketed therefrom or shipped from its opening. When, at the time of the accident, the main entry and airway of a coal mine had been driven about 350 feet, and the first and second right entries about 220 feet, and the distance from the main airway to the first break-through, from the first right entry to the airway in which plaintiff was working, was about 115 feet, and from the first break-through to the second it was about 65 feet, while from the second break-through to the point where plaintiff was injured was about 60 feet, the opening is a mine within Ky. St. §§ 2731, 2733 (Russell's St. §§ 2469, 2470), relating to the ventilation of mines. Interstate Coal Co. v. Baxavanie, 137 S. W. 859, 861, 144 Ky. 172.

Defendant mining company maintained a hoisting engine at the top of an incline which was used for the dumping of rock, dirt, etc., which had been separated from the coal, and later constructed a second incline, over which coal intended for retail trade was hoisted by the other side of the same engine; rock and coal cars being often operated in different directions at the same time. Thereafter another engine was substituted to haul the rock cars, and the old engine was continued to haul the coal cars which were permitted to descend by gravity. Held, that such hoist, though outside the mine, was a part of defendant's mine, as defined by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1334, c. 93, § 34, to include all parts of a mining plant on the surface or under ground which contribute under one management to the mining and handling of coal, and was therefore within section 16, subd. "d," making it the duty of the mine manager to see that all dangerous places above and below were properly marked and danger signals displayed wherever required. Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Greig, 80 N. E. 1042, 1044, 226 Ill. 511.

As coal mine

The terms "mine" or "deposit yielding metals or minerals of any kind," as used in B. & C. Comp. § 5668, giving laborers and materialmen a lien for the working or development of any mine, lode, mining claim, or deposit yielding metals or minerals of any kind, include a coal mine, although the term "mining claim" as used therein may not do so. Escott v. Crescent Coal & Navigation Co., 106 Pac. 452, 453, 56 Or. 190.

As land

As land, see Land.

As oil well

Const. 1898, art. 230, provides that property employed in mining operations shall be exempt from parochial and municipal taxes for a period of 10 years from January 1, 1900. Held, that a "mining operation" has to do with the working of a mine, and a "mine," defined as an excavation in the earth for the purpose of getting metal ores or coal, does not include an oil well, and property used in connection with petroleum wells is not exempted under the article. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Murrel, 53 South. 705, 711, 127 La. 466.

Quarry distinguished

The verb "mine" in its ordinary acceptation means to dig in the earth to get ore, metals, coal, or precious stones. The noun "mine" means a pit or hole in the earth from which metallic ores, precious stones, or other mineral substances are taken by digging, distinguished from the pits from which stones for architectural purposes are taken, which are called "quarries." J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Murrel, 53 South. 705, 713, 127 La. 466 (quoting Webster's International Dict.).

"A 'mine,' properly speaking, is the pit or excavation in the earth from which the ore is taken. The term is certainly used to include the bed or vein of ore into which the pit enters, so far as may be necessary to the working of the mine; and the whole series of shafts and subterranean passages and the chambers connected with it. But neither in ordinary parlance nor in strict technical language is a 'mine' understood to indicate the entire ore bed with which the shaft may be connected. And by a 'quarry' we understand, not an indefinite extent of stone or rock which may be worked, but the spot where the rock is quarried. The 'ore' may extend indefinitely, but the 'mine' is the pit from whence it is extracted." Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 821, 331 (quoting Shaw v. Wallace, 25 N. J. Law, 462).

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 10,259, authorizing the valuation of real property on which there is a mine or quarry, owned by the same persons, at the price for which the property, including the mine or quarry, would sell at private, voluntary sale for cash, and, in case the mine or quarry is owned or leased by a person, other than the owner of the land, authorizing the valuation of the land and mine or quarry separately, does not authorize the assessment of hidden, undeveloped coal or other minerals underlying land; a "quarry" being an excavation for obtaining stone, slate, or limestone; and a "mine" being defined by section 8569 to include the workings in every shaft, slope, or drift which is used, or has been used, in the mining and removing of coal from and below the surface of the ground, and being also defined as a pit or excavation from which metallic ores or other similar substances are taken by digging. Board of Com'rs of Greene County v. Lattas Creek Coal Co. (Ind.) 98 N. E. 633, 637.

See Road.

MINE MANAGER

A "mine manager," within the meaning of Mining Act, § 83, providing that contributory negligence shall not bar a miner's recovery where the mine manager was willfully negligent, is a mine boss, foreman, or pit boss. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Stroff, 66 N. E. 29, 31, 200 Ill. 483.

MINE SHAFT

See Shaft.

MINE WEIGHTS

The language "mine weights to govern settlement," in a contract to furnish coal, means that the purchaser is to pay for the coal on the basis of the weights at the mines where it is delivered on cars for transportation. Detroit Southern R. Co. v. Malcolmson, 107 N. W. 915, 916, 144 Mich. 172, 115 Am. St. Rep. 390.

MINER

MINER'S INCH

"In speaking of the measurements of water in use in California, Mr. William Kent, in his recent reference book, for use by engineers and mechanics, states the situation, thus: 'The term "miner's inch" is more or less indefinite, for the reason that California water companies do not all use the same head above the center of the aperture, and the inch varies from 1.36 to 1.73 cubic feet per minute each; but the most common measurement is through an aperture two inches high and whatever length is required and through a plank 1¼ inches thick. The lower edge of the aperture should be two inches above the bottom of the measuring box, and the plank five inches above the aperture, thus making a six-inch head above the center of the stream. Each square inch of this opening represents a miner's inch (under six-inch pressure) which is equal to a flow of 1¼ cubic feet per minute.'" Gardner v. Wright, 91 Pac. 286, 297, 49 Or. 609.

A contract to furnish a specified number of miners' inches of water for irrigation purposes is sufficiently certain to justify specific performance, where witnesses explain the meaning of the ambiguous term "miner's inch" and show that at the time of the making of the contract it was commonly understood that the term meant a quantity of water which would flow through an orifice of one inch square under a four-inch pressure, and that a four-inch pressure meant a head of water which stood four inches above the top of the orifice, and such testimony is not disputed. Ulrich v. Pateros Water Ditch Co. 121 Pac. 818, 820, 67 Wash. 328.

MINERAL

See Crude Mineral; Land Valuable for Minerals; Valuable Minerals.

Other mineral, see Other.

Other valuable minerals, see Other.

The word "minerals," in the popular sense, means those inorganic constituents of the earth's crust which are commonly obtained by mining or other process for bringing them to the surface for profit. Kansas Nat. Gas Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Neosho County, 89 Pac. 750, 75 Kan. 335.

"Mineral," as defined in Webster's Dictionary, is "any inorganic species having a definite chemical composition." O. G. Hempstead & Son v. Thomas, 122 Fed. 538, 539, 59 C. C. A. 342.

The term "mines" is not limited to mere subterranean excavations or workings, nor is "minerals" limited to the metals or metalliciferous deposits, whether contained in veins that have well-defined walls, or in beds or deposits that are irregular and are found at or near the surface, or otherwise. Nephthys Plaster & Mfg. Co. v. Juab County, 93 Pac. 53, 58, 33 Utah. 114, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043.

Minerals embracing both surface and subsurface minerals include every constituent of the earth's crust. Gladys City Oil, Gas & Mfg. Co. v. Right of Way Oil Co. (Tex.) 137 S. W. 171, 177 (citing 5 Words and Phrases).

The word "minerals," in conveyances of "minerals," means all substances in the earth's crust, sought for and removed for the substance itself, and is not limited to metallic substances, but includes salt, coal, clay, stone, etc. McCombs v. Stephenson, 44 South. 867, 869, 154 Ala. 109.

The term "mineral" found in a deed, lease, or other contract, unqualified and unrestricted by any other clause in the instrument, or by circumstances within the knowledge of the parties which may reasonably be deemed to have determined their intention, will be given a sufficiently broad meaning and effect to include prima facie every substance that can be gotten from underneath the surface of the earth for the purpose of profit, and will include not merely such articles as coal, ironstone, and freestone, but fire clay, and china clay or porcelain clay, and also every kind of stone, flint, marble, slate, brick earth, chalk, gravel, and sand; provided only that these articles are under the surface, and do not lie loosely upon it. Sult v. A. Hochstetter Oil Co., 61 S. E. 307, 310, 63 W. Va. 317.

Diamond

A diamond is a "mineral." Kentucky Diamond Mining & Developing Co. v. Kentucky Transvaal Diamond Co., 132 S. W. 397, 398, 141 Ky. 97, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 417.

Gas

Oil and gas are classed as minerals; that term not being confined to metallic substances. Poe v. Ulrey, 84 N. E. 46, 48, 233 Ill. 56.

Natural gas is a "mineral," and is a part of the land until severed. Osborn v. Arkansas Territorial Oil & Gas Co., 146 S. W. 122, 124, 103 Ark. 175.

The Legislature has now classed oil and gas among minerals of this state; and persons engaged in producing these minerals are following a mining pursuit. Act No. 144 of 1908; Act No. 154 of 1910; Act No. 172 of 1910; Act No. 196 of 1910; Act No. 254 of 1910. Etchison Drilling Co. v. Flournoy, 59 South. 867, 872, 131 La. 442.

Oil and gas are "minerals" within Act April 25, 1850 (P. L. 573) § 24, recognizing a right of action by a tenant in common against a cotenant in sole possession for a share of the profits where minerals are held in common. McIntosh v. Ropp, 82 Atl. 949, 955, 233 Pa. 497.

A reservation of "all 'minerals'" includes gas. Weaver v. Richards, 120 N. W. 818, 819, 156 Mich. 320.

Under the broad division of all matter into three classes of animal, vegetable, and mineral, petroleum and gas are "minerals"; but the term may be used in a more restricted sense. "Mineral" is not per se a term of art or trade, but of general language, and in addition to its broader scientific meaning is also used in a commercial sense, where it may include any inorganic substance found in nature having sufficient value, separated from its condition as a part of the earth, to be mined, quarried, or dug for its specific uses; but it does not necessarily have so broad a meaning or include all such substances. A deed of land excepting the mineral underlying it did not include natural gas within the exception. Silver v. Bush, 62 Atl. 832, 833, 218 Pa. 195.

Granite, stone, silica, and clay

A deed to land largely covered with limestone and granite, rising above the natural surface, which reserved to the grantor all "mines and minerals" which may be found on the land, with the right of entry to dig and carry the same away, does not give a right to open quarrying and blasting, but such right passes to the grantee. Brady v. Smith, 73 N. E. 963, 964, 181 N. Y. 178, 106 Am. St. Rep. 531, 2 Ann. Cas. 636.

Const. art. 2, § 33, provides that the ownership of land by aliens other than those who in good faith have declared their intention to become citizens is prohibited, except where acquired by inheritance, under mortgage, or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice, provided that the statute shall not apply to lands containing valuable deposits of "minerals," metals, iron, coal, or fire clay. Held, that an alien may acquire by purchase lands containing valuable deposits of limestone, silica, and clay; the word "minerals" not being restricted to the valuable mineral ore contained in gold and silver, etc. State ex rel. Atkinson v. Evans, 89 Pac. 565, 566, 46 Wash. 219, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1163.

Gypsum is a mineral, and lands containing it are mineral lands, within the federal statutes. Madison v. Octave Oil Co., 99 Pac. 176, 178, 154 Cal. 768.

Gypsum is a "mineral," and constitutes a mineral deposit under the mineral laws. Nephi Plaster & Mfg. Co. v. Juab County, 93 Pac. 53, 54, 33 Utah, 114, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043.

A deed was executed in 1814, conveying farm land, but "excepting mines and minerals which are not hereby intended to be conveyed." Small deposits of gypsum had been discovered on the land in 1812, and gypsum rights had been leased in 1814, though it was first removed therefrom in 1842, at which time it was taken out by open quarrying, but could be mined. As found, it underlaid the limestone formation at a depth of from 25 to 40 feet, but in places rose to within a foot or 18 inches of the surface. Held, that an exception of "minerals" includes all inorganic substances which can be taken from the land in the absence of other words restricting the meaning of the term, so that the exception in the deed reserved to the grantor all minerals, including gypsum, but not the surface limestone. White v. Miller, 92 N. E. 1065, 1067, 200 N. Y. 29, 140 Am. St. Rep. 618.

Oil

Oil is a "mineral," and as such is a part of the realty. Isom v. Rex Crude Oil Co., 82 Pac. 317, 318, 147 Cal. 659.

Oil and gas are classed as "minerals," that term not being confined to metallic substances. Poe v. Ulrey, 84 N. E. 46, 48, 233 Ill. 56.

Oil and gas are "minerals" within Act April 25, 1850 (P. L. 573) § 24, recognizing a right of action by a tenant in common against a cotenant in sole possession for a share of the profits where minerals are held in common. McIntosh v. Ropp, 82 Atl. 949, 953, 233 Pa. 497.

A reservation of "all 'minerals'" includes oil. Weaver v. Richards, 120 N. W. 818, 819, 156 Mich. 320.

The opening of a new mine on land by a life tenant amounts to waste, and this rule applies to oil wells, as oil is a mineral and part of the realty. Ohio Oil Co. v. Daughettee, 88 N. E. 818, 820, 240 Ill. 361, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1108.

The Legislature has now classed oil and gas among "minerals" of the state; and persons engaged in producing these minerals are following a mining pursuit. Etchison Drilling Co. v. Flournoy, 59 South. 867, 872, 131 La. 442 (citing Act No. 144 of 1908; Act No. 154 of 1910; Act No. 172 of 1910; Act No. 196 of 1910; Act No. 254 of 1910).

Oil before its extraction is a "mineral." Swayne v. Lone Acre Oil Co., 86 S. W. 740, 742, 98 Tex. 597, 69 L. R. A. 986, 8 Ann. Cas. 1117; Isom v. Rex Crude Oil Co., 82 Pac. 317, 318, 147 Cal. 659.

Petroleum

Under the broad division of all matter into three classes of animal, vegetable, and mineral, petroleum and gas are "minerals." Silver v. Bush, 62 Atl. 832, 833, 213 Pa. 195.

A reservation of "all 'minerals'" included petroleum. Weaver v. Richards, 120 N. W. 818, 819, 156 Mich. 320.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1399, c. 94, §§ 6, 7, declare that any mining right or the right to dig for or obtain iron, lead, copper, coal, or other mineral from land may be conveyed by deed or lease, which may be acknowledge and recorded in the same manner as deeds and leases of real estate, and that when the owner of land shall convey by deed or lease, any mining right therein the conveyance shall be considered as so separating such right from the land as to be separately taxable. Held that, since petroleum is a mineral, the right of the lessee to mine for oil and gas on certain specified premises is a mining right, and separately taxable under such sections. People v. Bell, 86 N. E. 593, 237 Ill. 332, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 15 Ann. Cas. 511.

Petroleum oil is a "mineral," and while it is in the earth it forms a part of the realty, and when it reaches a well and is produced on the surface it becomes personal property and belongs to the owner of the well. If it moves from place to place by percolation, or otherwise, it forms a part of the tract of land in which it carries for the time being; and, if it moves to the next adjoining tract, it becomes a part and parcel of that tract; and if it forms a part of the same tract, until it reaches a well and is raised to the surface and then for the first time, it becomes the subject of distinct ownership separate from the realty. It becomes the property of and belongs to the person who reaches it by means of a well and severs it from the realty. Nonamaker v. Amos, 76 N. E. 949, 951, 73 Ohio St. 163, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 4 Ann. Cas. 170 (citing Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co., 49 N. E. 399, 57 Ohio St. 317, 39 L. R. A. 765, 63 Am. St. Rep. 721; Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Co. v. Ullery, 67 N. E. 494, 68 Ohio St. 259).

Sand

Sand, according to the circumstances, may or may not be a mineral, in the commercial sense intended by Act May 8, 1876 (P. L. 142), providing that, if any person or corporation shall dig minerals in the land of another without the consent of the owner, he shall be liable for double the value thereof. Hendler v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 58 Atl. 488, 489, 209 Pa. 263.

Under Rev. St. § 2329, by which claims usually called placers, including all forms of deposits excepting veins of quartz or other rock in place, shall be subject to entry, building sand is a "mineral"; and hence land more valuable for the building sand it contains than for agriculture is mineral land, subject to placer locations. Loney v. Scott, 112 Pac. 172, 175, 57 Or. 378.

Shale

Shale is a "mineral." Bibby v. Bunch (Ala.) 58 South. 916, 917.

Water

Subterranean waters are considered a "mineral" in respect to their use and enjoyment, irrespective of the character and quantity of salts and gases which may be in solution. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 87 N. E. 504, 508, 194 N. Y. 326, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436, 128 Am. St. Rep. 555, 16 Ann. Cas. 989.

MINERAL LAND

The words "said lands being mineral," as used in Act June 3, 1878, c. 150, § 1, is not confined to any species of mineral, but is synonymous with the word "metalliferous." Morgan v. United States, 169 Fed. 242, 248, 94 C. C. A. 518 (citing Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Soderberg, 23 Sup. Ct. 365, 188 U. S. 526, 47 L. Ed. 575).

Gypsum is a mineral, and lands containing it are "mineral" lands, within the federal statutes. Madison v. Octave Oil Co., 99 Pac. 176, 178, 154 Cal. 768.

Coal lands are "mineral lands" within the meaning of that term as generally employed in the laws regulating the disposal of the public domain. United States v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 170 Fed. 498, 500; Washington Securities Co. v. United States, 194 Fed. 59, 65, 114 C. C. A. 79.

The term "mineral lands," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 2302, is one of broader significance than "known mines." It refers to a class of lands, rather than specific tracts easily ascertainable, not only by the Land Department, but by the applicants themselves. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Haverly, 90 Pac. 333, 338, 11 Ariz. 241.

MINERAL LODE

See, also, Lode.

A "mineral lode" is a totally different thing from a placer mine and not a mere state or condition of such mine. McCarter v. Sooy Oyster Co., 75 Atl. 211, 215, 78 N. J. Law, 394.

MINIATURE FRAMES

MINIMUM

"Minimum," as applied to damages, means the least possible amount that may be awarded by a jury. The court should not instruct in a libel suit that, if an honest mistake is made in an honest attempt to enlighten the public, it must reduce the damages to a minimum, as the jury may under such circumstances award much more than the minimum as actual damages. Dauphiny

v. Buhne, 96 Pac. 880, 881, 888, 153 Cal. 757, 126 Am. St. Rep. 186.

The effect, if any, of the use of the word "minimum," in a contract relating to water rates, is that the rates shall not be less. City of Mt. Vernon v. New York Interurban Water Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 232, 233, 115 App. Div. 658.

The term "minimum charge," as used in water supply contracts, where the meter system obtains, usually signifies rate of compensation for expense and labor of being ready to supply water at will of consumer, though the supply be not used at all. Cox v. Abbeville Furniture Factory, 54 S. E. 830, 832, 75 S. C. 48.

Where the application for charter and the charter of the corporation name only one sum as the proposed capital of the corporation, that sum is the "minimum capital stock," which Civil Code 1910, § 2220, requires to be subscribed for in order to relieve the organizers of the corporation from individual liability to creditors. Jos. Rosenheim Shoe Co. v. Horne, 73 S. E. 953, 955, 10 Ga. App. 582.

MINING

See Skillful and Careful Mining.

As public use, see Public Use (In Eminent Domain).

System of mining, see System.

The word "mining," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 4b, as amended in 1903 (Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487), is used in a broad sense and includes quarrying as of slate from an open quarry. Burdick v. Dillon, 144 Fed. 737, 740, 75 C. C. A. 603; In re Mathews Consol. Slate Co., 144 Fed. 724, 735.

The form of coal obtained from the strata of the earth is a carbonaceous mineral substance, commonly known as mineral coal, and the procurement thereof by digging in the earth is termed "mining." Escott v. Crescent Coal & Navigation Co., 106 Pac. 452, 453, 56 Or. 190.

If the business of a corporation formed to drill and mine for natural gas, petroleum, and other minerals and to purchase, lease, and otherwise acquire gas and petroleum wells and the products thereof and to furnish the same to its patrons for use was not within the classification of "mining," as employed in Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 3851, authorizing the formation of corporations to carry on any kind of manufacturing, mining, etc., business, it was clearly brought within that classification by Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1894, § 5099, defining the term "mining" as used in the former statute as covering and including sinking, drilling, boring, and operating wells for petroleum and natural gas. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby, 137 Fed. 882, 896, 70 C. C. A. 220.

MINING AND MANUFACTURING

A corporation engaged in operating a granite quarry, which it owned, and selling the stone either for building or paving purposes or after it had been manufactured and finished for monumental or other purposes, is chiefly engaged "mining and manufacturing" and is subject to bankruptcy proceedings under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3. In re Quincy Granite Quarries Co., 147 Fed. 279.

MINING BOSS

The term, "mining boss," used in Acts 1881, p. 238, c. 170, § 8, requiring a coal mine operator to employ a competent mining boss who is required to keep a careful watch over the ventilating apparatus, airways, traveling ways, pumps, sumps, timbering, etc., indicated the person on whom is imposed nondelegable duties of the master, so that in the performance thereof the boss will be regarded as a vice principal. Smith v. Dayton Coal & Iron Co., 92 S. W. 62, 63, 115 Tenn. 543, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180.

The term "mining claim" means in the mining country a portion of the public mineral lands of the United States to which a qualified person may first obtain the right of occupancy and possession by means of location, and, secondly, title by pursuing prescribed methods therefor. Gray v. New Mexico Pumice Stone Co., 110 Pac. 603, 606, 15 N. M. 478.

A "mining claim" is a parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock. Creede & Cripple Creek Mining & Milling Co. v. Uinta Tunnel Mining & Transportation Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 268, 270, 196 U. S. 337, 49 L. Ed. 501 (quoting and adopting the definition in St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 649, 26 L. Ed. 875, 879).

A "mining claim" in the ordinary sense of the word is a "portion of the public mineral lands which the miner, for mining purposes, takes up and holds in accordance with mining law." Berentz v. Kern King Oil & Development Co. (Cal.) 84 Pac. 45, 46 (quoting and adopting Morse v. De Ardo, 40 Pac. 1018, 107 Cal. 622).

"The location and sale of oil land is governed by the mineral laws of the United States applicable to the location and sale of placer mining claims, and, if land is located and held under this law, it is a 'mining claim' before patent in every sense of the word, and for the purpose of the lien law it does not cease to be a 'mining claim' when by a patent from the government, the fee is transferred to the locator or his assigns." And an 80-acre tract of land in process of development as an oil mine is a "mining claim" within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1187, providing that a miner working on a mining claim has a lien on the entire claim for his wages or the value of his material. Berentz v. Belmont Oil Co., 8 Pac. 47, 48, 148 Cal. 577, 113 Am. St. Rep. 308.

In construing a statute the court must look to the purpose for which it was enacted, and statutes providing for liens are to be construed in favor of the purpose of the law. Hence where the purpose of a statute was to protect laborers and materialmen of a particular class, and the Legislature used the words "mining claim" in the title, the words are not to be strictly construed to determine the right to a lien, but they are to control in measuring the extent of the lien. Escott v. Crescent Coal & Navigation Co., 106 Pac. 452, 454, 56 Or. 190.

One of the essential requirements of a valid location of a mining claim, as provided by Comp. St. 1910, § 3474, is that there shall be a discovery of mineral on the ground. Dean v. Omaha-Wyoming Oil Co. (Wyo.) 128 Pac. 881, 882.

MINING DISTRICT

Locality synonymous, see Locality.

MINING LEASE

Instruments by which estates or interests in minerals are created are frequently and without distinction called "mining leases." Appeal of Sanford, 54 Atl. 739, 741, 75 Conn. 590.

MINING LICENSE

Mining license as distinguished from lease, see Lease.

A contract simply giving a right to take ore from a mine, no estate being granted, confers a mere "license," and licensee acquires no right to the ore until separated from the freehold; but an instrument demising lands for mining purposes, for a designated term of years, at a fixed rent, and giving the right to erect all necessary buildings, is a lease, not merely a mining license. Barnsdall v. Bradford Gas Co., 74 Atl. 207, 208, 225 Pa. 338, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614.

MINING LOCATION

Lode mining location, see Lode Location.

The words "claim" and "location" in mining law are used interchangeably. Del Monte Min. & Mill. Co. v. Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 886, 902, 171 U. S. 55, 43 L. Ed. 72.

A location is not made by taking possession alone, but by working on the ground, recording, and doing whatever else is required for that purpose by the acts of Congress and the local laws and regulations. Wright v. Lyons, 77 Pac. 81, 82, 45 Or. 167 (citing Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 284, 26 L. Ed. 735); Knutson v. Fredlund, 106 Pac. 200, 202, 56 Wash. 634 (quoting and adopting definition in Purdum v. Laddin, 59 Pac. 153, 154, 23 Mont. 387, 389); Hickey v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 81 Pac. 806, 811, 33 Mont. 46 (quoting and adopting the definition in Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 26 L. Ed. 735).

A "mining claim" is a parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock, and a "location" is the act of appropriating such parcel according to certain established rules. It usually consists in placing on the ground in a conspicuous position a notice setting forth the name of the locator, the fact that it is thus taken or located, with the requisite description of the extent and boundaries of the parcel according to the local custom or, since the statute of 1872, according to the provisions of that act. Rev. St. § 2324. The location, which is the act of taking a parcel of mining land, became among the miners synonymous with the mining claim originally appropriated; so now, if a miner has only the ground covered by one location, his mining claim and location are identical, and the two designations may be indiscriminately used to denote the same thing; but if, by purchase, he acquires the adjoining location of his neighbor and uses the ground which his neighbor has taken up and adds it to his own, then his mining claim covers the ground embraced by both locations, and henceforth he will speak of it as his claim. Indeed, his claim may include as many adjoining locations as he can purchase, and the ground covered by all will constitute what he claims for mining purposes, or, in other words, will constitute his mining claim and will so be designated. Such is the general understanding of miners and the meaning that attached to the term. Lockhard v. Asher Lumber Co., 123 Fed. 490, 493 (quoting St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 648, 26 L. Ed. 875).

"'Location' is the act or series of acts by which the right of exclusive possession of mineral lands is vested in the locator. For this the only requirement made by Congress is the marking on the surface of the boundaries of the claim. By section 2324, however, Congress recognized the validity of any regulations made by the miners of any mining district not in conflict with the laws of the United States or the laws of the state or territory within which the district is situated." Creede & Cripple Creek Mining & Milling Co. v. Uinta Tunnel Mining & Transportation Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 266, 270, 196 U. S. 337, 49 L. Ed. 501.

The word "location," in its application to mining claims, has two distinct meanings: First, all the acts, including discovery, requisite to perfect the right of possession; and, second, the placing of the claims, the posting of the notice, and the marking of the boundaries, excluding discovery. An agreed statement of facts, which stipulated that the lode claims of the plaintiff were "located in compliance with law" at dates anterior to the location of the defendant's tunnel site, and that as to the issue made in the pleadings upon the question whether mineral in rock in place was discovered in the plaintiff's claims before the location of the tunnel site the defendant offered testimony tending to negative such discovery, which is on plaintiff's objection ruled out by the court, and such ruling is excepted to by the defendant, used the word "location" in its more restricted sense, excluding discovery, and did not estop the defendant from litigating the issue relative to the discovery of mineral in rock in place in the plaintiff's claims prior to the location of the defendant's tunnel site. Uinta Tunnel, Min. & Transp. Co. v. Ajax Gold Min. Co., 141 Fed. 563, 564, 567, 73 C. C. A. 35.

Rev. St. § 2324, providing that "location" of mining claims shall be distinctly marked on the ground so that the boundaries can be readily traced, and the location notice filed shall contain a description of the property by which it can be identified, is mandatory and must be complied with in order to secure a valid location. A "location" is not made by taking possession alone, but by marking on the ground, recording, and doing whatever else is required for that purpose by the acts of Congress and the local terms and regulations. Consequently, if there is no location, there can be no possession under it. Location does not necessarily follow from possession, but possession from location. Ware v. White, 108 S. W. 831, 834, 81 Ark. 220 (quoting Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 26 L. Ed. 735).

MINING OPERATION

Const. 1898, art. 230, provides that property employed in mining operations shall be exempt from parochial and municipal taxes for a period of 10 years from January 1, 1900. Held, that a "mining operation" has to do with the working of a mine, and a "mine," defined as an excavation in the earth for the purpose of getting metal ores or coal, does not include an oil well, and property used in connection with petroleum wells is not exempted under the article. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Murrel, 53 South. 706, 711, 127 La. 466.

MINING PARTNERSHIP

Trading partnership distinguished, see Trading Partnership.

A mining partnership exists when two or more persons, who own or acquire a mining claim for the purpose of working it and extracting the mineral therefrom, actually engage in working the same. Marks v. Gates, 2 Alaska, 519, 523.

In order to constitute a "mining partnership" under the Idaho Revised Statutes of 1887, it is essential that the co-owners actually engage in working the mine or in the business of operating the mine. The cotenancy of two or more persons in a mining claim is not of itself sufficient to constitute such tenants mining partners. It is not essential that all the tenants join in the working or business of mining in order to establish such partnership, but that relation may be established among such co-owners as have actually engaged in the working or "mining operation." Those not so engaging will be left to their right and chargeable by their duties as cotenants only. Madar v. Norman, 92 Pac. 572, 13 Idaho, 585.

"A 'mining partnership' exists between the tenants in common of a mine who work it together and divide the profits in proportion to their several interests. Ownership of shares or interests in the mine is an essential element of a mining partnership. The relation does not exist between the owners of a mine and one who, under a contract with them, works a mine for a share in the profits or proceeds. Mere profit sharing will not create a mining partnership. * * * A mining partnership differs from an ordinary partnership in the fact that no contract between the partners is necessary to create it, that there is no delectus personarum, so that the death of a member of the transfer of his interest does not operate as a dissolution, and that there are no rights of survivorship. Because of the absence of these features, mining partnerships have been said not to be true partnerships, but rather a cross between tenancies in common and partnerships proper." Blackmarr v. Williamson, 50 S. E. 254, 256, 57 W. Va. 249, 4 Ann. Cas. 265.

A "mining partnership" may exist, though all of the partners may not have a personal interest in the property, if they have an interest in the working of the property, and it is not essential that there be an express agreement to become partners, or an express agreement to share profits and losses, as that is an incident to the prosecution of the general business. Bentley v. Brossard, 94 Pac. 736, 743, 33 Utah, 396.

A "mining partnership" exists where the several owners of a mine co-operate in working it. Where two parties leased mining property and obtained a bond for its conveyance upon payment of a sum by a certain date, which was extended for a consideration each paying half, and where, under the bond and lease, the parties agreed to work the property jointly, each to bear one-half the expense, the defendant putting in his own work and the plaintiff furnishing a man to do his share of the work, they were equal partners in respect to the joint enterprise in which they were engaged for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the bond and lease. Walker v. Bruce, 97 Pac. 250, 4 Colo. 109.

A "mining partnership" exists when two or more persons who own or acquire a mining claim for the purpose of working it and extracting the mineral therefrom actually engage in working the same. An express agreement to become partners or to share the profits and losses of mining is not necessary to the formation and existence of the partnership. The relation arises from the ownership of shares or interests in the mine and the working of the same. Eisenberg v. Goldsmith, 118 Pac. 1127, 1131, 42 Mont. 563 (quoting and adopting the definition in Rev. Codes, §§ 5535, 5536).

"Mining partnerships" are somewhat peculiar in their nature, and the ordinary rules regarding such relations do not, it seems, apply. Of course, there may be a strict partnership in a mining venture—for instance, where it is formed for the purpose of working a mine by extracting minerals therefrom—and in such a case there must be an accounting in equity. But parties may be tenants in common of a mining property without being partners. It is alleged in the petition that the contract in this case was for prospecting, locating, and developing mining claims on the public domain in the Cripple Creek district for the joint and equal benefit of the parties, and each was to furnish labor, supplies, and money for this purpose. If by this it was meant to charge that the mine, when discovered and developed, should be worked on joint account, doubtless a partnership would have been created, at least as to the working of the mine. But the petition does not allege such an agreement, nor did plaintiff's evidence show it. "Such agreements should be construed according to the intent of the parties, and, while they may speak of each other as partners, this term, as is well known, does not in all cases mean that the parties are engaged in a joint enterprise, each agreeing to share the profits and to bear a part of the losses of the particular business. In order to create a 'mining partnership,' it seems to be necessary that there be an agreement to work the mine for the joint profit of the parties. Otherwise the owners of the property, acquired in such manner as is here charged, are tenants in common." Doyle v. Burns, 99 N. W. 195, 197, 123 Iowa, 488 (citing and approving Boucher v. Mulverhill, 1 Mont. 310; Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569; Hartney v. Gos- Ing. 68 Pac. 1121, 10 Wyo. 115, 98 Am. St. Rep. 972; Patrick v. Weston, 43 Pac. 446, 21 Colo. 73; Anaconda Copper Mining Co. v. Butte & Boston Min. Co., 43 Pac. 492, 17 Mont. 519).

Where complainant and defendant, who were jointly interested in mining property, in the development of which complainant had made advances, entered into a contract giving complainant the right to manage the property and apply the profits, and also, in case of a sale, the proceeds of the property to the repayment of such advances, the arrangement and agreement constituted a "mining partnership." Connolly v. Bouck, 174 Fed. 312, 315, 98 C. C. A. 184.

MINING PURSUIT

The Legislature has now classed oil and gas among minerals of this state; and persons engaged in producing these minerals are following a mining pursuit. MINING RECORDS

The term "mining records," as used in B. & C. Comp. § 5668, authorizing liens on mines in favor of laborers and materialmen, but providing that it shall not apply to the owner when the mine is worked by a lessee, if a copy of the lease is recorded in the mining records of the county before the work is begun, in the absence of a statute defining such term, or prescribing that such instruments shall be recorded in any particular book, is sufficiently complied with by the record of a mining lease in a book kept by the county clerk for the recording of leases and instruments affecting the title to mining claims, designated "mining conveyances." Slover v. Bailey, 90 Pac. 665, 666, 49 Or. 426.

MINING RIGHT

As property, see Property.

"A 'mining right' is a right to enter upon and occupy ground for the purpose of working it, either by underground excavation or open working, to obtain from it the minerals or ores which may be deposited thereunder. By implication, the grant of such a right carries with it whatever is incident to it and necessary to its beneficial enjoyment. The term may also include licenses and the rights of the owner of the minerals." McGraw v. Laukin, 68 S. E. 27, 28, 67 W. Va. 385.

A "mine" is an excavation in the earth to obtain minerals, an excavation, properly under ground, to take out some useful product, and a mining right is a right to excavate in the earth to obtain minerals or other useful products. People v. Bell, 86 N. E. 593, 594, 237 Ill. 332, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 15 Ann. Cas. 511.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1399, c. 64, §§ 6, 7, declare that any mining right or the right to dig for or obtain iron, lead, copper, coal, or other mineral from land may be conveyed by deed or lease, which may be acknowledged and recorded in the same manner as deeds and leases of real estate, and that when the owner of land shall convey, by deed or lease, any mining right therein, the conveyance shall be considered as so separating such right from the land as to be separately taxable. Held that, since petroleum is a mineral, the right of the lessee to mine for oil and gas on certain specified premises is a mining right, and separately taxable under such sections. People v. Bell, 86 N. E. 593, 594, 237 Ill. 332, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 15 Ann. Cas. 511.

MINING WORK

As improvement, see Improvement.

MINISTER

As profession, see Profession.

A public school opened with prayer and the reading without comment of passages from King James' translation of the Bible, during which pupils are not required to attend, is not a "place of worship," nor are its teachers "ministers of religion," within the meaning of Const. § 5, providing that no person shall be compelled to attend any place of worship or contribute to the support of a minister of religion. Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist., 87 S. W. 792, 793, 120 Ky. 608, 69 L. R. A. 592.

MINISTERIAL

The term "ministerial" is generic rather than specific, and includes acts which are ministerial only and involve no judgment or discretion, and those which are quasi judicial; a purely ministerial act being one which a person performs on a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to his own judgment on the propriety of the act. State v. Stutsman (N. D.) 139 N. W. 83, 88.

The word "ministerial" means "pertaining to executive offices as distinguished from judicial; administrative." An act in the performance of a ministerial duty is imperative. It is done in obedience to some legal mandate, and it involves the exercise of no official discretion and of no judgment as to the propriety of the act, thereby differing entirely from an act in the performance of judicial duties. Hamma v. People, 94 Pac. 326, 327, 42 Colo. 401, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 15 Ann. Cas. 655.

The words "ministerial" and "administrative" may be, and frequently are, used interchangeably. An "administrative officer" is frequently classed as a "ministerial officer," and vice versa. Bouvier speaks of "administrative" as synonymous with "executive," a "ministerial duty"; one in which nothing is left to discretion. People v. Salisbury, 96 N. W. 936, 940, 134 Mich. 537 (citing State v. Loechner, 91 N. W. 874, 65 Neb. 814, 59 L. R. A. 915).

MINISTERIAL ACT

A "ministerial act" is one which a person performs in a given state of facts in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to, or the exercise of, his own judgment upon the propriety of the act being done. Galey v. Board of Com'rs of Montgomery County, 91 N. E. 593, 594, 174 Ind. 181, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1099; Freund v. Freund, 75 N. E. 925, 930, 218 Ill. 189, 100 Am. St. Rep. 283; Flournoy v. City of Jeffersonville, 17 Ind. 169, 174, 79 Am. Dec. 468; Pennington v. Streight, 54 Ind. 376, 377; Galey v. Board of Com'rs of Montgomery County, 91 N. E. 593, 594, 174 Ind. 181, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1099; Bair v. Struck, 74 Pac. 69, 71, 29 Mont. 45, 63 L. R. A. 481 (citing Throop, Pub. Off. § 537).

A "ministerial act" is an "act, office, or power that is to be performed or exercised uniformly on a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to law or the mandate of legal authority, without dependence on the exercise of judgment as to propriety of so doing." Metz v. Maddox, 105 N. Y. Supp. 702, 712, 121 App. Div. 147 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

"A 'ministerial act,' as applied to a public officer, is defined to be an act or thing which he is required to perform by direction of legal authority upon a given state of facts, independent of what he may think of the propriety or impropriety of doing the act in the particular case." The duty of the Secretary of State in granting a certificate to a private banking corporation being purely ministerial, mandamus lies to compel him to issue the certificate. State ex rel. Jones v. Cook, 73 S. W. 489, 493, 174 Mo. 100.

A "ministerial act" is one which a public officer is required to perform upon a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, and without regard to his own judgment or opinion concerning the propriety or impropriety of the act to be performed. Garff v. Smith, 86 Pac. 772, 773, 31 Utah, 102, 120 Am. St. Rep. 924 (citing State ex rel. North & South Ry. Co. v. Meler, 45 S. W. 306, 143 Mo. 439).

"Official action, the result of performing a certain and specific duty, arising from fixed and designated facts, is a 'ministerial act.'" Rainey v. Ridgway, 43 South. 843, 844, 151 Ala. 532 (citing Flournoy v. City of Jeffersonville, 17 Ind. 169, 79 Am. Dec. 468; Tennessee & C. R. Co. v. Moore, 36 Ala. 371; Morton v. Comptroller General, 4 S. C. 430; Commissioner of the General Land Office v. Smith, 5 Tex. 471; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 291, 8 L. Ed. 949).

Allowance of claim

Prohibition does not lie to restrain the commissioners' court from proceeding with the construction of a bridge for the building of which a contract has been let by it; the allowance of a claim therefor being a "ministerial act." Goodwin v. State ex rel. Wakefield, 40 South. 122, 123, 145 Ala. 536.

Assessment of omitted property for taxation

Where a city council by ordinance provided for the listing of omitted taxes upon notice and hearing, the act of "assessing omitted property partakes somewhat of ministerial and somewhat of judicial or quasi-judicial functions. That is to say, the act in listing of the property for taxation is clearly a 'ministerial act'; and, as an incident, it finds the fact whether the property was in fact omitted, whether it belonged to the alleged recusant taxpayer, and what its fair value then was. To hear evidence, and therefrom to find whether a certain fact was or was not, partakes of 'judicial functions.' Still it is not necessarily judicial, in the sense that it is an act of a court. Many ministerial acts include in part the determination of pre-existing facts, and the exercising of the quality of judgment sometimes called 'discretion' with respect thereto. * * * The action of the council in assessing omitted property is purely ministerial, although it has mixed certain discretion as to finding values and the like, which is not reviewable, and which quality is sometimes called 'judicial,' though it is not judicial in the sense that it is the act of a court." And hence the ordinance was not in violation of the constitutional limits upon the part of the Legislature to create any "judicial tribunals" other than the courts expressly named in that instrument. Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardonia, 87 S. W. 1096, 1098, 120 Ky. 739.

Entry of judgment

Under L. O. L. § 185, which provides that in an action arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only, if no answer is filed within the time limited, the clerk on the plaintiff's written application shall enter the default, and thereupon give judgment for the sum demanded against one or more of the defendants amenable by appearance on service of process, the clerk in entering such judgment exercises no judicial functions, but performs a "ministerial act," which in general consists in the discharge of some duty enjoined by law upon one or more persons, who, in obeying the rule prescribed, exercise no judgment or discretion regarding the matter. Hodgdon v. Goodspeed, 118 Pac. 167, 168, 60 Or. 1 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4523).

The rendition of a judgment by the court is a judicial act; but the entry thereof by the clerk is not, but is a "ministerial act." Jaqua v. Harkins, 82 N. E. 920, 922, 40 Ind. App. 639.

Issuance of certificate to bank

"A 'ministerial act' is one which a public officer or agent is required to perform upon a given state of facts in a prescribed manner in obedience to the mandate of legal authority and without regard to his own judgment or opinion concerning the propriety or impropriety of the act to be performed." The duty of the bank commissioner to issue to a bank a certificate when all the things required to be done have been done is not discretionary, and mandamus will lie to compel him to perform such duty which is merely a ministerial one. Smock v. Farmers' Union State Bank, 98 Pac. 945, 949, 22 Okl. 825 (quoting and adopting definition in Merrill, Mandamus, p. 30).

Judicial act distinguished

See Judicial Act.

Keeping office and records at seat of government

A "ministerial act" is an act which a person performs on a given state of facts in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to, or the exercise of, his own judgment, upon the propriety of the act done. The constitutional provision requiring each executive officer to keep his office and public records and papers at the seat of government requires a mere ministerial act, so that mandatory injunction will lie to enjoin the executive officers of the state other than the Governor from removing their offices, public records, etc., from the seat of government, and expending the state funds for that purpose. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Huston, 118 Pac. 190, 198, 27 Okl. 606, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380 (quoting and adopting the definition in 27 Cyc. p. 793).

See Proceeding.

Rejection and return of election ballot

A moderator of a voting district, who honestly rejects the ballot of an elector and returns it as prescribed by statute, is not liable in tort to the elector, though the act following the quasi judicial determination of the invalidity of the ballot is a "ministerial act," which is performed in a given state of facts in obedience to the law, without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment on the propriety of the act being done. Blake v. Mason, 73 Atl. 782, 783, 82 Conn. 324.

Relieving militia officer from command

"Official action, the result of performing a certain and specific duty, arising from fixed and designated facts, is a 'ministerial act.'" The act of a Governor in relieving a relation from his command as colonel of a regiment in the state national guard for the good of the service, without a trial or hearing on charges preferred, was not a ministerial act, but constituted an exercise of the Governor's discretion, which could not be controlled by mandamus. State ex rel. Higdon v. Jelks, 85 South. 60, 62, 138 Ala. 115 (quoting and adopting definition in Grider v. Talley, 77 Ala. 424, 54 Am. Rep. 65; Ex parte Thompson, 52 Ala. 96).

MINISTERIAL DUTY

A purely "ministerial duty" is one as to which nothing is left to discretion. City of Biddleford v. Yates, 72 Atl. 335, 337, 104 Me. 506, 15 Ann. Cas. 1091.

A "ministerial duty" is one regarding which nothing is left to discretion—a simple and definite duty, imposed by law, and arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist. If it is one that requires exercise of judgment in its performance, it is not ministerial but discretionary. State v. Howard, 74 Atl. 392, 395, 83 Vt. 6.

A "ministerial duty," the performance of which may in proper cases be required, is one in which nothing is left to discretion. It is a simple definite duty arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist and imposed by law. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Huston, 118 Pac. 190, 198, 27 Okl. 606, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380 (quoting and adopting the definition in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. Ed. 60).

Official duty is "ministerial," when it is absolute, certain, and imperative, involving merely execution of a specific duty arising from fixed and designated facts. People v. May, 95 N. E. 999, 1000, 251 Ill. 54, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 510.

"An official duty is 'ministerial' when it is absolute, certain, and imperative, involving merely the execution of a set task, and when the law which imposes it prescribes and defines the time, mode, and occasion of its performance with such certainty that nothing remains for judgment or discretion. Official action is ministerial when it is the result of performing a certain and specific duty arising from fixed and designated facts." Garff v. Smith, 86 Pac. 772, 773, 31 Utah, 102, 120 Am. St. Rep. 924 (quoting People for Use of Munson v. Bartels, 27 N. E. 1091, 138 Ill. 322).

Where an officer's duty necessarily requires examination of evidence in the decision of questions of law and fact, the duty is not ministerial, but judicial or discretionary. An act, however, is none the less ministerial because the person performing it may have to satisfy himself that a state of facts exists under which it is his right and duty to perform the act, though in doing so he must to some extent construe the statute by which the duty is imposed. Stephens v. Jones, 123 N. W. 705, 708, 24 S. D. 97.

Granting election certificate

A "ministerial" duty is "one which has been positively imposed by law and its performance required at a time and in a manner or upon conditions which are specifically designated; the duty to perform under the conditions specified not being dependent on the officer's discretion" (quoting Mecham on Public Officers, § 658). A "ministerial" duty, the performance of which may, in proper cases, be required of the head of a department, by judicial process, is one in respect to which nothing is left to discretion. It is simply definite duty arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist or imposed by law (quoting Sullivan v. Shanklin, 63 Cal. 247, 251). "Where the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of judgment, the act is 'ministerial'" (quoting Commissioner of the General Land Office v. Smith, 5 Tex. 471). Consequently, the duty imposed by Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 351, upon the Governor to grant a certificate of election to state officers after the canvassing board has filed its certificate showing him to have been elected, is a "ministerial" duty. State ex rel. Irvine v. Brooks, 84 Pac. 488, 490, 14 Wyo. 393, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 750, 7 Ann. Cas. 1108.

MINISTERIAL OFFICE—OFFICER

Assessors of taxes and county clerks are "ministerial officers," and, while in some respects their acts may be construed as judicial, they are not "judicial officers" as that term is used in the Constitution. They have no power to inflict penalties for violation of laws or to determine whether a law has been violated and adjudge persons guilty. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. People, 72 N. E. 725, 726, 212 Ill. 638.

Attorney

Acts 1880, p. 18, No. 11, making it unlawful for any judicial or "ministerial officer" of any of the courts of the state to go bail for any prisoner, etc., refers exclusively to such officers as judges, clerks, sheriffs, and their deputies, etc., as directly constitute the machinery of the court, and does not prohibit an attorney from becoming a surety on his client's bail bond, though an attorney is an officer of the courts generally. State v. Bablin, 50 South. 825, 826, 124 La. 1005, 18 Ann. Cas. 837.

City clerk

The city clerk of Los Angeles is a purely "ministerial officer" who must sign any ordinance duly passed, regardless of any views which he may entertain as to its legality. City of Los Angeles v. Leland, 106 Pac. 218, 219, 157 Cal. 30 (citing City of Los Angeles v. Hance, 70 Pac. 475, 137 Cal. 490).

Clerk of court

The clerk of a court is essentially a ministerial officer. He has nothing to do with the character or purpose of papers which are tendered to him to be filed. When suit is ordered or process directed to be issued, it is his duty to comply, if the party is prima facie entitled to it, and for failure to do so he is liable for any loss; the measure of his liability being the damages which have resulted therefrom. In an action on the official bond of a clerk of the circuit court for refusal to issue a summons, the plaintiff must state, in his declaration, enough to show that he had a good cause of action against the parties whom he desired to sue. He cannot simply claim as damages the amount for which he wanted to bring suit. Any declaration or complaint which does nothing more is demurrable. United States v. Bell, 12 Fed. 1002, 1003 (citing 7 Cyc. p. 196).

Policeman

Under Code 1904, p. 1018, cl. 1, § 1017, providing that officers and privates in the police force of cities and towns of the commonwealth shall possess such power and authority as now belongs to the office of constable at common law in enforcing the criminal laws of the commonwealth, and the ordinances of the city or town for which they are appointed or elected, and it shall be the duty of policemen to prevent the commission within the city or town of offenses against the laws of the commonwealth and against the ordinances of the city or town, to observe and enforce all such laws and ordinances, to detect and arrest offenders against the same, to preserve the good order of the city or town, and to secure the inhabitants thereof from violence and the property thereof from injury, a policeman is not a purely "ministerial officer," since a number of the powers enumerated in the statute are of an executive character, and therefore a person bribing a policeman is subject to punishment under Code, § 3744, providing that if any person give or offer any gift or gratuity to any "executive officer" with intent to influence his act, decision, or judgment on any matter or question which is or may be then pending, or may be brought before him in his official capacity, shall be punished, etc. Haynes v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 358, 359, 104 Va. 854.

MINOR

Man as including, see Man.

See, also, Child—Children (In Criminal Law).

The common-law rule that a minor is of age on the beginning of the day preceding his twenty-first anniversary does not prevail here, under Rev. Civ. Code, art. 37, providing that minors are persons who have not yet attained the age of 21 years complete, and a minor whose twenty-first anniversary does not occur until the next day after an election cannot lawfully register to vote thereat. State ex rel. Fleming v. Joyce, 49 South. 221, 222, 123 La. 637, 17 Ann. Cas. 905.

The term "minor children," as used in Const. art. 16, § 52, declaring that the homestead shall not be apportioned among the heirs of the decedent, so long as the guardian of minor children may be permitted to occupy the same, and in Rev. St. 1896, art. 2046, requiring the setting apart for the benefit of the widow and minor children of property exempt from execution, etc., does not include minor grandchildren living as members of the grandmother's family, and on her death, her property may be sold to pay debts. Ross v. Martin, 140 S. W. 432, 433, 104 Tex. 558.

The fact that Civ. Code, §§ 25, 27, defines minors as males under 21 and females under 18 years of age, did not deprive the Legislature of the right to pass Juvenile Court Law (St. 1911, p. 658), declaring that various acts shall constitute dependency and delinquency, and shall apply to all persons under 21, whether male or female. Moore v. Williams, 127 Pac. 509, 510, 19 Cal. App. 600.

The words "minor children," as used in Rev. St. 1896, arts. 2046, 2049, providing for the setting apart of the homestead and exempt property to the widow, minor children, and unmarried daughters of the deceased, were used in the sense of immediate descendants of the deceased, and therefore did not include a grandchild who lived with the intestate as a member of his family. Wilkins v. Briggs, 107 S. W. 135, 140, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 596.

Laws 1899, p. 298, c. 141, § 17, providing for the redemption of real property of any "minor heir" from a sale for taxes, applies only to minors inheriting the property. Burdick v. Kimball, 101 Pac. 845, 846, 53 Wash. 198.

Complainant's mother conveyed certain real estate to defendant in trust for complainant, to be conveyed in fee to him on his becoming of age, with remainder over on his death before that time. When complainant became 18 years of age, he obtained an order removing his civil disabilities, and authorizing him to manage his property and to sue and be sued, whereupon he brought a bill to compel the trustee to convey the estate to him. It was held that the emancipation did not terminate complainant's minority, so as to entitle him to a conveyance of the trust estate, as Rev. Code 1892, § 1508, defines a "minor" to be any person under the age of 21. Ray v. Kelly, 35 South. 165, 166, 82 Miss. 597.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3009, provides that every dramshop keeper who sells intoxicants to a minor without his parent's written consent shall forfeit a certain sum, etc., and makes every dramshop keeper violating such provision guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 8477 provides that males of 21 years shall be considered of full age, except as otherwise provided by law and, until they reach such age, shall be considered "minors." Held, that the fact that a minor to whom liquor was sold without his parent's consent was married and the head of a family would not prevent a conviction of the offender under section 3009. State v. Selberling, 127 S. W. 106, 107, 143 Mo. App. 318.

Section 721, Rev. St., declaring that the laws of the several states, except when the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States otherwise provide, shall be the rules of decisions in trials at common law where they apply, does not require the recognition of state statutes in an examination before an immigration officer to determine the right of an alien to enter or to remain in the United States under our immigration statutes. Section 3636 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota of 1905, providing that the word "minor" shall mean a male under 21 or a female under 18 years of age, is not binding in determining whether an alien female attains her majority when she reaches the age of 18 years; but such officer should follow the common-law rule, which fixes the age of majority at 21 for both sexes. Ex parte Petterson, 166 Fed. 536, 546.

Under Civ. Code, § 25, defining "minors" to include males under 21 years of age and females under 18 years of age; and section 26 providing that the age of a minor must be calculated from the first minute of the day on which he or she was born to the same minute of the corresponding day completing the period of minority, a female born on March 17, 1889, completed her minority and became an adult at the commencement of the day on March 18, 1907, prior to her commitment on that day to a reform school as a minor delinquent. Ex parte Wood, 90 Pac. 961, 962, 5 Cal. App. 471.

A "minor" within Act May 27, 1908, c. 199, §§ 1, 2, 6, 35 Stat. 312, 313, authorizing the sale of the allotments of minor freedmen, includes males under the age of 21 years and females under the age of 18 years, and the marriage of such minor does not confer on him or her the authority to sell his or her allotted lands independent of the supervision of the probate courts. Jefferson v. Winkler, 110 Pac. 755, 758, 26 Okl. 653.

Within Comp. Laws Okl. 1909, § 5523, providing that the marriage of a minor ward terminates the guardianship, and that the guardian may be discharged by the county court whenever it appears that the guardianship is no longer necessary, and Act Cong. May 27, 1908, c. 199, 35 Stat. 312, providing that all lands of minor allottees, including mixed-blood Indians having less than half Indian blood, shall be free from restrictions on alienation, and section 2, providing that "the terms minor or minors as used in this act shall include all males under the age of twenty-one years," the marriage of a minor male ward, a member of the Cherokee tribe of Indians, of less than one-half Indian blood, does not of itself terminate his guardianship, as to his allotment, nor abate the jurisdiction of the county court, and the guardian under such jurisdiction has authority to sell the minor's allotted lands. Kirkpatrick v. Burgess, 116 Pac. 764, 765, 29 Okl. 121.

MINOR LEAGUE

Three organizations, the National League, the American League, and the National Association, include in their membership practically every professional baseball club in the United States. The first two are known as the "major leagues," and the last as the "minor league." Kelly v. Herrman, 155 Fed. 887, 888.

MINOR OFFENSE

See, also, Misdemeanor.

An offense punishable by imprisonment in the parish prison or by hard labor in the penitentiary is a "minor offense," and not a felony. State v. Wall, 52 South. 556, 559, 126 La. 400.

The words "minor offenses," as used in the state Constitution authorizing the Legislature to grade all "misdemeanors and minor offenses against the state" and to fix the minimum and maximum penalty therefor, must be construed as meaning minor crimes, such as petty larceny and the like, which may be punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. The words were used to designate minor crimes which in the discretion of the court may be punishable by imprisonment in the parish jail or in the penitentiary, or, in other words, as misdemeanors or as felonies. Hence the act grading misdemeanors and minor offenses is constitutional in so far as it grades the offense of petty larceny and makes the same punishable by imprisonment in the parish jail. The contention was that petty larceny is a "felony," and not, therefore, within the purview of article 155 of the Constitution, or of the title of Act No. 107, p. 161, of 1902. The court says that the word "felony" in American law has no very definite or precise meaning, except in cases where it is defined by statute. "Apart from this, the word seems merely to imply a crime of a graver or more atrocious nature than a misdemeanor." Black's Law Dictionary. The term "felon" does not appear in the Constitution of 1898. In that instrument the words "offense" and "crime" are used as synonymous and "misdemeanor" as the lowest grade of offenses. Articles 9 and 12. Hence, in construing article 155, the words "minor offenses against the state" must be construed as meaning minor crimes, such as petty larceny and the like, which may be punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. The article reads, "All misdemeanors and minor offenses against the state." State v. Eubanks, 38 South. 407, 408, 114 La. 428.

MINORITY

Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 565, c. 547) § 32, provides that for the purposes of the section a "minority" is deemed a part of a life, and not an absolute term equal to the possible duration of such "minority." Tohe v. Crounse, 107 N. Y. Supp. 900, 904, 57 Misc. Rep. 252.

MINORITY PARTY

Acts 1907, c. 435, § 1, providing that the members of the State Board of Election shall be appointed by the Governor, was amended by Acts 1909, c. 103, § 1, requiring such board to be elected by the joint vote of both houses of the General Assembly. Section 3 of the amending act, amending section 4 of the original act, which fixed the term of office of the first members of the board and made the term of their successors two years, provides that all successors to the first board appointed shall be bona fide members of the same party to which the preceding members belong. Section 4, amending section 8 of the original act, which prohibited more than two of the members from being of the same political party, provides that not more than two of such members shall belong to the same political party, require the representatives of the majority and minority parties to be bona fide members of such parties, and defines the "minority party" as that which polled the second highest number of votes at the preceding presidential election. Held, that the persons appointed by the Governor as members of the State Board of Elections under the original act could not, in proceedings to establish their right to office as against persons holding under the amending act, claim that section 3 and 4 of the amending act contravened the Constitution, as imposing a political test as a qualification for office, unless the invalidity of such sections rendered the whole act invalid; such sections not imposing any burden, so as to give them an interest in their validity as taxpayers, and not affecting them in a way not common to all citizens. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 667, 12 Tenn. 471.

MINUTE

Loosely, a "minute" is a short space of time. We all know well that it is common parlance to describe the briefest space of time—a second or few seconds—as a "minute" or a "few minutes." The expression "couple of minutes," used by plaintiff in an action against a railway in testifying that after getting on the car she waited a couple of minutes before attempting to reach a seat, is not necessarily a statement that she actually desisted for 120 seconds in the act of seeking a seat. McGlynn v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 119, 120, 128 App. Div. 866.

MINUTES

The "minutes" are the proper record of the court, and are under the eye of the judge, and are at least prima facie correct. Ditzell Engineering & Construction Co. v. Lehmann, 45 South. 138, 139, 120 La. 273.

While the "minutes" kept by the judge are not the memorial of the judgment, and are not records required by law to be kept, they constitute legal evidence of what was adjudged, and as such may serve as the foundation for the correction of errors of the clerk in the performance of his duty. The minutes are only evidence of what was done. State ex rel. Sheridan Pub. Co. v. Goodrich, 140 S. W. 629, 630, 159 Mo. App. 422 (citing Kreisel v. Snively, 115 S. W. 1060, 135 Mo. App. 159).

MISADMINISTRATION

See Homicide by Misadventure.

MISAPPLICATION

See Willful Misapplication—Willfully Misapply.

To constitute a "misapplication" of the funds of a national bank, it must appear that the officer has been guilty of conversion, though it is unnecessary to show that the recipient of the proceeds of misapplication was also guilty of a conversion. United States v. Heinze, 31 Sup. Ct. 98, 218 U. S. 532, 541, 54 L. Ed. 1139, 21 Ann. Cas. 884.

It is not a "misapplication of the funds" of a bank, as that term is used in Rev. St. § 5209, denouncing the willful misapplication of the funds of a national bank, where an officer merely gave credit to an insolvent person or corporation, or honored the check of a depositor when there were no funds to the credit of the depositor, without any intention of defrauding the bank. Flickinger v. United States, 150 Fed. 1, 12, 79 C. C. A. 515.

MISAPPLY

See Willful Misapplication—Willfully Misapply.

The word "misapply" as used in Rev. St. § 5209, providing that every president, director, cashier, teller, etc., of any national bank association who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, etc., shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc., does not necessarily mean that the officer in charge should have physical possession of the funds misapplied. It is sufficient if he have such "control, direction, and power of management as to direct an application" of the same. Lear v. U. S., 147 Fed. 349, 357, 77 C. C. A. 527.

MISAPPROPRIATION

See Willful Misappropriation.

While considered alone, the word "misappropriation" does not necessarily in all cases mean dishonesty, yet it is susceptible of a meaning of dishonesty, embracing embezzlement. Johnson v. Turner, 47 South. 570, 571, 159 Ala. 356 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4529).

"Misappropriation" means "wrong appropriation; to turn or put to a wrong purpose." As used in a provision of the bankruptcy act exempting from a discharge debts created by "misappropriation" while acting in a fiduciary capacity, the term contemplates a conscious "misappropriation." Haggerty v. Badkin, 66 Atl. 420, 424, 72 N. J. Eq. 473 (quoting and adopting Webster's International Dictionary and Ency. Dictionary).

Words spoken of plaintiff, that he had destroyed a docket or public record belonging to the mayor's office to cover up evidence of his misappropriation of public funds and fines belonging to the town, were defamatory per se as imputing moral turpitude, since, ascribing to the word "misappropriation" the most innocent of its commonly accepted meanings, the gravamen of the charge was that plaintiff had destroyed evidence of his wrongful conversion of or dealing with the public funds and fines, to cover up, with the purpose to hinder, if not to render impossible, the detection of his misconduct, innocent of speculation though it were, and imputed a species of dishonesty of a highly depraved character. Johnson v. Turner, 47 South. 570, 571, 159 Ala. 356.

Where a trustee for creditors, who was appointed receiver for the debtor, loaned the funds in his possession to a firm of which he was a member and concealed the facts from the court as long as possible, he was guilty of a "misappropriation" of the funds within Bankr. Act 1898, § 17, providing that a discharge shall release a bankrupt from his provable debts, except such as were created by fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer or in a fiduciary capacity, though he may have expected that the loan would be repaid. Field v. Howry, 94 N. W. 213, 214, 182 Mich. 687.

MISBEHAVIOR

The conduct of an Indian is not to be held "misbehavior," justifying his arrest, in the absence of a law, rule, or regulation so defining it. Ex parte Bi-A-Lil-Le, 100 Pac. 450, 451, 12 Ariz. 150.

The giving of false, vague, and evasive testimony by an alleged bankrupt on his examination before a special commissioner, with the intention of misleading the court and concealing assets of his estate, is a "misbehavior," and constitutes a contempt, which the district court has power to punish under

Rev. St. § 725, on a summary hearing without a jury. Ex parte Bick, 155 Fed. 908, 909.

MISBEHAVIOR IN OFFICE

See, also, Misconduct in Office; Misdemeanor in Office.

A statute specifying acts "in respect to a court of justice or proceedings therein," constituting contempts, naming "misbehavior in office" or other willful neglect or violation of duty by a sheriff or other person appointed or elected to perform a judicial or ministerial service, only includes misbehavior done "in respect to" such court or some proceeding therein, and does not include an unauthorized arrest not shown to be a willful disobedience of any judgment, order, or process of the court. Hutton v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 81 Pac. 409, 411, 147 Cal. 156.

MISBRAND—MISBRANDING

An article long known and sold under its trade-name of "Coca-Cola," cannot be deemed misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act (Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1191]), because it does not contain any material element derived from the leaves of the coca plant. United States v. Forty Barrels and Twenty Kegs of Coca-Cola, 191 Fed. 431, 436.

A food product, labeled "Compound; Pure Comb and Strained Honey and Corn Syrup," is not "misbranded," within the meaning of Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, so that its shipment in interstate commerce constituted a misdemeanor thereunder, merely because the percentage of corn syrup in the compound largely exceeds that of honey. United States v. Boeckmann, 176 Fed. 382.

An article composed of the compound of vanilline, cumerin, spirits, sugar, coloring, and water, and plainly labeled on one side with the words "Peerless Extract of Vanilla," and on the reverse side, in small letters, with the words "Formula Vanilline Cumerin Spirits Sugar Coloring Water," is "misbranded," within Agricultural Law, §§ 164, 165, as amended, declaring that an article shall be deemed misbranded where it is an imitation of, or offered for sale under the distinctive name of, another article, and is not a mixture or compound known under its own distinctive name, and not included under the definition of misbranded articles of food within the exception in section 165. People v. James Butler, 118 N. Y. Supp. 849, 850, 134 App. Div. 151.

The Pure Food Law (Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915) prohibits misbranding of articles of food, and section 8 declares that the term "misbranded" shall apply to all articles of food, or articles which enter into the composition of food, the package or label of which shall bear any statement, design, or device, regarding such article, or the ingredients or substances contained therein, which shall be false or misleading in any particular. Subdivision 4, par. 2, declares that an article of food which does not contain any poisonous or deleterious ingredients shall not be deemed misbranded if labeled so as to plainly indicate that they are compounds, imitations, or blends, etc., provided that the term "blend" shall be construed to mean a mixture of like substances. Held, that the proviso was not limited to cases where the blend was claimed without disclosing the ingredients, but applied as well to cases where the component parts of the blend were disclosed, and hence a label attached to vinegar, which was in fact distilled vinegar to which a small quantity of pure boiled apple cider had been added for coloring, describing the substance as "Saratoga Brand vinegar, a blend of pure boiled apple cider and distilled vinegar," was misbranded as misleading the public to believe that it was composed of pure boiled apple cider vinegar and distilled vinegar. United States v. Ten Barrels of Vinegar, 186 Fed. 399, 401.

The federal pure food act of 1906 (Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 2, prohibits the introduction into any state from another state of food or drugs adulterated or branded within the meaning of the act. By section 6 the term "drug" is made to include all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia or National Formulary, and whisky is so recognized in both. By section 7 a "drug" is to be deemed adulterated if, when it is sold under a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia or National Formulary, it differs from a standard of strength, quality, or purity as determined by the test laid down in those publications, unless the actual standard thereof be plainly stated on the package. Held that, where bottles containing intoxicants are labeled as containing "monogram whisky" and marked "Blend," and the alcoholic content is less, and the residuum from 100 cubic centimeters is more, than the standard test prescribed by such act, the liquors are misbranded and adulterated within the meaning thereof. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 76 Atl. 268, 269, 106 Me. 135.

Defendant manufactured syrup from cane sugar, flavored to represent maple syrup by the introduction of an extract from maple wood after it had been chopped down. The syrup was put up in bottles labeled "Western Reserve Ohio Blended Maple Syrup," the words "Ohio" and "Maple Syrup" being in red, and between them the word "Blended," and then below that in smaller type, the statement, "This syrup is made from the sugar maple tree and cane sugar." Held that the label was misleading, in that purchasers would ordinarily understand that the article contained in part maple syrup made from the boiled-down sap drawn from live maple trees, and that defendant was therefore guilty of misbranding. United States v. Scanlon, 180 Fed. 485, 488.

Claimants operated a canning factory in Benton Harbor, Mich., where fruits grown in Michigan, as well as in other states, were canned and prepared for sale. Claimants canned certain "tepee" apples and blackberries, grown in Arkansas, sold under a label on which was printed: "Tepee Apples [or Blackberries, as the case might be]. Packed by C. H. Godfrey & Son, Benton Harbor and Watervliet, Michigan." There was evidence that Michigan apples and blackberries were better than those grown in Arkansas. Held, that the labels indicated that the fruit was grown in Michigan, and that claimants were therefore guilty of misbranding in violation of Food and Drug Act Cong. June 30, 1906, c. 8915. United States v. 100 Cases of Tepee Apples, 179 Fed. 985, 987.

"Salad oil" prima facie means olive oil, and, in the absence of evidence that the term has recently acquired a more general meaning to include other oils, its use without further explanation on packages of cotton seed oil shipped in interstate commerce constitutes a misbranding in violation of Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 8915, § 2. Brina v. United States, 179 Fed. 373, 105 C. C. A. 558.

Ordinary Croton water drawn from the pipes in New York City filtered and bottled after the addition of small quantities of mineral salts and carbonic acid gas, is not "spring water," as the term is generally understood, and the labeling of the bottles as spring water constitutes a misbranding within the meaning of the food and drugs act (Act June 30, 1906, c. 8915, § 8). United States v. Morgan, 181 Fed. 587, 588.

The H. Company, at Kansas City, Mo., on April 3, 1909, contracted to sell to the W. Company at Ft. Worth, Tex., 5,000 bushels of No. 2 red wheat, according to the Missouri official state grades. On April 29, 1909, the H. Company ordered the operator of a public elevator where it stored its grain to ship to the W. Company in fulfillment of this contract No. 2 red wheat. The operator loaded and sent to the W. Company a car of wheat. After this wheat was loaded, the official inspector of the state of Missouri at Kansas City inspected, adjudged, and certified this wheat to be No. 2 red wheat. An invoice of it was forwarded to the W. Company dated May 3, 1909, showing that it was shipped under the contract of April 3, 1909, and subject to Kansas City weights and grades. The wheat arrived in Texas without change. The Texas inspector, the federal inspector, and other witnesses there found it to be, and it was, wheat of another and less valuable grade. None of the officers or employees of the H. Company had any knowledge of this fact, or anything to do with the grading or shipping, except to order the operator of the public elevator to ship No. 2 red wheat. Held, that H. Company was not guilty of misbranding or of adulterating within the meaning of sections 7 and 8 of the Pure Food Act (Act June 30, 1906, c. 8915). Hall-Baker Grain Co. v. United States, 198 Fed. 614, 617, 117 C. C. A. 318; United States v. Seventy-Five Boxes of Alleged Pepper, 198 Fed. 934, 937.

False and misleading statements in the labels on a proprietary medicine as to its curative or remedial effects, but which do not import any statement concerning identity, are not "misbranding," within the meaning of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, c. 8915, § 8, which defines that term as applicable to all drugs or articles of food, the package or label of which shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding such article or the ingredients or substances contained therein which shall be false or misleading in any particular. United States v. Johnson, 81 Sup. Ct. 627, 221 U. S. 488, 55 L. Ed. 823.

MISCARRIAGE

See Debt, Default, or Miscarriage of Another.

In medical jurisprudence — Abortion synonymous

The word "abortion," when used in judicial proceedings, necessarily implies that the crime was committed on a woman with child, and is synonymous with "miscarriage" in its primary meaning. Marmaduke v. People, 101 Pac. 337, 338, 45 Colo. 357.

In strictness, abortion is not of itself a crime, since the word "miscarriage" in its legal acceptation does not necessarily include the destruction of the child before birth; nor is a design to cause its miscarriage the same thing as a design to destroy the child. State ex rel. Gaston v. Shields, 130 S. W. 298, 301, 230 Mo. 91.

Decedent, having applied for insurance in a mutual benefit society, answered that she had never had any local disease, personal injury, or illness of any kind, but in answer to the medical questions stated that her last confinement was in 1908, and that she had had two miscarriages from overexertion. In an action on the certificate, it was shown that in 1903, about seven years prior to decedent's death, she suffered an abortion when she was about three months advanced in pregnancy, and that about three years later another occurred at about the same stage. Held, that since the words "abortion" and "miscarriage" are synonymous, both meaning premature parturition, there was no breach of warranty or misrepresentation. Royal Neighbors of America v. Bratcher (Tex.) 151 S. W. 885, 886.

MISCELLANY

If storage accounts against whisky in bond are not assessable as "accounts," they are assessable under the title "miscellany" of Ky. St. § 4058, making subject to taxation the "value of all of the property not mentioned above"; that item being placed in the statute to effectuate section 4050, requiring that, if there be no appropriate column for the statement and valuation of property, it shall be valued in the column headed "Miscellany." Commonwealth v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 136 S. W. 1032, 1039, 143 Ky. 314.

See, also, Malconduct.

"Misconduct" is defined as "wrong conduct; bad behavior; mismanagement." The synonyms are "misbehavior; misdemeanor; mismanagement; misdeed; delinquency; offense." The verb "misconduct" is defined: "To conduct amiss; to mismanage." Bailey v. Examining & Trial Board of Police Department of City of Helena, 122 Pac. 572, 574, 45 Mont. 197.

"Misconduct" is defined as improper conduct, wrong behavior. The sense in which the word is used in a threat by an attorney to expose "misconduct" of his client is a question of fact for the court. Bar Ass'n of City of Boston v. Hale, 88 N. E. 885, 887, 197 Mass. 423.

"Misconduct" of the prevailing party" as a statutory ground for a new trial is not confined to something occurring at the trial, but includes acts amounting to misconduct, which, though they occurred before, operate at the trial. Phares v. Krhut, 91 Pac. 52, 53, 76 Kan. 238.

Attorney

The attorney for an administrator had, prior to the administrator's appointment, arranged to borrow money of him, and after the appointment the administrator withdrew from the bank funds belonging to the estate, which funds were deposited by the attorney in his own bank to his own credit; a part being used to cover an overdraft. The attorney then gave the administrator a check for a part of the funds, a note for the balance, and paid him $50 in cash for making the loan. Held, that the attorney was guilty of "misconduct" within Code Civ. Proc. § 67, authorizing suspension from practice of attorneys therefor. In re Freedman, 99 N. Y. Supp. 135, 136, 113 App. Div. 327.

"Misconduct" of attorney, as used in Pol. Code Alaska, § 743, authorizing suspension or disbarment therefor, is not confined to misconduct in the attorney's relation to his client, but includes as well misconduct toward the court or a judge in or out of court. Cobb v. United States, 172 Fed. 641, 643, 98 C. C. A. 477.

For an attorney to publish and advertise a pamphlet, the purpose of which is to attract nonresidents to the state to apply to its courts for divorce, through his agency as an attorney, that he may profit financially thereby, is "misconduct," within Comp. Laws, § 2625, providing for removal or suspension of attorneys for misconduct. In re Schnitzer, 112 Pac. 848, 851, 33 Nev. 581, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 941.

Corporate officer

The use of the word "misconduct" of officers of a corporation in an application for a removal of a receiver does not denote personal wrong, but merely that the business was not conducted properly; and while there may be some blame, or censure connected with it, it is not actionable as libel. Lebovitch v. Joseph Levy & Bros. Co., 54 South. 978, 981, 128 La. 518.

The issuance of stock by officers of a corporation without authority from the directors, and without consideration flowing to the corporations, is misconduct, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1781, authorizing the removal of officers, etc., for misconduct towards the corporation. People v. Lyon, 104 N. Y. Supp. 319, 119 App. Div. 361; Id., 82 N. E. 1130, 189 N. Y. 544.

Executor

It is "misconduct" rendering the executor "unfit" for the execution of his office, for which his letters may be revoked (Code Civ. Proc. § 2685, subd. 2), where he claims the benefits of a contract between himself and testator, as to which there was strong evidence that testator was of unsound mind at the time of its execution, and by which the executor secured great pecuniary advantage, to the detriment of the estate. In re Gleason's Estate, 41 N. Y. Supp. 418, 428, 17 Misc. Rep. 510.

Juror or jury

After the jury is sworn, misconduct on the part of an individual juror is misconduct of the jury. State v. Mott, 74 Pac. 728, 730, 29 Mont. 292.

"Misconduct" of a juror which is statutory ground for a new trial is misconduct while he is such juror, and has no reference to what he has done before he is sworn to try the case; and therefore a statement by a juror, before being sworn as a juror, that accused was guilty and ought to be punished, is not such "misconduct" as would be ground for a new trial. People v. Emmons, 95 Pac. 1082, 1039, 7 Cal. App. 685.

The fact that the jury made incorrect or untrue answers to special interrogatories returned with their general verdict is not "misconduct of the jury," within the meaning of a statute providing that a new trial may be granted for misconduct of the jury. M. O'Connor Co. v. Gillaspay, 83 N. E. 738, 741, 170 Ind. 428.

MISCONDUCT IN OFFICE

See, also, Misbehavior in Office; Misdemeanor in Office.

"Misconduct in office" includes such acts as amount to a breach of the good faith and of the right action that are tacitly required of all officers. Etzler v. Brown, 50 South. 416, 417, 418, 58 Fla. 221, 138 Am. St. Rep. 113.

"Misconduct in office" in its penal sense is any act or omission in breach of a duty of public concern by one who has accepted public office, providing his act is willful and corrupt and is not judicial. United States v. Haas, 167 Fed. 211, 214 (adopting definition in Bish. New Cr. Law, §§ 459, 460).

The phrase "misconduct in office" is broad enough to include any willful malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office (citing State ex rel. Lilley v. Slover, 113 Mo. 208, 20 S. W. 788). It does not necessarily imply corruption or criminal intention. The official doing of a wrongful act, or official neglect to do an act which ought to have been done, will constitute the offense, although there was no corrupt or malicious motive (citing Mechem, Public Officers, § 457). After defining "misconduct," Webster declares it to be synonymous with "misbehavior," "misdemeanor," "delinquency," and "offense." Pen. Code, § 758, provides that an accusation against any municipal officer for "willful or corrupt misconduct in office" may be presented by the grand jury. Section 772 provides for the summary removal of public officers on an accusation verified by the oath of any person alleging that the officer has "neglected or refused to perform the official duties pertaining to his office." Section 335 declares every public officer who refuses or neglects to inform against and prosecute persons whom he has reasonable cause to believe offenders against the chapter on gambling, guilty of a misdemeanor. Under the definitions and statutory provisions recited above, a public officer who fails to prosecute gamblers of whom he has knowledge is guilty of "willful misconduct" within the meaning of section 758, and may be accused by the grand jury thereunder. Coffey v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 82 Pac. 75, 76, 77, 147 Cal. 525.

"Misconduct in office" means any unlawful misbehavior in regard to the duties of an office, willful in its character. A county commissioner, who, without willfulness or a corrupt motive, but through ignorance disre-gards the provisions of a statute regulating the exercise of his official duties, is not thereby guilty of "misconduct in office," within the meaning of section 6915, Rev. St., which prescribes a fine and the forfeiture of office for such misconduct. State v. Bair, 73 N. E. 514, 515, 71 Ohio St. 410.

A charge against a chief of police of "misconduct in office" includes any act involving moral turpitude, or any act which is contrary to justice, honesty, principle, or good morals, if performed by virtue or authority of office. State ex rel. Wynne v. Examining and Trial Board of Police Department of City of Butte, 117 Pac. 77, 78, 43 Mont. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 143.

Where a policeman, a married man, while not on duty called upon a married woman at her home in the absence of her husband, and, the husband returning unexpectedly, the policeman secreted himself in a bedroom, where he was found by the husband and driven from the house, the conduct of the policeman was "misconduct," within a statute providing that officers will not be removable at will for political reasons or for any other cause than "incapacity, misconduct, nonresidence, or disobedience of just rules and regulations." Winters v. Board of Police Com'rs of Jersey City, 71 Atl. 50, 51, 77 N. J. Law, 153.

The complaint against a police captain, alleging that a merchant complained to the officer of an obstruction, consisting of a stone step on the sidewalk in front of a certain house, and that the officer told him nothing could be done for him unless he would swear out a warrant, is sufficient to charge the offenses of misconduct in office and incompetency, triable under Rev. Codes, § 3309, by the police trial board, in view of a police regulation requiring an officer, to whom complaint is made, to remedy the matter, or, if he cannot do so at once, to make a memorandum at police headquarters of the complaint, so that it may receive proper attention. Bailey v. Examining and Trial Board of Police Department of City of Helena, 122 Pac. 572, 573, 45 Mont. 197.

Where a deputy county auditor in Minnesota authorized by law to act in the name of his principal and for whose official acts the auditor and his bondsmen were responsible to the county, and to any person injured by his "misconduct in office" (Gen. St. Minn. 1894, §§ 710, 5951), issued spurious refund orders on the county treasurer in favor of fictitious payees, purporting to be for the refunding of taxes received through redemption from tax sales, and procured the orders to be authenticated by the chairman of the board of county commissioners and forged the names of the fictitious payees to assignments thereof and sold them to a bank, any loss sustained by the bank through its purchase could not be attributable to the official "misconduct in office" of the deputy in issuing the same, but the proximate cause was his individual act in forging the assignments and selling the orders as genuine, and, as the orders were nonnegotiable, the bank was put on inquiry, and acquired no greater rights than the supposed payees, and had no claim to recover any loss either from the county or from the sureties on the auditor's bond. National Surety Co. v. State Savings Bank, 156 Fed. 21, 25, 84 C. C. A. 187, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155, 13 Ann. Cas. 421.

A deputy county auditor in Minnesota, authorized by law to act in the name of his principal and for whose official acts the auditor and his bondsmen were responsible, not only to the county, but to any person injured by his "misconduct in office" (Gen. St. Minn. 1894, §§ 710, 5951), issued spurious refund orders on the county treasurer in favor of fictitious payees, purporting to be for the refunding of invalid tax sale certificates. He procured the orders to be authenticated by the chairman of the county board, and they were presented to the county treasurer, who indorsed thereon that there were no funds available, but that they would be paid with 7 per cent. interest when there was money in the treasury for the purpose. Such deputy forged the names of the fictitious payees to assignments and sold the orders to a state savings bank, to which they were paid by the treasurer with interest a year later. The deputy auditor bore a good reputation, and his integrity had never previously been questioned. The bank was expressly authorized by statute to invest funds in such orders, and had done so before in the usual course of business. On discovering the forgeries, the county brought suit on the auditor's bond and recovered a judgment which was paid by the surety, which then brought suit against the bank. Held that, although the orders were not negotiable, the bank was not chargeable with any negligence in their purchase, but that the loss was one caused by the "misconduct in office" of the deputy auditor for which the surety was liable, and that it could not recover over against the bank. National Surety Co. v. Arosin, 198 Fed. 605, 606, 117 O. C. A. 313.

MISDELIVERY

"Misdelivery" of goods is the same as a total failure to deliver them at all, and is deemed a conversion of the property by the carrier. Leaving goods at the wrong place may constitute a misdelivery and conversion of them, as well as delivering them to the wrong person. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. C. & A. Potts & Co., 71 N. E. 685, 689, 33 Ind. App. 564 (citing Elliott, Railroads, § 1526; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 32 N. E. 476, 49 Ohio St. 489, 21 L. R. A. 117, 34 Am. St. Rep. 579; Houston & T. C. Ry. Co.

v. Adams, 49 Tex. 748, 30 Am. Rep. 116; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. White, 69 Ky. [Bush] 251; Clafin v. Boston & L. R. Co., 8 Mass. [7 Allen] 341).

MISDEMEANOR

See Cases of Misdemeanor; High Crime and Misdemeanors.

"A 'misdemeanor' is an act committed or omitted in violation of the public law, either forbidding or commanding it." Commonwealth v. R. I. Sherman Mfg. Co., 75 N. E. 71, 72, 189 Mass. 76, 4 Ann. Cas. 26 (quoting and adopting definition in 4 Black Com. 5).

"Misdemeanor" is generally understood to mean the lower criminal offense, as distinguished from a felony. United States v. Stevenson, 30 Sup. Ct. 35, 37, 215 U. S. 190, 54 L. Ed. 153.

A "misdemeanor" is misconduct or offense inferior to a felony. People v. Butts, 105 N. Y. Supp. 677, 678, 121 App. Div. 226.

A "misdemeanor" is a minor crime which does not amount to a felony. State v. Doran, 59 Atl. 440, 441, 99 Me. 329, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278.

A "misdemeanor" is defined to be an indictable offense which does not amount to a felony. State v. Melles, 42 South. 199, 200, 117 La. 656; United States v. Zarafonitis, 150 Fed. 97, 101, 80 C. C. A. 51, 10 Ann. Cas. 290 (quoting 4 Chitty, Blackstone, 5, and note).

A "misdemeanor" is an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment in the county jail only. State v. Wilson, 126 S. W. 996, 140 Mo. App. 726.

A "misdemeanor" is defined by Rev. St. 1899, § 2395, to mean every offense punishable only by a fine or imprisonment in a county jail, or both. State ex rel. Butler v. Foster, 86 S. W. 245, 248, 187 Mo. 590.

"Misdemeanors," in the state of Indiana, are such wrongs of a public nature as are punished by criminal proceedings in the name of the state. The charges must be preferred upon oath in the form of an affidavit, information, or indictment. The process is a warrant, and it is served by arresting the person of the defendant. The punishment in all except capital cases is by fine or imprisonment or disfranchisement, or by two or more of these, and, whenever it is by fine only, the defendant stands committed until the fine is paid or bail is entered. Adams Express Co. v. State, 67 N. E. 1033, 1039, 161 Ind. 328.

The word "misdemeanor," as used in the Charter of City of Kingston, § 51, providing that certain persons shall be punished according to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure as for misdemeanor, includes the whole class of crimes bearing that

Maliciously threatening to accuse another of crime is a "misdemeanor." Schultz v. State, 116 N. W. 259, 264, 185 Wis. 644 (dissenting opinion of Judge Timlin, citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Stat. 1898, § 4880).

To solicit the commission of an offense which is a felony is a "misdemeanor" at common law, and it is immaterial whether the offense which is solicited is made a felony by act of Parliament or by the common law. One who solicits that he be bribed solicits the commission of a felony and is therefore guilty of a common-law "misdemeanor." State v. Sullivan, 84 S. W. 105, 109, 110 Mo. App. 75 (distinguishing State v. Priestley, 74 Mo. 24, State v. Harney, 14 S. W. 657, 101 Mo. 470).

B. & C. Comp. § 1067, subd. 1, authorizes disbarment on an attorney's conviction of felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, and makes the conviction record conclusive evidence. Held, that the words "felony" and "misdemeanor" were used in their statutory sense, and, there being no offense known to the state law as "conspiracy to suborn perjury," an attorney's conviction of such offense in a federal court was not conclusive evidence, in a disbarment proceeding, of his commission of an act warranting disbarment. State v. Biggs, 97 Pac. 713, 714, 52 Or. 433.

Felony distinguished

See Felony.

Assault

Under Revisal 1905, § 3621, making it a felony for one to maliciously assault another with a deadly weapon by waylaying, etc., and section 3291, defining a misdemeanor as an offense not punishable by death or imprisonment in the state's prison, and Acts 1870-71, p. 94, c. 43, punishing by fine or imprisonment a person convicted of an assault, with or without intent to kill, a prosecution for an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill is a prosecution for a misdemeanor, and not for malicious mischief, defined by section 2876 as willfully injuring personal property with malice to the owner, and is barred in two years by section 3147, providing that all misdemeanors, except for "malicious mischief, and other malicious misdemeanors," shall be presented within two years after the commission of the same, the words "other malicious misdemeanors" being intended to describe an offense of which malice is a necessary ingredient, as in the case of malicious mischief. State v. Friabee, 55 S. E. 722, 724, 142 N. C. 671.

Contempt

A contempt proceeding is classified as a misdemeanor, and not as a felony. Bullock Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec- tric & Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 105, 107, 63 C. C. A. 607.

Ky. St. § 1127, divides all crimes into felonies and misdemeanors, defining "felonies" as offenses punishable with death or confinement in the penitentiary, and "misdemeanors" as all other offenses, whether at common law or by statute. Chapter 36, art. 4, subd. 6 (chapter 15, art. 12), classifies a contempt as a misdemeanor. Section 1138 (section 241) provides that prosecutions by the commonwealth to recover a penalty for violation of any penal statute shall be commenced within one year after the right to such penalty accrued, with immaterial exceptions. Held that, criminal contempt being a misdemeanor, and the punishment therefor regulated by statute, a prosecution therefor is a prosecution by the commonwealth to recover a penalty, within section 1138, barred by limitations after one year from the time that the penalty accrued. Gordon v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 206, 208, 141 Ky. 461.

Criminal libel is a "misdemeanor," within Code, § 7, defining a misdemeanor to be any public offense, the punishment for which is not death or confinement in the penitentiary, and hence, under the express provisions of section 184, the trial may be had in the absence of defendant. Walston v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 102 S. W. 275.

Deterring witness from appearing or giving evidence

Rev. St. 1899, § 2041, provides that every person who shall by bribery or other means deter a witness from appearing or giving evidence in any cause shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and that, if the cause be a prosecution for a felony, the person so offending shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for two years, or in the county jail, or by fine. Section 2393 provides that the term "felony" shall be construed to mean any offense punishable with imprisonment in the penitentiary or with death, and by section 2395 the term "misdemeanor" is to be construed as including every offense punishable only by fine or imprisonment in the county jail, or both. Held, that an offense within the proviso of section 2041 is a misdemeanor, though punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. State ex rel. Butler v. Foster, 86 S. W. 245, 248, 187 Mo. 590.

Obstructing street

Under Rev. Laws, c. 215, § 1, defining a "felony" as a crime punishable by death or state imprisonment, and making other offenses misdemeanors, violation by a railroad company of St. 1906, c. 463, pt. 2, § 155, by obstructing a street, being punishable by a fine only, is a "misdemeanor." Commonwealth v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 92 N. E. 766, 768, 206 Mass. 417, 19 Ann. Cas. 529.

Possession and sale of counterfeit trade-marks and labels

The offense of having in possession and selling counterfeit trade-marks and labels, in violation of Pen. Code, § 364, subd. 4, is a "misdemeanor," and hence defendants, acting in concert in the commission of such offense, may be properly tried together. People v. Strauss, 88 N. Y. Supp. 40, 43, 94 App. Div. 453.

Vagrancy

"Vagrancy," as defined in Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, declaring guilty of vagrancy every idle, lewd, or dissolute person, or associate of known thieves, or every person who wanders about the streets, at late or unusual hours of the night, without any visible or lawful business, though it cannot be committed by a single act observable at one time, is a "misdemeanor" that can be committed "in the presence" of an officer, so as to justify him, under sections 836-840, in arresting him without a warrant. Defendant, for the purpose of rebutting the evidence of his vagrancy, which was claimed to have existed to the knowledge of the officer arresting him, so as to justify the arrest without a warrant, having testified that he had a lease, covering several months prior and up to the time of the arrest, of a certain tenement, which he had sublet to prostitutes, and that he had in the meantime purchased a mining location, on which he intended to go as soon as the lease expired, may, for the purpose of showing that he had no lawful business, which fact, in connection with his wandering about the streets at late and unusual hours of the night, would constitute him a vagrant under Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, be required on cross-examination to testify that during the running of his lease he had no other business except gambling. People v. Craig, 91 Pac. 997, 1001, 152 Cal. 42.

Violation of anti-trust law

St. 1907, p. 984, c. 530, § 1, defining "trusts," and for a violation thereof providing a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment not less than six months nor more than a year, or both, prescribes a "misdemeanor," since under Pen. Code, §§ 16, 17, a "felony" is a crime punishable by death or by imprisonment in the state prison, and every other crime is a "misdemeanor." Union Ice Co. v. Rose, 104 Pac. 1006, 1007, 11 Cal. App. 357.

Violation of immigration law

Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 4, provides that "it shall be a misdemeanor" for any person to prepay the transportation or in any way to assist or encourage the importation of any contract laborer into the United States. Section 5 provides that for every violation of section 4 the persons knowingly violating the same "shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor," etc. Held that section 4 defines a criminal offense, and that, although the act provides no criminal punishment therefor, an indictment will lie under Rev. St. § 5440, for a conspiracy to commit such offense. United States v. Tsokas, 163 Fed. 129, 130, 131.

Violation of license law

A violation of a license law is a "misdemeanor." Perry v. Man, 1 R. I. 263, 265.

Violation of liquor law

The offense of manufacturing, selling, bartering, giving away, or otherwise furnishing any intoxicating liquor of any kind, including beer, ale, and wine, contrary to the provisions of the prohibition article of the Constitution, is a "misdemeanor." Ex parte Cain, 93 Pac. 974, 976, 20 Okl. 125.

Since the punishment for retailing spirituous liquors is that fixed for a misdemeanor under Revisal 1905, § 3291, providing that a "felony" is a crime punishable by either death or imprisonment in the state's prison, and that any other crime is a "misdemeanor," the word "feloniously," in a warrant charging that accused unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously retailed spirituous liquors, is superfluous. State v. Shine, 62 S. E. 1080, 1081, 149 N. C. 480.

An ordinance entitled "An ordinance concerning misdemeanors" is sufficiently broad to cover a provision prohibiting any one from engaging in any calling on Sunday, or from keeping open any place of business, or from permitting persons to resort thereto for the purpose of drinking intoxicating liquors on Sunday. Town of Lovilia v. Cobb, 102 N. W. 496, 497, 126 Iowa, 557.

Violation of municipal ordinance or resolution

The violation of a municipal ordinance is not a "misdemeanor," within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, §§ 2, 31, defining felony and misdemeanor, since those sections of the Code relate only to offenses against the public laws of the state and not to infractions of local laws of municipalities. Pearson v. Wimbish, 52 S. E. 751, 755, 124 Ga. 701, 4 Ann. Cas. 501.

The word "misdemeanor," in statutes conferring power on municipal corporations is not synonymous with the same term as used at common law, or in general statutes defining offenses against the state, but has a more restricted meaning, and is limited to offenses against the smaller local government; and, while an offense against a city may also be an offense against the state, there are many offenses against municipalities which are not offenses against the state, and which the legislative bodies of the municipalities are authorized to define and declare by ordinance, subject to the condition that the ordinance is not in conflict with the Constitution or general laws, or the charter, and is not unreasonable. O'Haver v. Montgomery, 111 S. W. 449, 450, 120 Tenn. 448, 127 Am. St. Rep. 1014.

Every offense punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, is at least a "misdemeanor" which concerns the state at large and not specially any municipality. A violation of the resolution of the board of health of a town in Milwaukee county outside the city of Milwaukee, which prohibits the bringing therein of garbage, and which provides that any violation thereof shall be punishable under St. 1898, § 4608, making any person violating any regulation of any board of health punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or by a fine, is a "misdemeanor," within Laws 1899, c. 218, § 5, taking away from the justice of the peace of Milwaukee county jurisdiction of criminal actions, including misdemeanors, arising in the county, triable before a justice of the peace. Stoltman v. Lake, 102 N. W. 920, 921, 124 Wis. 462 (citing City of Oshkosh v. Schwartz, 13 N. W. 552, 55 Wis. 483).

A resolution of the board of health of a town in Milwaukee county outside the city of Milwaukee prohibits the bringing therein of garbage, etc., and provides that any violation thereof shall be punishable under Rev. St. 1898, § 4608, which makes any person who shall violate any order or regulation of any board of health punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not more than three months or by a fine not exceeding $100. Rev. St. 1898, c. 142, § 3294, provides that in all cases not otherwise specially provided for by law, where a forfeiture shall be incurred, and the act or omission for which the same is imposed shall not also be a misdemeanor, such forfeiture may be sued for and recovered in a civil action; that when such act or omission is punishable by fine and imprisonment, or by fine or imprisonment, or is specially declared by law to be a misdemeanor, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor within the chapter, and that the word "forfeiture," as used in the chapter, shall include any penalty in money or goods other than a fine. Held, that a violation of the resolution is a misdemeanor, within Laws 1899, p. 359, c. 218, § 5, taking away from justices of the peace of Milwaukee county jurisdiction of criminal actions, including misdemeanors arising in the county otherwise triable before a justice of the peace, so as to deprive a justice of the peace of jurisdiction thereof notwithstanding the amendment of Laws 1899, p. 359, c. 218, § 5, by Laws 1901, p. 89, c. 70, § 1, and Laws 1903, p. 613, c. 388, adding thereto that nothing therein contained shall be construed to deprive any justice of the peace of any town in Milwaukee county, except only the city of Milwaukee, of jurisdiction of complaints for the violation of any ordinance of any such town. Stoltman v. Town of Lake, 102 N. W. 920, 921, 124 Wis. 462.

MISDEMEANOR IN OFFICE

Within a statute providing that if any clerk shall knowingly and willingly do any act contrary to the duties of his office, or shall knowingly and willfully fail to perform any act or duty required of him by law, he shall be deemed guilty of a "misdemeanor in office," and authorizing his removal on information that he has been guilty of a "misdemeanor in office," the circuit judge is without jurisdiction to remove a clerk of the circuit court from office because he had been informed against for murder wholly disconnected with his office. State ex rel. Henson v. Sheppard, 91 S. W. 477, 480, 482, 192 Mo. 497.

MISFEASANCE

"Misfeasance" is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do." It is a failure to use, in the performance of a duty owing to an individual, that degree of care, skill, and diligence which the circumstances of the case reasonably demanded. State, to Use of Cardin, v. McClellan, 85 S. W. 267, 268, 113 Tenn. 616, 3 Ann. Cas. 992.

A "misfeasance" is the failure to do something imposed upon the person by law as a reasonable member of society, or the failure to use reasonable care and diligence in the performance of a duty imposed by contract which results in an injury to a third person. Irvin v. Callaway, 55 S. E. 1039, 1040, 127 Ga. 246 (citing Southern Ry. Co. v. Grizzle, 53 S. E. 244, 124 Ga. 787, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191).

"Misfeasance" is the performance of an act in an improper manner, whereby some one receives an injury." The directors of a county fair association failing to securely protect patrons of the grand stand from injuries by a wild ball pitched or batted in the game, one of the amusements of the county fair, are not liable to such patrons as for misfeasance. Williams v. Dean, 111 N. W. 931, 933, 134 Iowa, 216, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410.

Nonfeasance distinguished

"Nonfeasance" is doing nothing, while "misfeasance" is doing improperly. Stiewel v. Borman, 37 S. W. 404, 405, 63 Ark. 30, 36.

"Misfeasance" is the performance of an act, which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, resulting in injury to another, while "nonfeasance" is the nonperformance of an act which should be performed. Haynes' Adm'rs v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 140 S. W. 176, 179, 145 Ky. 209, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 719.

"Misfeasance" is the improper doing of an act, as distinguished from "nonfeasance," which is the total omission to do an act. If a party makes a gratuitous engagement, actually enters upon the execution of the business, and does it amiss through want of due care, by which danger ensues to the other party, an action will lie for misfeasance. It has been held that misfeasance may involve to some extent the idea of not doing, as where an agent, while engaged in the performance of his undertaking, does not do something which it is his duty to do under the circumstances, as, for instance, when he does not exercise that care which a due regard for the right of the other party requires. Such negligence as would be actionable in any relation of life is "misfeasance" by not doing. Southern Ry. Co. v. Rowe, 59 S. E. 462, 466, 2 Ga. App. 557.

"A distinction ordinarily is taken between acts of 'misfeasance,' or positive wrongs, and 'nonfeasance,' or mere omissions of duty. The master is always liable to third persons for the misfeasances of his servants in all cases within the scope of his employment. The principal is also liable to third persons for like misfeasances of his agent. The agent is also liable to third persons for his own misfeasances and positive wrongs, but he is not liable to third persons for his own nonfeasances or omissions of duty in the course of his employment. His liability, in such cases, is to his principal. The distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance, between acts of direct positive wrongs and mere neglects of agents as to their personal liability, seems to be founded on this ground. No authority whatever from a superior to an inferior can furnish the latter a just defense for his own positive wrongs or trespasses, for no man can authorize another to do a positive wrong. But in respect to nonfeasances, or mere neglects in the performance of duty, the responsibility therefor must arise from some express or implied obligation between particular parties standing in privity of law or contract with each other, and no man is bound to answer for any such violations of duty or obligation except to those to whom he has become directly bound or amenable for his conduct." Bryce v. Southern R. Co., 125 Fed. 958, 962 (quoting and adopting definitions in Story, Ag. [9th Ed.] §§ 308, 309).

"Misfeasance" and "nonfeasance," as used in connection with the acts of agents, is often difficult of determination. "Misfeasance" means a positive wrong. It may involve also, to some extent, the idea of not doing, as where the agent, while engaged in the performance of his undertaking, does not do something which it was his duty to do under the circumstances. The distinction to be observed between mere nonfeasance and misfeasance was considered in Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 103 (39 Am. Rep. 437), where the court said: "It is often said in the books that an agent is responsible to third persons for misfeasance only, and not for nonfeasance. And it is doubtless true that if an agent never does anything towards carrying out his contract with his principal, but wholly omits and neglects to do so, the principal is the only person who can maintain any action against him for the nonfeasance. But, if the agent once actually undertakes and enters upon the execution of a particular work, it is his duty to use reasonable care in the manner of executing it so as not to cause any injury to third persons which may be the natural consequence of his acts; and he cannot, by abandoning its execution midway and leaving things in a dangerous condition, exempt himself from liability to any person who suffers injury by reason of his having so left them without proper safeguards. This is not nonfeasance or doing nothing, but it is misfeasance, doing improperly." Where an agent has complete control of a tenement house, and constructs a new walk in the court, leaving a large hole in the walk, and plaintiff, a new tenant, without previous knowledge of the existence of the hole, stepped into it after dark and was severely injured, it is misfeasance of the agent rendering him liable, and not a mere nonfeasance. Carson v. Quinn, 105 S. W. 1088, 1091, 127 Mo. App. 525.

"There is a distinction between 'nonfeasance' and 'misfeasance' or 'malfeasance'; and this distinction is often of great importance in determining an agent's liability to third persons. In this connection 'nonfeasance' means the total omission or failure of an agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking, which he has agreed with his principal to do; 'misfeasance' means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do, or, in other words, it is the performing of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons; and 'malfeasance' is the doing of an act which he ought not to do at all. It is not every omission or failure to perform a duty that will constitute a nonfeasance, but only an omission to perform such distinct duties as he owes to his principal, as distinguished from those which he owes to third persons, or the public in general as a member of society. Nonfeasance does not extend to the omission or failure to do some act, where by a third person is injured after he has once entered upon the performance of his contractual obligations. For example, if an agent undertakes to perform certain acts for another, and he refuses or fails to enter upon such performance, it is nonfeasance; but if he once begins the performance of such acts, and, in doing so, fails or omits to do certain acts which he should have done whereby a third person is injured, it is not a nonfeasance, but a misfeasance. Misfeasance may involve the omission to do something which ought to be done, as where an agent, engaged in the performance of his undertaking, omits to do something which it is his duty to do under the circumstances, as when he does not exercise that degree of care which due regard for the rights of others requires." Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co., 99 S. W. 1062, 1068, 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark & Skyles, Law of Agency, § 596).

"Nonfeasance" is the total omission or failure of the agent to enter upon the performance of a distinct duty or undertaking which he has agreed with his principal to do. "Misfeasance" means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do." Southern Ry. Co. v. Miller, 57 S. E. 1090, 1092, 1 Ga. App. 616 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Southern Ry. Co. v. Grizzle, 53 S. E. 244, 124 Ga. 735, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191).

The distinction between "nonfeasance" and "misfeasance" has been expressed by the courts of the state as follows: "If the duty omitted by the agent or servant devolved upon him from his agency or employment, his omission is only of a duty he owes his principal or master, and the master alone is liable. While if the duty rests upon him in his individual character, and was one that the law imposed upon him independently of his agency or employment, then he is liable." Dunham v. City Trust Co. of New York, 101 N. Y. Supp. 87, 89, 90, 115 App. Div. 584.

The negligence of a mining company's superintendent in charge of its mine in maintaining a shaft in a dangerous condition, and in permitting its use by third persons unaware of its dangerous character, is not a "nonfeasance" for which he is responsible to the company only, but is "misfeasance" for which he is liable when such negligence is the proximate cause of injuries. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 98 Pac. 643, 646, 38 Mont. 69, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 356.

The failure of a gas company operating as an agent of a city under contract for the illumination of the city streets to perform its duty to keep service pipes from its mains to the city lamps in repair involves an affirmative element of negligence amounting to misfeasance, and it is liable to any one injured in consequence thereof, for an agent who undertakes and enters on the execution of a particular work, must use reasonable care in the manner of executing it, and he cannot by abandoning its execution, exempt himself from liability to any person suffering injury by reason of his act, because that act is not "nonfeasance," but is "misfeasance." Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore City v. Connor, 78 Atl. 725, 729, 114 Md. 140, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809.

MISFORTUNE

Unavoidable casualty or misfortune, see Unavoidable Casualty.

MISHAP

An injury to a servant from a cause which could not have been reasonably anticipated, or anticipated under the circumstances surrounding the accident, may be characterized as a "mishap," for the result of which a master is not liable. Hall v. Missouri & Kansas Tel. Co., 124 S. W. 557, 558, 141 Mo. App. 183.

MISINSTRUCT

Where the defendant sugar company agreed that its agents should give instructions regarding the growing and delivery of beets to be raised on plaintiff's land, and plaintiff sues for damages because of misinstructions, the word "misinstruct," as understood and used in charging that if defendant misinstructed plaintiff in the growing of beets, etc., the verdict must be for plaintiff, means to instruct amiss or give wrong or improper instructions. Smith v. Billings Sugar Co., 94 Pac. 839, 841, 37 Mont. 128, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837.

MISJOINDER

See, also, Multifariousness.

While not entirely synonymous, the common-law term "misjoinder" and the equity term "multifarious" have much in common. They each token improper joinder, and both have reference to the confusing result wrought thereby. Neither goes to the substance of complainant's claim, but merely asserts improper joinder of causes of action. Since these terms go only to form, and not to substance, objections for either or both are not defenses, within the accepted meaning of that term. Skains v. Barnes, 53 South. 268, 270, 168 Ala. 426.

There is no "misjoinder" of causes of action where a complaint states a good cause of action against one defendant but none against the other. Reid v. Hennessy Co., 124 Pac. 273, 274, 45 Mont. 462.

MISLEADING

See Grossly Misleading.

MISMANAGE—MISMANAGEMENT

"Mismanagement," as used in Civ. Code 1902, § 2023, providing that any person who shall receive bodily injury or damage through a defect in any street, causeway, bridge, or public way, or by reason of defect or "mismanagement" of anything under control of the corporation within the limits of any town or city, may recover in an action against the same, means "mismanagement" in making repairs on the streets, so that the corporation should be held liable, not only for neglect in making repairs on the streets, but also for "mismanagement" of anything under the control of the corporation in making such repairs. Bryant v. City Council of Orangeburg, 49 S. E. 229, 231, 70 S. C. 137 (citing Dunn v. Town of Barnwell, 21 S. E.

315, 43 S. C. 401, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843; Acker v. Anderson, 20 S. C. 495; Brown v. Laurens County, 17 S. E. 21, 38 S. C. 282; Mason v. Spartanburg County, 19 S. E. 15, 40 S. C. 393, 42 Am. St. Rep. 887; Parks v. City Council of Greenville, 21 S. E. 540, 44 S. C. 172).

An allegation in an application for removal of a receiver of a company that the officers of the company mismanaged its affairs is not libelous or slanderous of the officers; the word "mismanaged" not denoting any wrong or turpitude on the part of the persons managing. Lebovitch v. Joseph Levy & Bros. Co., 54 South. 978, 981, 128 La. 518.

Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 5858, providing that railroad companies shall be liable for damages to any employé of said companies in consequence of any negligence of their agents or of any mismanagement of their engineers or other employés to any person sustaining such damage, does not make a distinction between agents on the one hand and engineers and other employés on the other, nor between negligence and "mismanagement," but by the act a company is made responsible for any mismanagement of its engineers or other employés to any person sustaining damage thereby. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Kellerman, 87 S. W. 401, 404, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 274.

MISNOMER

Publication of an original notice designating the defendant as "Chase Marker," instead of "Chan Marker," constituted a fatal "misnomer." Schaller & Son v. Marker, 114 N. W. 43, 44, 136 Iowa, 575.

If two names are commonly used as the same name, although they differ in sound, if either is used for the other, it is not a "misnomer." Where one name is an abbreviation of the other, but both are taken by common use to be the same, both differing in sound, the use of one for the other is not a misnomer. Where the two names are derived from the same source, the use of one for the other is not a misnomer; but this must be held to mean the same source, as defined and understood in the English language, and not as including names derived from the same source in some other language. The names Helen and Ellen will not be regarded as the same name. Thomas v. Desney, 10 N. W. 315, 316, 57 Iowa, 58 (citing Trimble v. State [Ind.] 4 Blackf. 437; 4 Bac. Abr. "Misnomer").

MISPRISION

See Clerical Misprision.

Misprision of felony at common law is a criminal neglect either to prevent a felony from being committed or to bring the offender to justice after its commission, but without such previous concert with or subsequent assistance of him as will make the concealment an accessory before or after the fact. State v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 533, 80 Vt. 249.

At common law it was one's duty to prevent the commission of a felony, with force if necessary, and the failure to do so constituted a misdemeanor, called misprision of felony. Suell v. Derricott, 49 South. 895, 900, 161 Ala. 259, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996, 18 Am. Cas. 636.

Civ. Code Prac. § 517, defines "misprision of a clerk to consist in the rendition of judgment before the action stands for trial, or render judgment against an infant, except in married women or persons of unsound mind, until a defense or report is filed pursuant to section 36, subsec. 3. Held not to include the rendition of a judgment not in compliance with a prior order of the Court of Appeals in an equity suit after a retrial erroneously granted by the court; such error being judicial, and not ministerial. Gayheart v. Childers, 125 S. W. 1085, 1087, 137 Ky. 472.

MISREPRESENTATION

See Fraudulent Misrepresentation; Knowingly Misrepresent; Material Misrepresentation.

Element of fraud, see Fraud.

Estoppel by misrepresentation, see Estoppel in Pais.

See, also, False Representation; Fraudulent Representation.

A "misrepresentation" must be an affirmative statement or affirmation of some fact in contradistinction to a concealment or failure to disclose, and to a mere expression of opinion. Lee v. Haile, 114 S. W. 403, 405, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 632 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. at 877).

"To profess an intention to do or not to do when a party intends the contrary as clear a case of 'misrepresentation and fraud' as could be made." Schrafft v. Fidelity Trust Co., 62 Atl. 933, 935, 73 N. J. Law 57 (quoting and adopting the language Bigelow, Fraud, 484).

A "misrepresentation" as the basis of rescission must be material; but it can be material only when it is of such a character that if it had not been made, the contract would not have been entered into. The misrepresentation need not be the sole cause of the contract, but it must be of such nature, weight, and force that the court can say without it the contract would not have been made. Greenawalt v. Rogers, 91 Pac. 526, 528, 1 Cal. 630 (citing Colton v. Stanford, 23 Pac. 16, 28, 82 Cal. 351, 399, 16 Am. St. Rep. 13).

A "misrepresentation," the falsity of which will afford ground for a bill for rescission of a contract, must be as to an existing fact and an affirmative statement of facts in contradistinction to the mere expression of an opinion which is ordinarily not presumed to deceive or misrepresent. Dotson v. Kirk, 180 Fed. 14, 23, 108 C. C. A. 368.

To entitle one to sue for fraud and deceit, it is necessary that the false representation be made directly to him, or that it be made by defendant personally; it being sufficient that defendant authorized it. Keeler v. Seaman, 95 N. Y. Supp. 920, 922, 47 Misc. Rep. 292.

A representation that a worthless medicine is a sure cure for hog cholera is a "misrepresentation of fact" and is actionable, and the representation cannot be said to be a mere expression of opinion, and hence not actionable. McDonald v. Smith, 102 N. W. 668, 670, 139 Mich. 211.

While ordinarily a "misrepresentation" must consist of an assertion or statement such as misleads another to his injury, as distinguished from an assertion or statement which is obviously the expression of an opinion, yet it is well settled that a misrepresentation, by reason of which injury results, may consist of concealment of truth, as well as of positive falsification. United States v. Sterling Salt Co., 209 Fed. 593, 597.

Moral delinquency is a necessary element in "misrepresentation." This immoral element consists in the necessary guilty knowledge and consequent intent to deceive, sometimes designated by the technical term "scienter." The very essence of the legal conception is the fraudulent intention flowing from the guilty knowledge. No "misrepresentation" is fraudulent at law unless it is made with actual knowledge of its falsity, or under such circumstances that the law must necessarily impute such knowledge to the party at the time he makes it. Mason v. Moore, 76 N. E. 932, 936, 73 Ohio St. 275, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 240 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 884).

"A 'misrepresentation to be material' should be in respect of an ascertainable fact, as distinguished from a mere matter of opinion. A representation, which merely amounts to a statement of opinion, goes for nothing, though it may be true, for a man is not justified in placing reliance upon it." Where defendant, a machinist, with ample facilities to ascertain the exact condition of an ice plant, was offered every opportunity to determine its condition before purchasing it from the successors of a corporation which had been unable to operate it successfully, of which defendant was fully informed, the doctrine of caveat emptor applied, and defendant, in an action for the price, was not entitled to a set-off and damages because of alleged false representations that the plant, with some repairs, would turn out 4,400 pounds of ice a day. Williamson v. Holt, 61 S. E. 384, 386, 147 N. C. 515, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240.

The word "misrepresentation," in Rev. St. 1899, § 8528, as amended, authorizing the board of dental examiners to revoke the license of any dentist for "fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation" in the practice of dentistry, means untrue, improper, or unfaithful representation, such as a false statement of account or as a misrepresentation of one's motives, and the words, when so construed, prevent the statute from being invalid for uncertainty. State ex rel. Williams v. Purl, 128 S. W. 196, 201, 228 Mo. 1.

The "misrepresentation" which will vitiate a contract of sale, and prevent a court of equity from aiding its enforcement, must relate to a material matter constituting an inducement to the contract, and respecting which the complaining party did not possess at hand the means of knowledge, and it must be a representation on which he relied, and by which he was actually misled; and where the means of knowledge are at hand and equally available to both parties, and the subject of purchase is alike open to their inspection, if the buyer does not avail himself of such means, he will not be heard to say that he was deceived by the representations. Long v. Kendall, 87 Pac. 670, 673, 17 Okl. 70.

The terms "misrepresentation" and "suppression of fact by the employer" contained in a policy of guaranty insurance, which provides "that any material misstatements or suppression of fact by employer in any statement or declaration to the company, or in any claim made under this bond, shall render the bond void from the beginning," mean the same thing. Misrepresentation is here used in a somewhat more restricted sense than ordinarily. It has reference to misstatements, known to be untrue, or which are positively stated as true without actual knowledge by the insured, and made under circumstances which call for such knowledge as might be based upon reasonable care previously exercised. It is akin to the expression "suppression of fact by the employer," which is a species of misrepresentation as it leads the inquirer to believe what is apparently true by concealing the fact which shows it to be not true. One is the active, and the other is the passive, phase of the same thing. One is the false statement and the other is the suppression of the truth; each intended to mislead as to the matter pertaining to the risk. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of New York v. Western Bank (Ky.) 94 S. W. 1, 4.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 7890 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3746), providing that no misrepresentation made in obtaining a policy of life insurance shall be deemed material or render the policy void unless the matter misrepresented shall have actually contributed to the contingency or event on which the policy has become due, the word "misrepresentation" embraces statements in the nature of a warranty, which are introduced into the policy as part of it. Salts v. Prudential Ins. Co., 120 S. W. 714, 716, 140 Mo. App.

142 (citing Jacobs v. Omaha Life Ass'n, 48 S. W. 462, 146 Mo. 523; Jenkins v. Covenant Mut. Life Ins. Co., 71 S. W. 688, 171 Mo. 375; Keller v. Home Life Ins. Co., 95 S. W. 903, 198 Mo. 440).

MISSED SHOT

The term "missed shots," as used in the vocabulary of miners, means charges of powder that had failed to explode at the proper time. Bird v. Utica Gold Mining Co., 84 Pac. 256-259, 2 Cal. App. 674.

MISSING

Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 7618, requires the Secretary of State, as soon as the acts are printed to certify that he has compared the printed with the enrolled acts and joint resolutions and found them correctly printed. It also authorizes him to use the engrossed bills; he to return them to the state library when the printing is complete. Held, that a certificate showing that a certain chapter of the acts of a given year was compared with the engrossed act, "the enrolled bill being missing," was prima facie evidence that there was such an enrolled bill, and that the same was an existing law, the word "missing" meaning that there was to the knowledge of the Secretary such enrolled bill, but that it was lost or gone at the time he compared the printed act with the engrossed act. State v. Wheeler, 89 N. E. 1, 3, 172 Ind. 578, 19 Ann. Cas. 834.

MISSION

MISSIONARY

The terms "missionary" and "missionary society" are of common use and have a well-known meaning which is the same whether the use is intended to be precise and technical or merely that of everyday speech. By universal acceptance the word "missionary," whether as a noun or as an adjective, embraces not only the conception of religious, charitable, or educational work or worker, but also work done through philanthropic motives for the welfare of others too poor, too unappreciative, or too indifferent to do it themselves, and by persons supported or means furnished in part at least by some agency of which those for whom the work is done do not form a sustaining part. The derivative of the word implies a sending, and so it is that in both technical and common speech the idea of sending forth to the service of others, the doing of a work for others, is associated with its meaning. Sometimes it is used to characterize the agency sent, sometimes the agency sending, but always there is associated with the notion of a benevolent service for others that of such service sent, whether far or near, by those who maintained it to those who need it.

There is no use of the term as descriptive of self-supporting religious effort in the maintenance by, within, or for an ecclesiastical society or parish of churches, church services, Sunday schools, and the ordinary agencies of worship or religious activity according to the usual practice, and especially the practice of congregational societies in the country towns of New England. Bulkeley v. Worthington Ecclesiastical Soc., 63 Atl. 354, 78 Conn. 526, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526.

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES OR CORPORATIONS

See, also, Missionary.

A bequest to a society incorporated to advance the cause of religion throughout an unlimited field by circulating the Bible, printing, establishing Sunday schools, and sending out persons to distribute religious books and tracts, being a bequest to a "missionary corporation," was exempt from a transfer tax, under Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 808) § 22, as amended in 1905 (Laws 1905, c. 368), exempting legacies to such corporations. In McCormick's Estate, 99 N. E. 177, 178, 206 N. Y. 100.

Testator bequeathed certain property for R. for life, and directed that on his decease it should be equally divided among the "schools and missionary societies mentioned in the will." The will had previously bequeathed a legacy in favor of the Worthington Ecclesiastical Society, and in succeeding paragraphs gave various sums to seven designated missionary corporations, boards, or societies. The ecclesiastical society was a corporation organized for the spread of religion by the maintenance and support of the church known as the "Congregational Church at Berlin, Connecticut," of which testatrix and her ancestors had been members and supporters. Held, that such society was not "a missionary society," entitled to share in the residue so bequeathed. Bulkeley v. Worthington Ecclesiastical Soc., 63 Atl. 351, 354, 78 Conn. 526, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER

As boundary between states, see Boundary.

The term "Mississippi river," used in the enabling act (Act Cong. Aug. 6, 1846, 89, 9 Stat. 56) descriptive of the boundary between Wisconsin and Minnesota, applicable to the broad expanse of water flowing in generally southerly direction, known at the date of such act as such river, not any boundary upon either side thereof. Franzini v. Layland, 97 N. W. 499, 501, 120 Wis. 72.

MISSTATEMENT

MISTAKE

See Clerical Mistake; Gross Mistake; Material Mistake.

The "mistake" from which equity will relieve may be common to both parties to the contract and consist in either the expression of their agreement or of some matter of inducement thereto or to which it is to be applied. Briggs v. Watkins, 70 S. E. 551, 554, 112 Va. 14 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4540).

"Mr. Pomeroy says that 'mistake,' within the meaning of equity and as the occasion of jurisdiction, is an erroneous mental condition, conception, or conviction induced by ignorance, misapprehension, or misunderstanding of the truth, but without negligence, and resulting in some act or omission done or suffered erroneously by one or both the parties to a transaction, but without its erroneous character being intended or known at the time." Pearson v. Dancer, 39 South. 474, 475, 144 Ala. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. pp. 290, 300, §§ 839, 854).

"Mistake," within the rule making it a head of equity jurisdiction, has been defined as "some unintentional act, omission, or error, arising from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence." Where an instrument is drawn and executed, professing or intending to carry into execution an agreement previously entered into, but which, by mistake of the draftsman, either as to fact or as to law, does not accomplish that purpose or violates it, equity will relieve from such mistake. Mere neglect or omission to read or know the contents of a written instrument before execution is not necessarily a bar to reformation thereof, but relief is proper in such case, if the instrument, through mistake, fails to accomplish the purpose intended. Taylor v. Godfrey, 59 S. E. 631, 633, 62 W. Va. 677.

Under the rule that equity will relieve against a judgment for "mistake," the erroneous advice of counsel is not such a "mistake" as will entitle a party to relief. Donovan v. Miller, 88 Pac. 82, 83, 12 Idaho, 600, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524, 10 Ann. Cas. 444.

It can be found from the fact that one fails to act because of a "mistake" of his counsel that he was prevented from acting by "mistake." Dame v. Wood, 66 Atl. 484, 74 N. H. 212.

Where a written contract of insurance was not the contract made by insured and the general agent of insurer, and insured, though knowing that the policy as written did not accord with the agreement as made, had the right to rely on the representations made by the general agent, and was led to believe that the misstatement in the policy was merely formal, and could not be taken advantage of by insurer, equity can reform the policy, since insured either acted under an erroneous conviction in accepting the policy containing the terms not agreed on, or he was imposed on, and became a victim of misplaced confidence; the word "mistake" being defined to be either the doing of an act under an erroneous conviction, which act, but for such conviction, would not have been done, or some intentional act or omission or error, arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 70 Atl. 380, 385, 74 N. J. Eq. 635.

Where a creditor, who attached the interest in land descending to the debtor on the ancestor dying intestate, knew of proceedings to probate the ancestor's will, which disinherited the debtor, who took no steps to become a party thereto, and the will was admitted to probate, the creditor's failure to contest the probate was not the result of "accident, mistake, or unforeseen cause," within the statute authorizing the granting of a new trial, where, by reason of accident, mistake, or unforeseen cause, judgment was rendered against the applicant for a new trial. Seward v. Johnson, 62 Atl. 569, 570, 27 R. I. 396.

An instruction that if defendant, on his express malice aforethought, with intent to kill M., shot at him with a gun, and by mistake killed deceased, he would be guilty of murder in the second degree, was objectionable in the use of the word "mistake" for "unintentionally"; they not being synonymous. Deneaner v. State, 127 S. W. 201, 204, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 624.

The code provision that the court may at any time permit a pleading or mistake in any other respect to be amended authorizes the substitution of a sufficient appeal bond in an election contest, where the bond given has failed to comply with the statutory requirements. Galloway v. Bradburn, 82 S. W. 1013, 1016, 119 Ky. 49.

That land is sold at administrator's sale which is not embraced in the petition to sell, nor in the decree of confirmation, is not a "mistake in description," within Code 1906, § 2072 (Ann. Code 1892, § 1897), providing that any mistake in describing land of decedent sold, etc., in any part of the proceedings, may be corrected on petition of the purchaser. Pearson v. Caldwell, 47 South. 436, 437, 93 Miss. 637.

The word "mistake" in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 256, § 21, giving relief to a garnishee failing through mistake to disclose to the court that he has no property of defendant in his hands, should receive a broad construction, and an affidavit by a garnishee that through accident and mistake he neglected to file his personal affidavit of no funds is within the provision. Marshall v. McCormick, 62 Atl. 212, 27 R. I. 357.

The mistake of persons in executing a lease of a lot, the belief of both parties that the lot was not within the district where construction of wooden buildings was prohibited by ordinance, whereas two days before the lease was executed an ordinance was passed putting it within such district, was not, as regards the lessee's right to rescind, a mistake caused by any neglect of his legal duty, within Civ. Code, § 1577, providing, as part of the definition of a "mistake," that it "was not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake." Hannah v. Steinman, 112 Pac. 1094, 1098, 159 Cal. 142.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5153, relating to the modification of judgments and orders and providing in subsection 3 that the same may be modified for mistakes, etc., of the clerk, etc., does not apply solely to mistakes of the clerk, but to any mistake warranting a modification of the judgment in furtherance of justice, and in view of section 4953 (section 426) providing that the court may, in furtherance of justice, etc., amend any pleading, etc., or by correcting a mistake in any other respect, the court had jurisdiction to modify an order of confirmation of a receiver's sale so as to conform the same to the order of sale. National Bank of Commerce v. L. Kilsheimer & Co., 110 Pac. 15, 17, 59 Wash. 460.

A mortgagor's surviving husband, to protect his interest and that of his children, employed F. to bid for the property on foreclosure. One of the tracts was worth $1,600 and was struck down to B. for $610. F. immediately claimed the bid was his, but the officer making the sale declined to recognize it, and returned B. as the purchaser. The husband thereupon applied to set the sale aside as to such tract, agreeing on a resale to bid $1,600. Held, to justify vacation of the sale for "mistake" and inadequacy of price, on condition that the husband give bond to bid $1,600, pay the costs of the first sale, and interest on the purchaser's deposit. Montclair Building & Loan Ass'n v. Farmer (N. J.) 67 Atl. 852, 853.

Mistake of law

The word "mistake," when used alone, without any limiting expression, includes a mistake of law as well as of fact. If its meaning, as used in a statute, is narrowed to mistakes on questions of fact, it would have been proper and more natural for the Legislature to say so. Where a railroad company made a mistake in the construction of its statutory rights, such as an ordinarily prudent person, honestly desiring to act within his rights, might make, it is exempt from the penalty under Laws 1890, p. 1095, c. 565, § 37, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1392, c. 678, providing for a penalty for the exacting by a carrier of unlawful rate of fare, unless the overcharge was made through inadvertence or mistake, not amounting to gross negligence. Goodspeed v. Illinois St. Ry. Co., 77 N. E. 392, 393, 184 N. 351.

Mistakes of law are mistakes within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court in the furtherance of justice, to allow amendment correcting mistakes in proceedings had during the progress of a trial in the furtherance of justice. Dent v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 95 Pac. 673, 7 Cal. App. 683.

Civ. Code, § 1578, subd. 2, provides that a mistake of law constitutes a mistake within the meaning of the article only when it arises from (1) a misapprehension of the law by all parties, all supposing that they knew and understood it, and all making substantially the same mistake as to the law; (2) a misapprehension of the law by one party, of which the others are aware at the time of contracting, or which they do not rectify. Several sales of defendant's property were made at the same time by the sheriff under executions issued on various judgments. Defendant redeemed from a judgment, paying the amount thereof to the sheriff for plaintiff, who had purchased at the sales, defendant believing that by the acceptance of such amount plaintiff was bound to deny that the redemption was complete, and the property thereby freed from all prior liens. Plaintiff, knowing the law and defendant's supposition, accepted the money from the sheriff. After the expiration of the period of redemption plaintiff brought an action against defendant to quiet title to the property. Held that, as each party seemed to have aimed to obtain an advantage against the other to which he was not entitled plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed only on the condition of repaying defendant the amount paid by the latter for redemption, with interest from the date of its payment. Woods v. Kellerman, 89 Pac. 358, 360, 3 Cal. App. 422.

Negligence of self or counsel

The affidavit of counsel that, owing to business engagement, which took him to another state after a stipulation for the extension of time to move for a new trial, being engaged in court the day the stipulation expired, the serious illness of his wife and the impression that the stipulation included another day, he neglected to ask for an extension of time for such motions showed "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect" within Comp. Laws, § 3163, and entitled him to relief against his default and a further extension of time. Sherman Southern Pac. Co., 102 Pac. 257, 31 Nev. 28.

A court is justified in setting aside judgment against a defendant in ejectment taken during the absence of himself and his counsel, on the ground of "mistake, inadvertence, or surprise," where his counsel left the court, during the term at which the judgment was rendered, with the understanding and belief that the case was not to be tried at that term, and where a prima facie valid defense is shown. Virginia, T. & C. Steel & Iron Co. v. Harris, 151 Fed. 428, 429, 80 C. C. A. 658.

Omission

Laws 1906, p. 204, c. 134, provides that whenever, after delivery of the tax roll to the treasurer, it shall be discovered that any town clerk, in making out the tax roll, has made a "mistake" therein in computing or carrying out the amount of the tax, the clerk, with the consent of the treasurer, at any time before the treasurer is required to make his return of delinquent taxes, may correct the errors, etc. Held, that the intent of the Legislature was not to cover a case where a tax apportionment was deliberately and intentionally omitted by the town clerk in making up the tax roll delivered to the treasurer, since such an omission is not a mistake within the contemplation of the statute. State ex rel. Rowe v. Krumenauer, 115 N. W. 798, 800, 135 Wis. 185.

MISTAKE OF FACT

A "mistake of fact" may be defined as an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of the existence or nonexistence of a fact past or present material to the contract. Kansas City Packing Box Co. v. Spies (Tex.) 109 S. W. 432, 434.

A "mistake of fact" takes place either when some fact which really exists is unknown, or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not exist. Scott v. Ford, 78 Pac. 742, 746, 45 Or. 581, 68 L. R. A. 469.

A "mistake of fact" extends to and includes the case of a party who, through mere ignorance of the existence or nonexistence of a material fact, is induced to do an act injurious to himself, where, if he had been informed of the existence or nonexistence of such fact, he would not have performed such an act. Scott v. Ford, 80 Pac. 899, 900, 45 Or. 531, 68 L. R. A. 469 (quoting and adopting Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 125, 130).

A "mistake of fact" is a mistake not caused by the neglect of any legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, but "which consists in his ignorance of some fact, past or present, material to the transaction, or in his belief in the existence of some fact material to the transaction which does not exist. Such a mistake may afford ground for relief in a court of equity." Steinfeld v. Zeckendorf, 86 Pac. 7, 11, 10 Ariz. 221.

"Mistake of fact," for which a contract may be avoided, is defined in Civ. Code, § 1577, to be "an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract." White v. Stevenson, 77 Pac. 828, 830, 144 Cal. 104.

"A mistake as to title is a 'mistake of fact,' even though arising from an erroneous view of the legal effect of a deed." Busiere v. Reilly, 75 N. E. 958, 960, 189 Mass. 518.

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 748, a "mistake of fact" is a mistake not caused by neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and, where plaintiff made a mistake of fact in paying its taxes when it was not liable, the mistake was made by its own neglect of duty, and, the payment being voluntary, the law will furnish no relief. Louisiana Realty Co. v. City of McAlester, 108 Pac. 391, 392, 25 Okl. 726.

Civ. Code, § 1568, defines a "mistake of fact" as one not caused by the neglect of legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in: (1) An unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact past or present material to the contract, or (2) belief in the present existence of a thing which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing which has not existed. Plaintiff reinsured part of its risk with defendant, and then, on the defendant's request, placed such reinsurance with another commencing on a certain day, on which day it returned to defendant its written obligation. On the day previous unknown to them, the insured property was burned. Held, that the release, not being made in contemplation of a prior loss, was made under a mistake of fact, against which relief would be granted. Trader's Ins. Co. of Chicago, Ill., v. Aachen & Munich Fire Ins. Co., 89 Pac. 109, 110, 150 Cal. 370, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844.

Under Civ. Code, § 1689, providing that a party to a contract may rescind it if his consent was given by mistake, while the mistake may be one of fact, as defined by section 1577, or of law, as defined by section 1578, in which latter case the mistake must be by both parties, not only must the mistake be one but for which the party would not have consented to the contract, section 1568 declaring that consent is deemed to have been obtained through mistake "only when it would not have been given had such cause not existed," but in case of "mistake of fact," the mistake must be "material to the contract," this being an element of a mistake of fact, as defined by section 1577. Hannah v. Steinman, 112 Pac. 1094, 1096, 159 Cal. 142.

Where plaintiff paid the consideration for a deed on the belief that defendant had title to the premises, and thereafter it appeared that she had no title because the conveyance to her was a forgery, plaintiff was entitled to recover the consideration as money paid under a "mistake of fact" under Civ. Code, § 1577, subd. 2, providing that mistake of fact is a mistake not caused by neglect of a legal duty, and consisting in the belief of the present existence of a thing material to the contract which does not exist or in the past existence of a thing which has not existed. Horne v. Hughes, 124 Pac. 736, 19 Cal. App. 6.

MISTAKE OF LAW

As mistake, see Mistake.

"A 'mistake of law' happens when a party, having full knowledge of the facts, comes to an erroneous conclusion as to their legal effect." Scott v. Ford, 78 Pac. 742, 746, 45 Or. 531, 68 L. R. A. 469 (quoting Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 125).

A "mistake of law" is an erroneous conclusion as to the legal effect of known facts, and is no ground for the intervention of a court of equity. Steinfeld v. Zeckendorf, 86 Pac. 7, 11, 10 Ariz. 221 (citing And. Law Dict.).

A "mistake of law," from which a court of equity will relieve, is defined and governed by section 2123 of the Civil Code, which reads: "'Mistake of law' constitutes a mistake, within the meaning of this article, only when it arises from: (1) A misapprehension of the law by all parties, all supposing that they knew and understood it, and all making substantially the same mistake as to the law; or (2) a misapprehension of the law by one party, of which the others are aware at the time of contracting, but which they do not rectify." Bottego v. Carroll, 77 Pac. 430, 31 Mont. 122.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2186, 3132, providing that a written contract supersedes all oral negotiations, and no evidence of the terms of an agreement other than the contents of the writing shall be received, except where a mistake or imperfection is in issue, and the validity of the instrument is in dispute, and to establish fraud, and sections 2117, 2123, declaring that actual fraud consists in a promise made without any intention of performing it, or any act fitted to deceive, and that "mistake of law" constitutes a misapprehension of the law by a party, of which the others are aware at the time of contracting, but which they do not rectify, where plaintiff alleged mistake and fraud, and the evidence disclosed that the inducement held out to plaintiff to sign an agreement was based on fraudulent representations of defendants that a lease need not be mentioned in a contract of sale of a business and the lease, evidence was admissible showing the purchase of the lease and defendants' fraudulent conduct, over objection that it varied the contract. Sathre v. Rolfe, 77 Pac. 431, 432, 31 Mont. 85.

MISTRESS

Where a single woman consents to unlawfully cohabit with a man generally, as though the marital relation existed between them, without any limit as to the duration such cohabitation, and actually commences cohabit with him under that understanding she becomes his "concubine," or, as expressed in modern times, his "kept mistress." Coy Humphreys, 125 S. W. 877, 880, 142 Mo. App. 92.

MISTRIAL

A "mistrial" is a nugatory trial, as distinguished from a new trial, which recognizes a completed trial which for some sufficient reason has been set aside so that the issue may be litigated de novo. It is a matter of law. A case does not result in a mistrial because the trial judge becomes disqualified to act on a motion to set aside the verdict and for new trial. Stern v. Wabash R. Co., 1 N. Y. Supp. 181, 182, 52 Misc. Rep. 12.

It is a "mistrial" where there is no general verdict, and the jury's answer to special questions do not cover all of the facts in issue. Ward v. Gradin, 109 N. W. 57, 61, N. D. 649 (citing Manning v. Monaghan, N. Y. 539).

MITER BOX

A "miter box" is a rough three-sided box without top or ends, into the two upright sides of which slits are sawed at the proper angle. Metzler v. McKenzie, 76 Pac. 1115, 34 Wash. 470.

MITIGATE—MITIGATION

Extenuate synonymous, see Extenuate.

The term "mitigation of damages" properly applied only to actions where the damages are not capable of exact pecuniary measurement and is used in contradistinction to the term "aggravation of damages"; and where matter in aggravation of damages proper, matter in mitigation may be shown. Swank v. Elwert, 105 Pac. 901, 907, 55 Cal. 487.

There is a technical difference between the "commutation of a sentence" and the "mitigation" thereof. The first is a change of a punishment to which a person has been condemned into one less severe, while to mitigate a sentence is to reduce or lessen the amount of penalty or punishment. Reduction of sentence of a court-martial, dismissing a naval officer from service, to suspension for five years on half sea pay, with a reduction in rank to the foot of the list of his grade, is a "mitigation of sentence," within the provision of Rev. St. U. S. § 1624, art. 54, that every officer authorized to convene a general court-martial shall have power, on revision of its proceedings, to "remit or mitigate" but not to "commute," the sentence of any such court which he is authorized to approve and confirm. Mullan v. United States, Sup. Ct. 330, 332, 212 U. S. 516, 521, 53 L. Ed. 632 (citing Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., 130 Fed. 549; Perkins Elec. Switch Mfg. Co. v. Buchanan, 129 Fed. 134).

"'Mitigating circumstances' are such as do not constitute a justification or excuse of the offense in question, but which, in fairness and mercy, may be considered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability." Smith v. People, 75 Pac. 914, 916, 32 Colo. 251 (quoting and adopting the definition in Black, Law Dict.).

"Mitigating circumstances" are such as tend to an appreciable extent to prove the truth of the charge, though not completely proving it, so as to permit an inference that defendant was not actuated by malice, and must be connected with or bear upon the libelous charge. An alleged libel consisted of a magazine article entitled "Bucket Shop Sharks," and stated that the business of bucket shop keeping was followed by persons calling themselves "bankers and brokers" who fleeced their customers by pretended sales and purchases of stock; that H. was one of the members of plaintiff firm of "bankers and brokers"; that his picture was in the rogues' gallery; and that these were but specimens of the thieves who plied their trade as keepers of bucket shops while posing as "bankers and brokers." The complaint denied that H. was ever a member of their firm, or that they were brokers, or had ever done business as "bankers or brokers" or as brokers, or advertised themselves as such. The answer alleged that H. became "associated with the plaintiffs in their business" without stating in what capacity, and that plaintiffs held themselves out as "bankers"; their principal business being the promotion of corporate enterprises and marketing the capital stock of mining enterprises, which stocks plaintiffs and H. knew were practically worthless. Held, that the facts alleged in the answer were not a defense by way of mitigation and reduction of damages, they not even tending to prove the libelous matter in part. Bergstrom v. Ridgway Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 29, 33, 138 App. Div. 178.

To an action of libel for publishing a general charge of ignorance against plaintiff, an attorney, not limited to ignorance in the conduct of the particular case as to which the publication was made, defendant pleaded as a partial defense the statutory law relating to the former case and its bearing on that case and that plaintiff as attorney therein failed to raise any question thereunder because he did not understand and was ignorant of the law on that particular question, and in mitigation of damages, that this was known to defendant before publication, and that the article was published in reliance thereon in good faith and without malice. Held, that "mitigating circumstances" are those which, while not proving the truth of the charge, tend in some appreciable degree toward such proof, and thus permit of an inference that defendant was not actuated by malice in his charge, and that the matter pleaded bore upon and tended to establish a charge of ignorance, and that the plea was good on demurrer. Josephson v. Musical Courier Co., 130 N. Y. Supp. 434, 436, 146 App. Div. 20.

MITTIMUS

An ordinary "mittimus" directs the officer to commit the convict then in custody to jail or prison, according to the sentence. It contains no order to arrest and does not authorize an arrest of one at large and not an escaped prisoner. Where, after conviction and sentence, a court of general or limited jurisdiction permits the convict to go at large without day, it cannot thereafter issue a mittimus for his commitment, for in such cases the court, having completed its judicial functions, has surrendered all further control over the case and person. Tuttle v. Lang, 60 Atl. 892, 894, 100 Me. 123.

MIX

The art of enameling metal is old. Many different formulas and substances are used to form the enamel, but the usual process is substantially as follows: Certain ingredients, usually a mixture of silica or sand, and of other substances having a fluxing property to produce glass when mixed with sand, subjected to heat, are mixed together mechanically. This mixture is called by enameleers the "mix." The mix is then subjected to a high degree of heat and fused, resulting in a vitrified or glassy mass. This is called the "frit." The frit is then put in a mill and ground fine, with a mixture of clay and water, resulting in a liquid paste. This is called the "dip." The metal article to be enameled is then dipped in the paste, dried, and subjected to a very high temperature in an oven or muffle. In some cases more than one dipping and burning takes place. The result is, if the operation is successful, a metal article with its surface covered with an adherent coat of metal. National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. New England Enameling Co., 151 Fed. 19, 20, 80 C. C. A. 485.

MIXED

MIXED ASSOCIATION

An insurance association, possessing some features incident to both a "stock company" and a "mutual company," but being neither, more nearly falls under the classification of a "mixed association." State v. Alley, 51 South. 467, 477, 96 Miss. 720.

MIXED BLOOD

Indian of mixed blood, see Indian.

See, also, Half Blood.

The rule of the common law that children of freeborn parents take the legal status of the father, and therefore children of a white father and Indian mother must be held to be whites, and as such to be disqualified from sharing in the tribal property belonging to the Indians, does not apply to treaties made with the Indians. "In the several treaties entered into between the United States and the Omahas, frequent reference is made to 'half blood' and 'mixed blood,' but in none is there a distinction made between those deriving their Indian blood from the mother and those deriving it from the father. It is not to be supposed that the Indians, when called upon to agree to an allotment of the lands under the provisions of the treaty of 1865 and the act of 1882 had knowledge of the artificial rule of the common law, which, if it was applied in these cases, would require the ruling that a half blood residing with the tribe, the child of a white father and an Indian mother, could not be deemed to be of mixed Indian blood, whereas a child of an Indian father and a white mother would be held to be of Indian blood and therefore entitled to share in the tribal property. As ordinarily understood by white people, a person of white and Indian parentage is deemed to be of 'mixed blood,' without regard to the source of the Indian blood." Sloan v. United States, 118 Fed. 283, 288.

MIXED COMPANY

An insurance association, possessing some features incident to both a "stock company" and a "mutual company," but being neither, more nearly falls under the classification of a "mixed company." State v. Alley, 51 South. 467, 477, 96 Miss. 720.

"Mixed insurance companies" are those which embody the characteristics of both stock and mutual companies. State v. Willett, 171 Ind. 296, 86 N. E. 68, 70, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197.

MIXED NUISANCE

"There is a class of acts which may properly be denominated 'mixed nuisances,' being both public and private in their effects, public in that they produce injury to many persons or all the public, and private because at the same time they produce a special and particular injury to private rights, which subjects the wrongdoer to an indictment by the public, and to damages at the suit of persons injured. Of this class are * * * establishments which, by reason of the nature of the business carried on, produce such noxious smells and vapors as to annoy the whole community, and are at the same time a special injury to those residing or doing business in their immediate vicinity, by rendering their houses untenable, or their enjoyment so uncomfortable that they sustain a special and particular damage, apart from and beyond the rest of the public." Acme Fertilizer Co. v. State, 72 N. E. 1037, 1038, 34 Ind. App. 346, 107 Am. St. Rep. 190 (quoting and adopting definition in Wood, Nul-sances [3d Ed.] pp. 34, 35, §§ 14-16, and King Kenney v. Koopman, 22 South. 593, Ala. 310, 37 L. R. A. 497, 67 Am. St. R. 119).

In "mixed nuisances," an action wrong arises in favor of all persons who come within its effects and influence whose rights of person or property are injuriously affected, and it is not required, to sustain such an action, that the person injured should establish damage different in kind and degree from others in like circumstances, however numerous they may be. The right of action in such case is sustained by showing the existence of appreciable damage to the plaintiff, whether such damage be special or otherwise. McManus v. Southern Ry. Co., 64 S. E. 766, 768, 150 N. C. 655.

MIXED TRAIN

"Mixed trains" are trains composed of freight cars and passenger cars. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 117 S. W. 1173, 118 Mo. 156.

A "mixed train" is partly used for the transportation of freight but also has a passenger car or cars attached, and is held out to the world as a regular means for transporting passengers. Southern Ry. Co. v. Cunningham, 50 S. E. 979, 981, 123 Ga. 90.

A freight train with a passenger coach attached is a "mixed train." Leach v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 118 S. W. 510, 511, 118 Mo. App. 300.

A train consisting of four freight cars and a passenger coach is a "mixed train." Holland v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 79 S. E. 508, 509, 105 Mo. App. 117.

A "mixed train" is a train equipped to carry passengers as well as freight. In such arrangements, the safety of passengers is much looked to as the carriage of freight. It usually has two or more coaches for passengers, and separate compartments or coaches for the races, and a baggage compartment for the car, etc., and runs on a regular schedule, and subordinates its freight business to the passenger business so far as necessary to make connections with other passenger trains on its own line and those on connecting roads, and it stops opposite stations for the convenient ingress and egress of passengers. White v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 55 South. 593, 595, 96 Miss. 651.

MIXERS

See Batch Mixers; Continuous Mixers.

MIXTURE

See Intoxicating Liquors and Mixture; Liquid Mixture.

"If we are to say that every article is a 'mixture' or compound which has, chemically considered, more than one ingredient, then we would make every fruit of the earth a compound. Certainly we should make the cocoa bean a 'mixture' or compound. But clearly a fair interpretation of the meaning of the words 'mixture' and 'compound' in the statute, is something resulting from the putting together of parts or ingredients other than as nature has put them together in the fruits of the earth." The provisions of War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 20, that the stamp taxes provided for in Schedule B "shall apply to all medicinal articles compounded by any formula, published or unpublished," but that they shall not apply to any un compounded medicinal drug or chemical, contemplate a compound made after some formula, and a natural product, such as papain, which is prepared from the juice of the pawpaw and cannot be made artificially, although it may be a chemical compound, is not "compounded," within the meaning of the statute, and is not taxable, whether used as the basis of a plaster, or prepared in the form of tablets or pills by being mixed with an excipient which has no medicinal effect. Johnson & Johnson v. Herold, 161 Fed. 593, 604 (quoting and adopting Rose v. State, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 87).

The term intoxicating liquors or "mixtures thereof" embraces bitters. Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 751, 761, 37 Am. Rep. 284, 293.

MOB

As public enemy, see Public Enemy.

An assemblage of a number of people acting in a tumultuous and riotous manner, calculated to put good citizens in fear, and to endanger their person or property, constitutes a "mob," but it is not necessary that all these elements must be present to have that effect. Stevens v. Sheriff, 80 Pac. 936, 937, 71 Kan. 434.

In an action under Gen. St. 1901, § 2501, making cities liable for injury done by mobs, an instruction that "a mob is an unorganized assemblage of many persons intent on unlawful violence, either to persons or property," is not erroneous because making no reference to a determination on the part of those composing it to resist opposition. City of Cherryvale v. Hawman, 101 Pac. 994, 80 Kan. 170, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645, 183 Am. St. Rep. 195, 18 Ann. Cas. 149.

The persons engaged in a "riot," constitute a "mob"; the two terms being almost synonymous. Lockett-Wake T. Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co., 171 Fed. 147, 148.

Riot synonymous

The word "mob," in legal use, is practically synonymous with "riot," but the latter is the more correct term. Adamson v. City of New York, 96 N. Y. Supp. 907, 909, 110 App. Div. 58 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

MODAL LEGACY

"A 'modal legacy' is a bequest accompanied with directions as to the mode in which it should be applied for the legatee's benefit; for example, a legacy to Titius to put him an apprentice." A legacy to be applied to the education of testator's minor sons is a "modal legacy." Heady v. State ex rel. Heady, 60 Ind. 316, 323 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Bouv. 21).

MODE

See Potential Mode.

The examination of a party before trial, authorized by Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 870, cannot be required by a federal Circuit Court sitting in that state, by virtue of the declaration of Act March 9, 1892, c. 14, that, in addition to the mode of taking the depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the federal District and Circuit Courts, it shall be lawful to take the depositions or testimony of witnesses in the mode prescribed by the laws of the state in which the courts are held. "Mode" usually means the manner in which a thing is done, and this act relates to the manner of taking depositions and testimony, which the title treats as equivalent terms, and which may be so regarded so far as the question before us is concerned. But it is contended that the word 'mode,' as used in the act, has a broader significance, and embraces the production of evidence, thereby qualifying section 861, Rev. St., which prescribes the mode of proof. We cannot concur in this view." Hanks Dental Ass'n v. International Tooth Crown Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 700, 702, 194 U. S. 303, 48 L. Ed. 989.

MODEL

While a model filed in the Patent Office will not, in itself, amount to an anticipation which will invalidate a subsequent patent to another, the word "model" as so used must be understood in its ordinary sense as meaning merely a pattern or representation, and not as meaning the actual machine or device of the invention. American Writing Mach. Co. v. Wagner Typewriter Co., 151 Fed. 576, 583, 81 C. C. A. 120.

MODEL OF INVENTION AND IMPROVEMENT

Exact models of steamships of improved design, showing the details of the vessels, valued at about $1,000 each, and intended for exhibition in steamship offices, are models of improvements in the art of shipbuilding, and are free of duty under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 616, covering "models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts." Boas v. United States, 128 Fed. 470.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 616, for "models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts, including patterns for machinery," is not limited to the class of patterns known as "model patterns," intended to show the working of the thing illustrated, but includes also molders' patterns, which are used as models about which to form sand molds in which castings may be made, and which are fitted for successive use in that way. R. Hoe & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 488, 489.

MODERATE

MODERATE SPEED

"Moderate speed" is not a fixed rate of miles per hour, but something materially less than the vessel's full speed, depending upon surrounding circumstances. The James A. Carney, 192 Fed. 216, 217.

"Moderate speed," required of a steam vessel in a fog, is purely a relative term; and what constitutes such speed in a given case is to be determined with reference to the time, place, and circumstances, rather than from the actual speed. Quinette v. Bisso, 136 Fed. 825, 830, 69 C. C. A. 503, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303 (citing The Colorado, 91 U. S. 702, 23 L. Ed. 379; Newton v. Stebbins, 10 How. [51 U. S.] 606, 13 L. Ed. 551; The Martello, 14 Sup. Ct. 725, 153 U. S. 70, 38 L. Ed. 637; The Umbria, 17 Sup. Ct. 615, 166 U. S. 417, 41 L. Ed. 1053).

What constitutes a "moderate speed" on the part of a vessel in a fog cannot be determined by any hard and fast rule, but depends on the dangers which are known or should be anticipated in the particular case. City of Chicago v. Goodrich Transit Co., 199 Fed. 112, 114, 117 C. C. A. 362.

The phrase "moderate speed," in the act of Congress providing that every vessel shall, in a fog, go at a "moderate speed," having careful regard to the existing circumstances, means that a vessel should, when in a fog, so reduce her speed that other vessels, free from blame, may not be injured. Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 58 S. E. 799, 801, 145 N. C. 98, 122 Am. St. Rep. 423.

The "moderate speed" required of a vessel in a fog, by article 16 of the Inland Navigation Rules (Act June 7, 1897, c. 4), is such speed as under existing conditions will enable her to stop before coming into collision with another vessel after the latter can be seen, assuming that the other vessel also observes the rule. The Cascades, 178 Fed. 726, 731.

Rule 15 of the navigation rules for the Great Lakes (Act Feb. 8, 1895, c. 64), which provides that every vessel shall in thick weather go at a moderate speed and on hearing a fog signal ahead slow down to bare steerageway, does not require a vessel stop in a fog nor to slow down to bare steerageway while progress appears safe, but requires running at moderate speed, commensurate with dangers which are either known or must be anticipated; she having the right to proceed in expectation of compliance on the part of others with the law in respect of fog signals. Erie & Western Transp. Co. v. City of Chicago, 178 Fed. 448, 101 C. C. A. 170.

A steam vessel passing from Portland down the Willamette river in a dense fog at a speed of 15 miles an hour, in view of the extensive commerce on such river, was not going at the "moderate speed" required by article 16 of the Inland Navigation Rules (Act June 7, 1897, c. 4), which provides that in a fog a vessel shall go at a moderate speed, "having careful regard to the existing circumstances and conditions." The Baller Gatzert, 179 F. 44, 47, 102 C. C. A. 612.

A steamer at sea, proceeding at night in a dense fog, in frequented waters, at a speed of 10 or 11 knots an hour, is not going at a moderate speed, having careful regard to the existing circumstances and conditions as required by article 16 of the international navigation rules. A schooner which, as preponderance of the evidence tended to show, was proceeding at night in a fog at a speed not exceeding 3½ knots an hour, was held to have been going at a moderate speed in compliance with the rules. Palmer v. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co., 154 Fed. 683, 689, 709 (citing The Chattahoochee, 1 Sup. Ct. 491, 494, 173 U. S. 540, 548, 43 L. Ed. 801; The Etruria, 147 Fed. 216, 218, 7 C. C. MODERATOR

As quasi judicial officer, see Quasi Judicial.

A "moderator" is one of the officers provided by statutes in New Hampshire to conduct the affairs of a school district meeting. State v. Waterhouse, 53 Atl. 304, 71 N. H. 488.

MODERN

MODERN APPLIANCE

A charge in an action for fire set by a locomotive, stating that it was defendant's duty to have its engines properly equipped with such appliances for arresting sparks as are in general and approved use, not, however, such as will prevent any spark from escaping, but such as are in general and common use, and that if the fire was caused by its failure to properly equip its engine with a spark arrester that was modern and in common use, or by failure to properly operate it, it was negligent, does not, by use of the word "modern," necessarily require the latest and best appliances. Jeffress v. Norfolk-Southern R. Co., 73 S. E. 1013, 1016, 158 N. C. 215.

MODERN ASPHALT ROADWAY

Where, at the time a contract for the sale of city lots, providing for the construction by the vendor of a "modern asphalt roadway," was executed, the only asphalt streets in that city were hot or sheet asphalt streets, and no such thing as a "cold Kentucky rock asphalt street" was known, the construction of such a street was not a compliance with the contract. Tennant Land Co. v. Nordeman, 146 S. W. 756, 757, 148 Ky. 361.

MODIFY

See As Modified.

The word "modify," as used in a corporate charter, providing that, upon the report of commissioners to appraise property which the corporation seeks to acquire as a right of way, the judge of the district court shall confirm the report, modify it, or refer it back to the present or new commissioners, does not give the court authority to increase the amount found by the commissioners. Louisiana Western R. Co. v. Crossman's Heirs, 35 South. 784, 785, 111 La. 611.

Under Civ. Code, § 139, providing that, where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may compel him to make a suitable allowance to the wife for her support during her life, or for a shorter period, and may from time to time modify its orders in such respect, where a divorce decree awarded plaintiff alimony at the rate of $75 per month, the court had statutory authority to "modify" the decree so as to relieve defendant from further payment of such alimony, though the decree contained no reservation for such modification. Under this section it may "modify" its former order, either by increasing or reducing the amount of money to be paid at any one time, or enlarging or diminishing the frequency with which the payments are to be made. Neither is the authority to modify the decree limited by the section to a mere change in the amount of the allowance to be paid, but it includes a modification of the order in any respect which, under the circumstances of the particular case, may seem just to the court. Under such discretionary authority, it is within the power of the court, not only to change the amount of the allowance, but also to suspend any enforcement of the order until its further direction. Soule v. Soule, 87 Pac. 205, 206, 4 Cal. App. 97.

A motion to correct a judgment rendered by a municipal court justice is a motion to amend or "modify" the same, within Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1563, c. 580, § 254). Ryan v. Brown, 90 N. Y. Supp. 868, 869, 51 Misc. Rep. 67.

The word "modified," as used in Acts 1901, p. 608, c. 262, § 1, providing that, on the original hearing of an application for the construction of a district sewer, the "resolution shall be confirmed or 'modified,'" is to be given the meaning intended by the definition of the verb "modify" in the Encyclopedic Dictionary: "To change or alter the external qualities or incidents of anything; to vary; to alter; to give a new form, character, force, or appearance to"—and therefore the board of public works, after hearing a resolution to construct a district sewer, had power, without a further hearing, to modify the resolution so as to provide for the construction of such projected order. Edwards v. Cooper, 79 N. E. 1047, 1050, 168 Ind. 54.

As used in a declaration alleging that defendant insurance company, in violation of its agreement, modified a policy so that it covered a part only of the goods insured, and thereby canceled the policy as to the other goods, the words "modified" and "canceled" plainly referred to the physical changes made and to the effect which those changes would have had if authorized. Goodhue v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 55 N. E. 1089, 1040, 175 Mass. 187, 189.

Pressed synonyms

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, the term "molded," as applied to glassware, is synonymous with "pressed." United States v. Heil Chemical Co., 178 Fed. 537, 539, 102 C. C. A. 47.

MOLDER'S PATTERN

"Molders' patterns" are intended to be placed in sand in order to form the matrix in which the molten metal is cast. The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 616, for "models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts, including patterns for machinery," is not limited to the class of patterns known as "model patterns," intended to show the working of the thing illustrated, but includes also molders' patterns, which are used as models about which to form sand molds in, in which castings may be made, and which are fitted for successive use in that way. R. Hoe & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 488, 489.

MOMENTARILY UNCONTROLLED

Generally it may be said that the event sought to be described by the phrase "momentarily uncontrolled" is wholly inconsistent with a condition where a horse is moving along the road in the course of a struggle for mastery. It is substantially limited to those spasmodic movements which often occur while the horse is generally within the control of his driver, but where the particular movement is so quick and unexpected that it and its results can take place before efforts to control can be exerted. A horse shied to one side, and then at a gallop ran forward 60 to 90 feet, the driver all the time pulling back on the lines, so that the horse was drawing the vehicle by the bit and resisting the efforts to stop him, till a defect in the highway was reached and an accident occurred. The horse could not be held to have been only "momentarily uncontrolled," within the law as to liability of a municipality for defects in highways. Ehleiter v. City of Milwaukee, 98 N. W. 934, 935, 121 Wis. 85, 66 L. R. A. 915, 105 Am. St. Rep. 1027, 2 Ann. Cas. 178.

MONDAY

A defendant is presumed to know the law, and therefore to know that venires are drawn for the different weeks of the term, and not for the different days, and that a list served on him headed "Petit jury for Monday, October 15, 1906," means for the week beginning on that day. State v. Jones, 42 South. 967, 968, 118 La. 369.

In legal acceptance, the word "money" means current metallic coins. Block v. State, 44 Tex. 620, 622.

The word "money," in its most strict and technical sense, means coined metal, usually gold or silver, upon which the government stamp has been impressed to indicate its value, but in its more popular use it imports any currency, tokens, bank notes, or other circulating medium in general use as the representative of value. Kennedy v. Briere, 45 Tex. 305, 309.

"Money," in its strict technical sense, is coined metal, gold or silver, on which the government stamp has been impressed to indicate its value; but in its more popular sense any currency token, bank notes, or other circulating medium in general use as the representative of value is money, and the word designates the whole volume of the medium of exchange, regardless of its character or denomination. Johnson v. State, 52 South. 652, 167 Ala. 82, 140 Am. St. Rep. 19.

"Money," in the constitutional sense, means coins of gold and silver fabricated and stamped by authority of law as a measure of value, pursuant to the power vested in Congress by the Constitution. Coins of copper may also be minted for small fractional circulation, as authorized by law and the usage of the government for eighty years." Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. (79 U. S.) 457, 587, 20 L. Ed. 287.

"While gold coin is in one sense 'money,' it is in another an article of merchandise." Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 625, 24 L. Ed. 740.

The word "money," in reasonable and colloquial use, signified whatever customarily passed current as a medium of exchange and commerce, and was not necessarily confined to coined metals. Clawson v. State, 109 N. W. 578, 579, 129 Wis. 650, 116 Am. St. Rep. 972, 9 Ann. Cas. 966 (citing State v. Kube, 20 Wis. 217, 91 Am. Dec. 390).

"Money" includes "whatever is lawfully and actually current in buying and selling, of the value and as the equivalent of coin." State v. Quackenbush, 108 N. W. 953, 955, 98 Minn. 515.

"Money" is a generic term, and, as commonly understood, is anything that circulates as the ordinary medium of exchange in buying and selling property. State v. Finnegan, 103 N. W. 155, 157, 127 Iowa, 286, 4 Ann. Cas. 628.

"Money" is the medium of exchange established by law, as well as by custom among men and nations, and to perform its functions it must circulate freely, unembarrassed by suspicion or inquiry as to its ownership by him who tenders it in payment of a debt, or in any transaction where its use is required or permitted; and, unless the one by whom it is received in any such transaction actually knows at the time that it is not the money of him from whom it is received, it becomes his absolutely, and he is not liable to him who was its real owner before he received it, even though it were stolen, either for the specific money received or its value. Young v. Pecos County, 101 S. W. 1055, 1058, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 319.

The term "money" or "moneys," as used in Acts 1895, p. 3, c. 4322, § 5, providing for the taxation of property, means gold and silver coin, United States treasury and bank notes, legal tender, and all other forms of currency, and every deposit which any person owning the same or holding in trust and residing in the state is entitled to withdraw in money on demand. Hunt v. Turner, 45 South. 509, 513, 54 Fla. 654.

Laws 1908, c. 73, § 1, fixing a system of public revenue, defines the term "money" as including all kinds of coin and all kinds of paper issued by or under the authority of the United States circulating as money, whether deposited in a bank or elsewhere. State ex rel. Palmer v. Fleming, 97 N. W. 1063, 1068, 70 Neb. 529.

As used in Laws 1901, p. 166, § 2, prohibiting the conduct of games of chance for "money," checks, credits, or any representative of value, or for any property or thing whatever, the word "money" includes all money. State v. Woodman, 67 Pac. 1118, 1120, 26 Mont. 348.

In Rev. St. § 5209, which makes it a criminal offense for any officer or agent of a national bank to embezzle, abstract, or willfully misapply "any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association," the word "moneys" refers to the currency or circulating medium of the country. United States v. Smith, 152 Fed. 542, 548 (citing United States v. Greve, 65 Fed. 489).

See Baggage.

"Money or money's worth" means cash or its equivalent. Gillett v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 82 N. E. 891, 904, 230 Ill. 373.

The word "money" in a will, whereby a wife gave to her husband certain personalty, "money, securities for money, evidences of debt, and of title and accounts," etc., does not include the amount received by the wife under a will executed about nine years after the will of the wife, who died before the amount of her share in testatrix's estate was ascertained, so that the right of the executor of the wife at the time of her death was merely a chose in action; the word "money" covering only cash or money on deposit, unless the context gives it a more extended meaning. In re Hendrickson, 125 N. Y. Supp. 309, 313, 140 App. Div. 388.

The word "money" in its popular sense signifies cash or its equivalent, used as a circulating medium, as in its generic sense it is not confined to coin, but includes everything which by common consent is made to represent property and passes currently, such as gold and silver coins and the various kinds of paper money issued by the federal government. People v. Clark, 99 N. E. 866, 868, 256 Ill. 14, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 214.

As legal tender

The word "money," as used in statutes defining embezzlement or larceny, means only what is legal tender. State v. Mispagel, 106 S. W. 513, 516, 207 Mo. 557 (quoting and adopting Bish. St. Crimes, § 346).

As all personal estate

"The term 'money' can be used in a restricted, and also in an enlarged, sense. In one it is a standard of value or medium of exchange stamped by government authority; and in the other, in addition to this, it includes stocks, bonds, and other personal securities of an investment nature." Testatrix, after certain bequests, gave certain personalty to one H. and all "money" remaining after payment of debts. Testatrix left personalty amounting to about $5,000 and real estate worth $1,500. When she made the will she had $400 in money, and $327 at the time of her death. After paying expenses, debts, and legacies, the personal estate, consisting of furniture, mortgages, and railroad stocks, amounted to $3,839. The real estate which was not devised was inherited by her brother. Held, that what remained of her personal estate passed by the will to H. In re Blackstone's Estate, 95 N. Y. Supp. 977, 980, 47 Misc. Rep. 538.

As property

Money as property, see Property; Personal Property.

Testatrix, after making bequests, gave the remainder of her estate to her sister B., and then provided that, if B. predeceased her, half of all "moneys" belonging to her estate should be paid to a society, and the other half should be divided among certain persons, who included all who would have taken under the intestacy laws. Held, that the word "moneys" was used in the sense of property, of whatever nature, without which meaning there would be a partial intestacy. Mt. Holly Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Deacon, 81 Atl. 356, 357, 79 N. J. Eq. 120.

Bank bills or notes

"Doubtless the word 'money' is often used as applicable to other media of exchange than coin. Bank notes lawfully issued and actually current at par in lieu of coin are treated as money, because flowing as such through the channels of trade and commerce without question." Woodruff v. Mississippi, 16 Sup. Ct. 820, 162 U. S. 291, 300, 40 L. Ed. 978.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 945, of the chapter on "Swindling," which provides that "within the meaning of money as used in this chapter are included also bank bills or other circulating medium current as money," an indictment for swindling, alleging current money, includes bank bills, as well as United States treasury notes. Baxter v. State, 105 S. W. 195, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 576.

Bonds, notes, and mortgages

The word "money" in its usual meaning signifies gold, silver, or paper money used as a circulating medium of exchange, and does not include notes, bonds, evidence of debt, or other property, and such usual meaning should be given it when used in a will, unless it appears from construing the entire will that testator intended it to include bonds and other securities. Pohlman v. Pohlman, 150 S. W. 829, 830, 150 Ky. 679.

Railroad bonds deposited in a Circuit Court as collateral security by its order, and kept in a bank vault to which the clerk kept the key, are not "money," and the clerk is not entitled to a commission thereon, under Rev. St. § 828, when by order of the court he takes them from the bank and surrenders them to the depositor; nor is there any authority outside of the statute for the allowance of such a commission. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Harsha, 134 Fed. 217, 221, 67 C. C. A. 145.

A conditional sale contract required payment in 10 days either in cash or notes, declaring that all notes and open accounts shall be drawn payable at Oklahoma City, with 10 per cent. attorney's fees, and that on default in any installment the seller might consider the entire indebtedness due; the title to the goods to remain in the seller until the price had been paid in money. Held, that the word "money" was used in contradistinction to "notes," and did not include notes, so that the acceptance of notes did not constitute a payment vesting title in the buyer. In re Gray, 170 Fed. 638, 643.

The provision of a contract of sale that the title shall remain in the vendor until the price is paid "in money" is not complied with by the giving of a note for the price, and, while the giving of the note may be presumptively a payment of the price, it is not a payment "in money." Anderson Carriage Co. v. Bartley, 67 Atl. 567, 569, 102 Me. 492.

Checks, drafts, and other bills of exchange

"A check is a mere order for so much money to the credit of the drawer in the bank or drawee, which it is bound to honor when made in form and properly presented." Where an indictment charged the larceny of money, proof of the taking of a check on which the money was obtained was not a variance; and where defendant married a woman in pursuance of a scheme to procure certain money which she had on deposit in bank, and later procured a check for the money on representations that he would use the money in making an investment for her, he was guilty of larceny. Hunt v. State, 79 S. W. 769, 772, 72 Ark. 241, 65 L. R. 71, 105 Am. St. Rep. 84, 2 Ann. Cas. 33.

Where a draft is obtained by false pretenses in Wisconsin, but is paid in Iowa, the crime of obtaining "money" by false pretenses in violation of Rev. St. 1898, § 4423, is committed in Iowa, and a prosecution therefor can only be maintained there. Bates v. State, 103 N. W. 251, 254, 124 Wis. 612, Ann. Cas. 365.

A bill of exchange is not "money" nor legal tender. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. v. Clark, 83 N. E. 760, 762, 4 Ind. App. 345.

Debts and credits

The term "money," in a gift to testatrix's husband for life, and thereafter over to another, of "all the money that may be in the hands of my said husband as trustee for me at my decease," includes a debt to him as trustee for money of the trust fund which he has loaned out. Dillard v. Dillard, 84 S. E. 60, 61, 62, 97 Va. 434.

Issuance of bonds by a corporation for antecedent debts is not issuance for "money, labor, or property," etc., within St. Wis. 1899, § 1753, which prohibits issuance for other purposes. Nichols v. Waukesha Canning Co., 195 Fed. 807, 812.

Deposits in bank

Under Rev. Civ. St. art. 5064, defining "money," as used in the provisions relating to taxes, to include deposits which the owner is entitled to withdraw in money on demand, an indictment for perjury in falsely listing the amount of money deposited in a bank as insufficient, which does not allege that the money was payable on demand. Parker v. State (Tex.), 69 S. W. 75, 76.

The word "money," in embezzlement statutes relating to public funds, is used in a generic, and not in a specific sense, viz., it includes all actual moneys, credits, and funds of every kind belonging to the public, so that, where accused was charged with an embezzlement of money, proof of the taking of public funds deposited in a bank on general deposit, by means of drawing checks on the deposit, did not constitute a variance. Territory v. Hale, 81 Pac. 583, 585, 13 N. M. 181, 13 Ann. Cas. 551.

The word "money," defined in Revenue Laws 1903, p. 389, c. 73, § 4, as including "all kinds of coin, all kinds of paper issued by or under the authority of the United States and circulating as money whether in possession or deposit in bank or elsewhere," includes "money" on general deposit in a bank upon certificates of deposit payable on demand and not a credit against which the depositor's indebtedness can be offset. White v. City of Lincoln, 112 N. W. 369, 370, 79 Neb. 153 (citing Critchfield v. Nance County, 110 N. W. 538, 77 Neb. 807).

Revenue Act 1903, § 4, providing that the word "money," as used in the act for the purpose of listing for taxation shall include money deposited in bank or elsewhere, is intended to include money on general deposit in a bank. Critchfield v. Nance County, 110 N. W. 538, 77 Neb. 807.

The term "money," when used to designate the property embraced in a residuary clause, is sufficient to include real estate. Prison Association of Virginia v. Russell's Adm'r, 49 S. E. 968, 968, 103 Va. 563 (citing Schouler, Wills [3d Ed.] § 522).

Testator's children signed an instrument acknowledging having received from their father "divers sums of money and other property," which he desired acknowledged in order that no misunderstanding or confusion might result in the settlement of his estate. Subsequently two of the children signed an instrument acknowledging that since executing the above instrument they had received certain real estate as an advancement, and consenting that the value of the same, as fixed at a certain sum set opposite their names therein, "may be deducted from any share we may become entitled to" in his estate. The will directed "that the sums of money which I have advanced and which I may hereafter advance to my children shall be considered as advances and charged against each; * * * such advances and payment of money shall be taken out of their respective shares." Held, that the conveyances of land to the two sons were to be deemed "sums of money," or "advances and payment of money," within the intention of the will. Vreeland v. Vreeland, 56 Atl. 1089, 1092, 65 N. J. Eq. 668; Id., 59 Atl. 1118, 66 N. J. Eq. 454.

Bank paper is not "money," and hence an action by petition which is allowed to be brought on a bond or note for the direct payment of money only, would not lie upon a note payable "in the money of this state," if it is intended thereby to make the note payable in the bank paper issued by authority of the state. Chambers v. George, 15 Ky. (5 Litt.) 335, 336.

"Bank notes payable to the bearer (or when payable to order, indorsed in blank) pass in the ordinary intercourse and business of life as 'money,' and circulate and are treated as money. They are not, indeed, in a legal and exact sense, money; but, for common purposes, they possess the attributes, and perform the functions of money." Briscoe v. Commonwealth Bank, 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 257, 330, 9 L. Ed. 709.

Stock

Certificates of stock in a bank on which only 60 per cent. has been paid, and which were held by the bank as security for the balance, are not moneys, funds, or credits of the bank within Free Banking Act, § 30 (Rev. St. § 3821—85), making it an offense for an officer of a bank to embezzle moneys, funds, or credits of the bank. State v. Davis, 96 N. E. 1022, 1025, 85 Ohio St. 48.

MONEY APPLICABLE

A complaint in an action by a subcontractor to foreclose a mechanic's lien and for a personal judgment, which alleges that plaintiff contracted with a third person to furnish materials for a building on premises of defendant, that he furnished materials and received a part of the price, that the third person, for the balance, executed an order on defendant to deduct from the final payment a specified sum and pay the same to the subcontractor for goods delivered and to be delivered by him, that the owner accepted the order, that at the time of the acceptance of the order a contractual relation existed between the third person and defendant who had in his possession money belonging to the third person, that said money is in the hands of defendant applicable to the payment of the order, charges facts disclosing the existence of a fund against which the order was directed and states a cause of action as against a motion to dismiss treated as a demurrer, and any defect in the complaint must be reached by motion to make it more definite and certain; the term "money applicable" meaning money which one is entitled to have applied in payment. Wood Mfg. & Realty Co. of Long Island v. Johnstone, 133 N. Y. Supp. 422, 424, 148 App. Div. 747.

MONEY AT INTEREST

The phrase "money at interest" includes all forms of interest-bearing securities, whether represented by bonds, notes, or otherwise, unless the contrary appears from the assessment itself. Sweetsair v. Chandler, 56 Atl. 584, 586, 98 Me. 145.

The phrase "money at interest," as used in Rev. St. c. 9, § 5, imposing taxes on all obligations for money or other property, "money at interest," and debts due the person to be taxed more than they are owing, is embraced in the word "debts," and therefore the amount which the person to be taxed is indebted is to be deducted from money which he has at interest. Taylor v. Inhabitants of Town of Caribou, 67 Atl. 2, 3, 4, 102 Me. 401, 10 Ann. Cas. 1080.

Petitioners purchased land by contract providing for delivery of deed in escrow, to be delivered with possession of the property on complete payment of the purchase price, to be paid in installments, the last, at the option of the vendor, at one of two certain times. It was also provided that on installments paid the purchaser should be allowed 4¼ per cent. interest in the final settlement. Held that, when the purchasers paid installments, ownership of the money passed to the vendors, and that the arrangement for payment of 4¼ per cent. on it was not strictly as interest on money belonging to them, so that they were not taxable thereon as "money at interest." Williams v. City of Boston, 94 N. E. 808, 809, 208 Mass. 497.

Where plaintiff advanced money to the purchasers of real estate under a bond from the owner, under an arrangement whereby the land was deeded to plaintiff on an understanding that he would convey to the purchasers under the bond on the payment to him of the amount advanced and interest, and plaintiff gave a bond binding himself to convey, and to those to whom the bond was given, gave no note, but promised to pay plaintiff the amount advanced, plaintiff was properly taxed on the amount under a statute subjecting "money at interest" to taxation. Glidden v. Town of Newport, 66 Atl. 117, 118, 74 N. H. 207.

MONEY DECREE

An ordinary real estate mortgage foreclosure proceeding is in part at least other than a "money decree" within Gen. St. 1906, §§ 1701, 1909, regulating supersedeas bonds. State ex rel. Purvis v. Palmer, 48 South. 638, 57 Fla. 541.

MONEY DELIVERED

An advance of money by discounting a church order for $150 for decedent was a delivery of money, within section 4187, St. 1898, providing that book account entries of items of "money delivered," at one time exceeding $5, are inadmissible to prove the account. Dohmen v. Blum's Estate, 119 N. W. 349, 350, 137 Wis. 560.

MONEY DEMAND ON CONTRACT

As defined by Rev. St. 1852, the phrase "money demands on contracts," when used in reference to an action, means any action arising out of contract, where the relief demanded is the recovery of money. State v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 93 N. E. 213, 218, 175 Ind. 59, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256.

MONEY DEPOSITED IN BANK

The expression "money deposited in bank," as used in section 4 of the revenue act of 1903 (Comp. St. 1903, p. 1283), is intended to include money on general deposit in bank. Critchfield v. Nance County, 110 N. W. 538, 77 Neb. 807.

MONEY DISBURSED

Where pledgees of collateral by the bankrupt were entitled to sell the same at public or private sale without notice to the pledgors, and apply the proceeds to the payment of their liabilities, and in one case the pledgee was authorized to buy the securities pledged free from any right or equity of redemption in the pledgors, but after bankruptcy the trustee was permitted to sell the securities free from lien on payment of the debts by the pledgees when the securities were delivered to the purchaser, on which sale the trustee received a balance of $3,802.87, representing the bankrupt's equity in the securities, such sum, and not the price secured from the purchaser, was the "moneys disbursed," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 48, as amended by Act June 25, 1910, c. 412, § 9, of which commissions were to be allowed. Levre Meadows, 199 Fed. 304, 306.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED

See Assumpsit for Money Had and Received.

Action for, as equitable action, see Equitable Action.

The action for "money had and received" rests on an implied promise, and may be maintained against the person who has received money from plaintiff, or from a third person, under such circumstances that, in equity and good conscience, he should not retain it. Jackson v. Creek, 94 N. E. 416, 418, 47 Ind. App. 541.

The action for "money had and received" is governed by equitable principles, and generally lies whenever one person has received money belonging to another which in justice and good conscience should be returned. Stout v. Carruthersville Hardware Co., 110 S. W. 619, 621, 131 Mo. App. 520.

"The action for 'money had and received' lies to recover money to which plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which defendant cannot with a good conscience retain." Whittle v. Whittle, 99 Pac. 170, 172, 5 Cal. App. 696 (citing Bouvier Law Dict.).

"The count for 'money had and received' is a very important one, and in some respects differs from all other common-law actions. It is a sort of connecting link between law and equity, and by the use of the very convenient fiction of an implied promise this count will lie to recover any money which defendant has received, or in any manner obtained possession of, which in equity and good faith and conscience he ought to pay over to plaintiff." Montgomery v. Wise, 129 S. W. 100, 103, 138 Mo. App. 176 (quoting and adopting Green & Myer, Missouri Prac. & P. § 256).

MONEY IN ANY BANK

All money in any bank, see All.

MONEY IN THE HANDS OR POSSESSION OF BANK

Money deposited in a savings bank is "money or other property in the hands or possession" of the bank, within the meaning of Gen. St. 1902, § 1019, providing for actions in the nature of bills of interpleader. Brown v. Clark, 68 Atl. 1001, 1005, 80 Conn. 419.

MONEY JUDGMENT

"Money judgment," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 685, providing that, in all cases other than for the recovery of a money judgment, the judgment may be enforced or carried into execution after the lapse of five years from the date of its entry, etc., includes a decree allowing a certain sum to a commissioner in partition for services and expenses, and hence it cannot be enforced by execution after five years. Cortes v. Superior Court, 24 Pac. 1011, 86 Cal. 274, 21 Am. St. Rep. 37.

A judgment foreclosing a laborer's lien and directing a sale is not a "money judgment" within Rev. St. 1887, § 4810, providing that on appeal from a judgment directing the payment of money, appellant, to stay proceedings, must give a bond in double the amount of the judgment. Naylor & Norlin v. Lewiston & S. E. Electric Ry. Co., 95 Pac. 827, 828, 14 Idaho, 722.

A judgment ordering a party to pay a specific sum into court, and authorizing the adverse party to withdraw it as soon as paid, is a judgment for the payment of money, within Civ. Code Prac. § 764, providing that, on the affirmance of a judgment "for the payment of money," the collection of which has been superseded, 10 per cent. damages on the amount superseded shall be awarded against appellant. Motion for assessment of damages on supersedeas, 99 S. W. 305, sustained. Robinson-Norton & Co. v. Corsicana Cotton Factory, 102 S. W. 869, 870, 126 Ky. 75, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723, 15 Ann. Cas. 770.

A judgment for alimony is a "judgment for a sum of money only," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1913, providing that an action on a judgment for a sum of money only cannot be maintained between the original parties unless 10 years have elapsed since the docketing of the judgment. Shepherd v. Shepherd, 100 N. Y. Supp. 401, 402, 51 Misc. Rep. 418.

An application for foreclosure of a vendor's lien on realty in which personal judgment is rendered against defendant, with a decree directing the sale and application of the proceeds, is not a judgment directing the payment of money within Rev. Codes 1905, § 7209, providing that, to stay execution pending appeal from such a judgment, appellant must furnish a bond conditioned to pay the amount of the judgment; but the bond required is defined by Rev. Codes 1905, § 7212, conditioned that appellant will not commit or suffer waste and if the judgment is affirmed will pay the value of the property pending the appeal. Schafer v. Olson (N. D.) 132 N. W. 645, 647.

Civ. Code Prac. § 764, provides that on the affirmance or dismissal of an appeal from a judgment for the payment of money, the collection of which has been superseded, 10 per cent. damages on the amount superseded shall be awarded. Held, that a judgment requiring appellant to execute a deed to certain real estate on payment of the price pursuant to a contract of sale, and if appellant failed to do so that the court commissioner execute the deed, and that a writ of possession be issued on behalf of appellee, was not a judgment for the payment of money; and hence, on the dismissal of an appeal on which the judgment had been superseded, appellee was not entitled to damages. Maret v. Sanders, 132 S. W. 552, 141 Ky. 368.

MONEY LENT

Money deposited in a bank in New York at interest and subject to check constitutes "money lent" to the banker, within Civ. Code La. art. 3538 (3503), requiring actions for the payment of money lent to be brought within three years. Schinotti v. Whitney, 130 Fed. 780, 781 (quoting Morse, Banks, § 298).

MONEY LOANED AND INVESTED

A note and mortgage taken in exchange for property is not "money loaned and invested," within Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10-427, but is a credit from which the holder may deduct the just debts by him owing at the time of making his tax return. Oleson v. Cuming County, 115 N. W. 783, 784, 81 Neb. 209.

"Money loaned or invested," within the ordinary meaning of the term, is money or capital laid out with a view of obtaining a profit or income therefrom. The fact that a fund in question has assumed the form of bonds, mortgages, or other securities does not of itself fix its nature or determine its use; it is the use to which it is put that determines its character. Royal Highlanders v. State, 108 N. W. 183, 186, 77 Neb. 18, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380.

MONEY NECESSARY FOR THE JOURNEY

The phrase "money necessary for the journey," within the law as to the liability of carriers for the loss of effects of the passenger, includes a proper, reasonable, and necessary amount for the plaintiff to carry with him for his journey, taking into consideration his position and circumstances, the length and character of his journey, and the contingencies and accidents that might naturally arise, and the fact that he was in a foreign country. Knieriem v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 602, 603, 109 App. Div. 709 (citing Fairfax v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 73 N. Y. 167, 29 Am. Rep. 119).

MONEY OF THE CITY

The power of a city to grade streets or lay sewers or water pipes at the cost of abutting property is not strictly a governmental function, and in the exercise of the power it acts in its proprietary character, and the money collected from the abutting property owners is not "money of the city" within its charter, for it is only money raised by the operation of a general law that becomes "money of the city," or public funds, and subject to the charter provision as to the deposit thereof. City of Seattle v. Stirrat, 104 Pac. 834, 836, 55 Wash. 560, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1275.

MONEY OF THE UNITED STATES

Current money of the United States, see Current Money.

It is held that the term "money of the United States" includes gold, silver, and treasury notes of the government which are by law made legal tender for the payment of debts but not national bank notes. Johnson v. State, 83 S. W. 851, 852, 73 Ark. 101 (citing Marshall v. State, 75 S. W. 584, 71 Ark. 416; Murphy v. Smith, 3 S. W. 891, 49 Ark. 37; Burton v. Brooks, 25 Ark. 215).

The phrase "money or property of the United States," in the federal statutes, relating to embezzlement, does not include fees and emoluments received by the clerk of a federal district court, and the duty of a clerk of a federal district court to pay over to the United States the surplus fees and emoluments of his office which is half-yearly returned, or the audit thereof shown to exist over and above the compensation and allowances authorized by law to be retained by him, is not governed by the statutes relating to the embezzlement of money or property of the United States. United States v. Mason, 31 Sup. Ct. 28, 34, 218 U. S. 517, 54 L. Ed. 1133.

MONEY ORDER

The terms "pay check" and "money order" mean practically the same thing. Barnes v. State, 35 South. 227, 228, 46 Fla. 96.

MONEY ORDER FUNDS

Rev. St. § 4045, defines "money order funds" to consist of all money received for the sale of "money orders," including all fees thereon, all money transferred from the postal revenues to the money order funds to the service of the Post Office Department. The term "sale of money orders" related to the executed transactions, when the money order clerk at the post office building had sold the money order to an applicant and received the price, which then became part of the money order funds. United States v. Mann, 160 Fed. 552, 554.

MONEY OWING

Code Civ. Proc. § 710, providing that a transcript of a judgment may be filed with the controller of the state or auditor of any municipal corporation from "which money is owing to" the judgment debtor, whereon the controller or auditor shall draw his warrant in favor of the creditor, or pay so much money into court as will cancel the judgment and which belongs to or is owing to the judgment debtor," applies to legislative officers making their salaries subject to the payment of their debts; salaries and wages of public officers and employees being included in phrases "money owing," "money which longs to," etc. Ruperich v. Baehr, 75 K. 782, 784, 142 Cal. 190.

MONEY PAID

Under Const. art. 12, § 6, providing that no corporation shall issue stock, except "money paid" or "property actually received," a contract for the sale of stock, to be paid for in part in cash and in part by the purchaser's notes, payable on a future date, ultra vires, though the notes are to be endorsed by a solvent indorser and secured by a pledge of the stock, since a note is not the equivalent of "money paid," and since as between the parties, a note is mere evidence of indebtedness, and is not "property actually received." McCarthy v. Texas L. & Guaranty Co. (Tex.) 142 S. W. 96, 97.

MONEY PAID IN FRAUD OF CREDITORS

Rev. Laws 1902, c. 118, § 73, providing that every life policy for benefit of a married woman, or after its issue transferred to her, shall inure to her separate benefit, provided that, subject to the statute of limitation, the amount of premiums paid in fraud of creditors, shall inure to their benefit from proceeds, etc., gives to her insurance on husband's life, originally for her benefit subsequently transferred to her, whether or not he was insolvent at time of transfer, a gift gives creditors the benefit of premiums paid by him when insolvent, subject to such statute, and money paid by an insolvent as premiums on a policy insuring to a third person's benefit as a gift is "money paid in fraud of creditors"; and this is true whether or not such person is his wife. Bailey Wood, 89 N. E. 149, 153, 202 Mass. 562.

MONEY PAID INTO COURT

See Paid into Court.

MONEY RAISED

A note or bond would be as strict "money raised" as would a subscription, within the meaning of a condition in a subscription to a church that the church raise a further sum within a certain time. St. Paul Episcopal Church v. Fields, 72 Atl. 145, 181 Conn. 670.

MONEY RECEIVED

See Money Had and Received.

MONEY VALUE

"The so-called 'money value' of real personal property is but a conveniently short method of expressing the present potential 'usefulness,' and 'investment' becomes meaningless if construed to mean what the thing invested in cost generations ago. Property, whether real or personal, is only valuable when useful. Its usefulness commonly depends on the business purposes to which it is or may be complied with. Such business is a living thing and may flourish or wither, appreciate or depreciate, but whatever happens its present usefulness, expressed in natural terms, must be its value." Consolidated Gas Co. v. City of New York, 157 Fed. 849, 856.

MONEYED BUSINESS

The expressions "moneyed business" or "moneyed man" are often used, and in their common acceptation and generally understood meaning are not applied solely to the business of handling and loaning money, or to a man whose property merely consists of money. A person is commonly referred to as a moneyed man because of his large possessions, yet those possessions may consist exclusively of real estate. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 80 S. W. 544, 553, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

MONEYED CAPITAL

Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, providing that shares of stock in national banks shall not be taxed at a greater rate than is assessed on "other moneyed capital" in the hands of individual citizens of the state, permits the taxation of national bank shares, provided no discrimination is made against them in favor of stock of other banks in competition with national banks; the terms "other moneyed capital" being defined as capital in corporations carrying on the business of banking as defined by law and custom, and which is employed in competition with the business of national banks. Des Moines Nat. Bank v. City of Des Moines, 133 N. W. 767, 768, 153 Iowa, 336. The phrase "other moneyed capital" applies to such capital as in its use comes into competition with the business of banks. Lippincott v. Lippincott, 66 Atl. 113, 114, 74 N. J. Law, 439.

Before a state statute denying all right in taxation to deduct debts from the stock in national banks assessed with taxes, but allowing deduction from other investments, can be held a violation of Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, prohibiting a state from taxing such stock at a greater rate than is assessed on "other moneyed capital," it must appear that such other moneyed capital exists in such an amount as to operate as a discrimination against such banks, and that it is of such character as to come in competition with National Banks. West Virginia Nat. Bank v. Dunkle, 64 S. E. 531, 65 W. Va. 210.

"The term 'moneyed capital,' as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, respecting state taxation of shares of national banks, embraces capital employed in national banks, capital employed by individuals when the object of their business is the making of profit by the use of their moneyed capital, as in banking." First Nat. Bank of Albuquerque v. Albright, 86 Pac. 548, 550, 13 N. M. 514 (quoting Talbot v. Silver Bow County, 11 Sup. Ct. 594, 139 U. S. 438, 35 L. Ed. 210).

The words "other moneyed capital," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, providing that the shares in national banks shall not be assessed at a greater rate than other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, does not mean all capital, the value of which is measured in terms of money, nor all forms of investment in which the interest of the owner is expressed in money, nor shares of stock represented by certificates showing that the owner is entitled to an interest expressed in money value in the entire property of the corporation, nor real or personal property, such as ordinary chattels or commodities, nor investments in manufacturing and industrial enterprises; but does include shares of stock or other interest owned by individuals in enterprises in which the capital employed in carrying on the business is money, and the object of the business is the making of a profit by the use of money. First Nat. Bank of Nephi v. Christensen, 118 Pac. 778, 780, 39 Utah, 568.

In a statute providing for the taxation of bank stock and directing that the assessment and taxation of such stock shall not be at a greater rate than is made or assessed upon "other moneyed capital" in the hands of individuals within the state, the expression "other moneyed capital" means such capital as in its use comes into competition with the business of banks. Lippincott v. Lippincott, 66 Atl. 113, 115, 74 N. J. Law, 439.

MONEYED CORPORATION

The term "moneyed corporation" is defined in 1 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 598, § 51, to mean every corporation having banking powers, or having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make insurances, and is defined by the New York act of 1890 (Laws 1890, c. 563) to be one formed under or subject to the banking or the insurance law. A Kansas trust company, empowered to receive deposits and to loan money on real estate and personal security, is a "moneyed corporation," within this definition and within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 394, prescribing a three-year limitation for actions to enforce stockholders' liabilities. Platt v. Wilmot, 24 Sup. Ct. 542, 545, 198 U. S. 602, 48 L. Ed. 809.

The expression "moneyed corporation," in Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, art. 5063, providing for the taxation of all personal estate of moneyed corporations, means all classes of corporations organized and created for business purposes, as distinguishable from public or charitable or other corporations which are exempted by law from taxation. The Legislature evidently did not intend to use it in the restrictive sense, as applied only to corporations that dealt exclusively in money. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md., 80 S. W. 544, 553, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

A company incorporated for pecuniary profit, though having no power to engage in banking or loaning money or to write insurance, is a "moneyed corporation," within the meaning of that phrase as used in the crimes act (Gen. St. 1909, § 2621), declaring one guilty of forgery who fraudulently makes false entries in the books of an association of that character. State v. Chance, 108 Pac. 791, 82 Kan. 392, 20 Ann. Cas. 134.

A corporation engaged in leasing its own property and collecting rents therefor, with power to sue and be sued, to contract debts, and to dispose of its property, is a "moneyed, business, or commercial corporation," against which involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy may be had under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act June 25, 1910, c. 412, § 4, 36 Stat. 839. In re R. L. Radke Co., 193 Fed. 735, 738.

MONEYED MAN

See Moneyed Business.

MONEYS AND CREDITS

Corporate bonds are not taxable as "moneys and credits." Murrow v. Heath, 125 N. W. 259, 261, 146 Iowa, 347.

MONEYS RECOVERED ON A RECOGNIZANCE

"Moneys" deposited in lieu of bail are to be treated as if they had been recovered on a recognizance. The fact that a deposit of currency in lieu of bail, made under Code Cr. Proc. § 586, was made with money belonging to the estate of which the depositor was executor, and did not belong to him, did not entitle the estate to recover the money back after the failure of the executor to appear before the magistrate in accordance with the terms of the deposit, in the absence of an identification of the particular money misappropriated by the executor, or of proof that the sheriff or treasurer with whom the money was deposited knew or had notice that the executor was depositing moneys which did not actually belong to him. Sutherland v. St. Lawrence County, 91 N. Y. Supp. 962, 966, 101 App. Div. 299.

MONEYS REMAINING

Where a testator, after providing for the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, and devising his homestead to his wife, and bequeathing her the sum of $50 per month, directed his executors to sell both real and personal estate and to invest the moneys remaining in their hands, the expression "moneys remaining" means that portion of the proceeds remaining after payment of the debts and funeral expenses and payment to the wife. Roll v. Roll, 59 Atl. 296, 298, N. J. Eq. 227.

The will of one whose personal property at the time of his death was insufficient to pay his debts and funeral expenses, and whose real estate, other than his homestead, had a rental value of only $300 a year, directed that his debts and funeral expenses be paid, gave to his wife in lieu of debt the homestead and $50 a month to be paid each month during her life, authorized his executors to sell any part of his property, and directed that the "moneys remaining" in his hands should be invested. Held, that the "moneys remaining" meant remaining from the proceeds of sale after deducting, which can only be of payments previously directed, which were three, to wit, the debts, funeral expenses, and payment to the wife, and would not mean remaining if only debts and funeral expenses were made. Roll v. Roll, 59 Atl. 296, 297, 68 N. J. Eq. 227.

MONEY'S WORTH

"Money or money's worth" means cash or its equivalent. Gillett v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 82 N. E. 891, 904, 230 Ill. 373.

MONGOLIAN

As Indian, see Indian.

MONOMANIA

The term "monomania" implies "partial insanity," and excludes the idea of any sort of ratiocination as to the particular subject to which the partial insanity relates. Monomania cannot be implied because a person takes a narrow, or prejudiced, or utterly illogical view of a particular subject. It is not the result of any conclusion. The person does not arrive at his conviction because of any attempt either at reasoning or investigation. The partial insanity is the offspring of a disordered intellect." The conclusion that a testator was a monomaniac is not warranted by the bare circumstance that, actuated by a spirit of resentment against his wife, he disinherited her in his will, for the sole reason that she had interfered with him in carrying out his deliberate choice to lead an immoral and dissolute life. Bohler v. Hicks, 48 S. E. 306, 312, 120 Ga. 800.

MONOMANIA

"Monomaniac" is a person who is deranged in a single faculty of his mind or with regard to a particular subject only, and person of that kind may, and often do, on all subjects foreign to the subject of mania, act rationally and with ordinary prudence and judgment, even to the making of a valid will where the monomania does not in any degree influence or affect the provisions of the will. Swygart v. Willard, 76 N. E. 755, 757, 1 Ind. 25.

MONOPOLY

See Contract in Aid of Monopoly; Unlawful Monopoly.

As public nuisance, see Public or Common Nuisance.

See, also, Combination in Restraint of Trade; Engrossing; Trust (Combination).

As an exclusive franchise or privilege

A "monopoly" is the exclusive power, right, or privilege of selling a commodity, or of dealing in the same article or trading in the same market; sole command in traffic in anything, however obtained. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 504, 509, 24 S. D. 126, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

Under the old English law, a technical "monopoly" was a license or privilege, granted by the sovereign to an individual for the sole buying and selling, making, working, or using of anything, whereby the people in general were excluded from the liberty of manufacturing and trading, which they had before enjoyed. It differed from "engrossing" only in that, in the case of a monopoly, a patent was had from the king, while engrossing was a transaction between individuals. State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 121 N. W. 395, 403, 107 Minn. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260.

A "monopoly," as defined by Coke, was an institution or allowance by the King by his grant, commission, or otherwise, to any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, of or for the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using of anything whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be restrained from any freedom or liberty that they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade. The word was defined by Hawkins as an allowance by the King to a particular person or persons of the sole buying, selling, etc., of anything whereby any person is sought to be restrained from any freedom which he had before. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 512, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734.

"A monopoly" is an institution or allowance to any person or persons, bodies politic or incorporate, of or for the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using anything, whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be constrained of any freedom or liberty that they had before or hindered in their lawful trade." In re Charge to Grand Jury, 151 Fed. 834, 835 (quoting and adopting definition by Sir Edward Coke); Ware-Kramer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 180 Fed. 160, 170 (quoting and adopting the definition by Lord Coke).

It is a "monopoly" when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure. State v. Eastern Coal Co., 70 Atl. 1, 4, 29 R. I. 254, 132 Am. St. Rep. 817, 17 Ann. Cas. 96.

A "monopoly" exists when the manufacture and sale of any commodity is restrained to one or a certain number. City of Seattle v. Dencker, 108 Pac. 1086, 1090, 58 Wash. 501, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446.

The purpose of the Wisconsin Public Utility Law was to give the holder of an indeterminate permit, as regards the conditions existing at the time of its origin, a qualified monopoly within the scope of the privilege, subject to the conditions and limitations of the public utility law; the term "monopoly" not being used in its common-law sense, except as to exclusiveness, but being characterized by purpose to promote public welfare, by a return consideration and by not being of common right, instead of being otherwise but for the grant and being for private gain. Calumet Service Co. v. City of Chilton, 135 N. W. 131, 140, 148 Wis. 334.

"The terms 'monopolies' and 'trusts' are, perhaps, too often employed at the bar to all business enterprises requiring and employing great aggregations of wealth, and in the vague sense in which, at the hustlings, they are used to arouse envy and jealousy, forgetting the manifest necessity of such aggregations of wealth to produce the commodities, and their transportation, which our civilization and comfort require. Every railroad corporation is in one sense a monopoly. It has franchises giving rights and powers not common to all citizens. It alone can operate its own railroad, though subject to reasonable regulation by the state. All monopolies, in a strict sense, rest upon some grant by the sovereign power of an exclusive franchise or privilege." State of Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 123 Fed. 692, 705.

A "monopoly," as generally defined or understood, is the exclusive control of supply and price due either to a single ownership of a large part of the sources of supply, or unity of action among a large proportion of the owners of such sources. With monopoly in this sense neither the pre-emption act nor the land act has anything to do, since there is nothing in either to prevent any person, having sufficient means, acquiring acres by the million under the policy of free disposition so greatly favored by the United States courts. Pereles v. Well, 157 Fed. 419, 427 (citing and adopting Myers v. Croft, 13 Wall. [80 U. S.] 291, 20 L. Ed. 562).

A "monopoly" not only includes an exclusive right granted by the state to a few, of something which was before of common right, but embraces any combination or contract, the tendency of which is to prevent competition in its broad and general sense and control prices to the detriment of the public, regardless of the form assumed.

Where owners of land adjacent to a city platted the same and executed deeds to the city for the streets, alleys, and public grounds, reservations therein to the grantors of the exclusive right to use the streets for the operation of street railways and for the maintenance of lighting appliances, sewers, gas, waterworks, and telephone lines, free from the control of the city, were void as tending to create a "monopoly." Jones v. Carter, 101 S. W. 514, 516, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 450.

Same—Licensing of pilots

Pub. Laws 1907, p. 903, c. 625, providing for the licensing of pilots for a river, and limiting the number to be commissioned to 20, does not create a "monopoly" in violation of Const. art. 1, §§ 7, 31, declaring that no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive or separate emoluments or privileges, etc., and that "monopolies" are contrary to the genius of a free state. St. George v. Hardie, 60 S. E. 920, 923, 147 N. C. 88.

Same—Patent

"Monopoly" restrains trade or commerce in articles, which were before the subjects of trade or commerce. Patented articles cannot be the subject of monopoly, since a patent is that which brings out from the realm of mind something which never existed before and gives it to the country. Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Works Co., 142 Fed. 531, 537.

A patent is a "monopoly" created by law, and gives the right to exclude all others from making, using, and selling the invention or article made in accordance therewith. National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Bakewell, 123 S. W. 561, 566, 224 Mo. 203.

The "monopoly" authorized by a patent is a substantial property right conferred by law as an inducement or stimulus to useful invention and discovery, and it rests with the owner what part of this property he will transfer to others, and upon what terms he will make the transfer. National Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 128 Fed. 733, 735, 64 C. C. A. 594.

Same—Water franchise

A contract between a city and a water company's assignor, by which the city agreed not to grant to any other person the right to furnish water for fire hydrants during the life of the contract, etc., was invalid as a "monopoly," in violation of Const. art. 1, § 3, prohibiting the granting of a perpetuity or monopoly. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. City of Houston, 116 S. W. 36, 38, 102 Tex. 317.

In an action against a water company to recover damages for cutting off plaintiff's supply of water, an allegation in the petition that defendant was possessed of "a monopoly of such business in said city" would not be construed as used in an offensive sense or with the purpose of insinuating that the company was not conducting a legitimate business, but with a view to setting forth the pertinent fact that the company had the exclusive privilege of supplying the city and its inhabitants with water, and for this reason the plaintiff was wholly dependent upon defendant for his supply of water. Freeman v. Macon Gas Light & Water Co., 56 S. E. 616, 63, 126 Ga. 848, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917.

Defendant city entered into a contract with a water company, by which the city agreed not to grant to any other person the right to furnish water for fire hydrants during the life of the contract, which was for 20 years, and the city to have the privilege of buying the waterworks, but if the city did not exercise the option to purchase, the contract to continue until the city finally purchased the works. Held, that the exclusive privilege granted by the contract was a "perpetuity" and "monopoly," in contravention of Const. art. 1, § 26, prohibiting the granting of a perpetuity or monopoly, which rendered the contract entirely void; and hence the city could not recover for damages arising out of the water company's failure to furnish sufficient water pressure, whereby the city market house was burned. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. City of Houston (Tex.) 110 S. W. 973, 977.

As a combination

A "monopoly" is the concentration of business in the hands of a few. National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders' Ass'n, 169 Fed. 259, 264, 94 C. C. A. 535, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148.

A "monopoly," within the meaning of the Anti-trust Law, is more than the mere complete occupation of a certain field which does not unfairly exclude other competitors. Fonotipia Limited v. Bradley, 171 Fed. 951, 959.

The gravamen of the offense of "monopoly" consists in combining to acquire power the exercise of which depends entirely upon the will of those who hold the power, and efforts to acquire the power of monopoly should be prevented. A monopoly embraces any combination the tendency of which is to prevent competition in its broad and general sense, and to control prices to the detriment of the public. State v. Eastern Coal Co., 7 Atl. 1, 5, 29 R. I. 254, 132 Am. St. Rep. 817, 17 Ann. Cas. 96.

A "monopoly" exists where all, or nearly all, of an article of trade or commerce within a district, is brought within the hand of one man, or set of men, as to practically bring the handling or production of the commodity or thing within such control to the exclusion of the competition of free traffic therein. Grogan v. Chaffee, 105 Pac. 745, 746, 156 Cal. 611, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395.

A "monopoly," in its original sense, was the exclusive right granted by the state to one or a few persons to do something which was before of common right. As now used and understood, it embraces any combination, the tendency of which is to prevent competition in its broad and general sense and to control prices to the detriment of the public. Pocahontas Coke Co. v. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co., 56 S. E. 264, 269, 60 W. Va. 508, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268, 116 Am. St. Rep. 901, 9 Ann. Cas. 667.

"At one time a 'monopoly' meant a grant from King or state of an exclusive right to manufacture or sell certain things, but now it means 'any combination, the tendency of which is to prevent competition, in its broad and general sense, and to control prices to the detriment of the public.'" Charleston Gas Co. v. Kanawha Gas Co., 50 S. E. 876, 878, 58 W. Va. 22, 112 Am. St. Rep. 936, 6 Ann. Cas. 154 (citing 4 Black. Com. 159).

"The idea of 'monopoly' is not now confined to a grant of privileges. It is understood to include a 'condition produced by the acts of mere individuals.' Its dominant thought now is, to quote another, 'the notion of exclusiveness or unity'; in other words, the suppression of competition by the unification of interest or management, or it may be through agreement and concert of action. And the purpose is so definitely the control of prices that monopoly has been defined to be 'unified tactics with regard to prices.' It is the power to control prices which makes the inducement of combinations and their profit. It is such power that makes it the concern of the law to prohibit or limit them." National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 25 Sup. Ct. 379, 383, 197 U. S. 115, 49 L. Ed. 689.

"A 'monopoly,' as now understood, embraces any combination, the tendency of which is to prevent competition in its broad and general sense and to control prices to the detriment of the public (quoting and adopting definition in 20 Ency. of Law, 846). A 'trust' has been defined as a contract, combination, confederation, or understanding, express or implied, between two or more persons, to control the price of a commodity or service for the benefit of the parties thereto and to the injury of the public, and which tends to create a monopoly. More accurately, perhaps, it is the entity resulting from the contract, etc., just described." A contract whereby plaintiff agrees to sell exclusively to defendant, and defendant to buy exclusively of the plaintiff, certain farm machinery to be sold in a certain territory is not injurious to the public as tending to create a monopoly, or a violation of Civ. Code 1902, § 2845, as lessening full and free competition to an unreasonable extent. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Co. v. Greenwood Hard-

The size of a business alone does not constitute a "monopoly" in restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of section 2 of the anti-trust act (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647); but, to render a combination illegal thereunder it must intentionally and necessarily prevent other persons from engaging in such business, thereby stifling competition. United States v. American Naval Stores Co., 172 Fed. 455, 458.

Personal service and occupation cannot be the subject of a "monopoly," but, unless there is property to be affected with a public interest, there is no basis for the fact or the charge of a monopoly. Labor organizations composed of carpenters, joiners, and other persons doing carpenter work and other labor in constructing buildings, organized to shorten the hours of labor and to increase the compensation therefor, is not a monopoly or unlawful combination in restraint of trade. Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 114 S. W. 997, 1002, 215 Mo. 421, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607, 128 Am. St. Rep. 492.

Combination of several corporations, each selling or leasing machinery intended for different operations, not competing, but supplementing each other, does not ordinarily constitute a "monopoly" in restraint of trade. United States v. Winslow, 195 Fed. 578, 592.

The Texas anti-trust acts of May 25, 1890, and March 31, 1903, prohibiting any corporation becoming a party to any understanding with any other corporation to regulate the price in the state of any article of merchandise, etc., defining a trust as a combination to restrict commerce, fix the price of commodities, lessen competition, etc., and defining a "monopoly" as a combination of two or more corporations, with a view of stifling competition, etc., are not indefinite and uncertain, and are valid. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 106 S. W. 918, 926, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162.

Section 2 of the statute (Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94) defines a monopoly as "a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations, when effected in either of the two following methods: (1) When the direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same control for the purpose of producing * * * a trust, as defined in the first section of this act. (2) Where any corporation acquires the franchises or other rights or the physical properties * * * of any other corporation * * * for the purpose of preventing or lessening * * * competition," etc. Held, that the contract did not constitute a monopoly within the terms of said section 2, as the agreement by the railroad to haul the cars of the sleeping car company did not transfer to the latter any of the former's franchise authorizing it to operate trains over its road. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. State, 87 S. W. 836, 840, 99 Tex. 34, 70 L. R. A. 950.

An agreement by a seller of whisky not to sell any other whisky of the same brand in the places where the buyer was engaged in business until the buyer had disposed of the quantity purchased was not in violation of Acts 1899, p. 246, c. 146, prohibiting agreements to regulate or fix the price of any article, to maintain said price when so fixed, or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, and defining "monopoly" as a "union or combination whereby any of the purposes mentioned in the act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished," and making it unlawful for persons engaged in buying or selling any articles to enter into any pool or agreement to control or limit the trade in such article, or to limit competition by refusing to buy from or sell to any other person for the reason that such other person or corporation is not a member of or a party to such pool or agreement. Norton v. W. H. Thomas & Sons Co., 91 S. W. 780, 781, 99 Tex. 578.

A grocery company and a photographic company agreed that the latter should furnish the former with trading tickets, each entitling its holder to a photo art calendar at the photographic company's studio when countersigned by the grocery company, and the grocery company agreed to pay a certain amount for each ticket three months from date, or as soon as the tickets should be disposed of, if before that time, and to dispose of the tickets as soon as possible, and it was further agreed that from the date of the contract the photographic company should not, without the consent of the grocery company, or until the disposal of the tickets furnished, sell any other local grocery company any of such tickets. Such a contract was not a "monopoly" within the meaning of the act of 1903 (Gen. Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94), prohibiting trusts, monopolies, and conspiracies in restraint of trade. Forrest Photographic Co. v. Hutchinson Grocery Co. (Tex.) 108 S. W. 768, 769.

A contract between a railroad company and an express company, whereby the latter was given exclusive privileges, and the former bound itself not to contract with others to do an express business on the road, and agreed that, in case privileges should be accorded others by legislation or judicial proceedings, the express company in question should have credit for the sums paid by other companies, was violative of Acts 1903, p. 119, c. 94, defining an unlawful trust as a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized by the laws of the state or to prevent or lessen competition in the transportation of merchandise. State v. Missouri K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 91 S. W. 214, 215, 99 Tex. 516, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, 13 Am. Cas. 1072.

Where two corporations supplying the same community with natural gas made an agreement whereby they parceled out between them the territory, giving to each the exclusive right to sell gas in a given boundary, fixing the prices, and prohibiting change of prices except by their mutual consent, binding one company to use for public consumption only gas produced by the other, and prohibiting one from producing from the section of the country in which the other produced gas, the agreement tends to "monopoly" and is void as against public policy. Charleston Gas Co. v. Kanawha Gas Co., 50 S. E. 876, 879, 58 W. Va. 22, 112 Am. St. Rep. 936, Ann. Cas. 154.

A "monopoly" in trade and commerce is created within the anti-trust law (Gen. Laws 1899, p. 487, c. 359; Rev. Laws 1905, § 5168) when, as a result of efforts to that end, previously competing businesses are so concentrated in the hands of a single person or corporation, or a few persons or corporations acting together, that they have power to practically control the prices of a commodity, and thus suppress competition. State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 121 N. W. 395, 398, 107 Minn. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260.

A "monopoly," within the anti-trust law (Rev. St. 1899, c. 143), is created when, as a result of any contract or combination, previously competing businesses are so concentrated into the hands of a single corporation, or of a few individuals or corporations acting in concert, that they have the power to practically control the prices of commodities and suppress competition. The chief question is determining whether a monopoly exists in that prices are raised, and competition destroyed, but whether the power exists in the combine to raise prices and destroy competition at pleasure. State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1045, 211 Mo. 1.

Where neither party to a contract giving an exclusive selling agency in specified territory was a corporation, and there being no evidence of a combination or consolidation, the agreement was not in violation of Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 7797, defining a "monopoly" as a consolidation or combination of two or more corporations. Nickels v. Prewitt Auto Co. (Tex.) 149 S. W. 1094, 1095.

It is the policy of the common law and the purpose of the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), prohibiting combinations whereby a "monopoly" may be created, or competition restrained, to keep free and unfettered the prosecution by individuals of any lawful business, and to protect competition in trade and commerce for the protection of the public. The word "arrangement" in the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), making every "contract, agreement, arrangement or combination" whereby a monopoly may be created, or whereby competition may be restrained, unlawful, has a broader meaning than either the word "contract," "agreement," or "combination," and it may include each and all of these things, and more, and means the disposition of measures for the accomplishment of a purpose, and a structure or combination of things in a particular way for any purpose, and one buying the business of his competitors under an agreement binding them not to engage therein for a specified time within specified territory, for the purpose of creating a monopoly, or whereby competition may be restrained, makes an "arrangement" prohibited by the act. A purchase of a going business accompanied by an agreement by the seller not to engage in the same business for a limited time, and within a prescribed territory, made with no ulterior purpose of establishing a monopoly or preventing competition, is not illegal under the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), prohibiting combinations whereby a monopoly may be created, or competition restrained, but such a purchase for the purpose of creating a monopoly so as to be able to control prices is illegal. A contract whereby the seller of an ice business binds himself not to engage in such business for a specified term within a specified territory restricts the free pursuit in the state of a lawful business, and, if taken by the buyer for the purpose of creating a monopoly within the state, is illegal under the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), prohibiting combinations whereby a monopoly may be created, or competition restrained. The jury in determining whether a corporation engaging in the ice business in the city of New York, which procured contracts from competitors whereby the latter sold their business and bound themselves not to engage therein within a specified time within described territory, procured the contracts for the purpose of creating a monopoly in violation of the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), must consider all the accompanying facts, including the facts that the restrictive agreements included greater territory than that in which the selling competitor had previously done business, and that the corporation procured a great number of such contracts. A corporation becoming the owner of all or substantially all of the stock of existing corporations is not criminally liable for their acts in procuring before its own organization contracts for the purpose of creating a monopoly, but where, after its acquisition of such stock, it makes use of such contracts to maintain an arrangement to create a monopoly and prevent competition, it is liable under the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), prohibiting such combinations. A corporation owning and controlling subordinate corporations, which, under its direction and for its use, bought the business of competitors and procured from them agreements not to engage in similar business for a specified time within described territory, for the purpose of creating a monopoly, is guilty of violating the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346). A contract whereby the seller of an ice business binds himself not to engage therein for a specified time within described territory is permissible only when innocently made without any purpose of creating or maintaining a monopoly, and a contract made with such an illegal purpose is illegal because it may prevent and restrain competition in violation of the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346). Anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), prohibiting every agreement or combination whereby a monopoly may be created, or whereby competition in the supply or price of any article in common use may be restrained, treats a monopoly and restraint of competition as two distinct things, as a monopoly usually restrains competition and usually is the result of a restraint of competition, but a restraint in competition may not extend to the degree of creating a monopoly, and, to vitiate contracts procured by one from his competitors on purchasing their business, it need not be shown that the arrangement results or may result in a total suppression of all competition, or in an absolute monopoly, and all that is essential is that they restrain competition and tend to deprive the public of the advantages of free competition. A corporation engaging in the ice business in the city of New York, which bought the business of competitors and procured from them agreements not to engage in such business for a specified period within described territory, for the purpose of creating or maintaining a monopoly, violated the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), prohibiting combinations whereby a monopoly may be created or competition restrained, though it did not subsequently raise prices. A monopoly condemned by the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), prohibiting combinations whereby a monopoly may be created, or competition restrained, need not be an absolute one, excluding all competition, but a monopoly is created where, as the result of effort to that end, previously competing businesses are so concentrated in the hands of a single person or corporation, or in a few persons or corporations, that they have power to practically control prices of a commodity, and thus suppress competition. A corporation engaging in the ice business in the city of New York, which establishes a monopoly covering a part of the borough of Manhattan, or of one district in the borough, so that the consumers in that portion of the city are deprived of the benefit of free competition, is guilty of creating a monopoly in violation of the anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346). The anti-monopoly act (Consol. Laws, c. 20, §§ 340-346), punishing every person making or attempting to make any contract or combination whereby a monopoly may be created, or competition restrained, makes an attempt to create a monopoly unlawful, and one who attempts to create a monopoly by buying the business of his competitors and procuring from them agreements not to engage in such business for a specified period within described territory, and by doing any act for the consummation thereof, as by keeping such contracts in force and attempting to derive benefit therefrom, is guilty of violating the anti-monopoly act, though it failed of its purpose, and the creation of a monopoly became practically impossible. People v. American Ice Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 443, 447.

Stock Corporations Law N. Y. § 7, as amended, declares that no domestic stock corporation shall combine with any other corporation or person to create a "monopoly" or the unlawful restraint of trade, or to prevent competition in any necessary of life. Held, that the word "monopoly" was not used in its strict sense as requiring a control of all existing means of carrying on a business, or doing a particular thing, and the right to possess, own, or control all means of doing that thing in the future, but was satisfied by an exclusive privilege to carry on a traffic or the possession or assumption of anything to the exclusion of other possessors, and embraces any combination or contract the tendency of which is to prevent competition in its broad and general sense. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945, 956.

Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1890, p. 1073, c. 564, § 40), as amended, permits a stock corporation to purchase stock of another corporation, if authorized in its certificate of incorporation, or if the corporation whose stock is purchased is engaged in a business similar to that of the purchasing corporation. Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1890, p. 1069, c. 564, § 7), as amended, provides that no corporation shall combine with any corporation or person for the creation of a monopoly or the unlawful restraint of trade, or for the prevention of competition in any necessary of life, and Laws 1897, c. 310, c. 383, and Laws 1899, p. 1515, c. 690, were enacted to destroy monopolies and prevent combinations in restraint of competition or the free pursuit of any lawful business. Held, that the consolidation under Laws 1884, p. 448, c. 367, of six companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of gas and electricity into a corporation to continue such business, and the subsequent purchase by such consolidated company of all, or a controlling interest in, the shares of other similar corporations, purchased to prevent competition, did not create a "monopoly" in contravention of said acts. It left the field open to any company that might be organized with the approval of the commission, provided for by Public Service Commission Law (Laws 1907, p. 889, c. 425). Attorney General v. Consolidated Gas Co., New York, 108 N. Y. Supp. 823, 824, 124 App. Div. 401.

In statutes prohibiting contracts or combinations creating monopolies, the word "monopoly" is not used in a strict, legal sense as including the power to legally exclude all others from the field monopolized, since such a "monopoly" cannot be created by a contract or combination, but only by sovereign power; but it is used in a different, but equally well-understood, sense as meaning the obtaining of a substantially complete control of a particular business or article of trade. The acquisition by a corporation of controlling interest in the stock of the corporations owning or controlling and operating all of the street railway lines in the borough of Manhattan and the Bronx in New York City, including the underground, elevated and surface lines, is unlawful, as creating a practical "monopoly" of the means for transportation of passengers in the city, in violation of Stock Corporations Law, § 7 (Laws 1897, p. 313, c. 384). Burrows v. Interborough Metropolitan Co., 156 Fed. 389, 392.

A "monopoly," in the sense forbidden by Const. art. 1, § 28, consists in the ownership or control of so large a part of the market supply of a given commodity as to stifle competition, restrict the freedom of commerce, and give the monopolies control over prices, and hence Act Jan. 26, 1905 (Acts 29th La. c. 7), which granted to a private corporation property owned by the state charged with repair and maintenance for historical and patriotic purposes, subject to future legislation, did not violate the constitutional provision, since it was but the assumption of a burden which deprived no citizen of any privilege or right and brought no financial gain to the corporation. Conley v. Daughte of the Republic of Texas (Tex.) 151 S. W. 87, 883.

To constitute a violation of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, there must be a contract, combination, or conspiracy which in purpose or effect tends to restrain trade or commerce among the states or monopolize some portion thereof. There must be a meeting of the minds of two or more to accomplish some common purpose directly violative of the act, or a purpose which, whether intentionally or not, in effect constitutes a restraint of trade and commerce among the several states. The mere extent of acquisition of business or property achieved by fair and lawful means cannot be the criterion of monopoly within the meaning of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 2; but in addition to acquisition and acquirement there must be an intent by unlawful means to exclude others from the same traffic or business, or from acquiring by the same means property and material things. One of the purposes of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 1, in making illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, is to maintain interstate commerce on the basis of free competition, and any contract, combination, or conspiracy, the purpose or direct effect of which is to restrict such free competition by way of transportation or otherwise, is in restraint of interstate commerce and unlawful. The fact that the several acts by which the purpose of a combination in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states is effected are, taken in isolation, lawful or intrastate in character, and not within the purview of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, does not relieve the combination from illegality; but such acts must be viewed as elements of a whole and in the light of their purpose and effect in combination. United States v. Reading Co., 183 Fed. 427, 456.

The generic character of the prohibitions of Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, and monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part thereof, covers every conceivable act which can possibly come within the spirit or purpose of the condemnation of the law, without regard to the garb in which such acts are clothed. The words "restraint of trade" in Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, condemning combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or the monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part thereof, should be given a meaning which will not destroy the individual right to contract, and render difficult, if not impossible, any movement of trade in the channels of commerce, the free movement of which it was the purpose of the statute to protect. The standard of reason which had theretofore been applied at the common law and in the United States in dealing with subjects of the character embraced by the prohibitions of Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part thereof, was intended to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether, in a given case, a particular act had or had not brought about the wrong against which the statute provided. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 648, 221 U. S. 106, 179-184, 55 L. Ed. 663.

The control by one mining corporation organized under the laws of Michigan of another similar corporation engaged in a competing business in interstate and foreign commerce by acquiring a majority of its stock, or in part by soliciting and obtaining proxies from other stockholders with the purpose and intention of eliminating competition and obtaining a monopoly of trade in their products, either complete or partial, is in violation of the federal Anti-Trust Law (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647), which makes unlawful every "combination in restraint of interstate or foreign trade and commerce," and also of Pub. Acts Mich. 1899, p. 409, No. 255, as supplemented by Pub. Acts Mich. 1905, p. 507, No. 329, prohibiting all combinations entered into for the purpose and with the intent of establishing and maintaining a "monopoly"; nor is such transaction relieved from its invalidity under the latter statute by Pub. Acts Mich. 1905, pp. 153, 154, No. 105, which authorizes mining corporations of the state to purchase and own stock in other similar corporations. Bigelow v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 155 Fed. 869, 874.

A secret arrangement between two corporations, which together produced about 85 per cent. of all the licorice paste consumed in the United States and sold to consumers throughout the country, by which they ceased competition, fixed from time to time the prices at which each should sell, and apportioned the customers between them, and also by concerted action secured contracts with their chief, if not only competitors, which enabled them to control either the output of such competitors or the prices at which and the persons to whom they should sell, constitutes a virtual "monopoly" in the interstate distribution of the substance manufactured. United States v. MacAndrews & Forbes Co., 149 Fed. 823, 834.

The combination of the stocks of the various corporations trading in petroleum and its products in the hands of a holding company, with the intent to exclude others from the trade, and thus centralize in the combination the perpetual control of the movement of these commodities in the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, constitutes a violation of the prohibitions of Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce, or the monopolization or attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 516, 221 U. S. 1, 61, 55 L. Ed. 619, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734.

An indictment against operators of a cotton corner for alleged violation of the Sherman anti-trust law charged that defendants had conspired to monopolize a part of the trade and commerce among the several states by becoming members of and engaging in an unlawful combination in the form of an agreement by which they were severally to purchase cotton to such an extent that, together, they would have enough to enable them to control the price of such cotton, and severally to demand arbitrary, excessive, and monopolistic prices for the same on the sale hereof by them respectively to spinners and manufacturers other than such conspirators. Held that, since no monopoly exists when individuals, each acting for himself, own large quantities of a commodity, the indictment was fatally defective as alleging only a scheme to demand monopolistic prices as the result of individual as distinguished from collective power. United States v. Patten, 187 Fed. 664, 872.

A business device by which a considerable number of competing corporations are welded into a single corporate entity controlling from 90 to 95 per cent. of the commerce of the country in a particular branch required for the economical production of a necessity of mankind, as shoe machinery, is a monopoly, within the federal anti-trust act. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. La Chapelle, 99 N. E. 289, 290, 212 Mass. 467, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 715.

An undue and unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce, forbidden by the act of July 2, 1890, results from the concerted scheme of railway carriers possessing a substantial monopoly of the transportation facilities between the anthracite deposits in Pennsylvania and tide-water distributing points, and also controlling, with the aid of their subsidiary coal-mining and selling companies, nearly three-fourths of the annual supply of anthracite, whereby a large number of the independent coal operators were induced to enter singly into uniform perpetual agreements for the sale to some one of such carriers, or its subsidiary coal company, of the entire output of their several mines and any others they might thereafter acquire, at a fixed percentage of the general average price prevailing at tide-water points at or near New York, which would net the operator slightly more than if he shipped and sold on his own account, the necessary result being to secure to the carriers the control at tide-water markets of the sale of a large part of the independent output. United States v. Reading Co., 33 Sup. Ct. 90, 94, 226 U. S. 324, 57 L. Ed. 243.

MONTE

"Monte" is a game kept by a dealer; that is, the dealer against all the bettors. Chancellor v. State, 107 S. W. 823, 824, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 464.

MONTH

See Calendar Month; Tenant from Month to Month.

A month is a definite period of time, commencing on the 1st day thereof, and ending on the 28th, 29th, 30th, or 31st day. Derby v. Dancey, 86 South. 795, 796, 112 La. 891.

The term "months," when used in a statute, means calendar months, not lunar months, unless there is something in the statute which indicates that a contrary meaning was intended. Simmons v. Hanne, 39 South. 77, 79, 50 Fla. 267, 7 Ann. Cas. 322 (citing Guaranty Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Buddington, 9 South. 246, 27 Fla. 215, 12 L. R. A. 770; Bacon v. State, 22 Fla. 46); Bertwell v. Haines, 63 Pac. 702, 10 Okl. 469.

The word "month," whenever it occurs in the statute of this state, means a "calendar month," unless the contrary be particularly expressed. Kimball v. Lamson, 2 Vt. 138, 141.

Under Rev. St. 1878, § 2183, providing that a tenancy by sufferance may be terminated by the landlord giving "one month's notice" in writing to the tenant, requiring him to remove from the demised premises, a notice is sufficient where giving the proper number of days before the action is brought as contained in the calendar month in which it is given. Minard v. Burtis, 53 N. W. 509, 511, 83 Wis. 267.

The term "month" in a policy of life insurance construed to mean a calendar month. Bohles v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 83 Atl. 904, 905, 83 N. J. Law, 246.

The word "month" in a contract to sell 4,000 tons of asphalt to be delivered on orders not exceeding 400 tons "in any one month" payments to be made on the 10th of each month for asphalt delivered during the preceding month meant calendar month. Fairchild-Gilmore-Wilton Co. v. Southern Refining Co., 110 Pac. 951, 953, 158 Cal. 264.

When an act is required by statute to be performed within a certain number of months after a certain date, the word "months" will be construed to mean calendar months, whether of 28, 29, 30, or 31 days, and proceedings in error commenced on the corresponding day of the fourth month after the rendition of the judgment comply with the statute in this regard. Oehler v. Walsh, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 446, 447.

The term "months," in a constitutional provision providing that a vacancy in an office of any judge holding office by election shall be filled by appointment, the appointee to hold his office until the next general election for any state officer, held at least six months after the vacancy occurs, means calendar months. Foster v. State ex rel. Stanford, 43 South. 179, 180, 149 Ala. 632.

Under Laws 1892, p. 1490, c. 677, § 26, relating to the computation of "months," and negating any right to include in such computation a day beyond the day in the last month so counted, having the same numerical order in the days of the month as the day from which the computation is made, and section 27 providing that a Sunday or public holiday must be excluded from the reckoning if it is the last day of any such period, when a life insurance policy provides that no action can be maintained thereon after six months from the death of the insured, and such period expires on Sunday, an action commenced on the following Monday is barred by the express terms of the policy. Ryer v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 77 N. E. 727, 185 N. Y. 6.

MONTHLY PAYMENTS

See In Monthly Payments as Due.

MONTHLY SETTLEMENT

By a contract for services of plaintiff for five years in selling defendant's beer to certain customers, defendant agreed, on condition that such sales should not be less than 30,000 barrels per annum, to pay plaintiff 12½ cents per barrel so sold yearly during the term of the agreement, monthly settlements to be made. Held, that the words "monthly settlements" could not be construed to mean "monthly payments," thereby qualifying the provisions by which the promise to pay was conditioned on sales of a specified amount per annum, and payments were to be made yearly, and that nothing would become due until the expiration of a year, or at least until 30,000 barrels should have been sold. Gminder v. Zeltner Brewing Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 215, 217, 126 App. Div. 776.

MONUMENT

See Suitable Monument.

Dutiable as dressed granite, see Dressed Granite.

A testator, who sets apart a specified sum from his estate for funeral expenses and proper interment of his remains and a suitable monument to his memory, and requests that his remains be buried on a designated ranch, does not authorize the executors to use a part of the fund for the erection of a free library as a memorial; the word "monument" being used in its natural sense as meaning a shaft or any structure placed over a tomb or at a grave, and not in its applied sense as meaning a reminder taking any form. In its applied sense, a monument, being a reminder, may take any form. Napoleon's battles are monuments to his memory. Horace by his poetry "built himself a monument more enduring than brass"; and Sir Christopher Wren in his oft-quoted epitaph, "Si Monumentum Requirit Circumspice," declares St. Paul's cathedral his monument. Fancher v. Fancher, 103 Pac. 206, 207, 156 Cal. 13, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944, 19 Ann. Cas. 1157.

Act April 3, 1903 (P. L. 136), amending Act May 22, 1895, authorizing the erection of soldiers' monuments, and reciting the title of such amended act in its own title, is a sufficient notice of a provision in the amended act allowing county commissioners in counties having a population of over 500,000 and less than 1,000,000 to erect a building in memory of the soldiers and sailors in the War of the Rebellion from such counties; a memorial hall being in the nature of a "monument." Yoho v. Allegheny County, 67 Atl. 648, 649, 218 Pa. 401.

MONUMENTS (In Boundaries)

See Natural Monument; Permanent Monument.

"Monuments" are permanent landmarks established for the purpose of indicating boundaries. Thompson v. Hill, 73 S. E. 640, 643, 187 Ga. 808.

Permanent objects, such as streams, or rivers, and the shore of a lake, or highways, or other lands, or buildings, or stakes, when referred to in the description of property conveyed, are known as "monuments." Temple v. Benson, 100 N. E. 63, 218 Mass. 128.

A deed describing land as running along an unnavigable stream, or referring to it as the boundary, makes it a "monument." Drake v. Russian River Land Co., 103 Pac. 167, 170, 10 Cal. App. 654.

In the description in a deed of land, commencing 26 feet west of the southeast corner of a certain lot, "being the southwest corner of the portion of said lot, formerly owned by B., where she now resides," and running thence north 26 feet, thence west 26 feet, or to and intersecting "the northeast corner of a lot formerly owned by M.," and running thence south to Seventh street, and thence to place of beginning, said southwest corner of land owned by B., and said northeast corner of land owned by M., are not real "monuments," which are fixed and visible objects, within the rule that real monuments called for in the description of a deed are ordinarily given precedence over distances called for; it not appearing that such corners are any more established than are the disputed lines of description in the deed. Koch v. Gordon, 133 S. W. 609, 610, 231 Mo. 645.

The engineer making an original survey of a tract into lots, blocks, and streets set stakes on the ground to indicate boundaries of lots. He made a resurvey from his original notes, and discovered a discrepancy between the stakes and the field notes. In placing the stakes originally, he intended to place them in accordance with the notes and plat. One of the earliest purchasers found the stakes, and relied thereon. Others accepted the stakes as marking the boundaries. An abutting street was improved with paving, gutters, curb, and parking in accordance with the boundaries of the lots established by the stakes. Held, that the stakes constituted monuments on the ground controlling the field notes, and established the boundaries between property owners and were controlling on the city. Tomlinson v. Golden (Iowa) 138 N. W. 448, 450.

MOORMOORAGE

Wharfage synonymous, see Wharfage.

MOOT CASE

A "moot case" is one which seeks to get a judgment on a pretended controversy, when in reality there is none, or a decision in advance about a right before it has been actually asserted and contested, or a judgment upon some matter which, when rendered, for any reason, cannot have any practical legal effect upon a then existing controversy. Ex parte Steele, 162 Fed. 694, 702.

The fact that a suit may be a friendly one would not of necessity render it a "moot case," which is defined as one which seeks to determine an abstract question which does not rest upon existing facts or rights. State v. First Catholic Church of Lincoln, 128 N. W. 657, 658, 88 Neb. 2.

"A 'moot case' is one which seeks to determine an abstract question which does not rest upon existing facts or rights." "It is universally understood by the bench and bar . . . that a moot case is one which seeks to get a judgment on a pretended controversy when in reality there is none, or a decision in advance about a right before it has been actually asserted and contested, or a judgment upon some matter which, when rendered, for any reason cannot have any practical legal effect upon a then existing controversy." Where a request is made of a public officer to perform an act under a statute, and he, although believing that the law requires its performance, refuses because of a doubt on the subject and because he wishes the question to be quickly and finally settled by the decision of a court, a proceeding brought by the state to compel such action on his part is not fictitious. State v. Dolley, 108 Pac. 846, 847, 82 Kan. 533 (quoting Adams v. Union Railroad Co., 42 Atl. 517, 21 R. I. 140, 44 L. R. A. 273; Ex parte Steele, 162 Fed. 694, 701).

MORAL

See Contrary to Good Morals.

MORAL CERTAINTY

See To a Moral Certainty.

"Moral certainty" is that degree of proof which the law requires of moral evidence. Moral certainty is described as a state of impression produced by facts in which a reasonable mind feels a sort of coercion or necessity to act in accordance with it. It is also declared to be a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. People v. Lew Fook, 75 Pac. 188, 141 Cal. 548.

"Moral certainty" is a probability sufficiently certain to justify action upon it. "Reasonable and moral certainty" may be said to be that degree of probability which exists with such strength as to justify a man action upon it. Austin v. State, 64 S. 670, 6 Ga. App. 211.

Where a fact established by evidence is the only one that can reasonably exist under the circumstances, the truth is established by a "moral certainty," which is the highest degree of certainty obtainable in human affairs. Evidentiary circumstances relied upon and essential to establish any necessary element in a criminal prosecution must, in order to be efficient, be shown to exist to the satisfaction of the jury with the same degree of certainty as the ultimate object of inquiry is required to be to warrant a finding in the affirmative. Schwantes v. State, 106 N. W. 237, 244, 127 Wis. 180.

A "mathematical demonstration" is wholly different from a "moral certainty." Evidence of demonstration relates to necessary truths, truths as to which the supposition of the contrary involves, not merely what is not and cannot be true, but what is also absurd, whereas moral evidence is the basis of contingent truth. It follows obviously that the convictions which these distinct and dissimilar classes of evidence are capable of producing are necessarily of very different natures. In the one absolute certitude is the result, to which moral certainty, the highest degree of assurance of which truths of the latter class admit, is necessarily inferior. Wills, Cir. Ev. 5. Moral certainty is the full and complete assurance which admits of no degrees, and induces a sound mind to act without doubt upon the conclusions to which it naturally and reasonably leads. 2 Stevenson's Elements, c. 2, § 4. It is apparent, therefore, that the precision attainable in the one class is of a nature of which the other does not admit. Bowman v. Little, 61 Atl. 1084, 108 101 Md. 273.

The term "moral certainty," as applied to the evidence in a criminal case, has the same meaning as "reasonable doubt." State v. Martin, 74 Pac. 725, 728, 29 Mont. 277; State v. Wappenstein, 121 Pac. 989, 998, 6 Wash. 502; Stewart v. State, 115 S. W. 377, 375, 88 Ark. 602 (citing Commonwealth v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1; Jones v. State, 1 South. 772, 100 Ala. 88; Woodruff v. State, 12 South. 653, 31 Fla. 320; Carlton v. People, 37 N. E. 244, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. S. Rep. 346); Norman v. State, 74 S. E. 428, 1 Ga. App. 802. See, also, People v. Buettner, 84 N. E. 218, 220, 233 Ill. 272, 13 Ann. Cas. 235.

"Reasonable doubt" and "moral certainty" may be used interchangeably. The writers of legal dictionaries define "moral certainty" to mean that degree of certainty which will justify a jury in grounding upon it their verdict. Bouvier defines the term to mean: "Certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt." Black's Law Dictionary defines the term as follows: "In the law of criminal evidence that degree of assurance which induces a man of sound mind to act without doubt upon the conclusion to which it leads. Hendrix v. United States, 101 Pac. 125, 129, 2 Okl. Cr. 240.

To say that proof of the fact must be made reasonably certain is, by literal import of the words, tantamount to saying that the proof must be made beyond a reasonable doubt. This has been expressly held as to the phrase "moral certainty," which is equivalent to the words "reasonable certainty." A charge that if a passenger's sickness was not the result of her being put off the train, and that it was "reasonably certain" to have resulted from other causes, the carrier is not liable is erroneous as requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt. St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Burns, 9 S. W. 467, 468, 71 Tex. 479, 481.

Refusal to give an instruction in a murder trial that the presumption of innocence "must be overcome by competent evidence which convinces you of his guilt to a moral certainty" is not error where an instruction is given that "moral certainty, only, is required, or that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind." State v. Megorden, 88 Pac. 306, 310, 49 Or. 259, 14 Ann. Cas. 130.

An instruction to the jury that they must be satisfied to a "moral and reasonable certainty" is the same in effect as saying that they must be satisfied "beyond a reasonable doubt." Warren v. Gay, 51 S. E. 302, 303, 123 Ga. 243 (quoting and adopting definition in Dwight v. Jones, 42 S. E. 48, 115 Ga. 744).

MORAL CHARACTER

MORAL DUTY

The term "performance of a moral duty," as applied to a meritorious consideration for a contract, is confined to three duties, of charity, of payment of creditors, and of maintaining a wife and children, and under the last head are included provisions made for persons, not being children of the party promising, but in relation to whom he has manifested an intention to stand in loco parentis in reference to the parental duty of making provision for a child. Where the only consideration for a deed by a father to his daughter was love and affection, the daughter could not enforce a provision in the deed that the grantor would pay an incumbrance on the property at maturity. Fischer v. Union Trust Co., 101 N. W. 852, 853, 138 Mich. 612, 68 L. R. A. 367, 110 Am.

St. Rep. 329 (quoting and adopting definition in Adams, Eq. [8th Ed.] 96).

MORAL HAZARD

"Moral hazard," in insurance, is but another name for a pecuniary interest in the insured to permit the property to burn." Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Michael, 74 N. E. 964, 972, 167 Ind. 659, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 708 (quoting definition in Columbian Ins. Co. of Alexandria v. Lawrence, 2 Pet. [27 U. S.] 25, 49, 7 L. Ed. 335); Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Manning, 160 Fed. 382, 385, 87 C. C. A. 334, 15 Ann. Cas. 338; Johnson v. Sun Fire Ins. Co., 60 S. E. 118, 119, 3 Ga. App. 430 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 1831 et seq.).

The term "moral hazard," as used in the law of fire insurance, means the possibility of loss by fires of incendiary origin. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorroh (Tex.) 133 S. W. 465, 468.

MORAL INSANITY

"Moral insanity" or "medical insanity" is a perversion of the sentiment and affections. Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 412, 87 Ark. 243.

MORAL MARRIAGE

"Moral marriage" was a term applied to a relation between slaves who, although they had no power to make the marriage contract, yet came together and agreed to live as man and wife. The essence of such an agreement was that it be bona fide, and that the parties act in accordance with it. Watson v. Ellerbe, 57 S. E. 855, 856, 77 S. C. 232.

MORAL OBLIGATION

"Moral obligations" are those arising from the admonitions of conscience, and accountability to the Supreme Being. No human law-giver can impair them. They are entirely foreign from the purposes of the Constitution." Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 318, 6 L. Ed. 606 (Trimble, J., dissenting).

"Moral obligation" is defined to be an obligation "which cannot be enforced by action but which is binding on the party who incurred it in conscience and according to natural justice." It is again defined as "a duty which would be enforceable by law were it not for some positive rule which, with a view to general benefit, exempts the party in that particular instance from legal liability. It is held that such 'moral obligation' will sustain an express promise to pay." Rathfon v. Locher, 64 Atl. 790, 791, 215 Pa. 571 (quoting and adopting definitions from Bailey v. City of Philadelphia, 31 Atl. 925, 167 Pa. 569, 46 Am. St. Rep. 691).

A debt which a person "morally owes" is one which he owes in equity and good conscience, lawfully owes, but which he cannot be personally adjudged to pay. MacDonald

v. Tefft-Weller Co., 128 Fed. 381, 385, 63 O. C. A. 123, 65 L. R. A. 106.

A "moral obligation" on the part of the state must have something more substantial than legislation obnoxious to the fundamental law to rest upon; something more for a foundation or starting point than a statute which is itself immoral. A moral obligation can never be deemed to rest upon the people of the state to discharge a contract made by the Legislature in direct violation of the Constitution. Minnesota Sugar Co. v. Iverson, 91 Minn. 30, 97 N. W. 454, 457 (citing Adsit v. Osmun, 48 N. W. 31, 84 Mich. 420, 11 L. R. A. 534).

Political obligations distinguished

"Moral obligations" are universal and immutable, but 'political obligations' must frequently vary according to political circumstances." Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet. 242, 263, 7 L. Ed. 666 (Johnson, J., dissenting).

MORAL TURPITUDE

"Everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals is said to be done with 'turpitude.'" Thus where an attorney, acting as a notary public, falsely certified, to affidavits to be used in the prosecution of pension claims, that the affiants personally appeared before him and were sworn and acknowledged the execution thereof, and he was convicted in a federal court, under Rev. St. U. S. § 4746, imposing a fine for such an offense not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, he was convicted of an offense involving "moral turpitude," justifying his disbarment, under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4775. In re Hopkins, 103 Pac. 805, 806, 54 Wash. 569 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

"Turpitude," in its ordinary sense involves the idea of inherent baseness or villainess, shameful wickedness; depravity. In its legal sense, it includes everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals. The word "moral," which so often precedes the word "turpitude," does not seem to add anything to the meaning of the term, other than that emphasis which often results from tautological expression, within the divorce statute. Holloway v. Holloway, 55 S. E. 191, 126 Ga. 459, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272, 115 Am. St. Rep. 102, 7 Ann. Cas. 1164 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4580; Webst. Dict.; Black, Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.).

Proof of a prior conviction of assault and battery was inadmissible to affect a witness' credibility, under the rule permitting evidence of prior convictions of offenses involving "moral turpitude," as such term signifies an inherent quality of baseness, villainess, and depravity not inherent in assault and battery. Gillman v. State, 51 South. 722, 723, 165 Ala. 135.

Carrying a concealed weapon is not offense involving "moral turpitude," and offender's conviction is not ground for his portation. Ex parte Saraceno, 182 Fed. 957.

The keeper of a disorderly house with Pen. Code 1911, art. 496, defining a disorderly house as any assignation house, or theater house where liquors are kept for sale and women of bad reputation are permitted, guilty of an offense involving "moral turpitude," and a witness for accused is properly cross-examined as to whether he is under indictment for keeping a disorderly house. Bird v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 738, 739 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4580).

The illegal sale of intoxicating liquors is not a crime involving moral turpitude with Kirby's Dig. § 5247, authorizing the revocation of a physician's license on his conviction of crime involving moral turpitude, the word "moral turpitude" implying something more than moral, regardless of the fact that it is punishable by law, and offenses against the liquor laws, such as illegal sales of liquor, are statutory crimes, and merely mala prohibita. Fort v. City of Brinkley, 112 S. W. 1084, 1087 Ark. 400.

Proof of a conviction of an illegal sale of intoxicating liquors is not admissible to impeach a witness' credibility; the crime not showing "moral turpitude," which signifies inherent quality of baseness, villainess, or depravity. Swope v. State, 58 South. 809, 811 Ala. App. 83.

"Moral turpitude" is an act of baseness, villainess, or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellow man or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. Though the point at which an act begins to take on the color of turpitude is not very definitely marked, the commission of the crime of larceny, whether grand or petit, undoubtedly involves "moral turpitude," as that term is commonly used. In re Henry, 99 Pac. 1054, 1055, Idaho, 755, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207.

Fighting not being an offense involving "moral turpitude," the state may not, in cross-examination of defendant, show that he had paid several fines for fighting before the charge of assault for which he was being tried. Pollok v. State (Tex.) 101 S. W. 232.

More necessary public use

Under a Code provision allowing property already taken for public use to be taken for a "more necessary public use" than that to which it has been already appropriated, the land of a private person, subject to easement for a public highway, may be taken by a water company for a dam and reservoir.

Marin County Water Co. v. Marin County, 79 Pac. 282, 283, 145 Cal. 586.

More particularly

"Particularly" is defined as "in a particular manner; expressly with a specific reference or interest; in particular; distinctly." The term "more particularly described," as used in a contract to convey a farm "consisting of two hundred (200) acres, more or less, * * * more particularly described," in a deed specified, means exactly described. Sweet v. Marsh, 117 N. Y. Supp. 980, 984, 138 App. Div. 315.

More testimony

An instruction was correct which, construed as a whole, told the jury that, after rejecting the testimony of witnesses discredited by them, their verdict should be for claimant, if there was "more testimony" (that is, a preponderance of testimony) tending to establish the validity of her claim, and if there was not, their verdict should be for the estate. Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 101 N. W. 832, 835, 188 Mich. 658.

More than one

An allegation, in a pleading contesting the validity of an election in a school district authorizing the issuance of bonds, that "more than one" person voted in favor of the bonds who was not a taxpayer of the district is tantamount to an allegation that two votes were cast by persons who were not taxpayers of the district. Hicks v. Krigbaum, 108 Pac. 482, 486, 13 Ariz. 237.

More than ten years

Where defendant pleaded that he had been in peaceable possession of all the property described in plaintiff's petition, using and exercising ownership over same for "more than ten years next preceding the filing of said suit," the phrase quoted indicates that it was not the intention of the pleader to limit the time of possession to the ten years immediately preceding the filing of the suit. Campbell Real Estate Co. v. Wiley (Tex.) 83 S. W. 251, 252 (citing Hennessy v. Savings & Loan Co., 55 S. W. 124, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 591).

MORE OR LESS

The phrase "more or less" following a numeral conveys the meaning of an estimate of probable distance or amount. The idea of nearness is suggested but that of fixedness is excluded, and, where the question at issue in the controversy is one of distance, it is a question of fact for the jury to determine as to what is a reasonable limit in connection with the subject-matter and surrounding facts and circumstances of the particular case. Geiger v. Kaestner, 148 Ill. App. 529, 532; Santa Paula Commercial Co. v. Parkhurst-Davis Mercantile Co., 120 Pac. 347, 348, 86 Kan. 328.

MORE OR LESS (Personalty)

In a contract for sale of goods, the qualifying words "more or less" merely provide against slight and accidental variations in number, measure or weight. Hills v. Edmund Peycke Co., 110 Pac. 1088, 1089, 14 Cal. App. 32.

The phrase "more or less," as used in a contract for the manufacture and sale of glass, where the quantity is stated at 200,000 square feet "more or less," means only such immaterial variations in quantity as would occur naturally in connection with such a contract. Hadley-Dean Plate Glass Co. v. Highland Glass Co., 143 Fed. 242, 243, 74 C. C. A. 462.

The words "more or less," in a contract for the sale of a designated number of staves "more or less," all being branded, etc., are merely precautionary so as to cover slight and unimportant inaccuracies and do not enlarge the descriptive words or quantity. Little Rock Cooperage Co. v. Gunnels, 101 S. W. 729, 730, 82 Ark. 286, 12 Ann. Cas. 293.

The terms "about" and "more or less," as used in a contract of sale of "about" 250 tons of grapes "more or less," do not create such an ambiguity in the contract as to let in extrinsic evidence of previous or contemporaneous conversations to show intent. Peterson v. Chaix, 90 Pac. 948, 951, 5 Cal. App. 525.

Quantity identified by independent circumstances, or determined by option of buyer

Where a contract is made to sell or furnish certain goods identified by reference to independent circumstances, such as an entire lot deposited in a certain warehouse, or all that may be manufactured by the vendor in a certain establishment, or that may be shipped by his agent or correspondent in certain vessels, and the quantity is named with the qualification of "about," or "more or less," or words of like import, the contract applied to the specific lot; and the naming of the quantity is not regarded as in the nature of a warranty, but only as an estimate of the probable amount, in reference to which good faith is all that is required of the party making it. In such cases the governing rule is somewhat analogous to that which is applied in the description of land, where natural boundaries and monuments control courses and distances and estimates of quantity. A contract for the sale of cotton linters stipulated that the seller confirmed the sale to the buyer of the "season's output of linters * * * estimated at 200 to 250" bales. Held, that the contract was for the sale of the output, regardless of the number of bales, especially in view of the evidence that the buyer was buying linters generally, and wanted all he could get, and the buyer was required to take the output consisting of 86 bales in excess of the maximum estimate.

Loeb v. Winnsboro Cotton Oil Co. (Tex.) 93 S. W. 515, 516 (quoting and adopting Brawley, to Use of Myrick, v. United States, 96 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 622).

MORE OR LESS (Realty)

The words "more or less" ordinarily mean "about," when used in a deed. Carling v. Wilson (Ala.) 58 South. 417, 418.

Where land sold was described by metes and bounds, the words "containing by estimate" a certain number of acres were equivalent to the words "more or less." Mayer & Schmidt v. Wooten, 102 S. W. 423, 427, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 327.

"In common-law conveyances the words 'more or less,' while sometimes having practically no effect, are frequently added to prevent the precise quantity named from being conclusive on the parties, and may operate to make a sale of land one in gross instead of by the acre." Ainsa v. United States, 161 U. S. 208, 228, 16 Sup. Ct. 544, 40 L. Ed. 673.

When the description of the quantity of land conveyed by the deed concludes with the words "more or less," the purchaser is not entitled to any reduction on account of a deficiency unless it is very gross. Keenan v. Bird, 14 N. Y. Supp. 457, 60 Hun, 175, 177; Cunningham v. Millner, 82 Va. 526, 527.

Where an agreement for the conveyance of land describes it as 32 acres more or less, and which does not describe the land by metes and bounds, or by any fixed ascertainable monuments, the words "more or less" do not weaken or destroy the statement of the quantity. Brooks v. Halane, 116 Ill. App. 383, 388.

The qualification "more or less," specified in a conveyance of land, will cover any deficiency not so gross as to justify a suspicion of willful deception or mistake amounting to fraud. In the latter event the purchaser may have either a rescission of the sale or an apportionment of the price according to the relative value. The use of the words confers no additional right upon the seller. Kendall v. Wells, 55 S. E. 41, 42, 126 Ga. 343 (quoting and adopting definition in Civ. Code 1895, § 3542, and citing 4 Kent, Comm. [14th Ed.] 467; 1 Jones, Real Prop. §§ 398, 399, 400; Rawle, Cov. [5th Ed.] § 297; 3 Washb. Real Prop. [6th Ed.] § 2322; 1 Warv. Vendors, § 381; Collinsville Granite Co. v. Phillips, 51 S. E. 666, 123 Ga. 842; Jackson ex dem. Suffern v. McConnell [N. Y.] 19 Wend. 175, 32 Am. Dec. 439; Powell v. Clark, 5 Mass. 355, 4 Am. Dec. 67; Wright v. Wright, 34 Ala. 194; Seegar v. Smith, 3 S. E. 613, 614, 78 Ga. 616, 618; Beall v. Berkhalter, 26 Ga. 567; Estes v. Odom, 18 S. E. 355, 91 Ga. 600; Perkins Mfg. Co. v. Williams, 25 S. E. 556, 98 Ga. 388; Seymore v. Rice, 21 S. E. 293, 94 Ga. 184; Harrison v. Talbot, 2 Dana [32 Ky.] 258; Noble v. Googins, 99 Mass. 231; Gauldin v. Shehee, 20

The words "more or less," as used in a deed stating that the land conveyed contained a specified number of acres more or less, are not construed to mean "as estimated," "as supposed," but are construed to mean about the specified number of acres, and are designed to cover only such small errors of surveying as usually occur in surveys. Whitton v. McGraw, 54 S. E. 506, 508, 60 W. Va. 98.

The term "more or less," when appended to the expressed area of land stated in a deed, constitutes a recognition of the fact that measurements of land are apt to differ, and that men of intelligence and experience who are familiar with the premises, may not agree in their estimates; and one who purchases land in bulk or as containing an estimated number of acres can ordinarily obtain no relief on account of any shortage, which subsequent accurate measurement may disclose, but the introduction of the word "more or less" does not afford a shield against liability for false representations, and the mere fact that the deficiency is very large in proportion to the supposed quantity is often treated as in itself evidence of fraud or of mutual mistake, and in such case the purchaser is entitled to relief by rescission or by an abatement of the price, or, where he has paid the price, an action at law for damages. Boddy v. Henry, 101 N. W. 441, 452, 126 Iowa, 31 (citing Paine v. Upton, 8 N. Y. 327, 41 Am. Rep. 371; Lewis v. Hoelck, 78 [Tex.] 76 S. W. 309; Couse v. Boyles, N. J. Eq. 212, 88 Am. Dec. 514; Harrell v. Hill, 19 Ark. 102, 68 Am. Dec. 202; Triplett v. Alden, 26 Grat. [67 Va.] 721, 21 Am. Rep. 320; Hoback v. Kilgore, 26 Grat. [67 Va.] 442, 21 Am. Rep. 317; Camp v. Norfleet's Adm'r, 5 S. E. 374, 83 Va. 380; Flske v. Fleming's Syndic, 15 La. 202; Estes v. Odom, 18 S. E. 355, 91 Ga. 600; Anthony v. Oldacre, 4 Call [8 Va.] 489; Cravens v. Kiser, 4 Ind. 512; Blessing's Adm'r v. Beatty, 1 Rob. [4 Va.] 287; Crislip v. Cain, 19 W. Va. 438; Wilson v. Randall, 67 N. Y. 338; McCandless v. Young, 96 Pa. 289; Baltimore Permanent Building & Land Soc. v. Smith, 54 Md. 187, 39 Am. Rep. 374; Hosleton v. Dickinson, N. W. 560, 51 Iowa, 244).

The language "more or less," used in contracts for the sale of land, must be understood to apply only to small excesses or deficiencies attributable to variance of instruments of surveyors, etc., and these terms are used to rather replace the idea of a contract of hazard, and implies that there is no considerable difference in the quantity. Berry's Ex'r v. Fishburne, 51 S. E. 827, 104 Va. 459.

The return of appraisers setting aside a year's support to a widow described the property set aside as "450 acres of land, more or less, including homestead." Held, that the words "more or less" indicate that no precise number of acres was intended, but that the statement of the quantity was given as descriptive of the land assigned. Hancock v. King, 66 S. E. 949, 950, 133 Ga. 734.

The words "more or less," used in describing land, are ordinarily intended and understood not to admit of infinite variation, but to restrain the representation to a reasonable or usual allowance for small errors in surveys; and a description of land, in a bill to quiet title thereto, as beginning at a point on the south line of S. avenue, 60 feet, more or less, eastwardly from the southeast corner of S. avenue and B. avenue, said point being at the intersection of said south line of S. avenue, and the north and south fence separating the lot described from the lot at the southeast corner of said two avenues supposed to belong to B., 60 feet more or less, to the southeast corner of said B. lot, thence northwardly along the fence separating the lot described from the B. lot and parallel, or nearly so, with B. avenue, 202 feet, more or less, to the place of beginning, being sufficiently definite that, if the action had been ejectment, a surveyor would have been able, in case of recovery, to locate the exact limits, and the sheriff to execute a writ of possession, was sufficient. Touart v. Jett Bros. Contracting Co., 53 South. 751, 753, 169 Ala. 638.

A grantor, whose land was bounded on the east by lands of S., conveyed a part to C., and then conveyed land lying between that conveyed to C. and that owned by S., describing it as "beginning at a point * * * adjoining the land of C., thence running easterly * * * 58 feet to the land of S., * * * all distances above mentioned to be more or less." Held, that the conveyance covered all of the land owned by the grantor lying between the lands of S. and C., whether "more or less" than 58 feet wide. Holden v. Crolley, 138 N. Y. Supp. 23, 25, 153 App. Div. 254.

Mistake or fraud

Where through innocent mistake a grantor represented that a tract, described by metes and bounds, containing but 69.71 acres contained 82 acres more or less, the grantee, purchasing by the acre and paying the price in ignorance of the deficiency, could sue in equity for the deficiency in the acreage; the words "more or less" not including a considerable variance, and the mistake being sufficient to induce the court to believe that if the truth had been known the purchase would not have been made. Straus v. Norris, 79 Atl. 611, 612. 78 N. J. Eq. 488.

Reasonable excess or deficiency covered

The words "more or less" in a deed relieve only from the necessity for exactness, and not from gross deficiency. Boggs v. Bush, 122 S. W. 220, 222, 137 Ky. 95.

The words "more or less" in a conveyance ordinarily mean that the grantor does not warrant the precise quantity of land named therein, but import that the actual quantity is a near approximate to that mentioned, so that, if there is no more than a reasonable deficit in the quantity, such as a shortage arising from a part thereof taken for street, there is no breach of the covenant in the conveyance. Kitzman v. Carl, 110 N. W. 587, 133 Iowa, 340, 12 Ann. Cas. 296.

Risk as to quantity indicated

The general rule is that, where it appears in a deed conveying land by the qualifying words "more or less" that the statement of the number of acres in the deed is a mere matter of description and not of the essence of the contract, the purchaser, in the absence of fraud, takes the risk as to the quantity of acres conveyed to him. Adams v. Betz, 78 N. E. 649, 651, 167 Ind. 161; Newman v. Kay, 49 S. E. 926, 932, 57 W. Va. 98, 68 L. R. A. 908, 4 Ann. Cas. 39 (citing 4 Kent, Comm. 467; Noble v. Googins, 99 Mass. 231; Flagg v. Mason, 6 N. E. 702, 141 Mass. 64; Libby v. Dickey, 27 Atl. 253, 85 Me. 362; Frenche v. Chancellor of State of New Jersey, 27 Atl. 140, 51 N. J. Eq. 624, 40 Am. St. Rep. 548; Borkenhagen v. Vian den, 52 N. W. 260, 82 Wis. 206; Estes v. Odom, 18 S. E. 355, 91 Ga. 600; Kendall v. Wells, 55 S. E. 41, 44, 126 Ga. 343 (citing Jones, Real Prop. §§ 398, 399, 400; Rawle, Cov. [5th Ed.] § 297; 3 Washb. Real Prop. [6th Ed.] § 2322; Collinsville Granite Co. v. Phillips, 51 S. E. 666, 123 Ga. 842; Jackson v. McConnell [N. Y.] 19 Wend. 175, 32 Am. Dec. 439; Powell v. Clarke, 5 Mass. 355, 4 Am. Dec. 67; Wright v. Wright, 34 Ala. 194; Cohen v. Numsen, 65 Atl. 432, 433, 104 Md. 676; Yates v. Buttrell (Tex.) 132 S. W. 831, 832.

Sale in gross or by acre indicated

The description of land conveyed as containing so many acres, "more or less," constitutes a sale by the acre, unless it plainly appears from the whole deed that a sale in gross was intended. Pack v. Whitaker, 65 S. E. 496, 498, 110 Va. 122.

A description in a deed of land as 15 acres, "more or less," off the southwest corner of a quarter section, signified a sale in gross of 15 acres, and was not uncertain because of the words quoted. W. C. Early & Co. v. Long, 42 South. 348, 89 Miss. 285.

Where defendant rented a tract of land of plaintiff, and executed a rent note, promising to pay plaintiff $160 for rent of 40 acres of land at $4 per acre, more or less, etc., it was held that the words "more or less" referred to the quantity of land, and that the instrument should be construed to evidence a contract for renting by the acre, and not for a gross sum for the entire tract. Ayers v. Heustess, 127 S. W. 957, 94 Ark. 493.

Immaterial deviation—2 in 200 acres

On an exchange of land, a deficiency of about two acres in a farm of "200 acres, more or less," is insufficient to raise a presumption that it would have prevented the exchange, if known. Webber v. Harter, 134 N. W. 947, 950, 154 Iowa, 317.

Material deviation—8 in 200 acres

Where a contract for the exchange of a stock of goods for a farm described it as containing 200 acres "more or less according to the government survey," such quoted words contemplated only such differences as were due to errors incident to measurements by different surveyors and the variance in the instruments used, and did not cover a discrepancy of 8.58; such discrepancy being sufficient to justify an allowance of damages. Fisher v. Trumbauer & Smith (Iowa) 138 N. W. 528, 530.

Same—30 in 80 acres

The term "more or less," in a deed describing the land as 80 acres more or less, does not cover a shortage of 30 acres, and the grantee going into possession and improving the land before discovering the fraud of the grantor, who knew that the land described was 50 acres, may elect to retain the land the grantor conveyed and demand an abatement of the price for so much as the quantity falls short of the amount represented. McGhee v. Bell, 70 S. W. 493, 496, 170 Mo. 121, 69 L. R. A. 761.

MORGUE

As used in Rev. St. 1906, § 3586a, making it unlawful to establish a morgue on any street on which there are dwelling houses, unless the owners or occupants of such dwelling houses within 200 yards thereof give their written consent, the word "morgue" must be given its usual meaning, which is a place or deadhouse where the bodies of persons found dead are exposed for identification, or that they may be claimed by their friends. Koebler v. Pennewell, 79 N. E. 471, 473, 75 Ohio St. 278 (citing Black, Law Dict.; Rap. & L. Law Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Stand. Dict.; Webst. Dict.; Thesaurus, Dict.; Enc. Dict.).

MORTAL INJURY

The words "mortal injuries," as used in an indictment for murder alleging that defendant inflicted certain mortal injuries, must be taken as the equivalent of "serious bodily injuries," as used in Cr. Code, § 215, providing that an aggravated assault is committed when a serious bodily injury is inflicted upon the person assaulted, and such indictment justifies a conviction for an aggravated assault. Mapula v. Territory, Pac. 389, 391, 9 Ariz. 199.

MORTAR

"Mortar" is a mixture of lime in part with sand. It may be divided into two principal classes: Hydraulic mortar, which is made of hydraulic lime, and common mortar, made of common lime. Donaldson v. Roksament Stone Co., 170 Fed. 192, 193.

MORTGAGE

See Chattel Mortgage; Constructive Mortgage; Dry Mortgage; Equitable Mortgage; Indicia of a Mortgage; Kansas Cut-Throat Mortgage; Personal Mortgage; Purchase-Money Mortgage; Railroad Mortgage; Tight Mortgage.

Deed, mortgage, or otherwise, see Otherwise.

Party to mortgage, see Party.

Subject to mortgage, see Subject to.

"A 'mortgage' is literally a dead pledge." Stumpe v. Kopp, 99 S. W. 1073, 1076, 107 Mo. 412.

At common law a mortgage was a conditional conveyance to secure the payment of money or the performance of some act, to be void upon such payment or performance. By more modern law and under the statutes of many states a mortgage is a mere lien upon land. Its dominant attribute is security, but nevertheless it must be regarded "both a lien in equity and a conveyance in law." United States v. Commonwealth, 111 U. S. 512, 4 Sup. Ct. 546, 548, 183 U. S. 651, 48 L. Ed. 830 (citing Pomeroy v. Jur. § 1191).

A mortgage is a conveyance of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of a debt, to become void on payment thereof and is not a mere lien. Poarch v. Duncanson, 91 S. W. 1110, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 275.

A "mortgage" is a pledge of land described in the agreement by a grantor to the grantee and to revert to the grantor on the discharge of the obligation for the performance of which it is pledged. Safe Deposit Title Guaranty Co. v. Linton, 62 A. 566, 213 Pa. 105 (citing Lance's Appeal, 111 Atl. 375, 112 Pa. 456; Moran v. Munhall, 111 Atl. 1094, 204 Pa. 242).

A "mortgage" is a conveyance or transfer of property, either real or personal, to secure the payment of a debt or in discharge of some other obligation. Williams v. Davis, 908, 909, 154 Ala. 422.

An instrument will be deemed a mortgage, whatever its form, if, taken alone or in connection with the surrounding circumstances, it appears to have been given to cure payment of money; and the mere absence of terms of defeasance does not control its nature as a mortgage. Connor v. Connor, 52 South. 727, 729, 59 Fla. 487; Wyllly-Gabbett Co. v. Williams, 42 South. 910, 929, 53 Fla. 872 (quoting Cooper v. Brock, 2 N. W. 660, 41 Mich. 488).

Act Feb. 25, 1909 (26 St. at Large, p. 161), provides that in every action to recover personal property which has been pledged in any way to secure credit or debt the defendant may plead a counterclaim arising out of the same transaction, and the jury may find the amount due the plaintiff, if any, in which case the defendant may pay said amount and costs, and have the property released from the incumbrance. Held that, by the use of the words "pledged in any way," the statute evidences an intention not to limit its application to cases of mere technical pledges, and, as a "mortgage" is a "pledge," the mortgagor of chattels to secure the purchase price was properly permitted to interpose a counterclaim that the property in question was not suitable for the purpose for which it was purchased as represented by the seller in an action to foreclose the mortgage. Woodruff Machinery & Mfg. Co. v. Timms, 76 S. E. 114, 115, 98 S. C. 99.

Any instrument creating a lien, specifying the debt and personal property on which it is to take effect, is a mortgage, though there may be some language indicating an intention to convey legal title. Powers & Co. v. Georgia-Florida Grocery Co., 67 S. E. 685, 686, 7 Ga. App. 592.

No particular formality is essential to the creation of a mortgage. A writing indicating an intention to create a lien, and specifying a debt to be secured and the property on which the lien is to take effect, is a mortgage. Howard v. Rumble, 61 S. E. 297, 4 Ga. App. 327.

A "mortgage" is a conveyance by a debtor to his creditor, or to some one in trust for him, as a security for the debt. Whatever is substantially this is held to be a mortgage in a court of equity. Willson v. Fisher, 62 S. E. 622, 624, 148 N. C. 535.

A "mortgage" is a contract pledging property embraced in it for the payment of the debt it is given to secure. McClung v. Cullison, 82 Pac. 499, 500, 15 Okl. 402.

A common-law "mortgage" is defined to be an absolute sale of the property by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, subject to be redeemed according to the terms of the contract. Mower v. McCarthy, 64 Atl. 578, 579, 79 Vt. 142, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418, 118 Am. St. Rep. 942.

A conveyance of property in writing as security is a "mortgage," regardless of the letter of the instrument. The purpose, not the form, determines its character. No matter what the nature of a conveyance may be which is given as security, when the evidence, either written or parol, establishes the fact that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee exists between the parties, the right of the party is limited to a mere mortgage interest. Smith v. Pfugger, 105 N. W. 476, 477, 126 Wis. 253, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, 110 Am. St. Rep. 911 (citing Starks v. Redfield, 9 N. W. 168, 52 Wis. 349; Holle v. Bailey, 17 N. W. 322, 58 Wis. 434; Schriber v. Le Clair, 29 N. W. 570, 889, 66 Wis. 579; McCormick v. Herndon, 56 N. W. 1097, 86 Wis. 449; Schierl v. Newburg, 78 N. W. 761, 102 Wis. 552; Cumps v. Kiyo, 80 N. W. 937, 104 Wis. 656).

"A transfer of property as security, regardless of the form thereof, is a 'mortgage,' and, as regards rights or remedies, must be dealt with as such. If, from all the circumstances of the case, it appears clearly that the parties intended to create the relation of debtor and creditor between themselves or to recognize that relation as existing as a basis for a mortgage, their purpose in that regard will be deemed to have been accomplished so far as necessary to carry into effect the incidental purpose to create the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee to secure payment of the indebtedness, though it does not appear that there was the express promise to pay which generally characterizes the creation of such principal relation." Beebe v. Wisconsin Mortgage Loan Co., 93 N. W. 1103, 1105, 117 Wis. 328 (citing Starks v. Redfield, 9 N. W. 168, 52 Wis. 349; Brayton v. Jones, 5 Wis. 117; Cumps v. Kiyo, 80 N. W. 937, 104 Wis. 656; Schriber v. Le Clair, 29 N. W. 570, 889, 66 Wis. 579; Gettelman v. Commercial U. Assur. Co., 72 N. W. 627, 97 Wis. 237, 241; Plato v. Roe, 14 Wis. 453; *Sweet v. An instrument in the form of a common-law deed of mortgage, reciting a loan of money and a sale of real estate to secure the repayment of the sum loaned, with interest, executed in the state of Louisiana and duly recorded in the mortgage office of the parish wherein the property is situated, has the legal effect of a "mortgage" or hypothecation against third persons. In re Immanuel Presbyterian Church, 36 South. 408, 413, 112 La. 348.

Where one executed an assignment and transfer of all the rents from a farm to secure payment of his note, the instrument amounted to a "mortgage." Thatcher v. Jeffries (Tex.) 91 S. W. 1091, 1092.

A building and loan contract providing that, on default by the borrower, the lending company may re-enter and repossess the premises, that all sums advanced by it shall become due and payable, and that it shall have power to sell the premises according to law, and be entitled to the rights and remedies of the "mortgagee," and any overplus after satisfying the indebtedness shall be paid to the borrower, is in the nature of a "mortgage" and subject to foreclosure as such. Preston v. D'Ambrosio, 95 N. Y. Supp. 70, 71, 46 Misc. Rep. 523.

Where a fire policy provided that the loss, if any, was payable to R., trustee, as his interest might appear, and the interest of R. was that of a trustee under a deed securing bonds issued by insured, such interest would be treated as a mortgage, and the insurer estopped to deny liability on the ground that it did not know the nature and character of the trust. Peerless Mineral Springs Co. v. German American Ins. Co. of New York, 138 N. W. 1023, 1024, 151 Wis. 352.

An "assignment for benefit of creditors" is more than a security for the payment of debts; it is an absolute appropriation of property to their payment. It does not create a lien in favor of creditors upon property which in equity is still regarded as the property of the assignor, but it passes both the legal and equitable title beyond the control of the assignor, and there remains in him no equity of redemption, and the trust which results to the assignor in the unemployed balance does not indicate such an equity. The assignment is voluntary on the part of the debtor, and no authority can exact it, and it therefore partakes of the nature of a private contract. Miller v. Swihler, 79 N. E. 1092, 1093, 40 Ind. App. 465 (citing Burrill, Assignm. § 6, and distinguishing O'Neil v. Beck, 69 Ind. 239; Robinson v. Hughes, 20 N. E. 220, 117 Ind. 293, 3 L. R. A. 383, 10 Am. St. Rep. 45; Graves v. Hinkle, 21 N. E. 328, 120 Ind. 157).

"If the intention of the debtor is merely to secure his debt to one or more of his creditors, and the conveyance is not intended as an absolute disposition of his property, but he reserves to himself a right therein, the conveyance will be treated as a 'mortgage,' even though the debtor is insolvent at the time, and it covers all his property, and but a portion of his debts are secured by it." Civ. Code, §§ 3449-3473, provide that an assignment for the benefit of creditors is void against any creditor of the assignor not assenting thereto, in case it gives a preference of one debt or class of debts over another, and that the assignment must be made to the sheriff of the county where the property is situated. A debtor executed a deed of a portion of her property to a trustee, who was to pay certain creditors from the profits, but it was provided that the surplus of profits should inure to the use of the grantor during her life, and that, after payment of the debts and the grantor's death, the property should be transferred to her children. Any surplus from the proceeds of any sale or mortgage by the trustee was to be invested by him, and he was empowered to exchange the property for other property to be held subject to trust. Held, that the deed was not intended as an absolute disposition of the property, as an assignment for the benefit of creditors within the meaning of the statute, and he was not invalid for failure to comply therewith. Heath v. Wilson, 73 Pac. 182, 185, Cal. 362 (quoting and adopting definition in Cadwell's Bank v. Crittenden, 23 N. W. 666 Iowa, 240).

"A 'mortgage' or deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage is intended as security for the payment of money, or for the performance of some collateral act, and becomes void upon such payment or performance. "A 'mortgage' does not invest the mortgagee with an absolute and indefeasible title. The equitable title, called the 'equity of redemption,' remains in the mortgagor. The mortgage is a security for the debt, and creates a lien upon the property in favor of the creditor. There is no difference in legal effect between a mortgage with a power of sale and a deed of trust executed to secure a debt where the power of sale is placed in a third person. Both are securities for a debt. Both create specific liens on the property, and in both the equitable title or right of redemption remains in the debtor, and is an estate or interest in the property that the debtor may sell, or that may be seized and sold under judicial process by his other creditors, subject to the lien created by the mortgage or deed of trust. * * * An assignment for the benefit of creditors is well defined to be 'a transfer by a debtor of some or all of his property to an assignee for trust, apply the same, or the proceeds thereof, to the payment of some or all of his debts, and to return the surplus, if any, to the debtor.' " The owner of a sawmill property, including the mill, machinery, logs and lumber, the personality being subject to a chattel mortgage, entered into a contract with the chattel mortgagee by which he purported to convey and transfer to the mortgagee all of the property, both personal and real, with authority to take possession and to operate the mill and to sell any and all of the property, the owner agreeing to execute conveyances of the same as required of him. In consideration of such contract, the grantee agreed to pay certain indebtedness of the owner, including his own, and to apply that purpose all sums received from the operation of the mill or sales of the property, after deducting expenses; the surplus, if any, to be paid over to the grantor. Held, that such contract was not a mortgage, but a trust agreement or deed, which vested the absolute title to the property in the grantee, and that it avoided a policy of insurance previously issued to the grantor on the property containing a provision that it should be void if his interest in the property should become other than unconditional and sole ownership. Brecht v. Law, Union & Crow

As referring to mortgage on realty alone

The word "mortgage," as used in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a mortgage by which a debt is secured shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in property affected thereby, has reference to mortgages on realty alone, an employment of the word countenanced even in legal usage, where "mortgage" is generally employed and meant to apply to the creation of liens upon real estate, while like liens upon personalty are designated as "chattel mortgages." Bank of Woodland v. Pierce, 77 Pac. 1012, 1013, 144 Cal. 434.

Const. art. 13, § 1, permits provision, except in case of credits secured, for a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents. Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 3, provides that a mortgage, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, when land is pledged, shall, for the purposes of taxation, be deemed an interest in the land so pledged, and by subdivision 6 the term "credits" means those solvent debts not secured owing to the person assessed, and the term "debt" means those unsecured liabilities owing by the person assessed to bona fide residents, and section 3628, provides that, in assessing solvent credits not secured, a reduction shall be made of debts due bona fide residents, and section 3650, subd. 15, provides that in entering assessments containing solvent credits, subject to deduction, the assessor must enter in the proper column the value of debts and deduct them therefrom. Const. art. 13, § 4, provides that a mortgage, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed an interest in the property affected. Pol. Code, § 3627, contains the same provision. Held, that a collateral security of credits by a loan on personalty was not a mortgage, etc., or "other obligation by which a debt is secured," within Const. art. 13, § 4, that section applying only to liens on land; nor was it a "mortgage or trust deed," within section 1, so that the person assessed on such credits was entitled to have his debts deducted therefrom; and Pol. Code, § 3629, subd. 6, directing the assessor to require each person assessed to show separately all solvent credits unsecured, is not applicable, not referring to the assessor's duty in making the assessment, but only prescribing the form of the taxpayer's return for the assessor's information. Bank of Willows v. Glenn County, 101 Pac. 13, 15, 16, 155 Cal. 352.

Contract for payment of money distinguished

Defendant, having settled on unsurveyed public land, executed a written contract for the purchase of fruit trees, which recited that defendant was the owner of 160 acres, and that for the payment of the price of the trees he bound himself, his heirs, assigns, and grantees of and to the aforesaid land. Defendant thereafter acquired title to a quarter section of land in the section described in the contract, though not of the same technical description as the one therein described. Held, that the contract was a simple contract for the payment of money, and not a "mortgage" on the land. Stark Bros. v. Royce, 87 Pac. 840, 343, 44 Wash. 287.

Contract for sale of real estate

The words "foreclosure of a mortgage" do not in common parlance refer to the foreclosure of a land contract, and the words, as used in Comp. Laws, § 435, providing that the circuit courts in chancery shall dismiss suits concerning property where the matter in dispute shall not exceed $100, excepting suits for the foreclosure of mortgages, etc., do not include a foreclosure of a land contract, and a suit to foreclose a land contract on which there remains less than $100 unpaid must be dismissed. Sands & Maxwell Lumber Co. v. Gay, 101 N. W. 53, 138 Mich. 82.

Conveyance absolute in form

An instrument, though in form an absolute deed, having been intended merely as security for payment of a debt, is a "mortgage." Todd v. Todd, 128 Pac. 413, 414, 164 Cal. 255; White v. Walsh, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1015, 1017, 62 Misc. Rep. 423 (citing Mooney v. Byrne, 57 N. E. 163, 163 N. Y. 86); Marquam v. Ross, 83 Pac. 852, 860, 47 Or. 374.

An absolute conveyance given to secure a note which the grantor intends to repay will in equity be held a "mortgage," where the form of the conveyance is dictated by the lender. Plato v. Roe, 14 Wis. 453, 457.

In determining whether an instrument in the form of a deed is or is not a "mortgage," the principal test to be applied is whether the relation of the parties towards each other, of debtor or creditor, continued after the execution of the deed. The test is the existence or nonexistence of a debt, and equity looks behind the form to the fact. If the transaction was intended as a loan, if there remains a debt for which the conveyance is only a security, and the collection of which may be enforced independent of the security, equity will hold it a mortgage, no matter whether the transaction is evidenced by one or two instruments. Plummer v. Ilse, 82 Pac. 1009, 1010, 41 Wash. 5, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 111 Am. St. Rep. 997.

The conveyance must be judged according to the real intent of the parties. If there is a debt subsisting between the parties, and it is the intention to continue the debt, it is a "mortgage"; but if the conveyance extinguishes the debt, and the parties intend that result, a contract for a resale at the same price does not destroy the character of the "deed" as an absolute conveyance. While J. was indebted to M., he made a fraudulent conveyance to K. Thereafter, for the purpose, not of extinguishing the debt, but of securing it, he conveyed land to M. by deed, reciting a consideration, the amount of the debt, and at the same time M. quitclaimed the land to J. for the same recited consideration, reserving a vendor's lien. Held, that M. still remained a creditor, whose debt existed at the date of the fraudulent conveyance. James v. Mallory, 89 S. W. 472, 473, 76 Ark. 509 (citing Hays v. Emerson, 87 S. W. 1027, 75 Ark. 551).

A deed absolute, with parol agreement that it shall be a mortgage is a "mortgage" from its inception. Where a cotenant's interest in land was to be sold on execution, and it was agreed that the other tenant should purchase the land at such sale, and take title under the sheriff's deed, as security for payment to him, by the judgment debtor, of the amount of the debt, the transaction created a "mortgage," although the agreement was unknown except to the tenants. Stafford v. Stafford, 71 S. W. 984, 986, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 73 (citing and adopting Jones, Mortg. § 285).

Where a deed is intended to secure a debt, and the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the parties, the legal inference is that a "mortgage" was intended. Thus a deed was a mortgage, and not a conditional sale, where it was given to secure payment for a horse, recited a consideration of "$110 cash or its equivalent," a horse, describing it, contained the ordinary recitals of a warranty deed, and recited that the grantee should hold the land for 1½ years and reconvey on payment of $118.60 "being purchase price hereof and necessary recording fee." Tucker v. Witherbee, 113 S. W. 123, 125, 130 Ky. 269.

"Where the proof is clear that the transaction was a borrowing of money, and that the deed was made to secure the money borrowed, the deed will always be treated as 'mortgage,' and redemption will be allowed notwithstanding the form in which the parties may have put the contract." Garvey v. Adm'r v. Vincent (Ky.) 87 S. W. 804, 805.

Where a contract and chattel mortgage executed contemporaneously with a deed absolute in form show that it was intended merely as security for a debt and to indemnify the mortgagee on a contract of guarantee for the benefit of the mortgagor, such deed will be given effect as a "mortgage." Ferguson v. Boyd (Ind.) 79 N. E. 549, 555 (citing Davis v. Stonestreet, 4 Ind. 101, 105; Williams v. Carpenter, 62 Ind. 495, 500; Crasson v. Swoveland, 22 Ind. 427, 429; Voss v. El, 10 N. S.] 133, 13 L. Ed. 927; Jones, Mortg. [6th Ed.] §§ 8, 242, 245, 247a, 258, 265, 340).

"Under Georgia law the word 'mortgage' is used in a double sense. Sometimes it refers to a mortgage which creates a lien, and at other times as passing title as a security for the debt. An instrument containing a defeasance clause describing the debt, and showing on its face that it is intended as security, is a mortgage, and passes no title. A writing in the form of an absolute bill of sale, but in fact intended only as security for a debt, conveys title, but is treated as an equitable mortgage." Denton v. Shields, 81 S. E. 423, 120 Ga. 1076.

Under Rev. Codes, § 3391, every transfer of an interest in real property other than in trust, made only as security for the performance of another act, is a "mortgage," although the conveyance is a deed absolute in form. Hannah v. Vensel, 116 Pac. 115, 117, 19 Idaho, 796.

Notwithstanding the provision of Civil Code, § 2922, that a "mortgage" can be created only by writing executed with the formalities required in case of a grant of real property, a deed absolute on its face may be shown by parol evidence to have been intended as a mere mortgage, and the indebtedness intended to be secured thereby, whether present or future, although not specified in the deed or in any contemporaneous writing, may also be shown by parol evidence. The fact that the manager of plaintiff corporation, instead of plaintiff itself, was named as grantee in certain deeds executed to secure an indebtedness due plaintiff in no wise impairs the validity of such deeds as mortgages in plaintiff's favor. Absolute deeds, given solely by way of security, and constituting in fact only mortgages, carry with them no estate in the land, but create only a lien thereon as incident to the secured debt. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Cerf, 81 Pac. 1077, 1079, 147 Cal. 384.

Where a conveyance of land is made as security for a loan, although there is no personal obligation to repay, the mortgagee looking solely to the instrument, it will be deemed a "mortgage," if intended as security. Conover v. Palmer, 108 N. Y. Supp. 480, 482, 123 App. Div. 817.

Plaintiff advanced money to the purchasers of land under a bond from the owner, under an arrangement whereby the land was deeded to plaintiff, on an understanding that he would convey to the purchasers under the bond, on payment to him of the amount advanced and interest. Plaintiff gave a bond binding himself to convey, and those to whom the bond was given gave no note, but promised to pay him the amount advanced. Held, that the transaction constituted a "mortgage," within a statute subjecting to taxation money at interest, including money loaned on any mortgage, etc. Glidden v. Town of Newport, 66 Atl. 117, 118, 74 N. H. 207.

An owner of property executed a deed to a corporation in pursuance of an agreement by which payment therefor was to be made in the capital stock of the corporation at par; the value of the property to be determined by appraisers. Subsequently agreements were made between the corporation and a syndicate composed of the larger stockholders of the grantor and between the grantor and grantee for the purpose of aiding the grantor in adjusting its liabilities, by which the syndicate and grantee were to pay the indebtedness of the grantor and receive reimbursement therefor from the stock constituting the purchase price of the property, the stock to be deposited with a third party until such indebtedness was liquidated. Thereafter the grantor caused such property to be insured, the application containing a warranty that it was the sole owner, and the policy a provision that it should be void if the property was sold without the assent of the company, and subsequently the deed theretofore executed was delivered. The policy was not assigned, and no consent to the sale was given. The property was destroyed by fire. Held, that the insurance company was not liable, because insured had no insurable interest in the property at the time of its destruction, the transfer being an absolute one and not a "mortgage" within Rev. St. c. 92, § 1, defining mortgages as those made in the usual form, in which the condition is set forth in the deed, and those made by a conveyance appearing on its face to be absolute, with an instrument of defeasance executed at the same time or as part of the same transaction, since there was no agreement purporting to be a defeasance and also because the property was "sold" without the consent of the insurer within the meaning of that term as used in the policy, and hence the policy was invalidated previous to the fire. Buffalo Fertilizer Co. v. Aroostook Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 84 Atl. 1078, 1080, 100 Me. 483.

Same—Defeasance clause

Notes reciting that they are given to secure payment for certain described lands, and deeds reciting that the land is secured by the notes of the grantee (describing them), and that if the notes are not paid at maturity the deeds are to be null and void, constitute mortgages, and not conditional sales. Land v. May, 84 S. W. 489, 490, 73 Ark. 415 (citing Gibson v. Martin, 38 Ark. 207; Stryker v. Hershey, 38 Ark. 264; Mitchell v. Wade, 39 Ark. 377; Hershey v. Luce, 19 S. W. 963, 20 S. W. 6, 56 Ark. 320).

Same—Separate instrument of defeasance

A conveyance of land, absolute in form, accompanied by a contemporaneous instrument executed by the grantee and reciting that on the payment of a specified sum within a specified time the premises shall be reconveyed to the grantor, is a mortgage to secure the payment of a debt. Raski v. Wise, 107 Pac. 984, 988, 56 Or. 72. The test in determining whether such conveyance constitutes a "mortgage" is whether the relation of debtor and creditor continues to exist. Fabrique v. Cherokee & P. Coal & Mining Co., 77 Pac. 584, 585, 69 Kan. 733.

Whether a conveyance absolute in form, when taken with a contemporaneous separate agreement to reconvey, constituted a mortgage, depends upon the existence of a debt; a deed made to secure a debt being a mortgage in legal effect, and the fact that the mortgagor subsequently leased the property from the mortgagee would not change the nature of the transaction. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Scandia v. Kackley, 127 Pac. 539, 540, 88 Kan. 70.

The contemporaneous agreement for a resale and purchase does not of itself make the deed a "mortgage." The conveyance must be judged according to the real intent of the parties. If there is a debt subsisting between the parties, and it is the intention to continue the debt, it is a "mortgage"; but if the conveyance extinguishes the debt, and the parties intend that result, a contract for a resale at the same price does not destroy the character of the deed as an "absolute conveyance." Hays v. Emerson, 87 S. W. 1027, 1028, 75 Ark. 551.

A deed executed as security for a loan, the lender executing, in turn, a written defeasance agreeing to reconvey to the borrower upon payment of the debt, constituted a "mortgage." Wells v. Scanlan, 102 N. W. 571, 572, 124 Wis. 229.

Where the relation of debtor and creditor exists between parties executing a deed absolute on its face, and a collateral agreement permitting redemption, the court is always inclined to treat such arrangement as constituting a mortgage. Where plaintiffs executed to defendant a deed absolute on its face, but on the same day a writing was executed reciting the sale and providing that plaintiffs were to occupy the house they lived in for five years at a certain rent, and at the end of such period they were to pay back the purchase money and redeem, defendant to have the rent of a log house and all the land as interest, plaintiffs to pay the taxes and keep the house insured, such deed and other writing constituted a mortgage, even though the collateral writing was made an hour after the deed, and nothing had been said about it before that time. Sebree v. Thompson (Ky.) 104 S. W. 781.

Where, at the time a deed of conveyance was executed, the grantees therein executed a deed to the grantors reciting the first deed, and stating that it was made in consideration of an agreement by the grantees to pay the grantors a sum of money, and purported to reconvey the land to secure the same, both deeds were to be construed as one, the former as a conveyance of title to the grantees, and the latter as a "mortgage," under Practice Act 1851, p. 93, § 260, providing that a "mortgage" shall not be deemed a conveyance, whatever its terms, so as to enable the mortgagee to recover possession without foreclosure. Adams v. Hopkins, 77 Pac. 712, 713, 717, 144 Cal. 19.

Although, under Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) § 320, one who records a deed without recording a defeasance agreement making the deed a mortgage, receives no benefit from the recording, the failure to record the defeasance agreement, and pay the mortgage recording tax, does not bring the grantee within the provision of Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60) § 258, forbidding the enforcement of any mortgage on which the tax has not been paid as Tax Law, § 250, defining a mortgage on real property as being every mortgage by which a lien is imposed on or which affects the title to real property, executory contracts for sale of real property and contracts increasing indebtedness secured by mortgage, does not include this kind of a mortgage, and, the law being a tax law, it must be strictly construed. Gerken v. Sonnabend, 130 N. Y. Supp. 605, 606.

Where plaintiff's land, worth $790, was sold at judicial sale for $455, and a subsequent agreement between him and defendant recited that defendant had paid the purchaser at judicial sale $455 and received a conveyance, and that defendant agreed to convey to plaintiff in case he should repay defendant before a specified date, but the otherwise defendant's duty to convey should terminate, the transaction amounted to a "mortgage." Sheffield v. Day (Ky.) 90 S. W. 545, 546.

Where plaintiff deeded land to defendant, her husband's creditor, under a separate agreement for a reconveyance on the payment of the amount of the debt, interest, etc., the plaintiff was not bound to pay the amount for which the reconveyance was to be had, does not show conclusively that the transaction was a conditional sale. If an instrument does not show clearly whether a "mortgage" or conditional sale was intended, equity will construe it as a "mortgage," rather than a conditional sale. White v. Redenbaugh, 100 N. E. 110, 111, 41 Ind. App. 680.

Conveyance conditioned for support

A conveyance conditioned for the support of the grantor will be treated as a "mortgage." Abbott v. Sanders, 66 Atl. 1032, 1033, 80 Vt. 179, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 725, 130 Am. St. Rep. 974, 12 Ann. Cas. 898.

Debt or obligation necessary

One sure test and essential requisite of mortgage is the existence of a debt from the grantor to the grantee in the deed. If there is no debt, the instrument cannot be a "mortgage," whatever else it may be. Jones v. Hubbard, 90 S. W. 1137, 1141, 193 Mo. 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

One of the essentials of a mortgage is the existence of an indebtedness, payment of which the mortgage is designed to secure. An instrument, in form a conditional bill of sale, is not made a mortgage by reason of the fact that it contains a provision that the instrument shall be void if the grantor pay a certain sum of money by a certain day. Smith v. Hope, 35 South. 865, 866, 4 Fla. 295.

A "mortgage" is to be regarded as a mere incident or security of the debt. A mortgage given as part of a business transaction cannot be foreclosed only when it secures a debt. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co., 61 Atl. 167, 168, 69 N. J. Eq. 723.

A debt either pre-existing, or created at the time, or contracted to be created, is an essential requisite of a "mortgage." Hence a deed absolute on its face is not a mortgage where it is delivered to extinguish a debt, and the parties so intended, though the grantor gave a contemporaneous promise to reconvey on being reimbursed within an agreed period an amount equal to the debt and interest.

A "mortgage" has been defined as a conveyance of lands upon a condition, in the deed or a defeasance out of it, that on the grantor's paying a sum of money, or doing some other act, the conveyance shall be void, and performance of the condition, without any other act, puts an end to all title and interest in the grantee. A deed absolute on its face will not be held a mortgage unless the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the grantors and grantee, and it was the intention of the parties to secure the payment of such debt. Where the grantee, in an absolute conveyance, by an agreement executed at the same time, reciting that the conveyance was made to pay a certain sum of money, stipulates that he will not convey the premises within a specified time without the consent of the grantor, and that, if the grantor within that time shall find a purchaser, the grantee will convey on receiving the amount, with interest, for which the land had been conveyed to him, the transaction is not a "mortgage," but is a conditional sale, giving the grantee the right to recover the land after the expiration of the specified time. Duell v. Leslie, 106 S. W. 489, 495, 207 Mo. 658.

The conveyance must be judged according to the real intent of the parties. If there is a debt subsisting between the parties, and it is the intention to continue the debt, it is a "mortgage"; but if the conveyance extinguishes the debt, and the parties intend that result, a contract for a resale at the same price does not destroy the character of the deed as an "absolute conveyance." Hays v. Emerson, 87 S. W. 1027, 1028, 75 Ark. 551; James v. Mallory, 89 S. W. 472, 473, 76 Ark. 509 (citing Hays v. Emerson, 87 S. W. 1027, 75 Ark. 551).

Where plaintiff, having an option on land which was about to expire, wished to borrow money to enable him to take it up, but defendant refused to make a loan, taking a mortgage on the land as security, but advanced the money, took title to the land in his own name, and executed to plaintiff a bond for title, the transaction did not constitute a "mortgage" entitling plaintiff to the rights of redemption. Conner v. Clapp, 79 Pac. 929, 931, 37 Wash. 299.

Under Civ. Code, § 2924, providing that every transfer of land, made only as security for another act, is a "mortgage," a transfer to enable the grantee to recover a judgment quieting title in him is not a mortgage. Renton v. Gibson, 84 Pac. 186, 187, 148 Cal. 650.

See Deed; Grant.

Deed of trust

Certain trust deeds in real estate are recognized by our decisions, by which trust deeds the legal title passes to the trustee, with power of sale. In all respects these deeds and transfers of title are "security," but they are not "mortgages." Renton v. Gibson, 84 Pac. 186-188, 148 Cal. 650.

As passing legal title

A "mortgage" is a mere lien or security for the payment of money, and does not convey any title to the mortgagee. Jump v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 87 Pac. 928, 929, 44 Wash. 596, 12 Ann. Cas. 257 (citing Dane v. Daniel, 63 Pac. 268, 23 Wash. 379).

Under the Idaho statute and the decisions of the court construing the same, a "mortgage," or any contract or instrument made only as security for the payment of a debt, merely creates a lien on the real property therein described, and leaves the legal title in the mortgagor or grantor, which title can only be divested by judicial sale in a suit or action under and in conformity with the statute. Hannah v. Vensel, 116 Pac. 115, 117, 19 Idaho, 796.

Under the statute of South Dakota a "mortgage" on real estate is not a conveyance of title, but only a lien on the land as security for a debt. Farr v. Semmler, 123 N. W. 835, 837, 24 S. D. 290.

Under Civ. Code, § 2920, defining a mortgage as a contract hypothecating specific property for the performance of an act without the necessity of a change of possession, and section 2927, providing that a mortgage does not entitle the mortgagee to possession unless authorized by the express terms of the mortgage, a mortgage gives the mortgagee neither the title, possession, nor right to possession of the mortgaged property unless authorized by the express terms of the instrument. Ely v. Williams, 92 Pac. 393, 394, 6 Cal. App. 455.

A "mortgage" on real estate creates only a lien in favor of the mortgagee, and neither the legal nor equitable title passes to the mortgagee until after a valid foreclosure and sale thereunder. The rights of the mortgagee in possession are therefore not adverse to the rights of the mortgagor or his grantees, so long as the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee exists. Gillett v. Romig, 87 Pac. 325, 329, 17 Okl. 324 (citing Balduff v. Grifwold, 60 Pac. 223, 9 Okl. 439; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] § 1188).

At common law a "mortgage" vests the legal title in the mortgagee, and, on condition broken, the mortgagee may re-enter or bring ejectment. The Colorado statute, however, has taken from the instrument the common-law character and deprived the mortgagee of all possession or right of possession either after or before condition broken, and before this right exists the mortgagee must foreclose his mortgage and sell the mortgaged property. Moncrieff v. Hare, 87 Pac. 1082, 1083, 38 Colo. 221, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001 (citing Pueblo & A. V. R. R. Co. v. Beshoar, 5 Pac. 639, 8 Colo. 32; Fogarty v. Sawyer, 17 Cal. 589).

In equity, a mortgage is not a conveyance of the legal title, but only a security for debt. Barron v. San Angelo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 138 S. W. 142, 144.

Under the statute, a "mortgage" does not convey title to the property mortgaged, but only creates a lien thereon. The mortgagor has the right to pay the indebtedness, and thus extinguish the lien, at any time before the property is sold by the mortgagee. The contract of the mortgagor does not terminate with his death, but by operation of law it is suspended until an administrator is appointed. Litz v. Exchange Bank of Alva, 83 Pac. 790, 792, 15 Okl. 564.

Lien indicated

As lien, see Lien.

The owner of property, exempt from taxation under its charter (Pub. & Loc. Laws 1869, c. 149), executed a mortgage to secure a loan, and executed its bonds to secure the mortgage, and agreed that it would pay all taxes and assessments imposed on the mortgaged property, all taxes assessed or imposed on the mortgage, and all taxes assessed against the lien or interest created by the mortgage. St. 1898, § 1042d, added by Laws 1903, c. 378, § 2, provided that, whenever taxable real estate is subject to mortgage, the mortgage, for the purposes of taxation, should be an interest in the real estate taxable as such where the real estate was located, or might be separately assessed and taxed. Held, in the mortgagee's action to foreclose because of the mortgagor's refusal to pay taxes against the bonds in the hands of purchasers from the mortgagee, that the first obligation referred only to general taxes or special assessments levied on the property; that the third obligation referred to an assessment against some interest in the mortgaged real estate, not including an assessment on the bonds; that the words "mortgage" and "lien or interest created thereby" were synonymous; that the obligation to pay taxes on the "mortgage" did not comprehend such taxes assessed on the bonds, and that the mortgagor was not liable therefor. Citizens' Savings & Trust Co. v. School Sisters of Notre Dame, 139 N. W. 439, 441, 151 Wis. 619.

As a mere incident of the debt

"A 'mortgage' is a mere incident of the debt which it is intended to secure." Voches v. Nixon, 86 Atl. 192, 195, 72 N. J. E. 791 (quoting Magie v. Reynolds, 26 Atl. 151, 51 N. J. Eq. 113, 117).

"The debt is the principal thing, and the 'mortgage' only an incident, a mere security for the payment of the debt, and the release of the debt secured by the mortgage need not be under seal, but the transfer of the debt will in equity carry the mortgage with it." Bradley v. Lightcap, 66 N. E. 546, 547, 201 Ill. 511 (citing Vansant v. Allmon, 23 Ill. 30).

"A 'mortgage' is but a security for the debt. Independent of the debt, the lien cannot have no existence in equity. The debt is the principal, the lien is the accessory, which can no more exist without the debt than the shadow without the substance." Walsh v. Robinson, 99 N. W. 282, 135 Mich. 16.

A "mortgage" is only an incident to the debt it was given to secure, and cannot be separated therefrom, and a transfer of the mortgage without the debt is a nullity. Richards Trust Co. v. Rhomberg, 104 N. W. 268, 270, 19 S. D. 595 (quoting and adopting the definition in Merritt v. Bartholick, 36 N. W. 44).

As a mere security for the debt

A mortgage itself does not create or alienate an estate in real property, but is a mere security for the payment of a debt or the discharge of an obligation. Mueller v. Renkes, 77 Pac. 512, 518, 31 Mont. 100. See also, Alexander v. Cleland, 86 Pac. 425, 426, 13 N. M. 524.

A mortgage is a security for payment of a debt, or performance of some condition; the mortgagee only acquiring a chattel interest. Malsberger v. Parsons (Del.) 75 Atl. 698, 700.

"A 'mortgage' is a contract by which specific property is hypothecated for the performance of an act, without the necessity of a change of possession." Civ. Code, § 3811. "The lien of a mortgage is special, unless otherwise agreed, and is independent of possession." Civ. Code, § 3812. A mortgage does not create an estate in real property. "It is a mere security for the payment of a debt or the fulfillment of an obligation, and is only a chattel interest. While it affects lands by imposing a lien of charge upon them, it in no wise conveys title thereto." Swallow v. McMillan, 76 Pac. 943, 945, 30 Mont. 43.

A "mortgage" is but a security for the payment of money with the right of lien upon the mortgage premises to enforce payment. It is not stamped with the character of real estate, but is a bare incumbrance or charge. In re Lukens, 138 Fed. 188, 191 (citing Richert v. Madeira [Pa.] 1 Rawle, 328; Corporation for Relief of Poor Ministers v. Wallace [Pa.] 3 Rawle, 109; Craft v. Webster [Pa.]

4 Rawle, 242; Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. 21, 45 Am. Dec. 713; Wilson v. Shoenberger's Ex'rs, 31 Pa. 295; In re Lenning's Estate, 52 Pa. 135; McIntyre v. Velte, 25 Atl. 739, 153 Pa. 350).

In equity a "mortgage" is a mere security for the debt and only a chattel interest, and until a decree of foreclosure the mortgagor continues the real owner of the fee. Where the owner of land conveyed the timber thereon on condition that the deed should be void unless the grantee paid a note for the purchase price at maturity, and removed the timber within a specified time, the deed created a relation in legal effect the same as in the case of a conveyance of absolute title with mortgage back to secure the purchase price. Ordway v. Farrow, 64 Atl. 1116, 1119, 79 Vt. 192, 118 Am. St. Rep. 951.

A "mortgage" is too narrowly defined when it is said to be a security for a debt. It may be a security for the payment of a debt, or for the performance of some duty, or for both. Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co., 104 N. W. 561, 564, 96 Minn. 27 (citing Madigan v. Mead, 16 N. W. 539, 31 Minn. 94).

A "mortgage," prior to its foreclosure and the final confirmation of the sale had thereunder, is but a security for the debt, and does not operate as a lien on the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises, unless an application is made for a receiver in the manner provided by law. Westerfield v. South Omaha Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 105 N. W. 1087, 1088, 75 Neb. 53.

"A 'mortgage' is a mere security for a debt, and there is no such relation of trust or confidence between the maker and holder of a mortgage as prevents the latter from acquiring title to its subject-matter, either under his own or any other valid lien." Jones v. Black, 90 Pac. 422, 424, 18 Okl. 344, 11 Ann. Cas. 753 (quoting from opinion in Williams v. Townsend, 31 N. Y. 415).

A mortgagee holds his "mortgage" as security for the debt only, and, where there is no obligation in the contract on the part of the mortgagee to pay taxes on the property, he may acquire title through tax sale. The mortgagee has a mere lien on the property, but no title. His lien gives him no right of possession, and his only remedy is by foreclosure. Jones v. Black, 88 Pac. 1052, 1053, 18 Okl. 344, 11 Ann. Cas. 753.

Note or other security unnecessary

Under Rev. Civ. Code, § 2044, providing that every transfer of an interest in property, other than a trust, made as security for the performance of another act, shall be deemed a mortgage, a transfer of real property by deed made to secure a loan is a "mortgage," and may be shown to be such by proof of circumstances attending its execution and the actual intention of the parties. Where a deed was executed as security for a loan, the fact that there was no collateral undertaking evidencing the indebtedness, and no covenant or personal obligation by the grantor to pay, was not fatal to the grantor's right to have the deed declared a mortgage. Krug v. Kautz, 118 N. W. 623, 624, 21 S. D. 461.

Promise to mortgage distinguished

An instrument reciting that, to secure intervenor as surety on a certain note of even date with the instrument, "I doth hereby agree, and doth agree to give unto" said intervenor a mortgage on certain real estate described, "to have and to hold the said property to secure said" intervenor as surety on said note, to be void on condition that the maker cause the note to be paid and signed by defendant and his wife, constituted a "mortgage" and not a mere promise to mortgage. Bray v. Ellison (Ky.) 83 S. W. 98.

MORTGAGE ACTION

Under Rev. St. 1895, § 1490, providing that all claims against a corporation at the time of receivership shall be paid out of the earnings thereof to the exclusion of mortgage action, the term "mortgage action" does not merely mean a mortgage, but relates to the action whereby a mortgagee secures the appointment of a receiver; and hence a mortgagee, not having secured the appointment of a receiver, is entitled to share in the earnings of a receivership. First Nat. Bank of Houston v. J. I. Campbell Co., 140 S. W. 430, 431, 104 Tex. 457.

MORTGAGE SALE

Though a chattel mortgagor and mortgagee brought about an auction sale of the property by agreement, in order to create the impression that the sale was not a forced one, in order thereby to sell the property for a better price than on a forced sale, it being understood that the proceeds should be turned over to the mortgagee to satisfy his debt, the sale was nevertheless in legal effect a "mortgage sale." Selberling & Co. v. Porter, 74 N. E. 516, 517, 165 Ind. 7.

MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION

The expression "mortgagee in possession" has been adopted by the courts and law writers as a convenient phrase to describe the condition of a mortgagee, who is in possession of mortgaged premises under such circumstances as to make the satisfaction of his lien a prerequisite to his being dispossessed, even in jurisdictions where the mortgage itself can confer no possessory right, either before or after default. Stouffer v. Harlan, 74 Pac. 610, 611, 68 Kan. 135, 64 L. R. A. 320, 104 Am. St. Rep. 396.

A "mortgagee in possession" is not only one who holds actual possession with the consent of the mortgagor, but one who has in good faith taken possession as the result of a void foreclosure. The possession must, however, be actual and not merely constructive. Fuhrman v. Power, 86 Pac. 940, 942, 43 Wash. 533.

A mortgagee who, while the mortgage is subsisting, obtains in a lawful manner the possession is a "mortgagee in possession," and his interest enables him to retain such possession and to defend against it against the mortgagor or those succeeding to his title. A mortgagee who has foreclosed his mortgage without bringing in a purchaser from the mortgagor, and who has entered into possession under such proceedings, though without the consent of the purchaser, may retain possession until his lien is released by payment, though the debt is barred by limitations. Burns v. Hiatt, 87 Pac. 196, 198, 149 Cal. 617, 117 Am. St. Rep. 157.

A "mortgagee in possession" is one who enters either by the consent of the mortgagor, honest mistake, or pursuant to lawful process, and he is not allowed for permanent improvements, but only for necessary reparations made by him during the time. Faulkner v. Cody, 91 N. Y. Supp. 633, 638, 45 Misc. Rep. 64 (citing Moore v. Cable [N. Y.] 1 Johns. Ch. 385; Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Baptist Church in Oliver St., 73 N. Y. 82; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1217).

It is not necessary to the status of a mortgagee in possession that possession of the land shall have been taken under the mortgage or by the consent of the mortgagor. To constitute a mortgagee in possession, it is enough if the possession be peaceably and legally taken; and one who takes possession under an invalid tax deed, and purchases a subsisting mortgage, is not precluded from claiming the rights of a mortgagee in possession.

MORTGAGOR

See Creditors of the Mortgagor.
As owner, see Owner.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 5845, authorizing suit by a "mortgagor" to restrain foreclosure by advertisement, includes any person claiming title to the mortgaged premises under and in privity with the original mortgagor. Scott v. District Court of Fifth Judicial District of Barnes County, 107 N. W. 61, 62, 15 N. D. 259.

As used in Rev. Codes 1905, § 7454, providing that when the mortgagee or his assignee has commenced foreclosure proceedings by advertisement, and it shall be made appear by the affidavit of the mortgagor that the mortgagor has a legal counterclaim or any other valid defense, foreclosure may be enjoined, the word "mortgagor" includes persons in privity to and claiming under the mortgagor; and a subsequent mortgagee may take the necessary affidavit and enjoin the sale. State v. Buttz, 131 N. W. 241, 21 N. D. 540.

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 4342, requiring the inclusion of the mortgagor and actual tenant or occupier of the land among the defendants in all actions to foreclose mortgages, the term "mortgagor," so far as it relates to the foreclosure of the equity of redemption, refers to the actual owner of the equity, who is an indispensable party to any kind of a foreclosure proceeding, but the absence of the grantor in a deed of trust constitutes no defect of parties, where, prior to such action, he has conveyed his equity of redemption. McCauley v. Brady, 100 S. W. 541, 543, 123 Mo. App. 558 (citing 2 Plim. Mortg. § 1707).

MORTIFICATION

As mental anguish

Allegations in a petition, in an action against a sheriff and his deputy, that the wrongfully and unlawfully entered into the house and premises occupied by plaintiff under a lease and dispossessed him, and put his household goods and personal property in the public highway, and so put plaintiff to great trouble and distress, properly authorize a recovery for humiliation and mortification, or any phase of "mental anguish," since the word "distress," being a general term, includes anguish or suffering, both of mind and body, and since "humiliation" and "mortification" are simply phases of mental anguish. Perkins v. Ogilvie, 146 S. W. 735, 737, 148 Ky. 309.

MOSS

Lily of the valley roots are not covered by Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 2, Free List, par. 553, relating to "moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances," not being vegetable substances in the class of moss and seaweeds. McAllister v. United States, 147 Fed. 773.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, pars. 566, 617, relating to "fibrous vegetable substances" and to "moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances," does not include birch bark. Reed & Keller v. United States, 172 Fed. 453.

MOST

A bill for divorce a vinculo, filed June 16, 1906, in the county court of Cleburne county, alleged that complainant, a resident of Cleburne county, was married May 3, 1906, and that he and his wife lived together until June 4, 1906, most of the time residing in Cleburne county, and that complainant "has been a bona fide resident of Cleburne county for more than three years," and that respondent's particular place of residence was unknown. Held, that the verb "has been," descriptive of past action, referred the residence to a period before the bill was filed, but did not make a part of the period so averred the year next before the bill was filed, and that "most" signified, not all, but nearly all, of the time between the marriage and the date of the bill, and that the averment of more than three years' bona fide residence was insufficient as a jurisdictional averment of residence for "one year next preceding the filing of the bill," and hence that a decree entered on the bill was void on collateral attack. Martin v. Martin, 55 South. 632, 634, 173 Ala. 106.

MOST CONVENIENT

As used in a charter party providing that the anchorage directed by the charterers must be the "most convenient," the words "most convenient" mean convenient as well for the ship as for the consignees of the cargo. Reid v. Jones, 23 Sup. Ct. 89, 187 U. S. 153, 47 L. Ed. 116.

NOTES

Waste, to which a small quantity of cotton still attaches after it has been run through the machine at a cotton mill, is called "motes." Washington Mills v. Cox, 157 Fed. 634, 636, 85 C. C. A. 154.

MOTHER

See From and Through the Mother; Through the Mother.

Father synonymous, see Father.

A statute referring to a father or mother does not, in the absence of special statement, include a natural father or mother. Landry v. American Creosote Works, 43 South. 1016, 1018, 119 La. 231, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 387.

The right granted by Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2315, to the surviving father or mother to recover damages for the death of their son, is a right granted to the actual father or mother, and not to an adopting parent. Mount v. Tremont Lumber Co., 46 South. 103, 121 La. 64, 126 Am. St. Rep. 312, 15 Ann. Cas. 148.

The exemption allowed by Ky. St. 1903, § 1403, subsec. 5, to be set apart to "the widow or infant child" from the estate of an intestate, to the infant child, if no "mother" survives, and to the "widow" if there be no infant children, or if none reside in the family with the "widow," does not apply to the husband and children of the intestate wife. Thaxton's Guardian v. Walters' Adm'r, 113 S. W. 118, 119, 130 Ky. 235.

Where the constitution of a firemen's relief association organized pursuant to Laws 1885, c. 176 (St. 1898, §§ 1987, 1988), and acts amendatory thereof, providing for the organization of such associations, and designating that they may be organized for the purpose of giving relief to persons dependent upon the deceased members, but no others, stated the object of such association to be to give relief to families of deceased members, and provided that an insured could designate his mother or certain others as his beneficiary, a designation by an insured of his stepmother as beneficiary was valid, where he was a single man living with her as a member of the same family at the time of his death; the term "mother" in this connection not being limited in meaning merely to a mother by blood, though used with such meaning in a subsequent provision of the association's constitution which specified the heirs to whom relief money should be paid in case no beneficiary be designated by the insured. Jones v. Mangan, 133 N. W. 618, 620, 151 Wis. 215.

A "motion" is a request to the court to grant the mover some right which he claims. It is a notification that he considers himself entitled to what he asks. Arnold v. Regan, 69 Atl. 292, 29 R. I. 71. See, also, Howard v. Carter, 80 Pac. 61, 62, 71 Kan. 85 (citing

A "motion" is an application for an order and is usually made orally. Williams v. Hawley, 77 Pac. 762, 763, 144 Cal. 97.

A "motion" is an application for an order, and was sufficiently made within a required time by formal appearance in court and application for relief, stating the grounds and filing affidavits, though the opposing parties were not required to appear until a subsequent day. Brownell v. Superior Court of Yolo County, 109 Pac. 91, 94, 157 Cal. 703.

A "motion" is simply an application made in a pending or proposed action or special proceeding, and must depend for its granting upon its relevancy to the main litigation. It is not an independent right. In re Dietz, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1063, 1065, 138 App. Div. 283.

A "motion" seeks some order of court falling short of the dignity of a judgment. Ewing v. Vernon County, 116 S. W. 518, 519, 216 Mo. 681 (citing Bliss, Code Pl. [3d Ed.] §§ 418, 420, et seq.).

"Motions" are not original and independent proceedings, but are only incidental steps taken in all classes of cases pending; and the rulings of the court thereon are not "judgments." State ex rel. Shackelford v. McElhinney, 145 S. W. 1139, 1142, 241 Mo. 592.

A motion is not required to be signed, but it is a proper practice of the counsel for a party to sign it. Nobach v. Scott, 119 Pac. 295, 296, 20 Idaho, 558.

Applications for orders directing issuance of executions against the wages of defendant debtors are not "motions" within Code Civ. Proc. § 3236, authorizing the award of costs on motion. Brodie v. O'Donnell, 130 N. Y. Supp. 805, 806, 71 Misc. Rep. 530.

The district court at chambers has jurisdiction to open a judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 83; the application being a motion within section 556 which defines "motion" as an application for an order addressed to the court or a judge in vacation. Taylor v. Woodbury, 120 Pac. 367, 368, 86 Kan. 236.

An application for suit money in a divorce action should be treated as a motion within Code, § 3833, authorizing motions to be supported by affidavit which may be considered as testimony on the hearing. Mengel v. Mengel (Iowa) 138 N. W. 495, 500.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2092, defining a motion as an application for an order, and section 1841, requiring motions to contain a written specification of the reasons on which they are founded, a motion possessing these requisites may be embodied as well in a brief in the Supreme Court as on a separate piece

Under Local Improvement Act, § 3 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 24, § 543), providing that copies of the ordinance, the recommendation of the board, and the estimate of cost, certified under seal, must be attached to the petition, but that failure to so file them shall not affect the jurisdiction of the court to act on the petition, but, if it shall appear that such copies have not been attached, then, on motion of any objector for that purpose, on or before appearance day, the entire petition shall be dismissed, merely filing objections to the confirmation of the assessment, one of which objections was that the copies were not attached under seal without calling the attention of the court to them in some way, is not a "motion" within the statute, since a motion is an application made to the court, and the filing of the paper in the office of the clerk is not such a motion. City of Marengo v. Eichler, 91 N. E. 758, 759, 245 Ill. 47.

The words "motion" and "application," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 686, declaring that, notwithstanding the death of a party after judgment, execution may issue in case of the death of the judgment creditor or "application" of his executor, administrator or successor in interest, and section 685 declaring that judgments may be enforced after five years from the date of its entry by leave of court on "motion," have the same signification, and on the death of a judgment creditor his administratrix is not required to institute an action at law to enforce the judgment but is entitled to an execution on "motion." Weldon v. Rogers, 90 Pac. 1063, 1063, 151 Cal. 432.

A judge may be disqualified for bias and prejudice to sit on a motion for new trial when such disqualification is invoked pending the motion and before the day of hearing; such motion being a "motion," within the statute providing for such disqualification on the filing of an affidavit by any party to an "action, motion or proceeding" at any time before the day fixed for the hearing of such "action, motion, or proceeding." State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court of Lewis and Clarke County, 82 Pac. 789, 790, 33 Mont. 138, 8 Ann. Cas. 762.

Same—Notice of motion

An application to change the place of trial of an action commenced in the wrong county is not a motion within Code Civ. Proc. § 1005, providing for service of written notice of a motion, though under section 1010 the action of the court on a demand for a change of venue is an order, and though the application made on the demand is designated a motion, but the motion goes on the calendar to be called for hearing in the regular order of business. Bohn v. Bohn, 116 Pac. 568, 569, 16 Cal. App. 179.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON PLEADING

A motion to dismiss the action and quash the attachment and levy therein, based on affidavits and files and records in the case, is not within Mills' Ann. Code § 387, declaring that decisions on "motions based on the pleadings," etc., shall be taken as a part of the record without being made such by bill of exceptions, and is not a part of the record, unless embodied in a bill of exceptions. Everett v. Wilson, 83 Pac. 211, 212, 34 Colo. 476.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

A motion for a new trial is, in this state, a statutory remedy, and can only be invoked in the manner, within the time, and upon the grounds provided in the statute. The losing party must pursue the requirements of the statute, or else he cannot avail himself of the remedy. State ex rel. City of Walkerville v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 74 Pac. 414, 415, 29 Mont. 176.

A "motion for a new trial" is not intended as evidence of previous action by the court. It is a proceeding taken by a party to a cause after verdict; its purpose being to secure a new trial on account of alleged errors which it assumes to designate that may have occurred on the trial or in the proceedings in pais, as distinguished from proceedings evidenced by the record proper, the errors in which are reached by motions in arrest of judgment. Keigans v. State, 41 South. 886, 894, 52 Fla. 57 (citing Sedgwick v. Dawkins, 18 Fla. 335; Murray v. State, 9 Fla. 246).

The "motion for a new trial" is a remedy accorded to a party for the correction by the trial court of injustice done by the verdict of a jury. It is one of the most important rights which a party to a jury trial has. It is a right to invoke the discretion of the court to decide whether the injustice of the verdict is such that he ought to have an opportunity to take the case before another jury. It is the only method by which the weight of the evidence can be reviewed. Massey v. State, 39 South. 790, 791, 50 Fla. 109.

MOTION FOR NONSUIT

A motion for nonsuit is a general one, and only challenges the general sufficiency of the evidence; that is, says, in effect, there is a total failure of evidence. Upon a motion of this kind the only question raised is whether there is any evidence tending to prove the crime charged, not whether the evidence fails in some particular matters. State v. Eubank, 74 Pac. 378, 33 Wash. 293 (citing State v. Hyde, 61 Pac. 719, 22 Wash. 551).

A motion for nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case is tantamount to a demurrer to the evidence on the ground that it is insufficient to establish one or more of the material issues devolving upon the plaintiff to prove, and that the cause therefore should not be submitted to the jury, and where defendant offers no evidence after the denial of the motion, and the plaintiff moves for a directed verdict, the court may direct the verdict; there being some evidence to sustain plaintiff's case, as both parties have waived the right to a jury trial by submitting the case to the court. Patty v. Salem Flouring Mills Co., 98 Pac. 521, 522, 53 Or. 350.

A motion to dismiss in a justice's court on the ground that plaintiff has failed to prove his case is in effect a "motion for a nonsuit," and the question presented on a motion for a nonsuit it is a question of law. Smith v. Superior Court of Napa County, 84 Pac. 54, 55, 2 Cal. App. 529 (citing Donahue v. Gallavan, 43 Cal. 576).

MOTION FOR REHEARING

The words "motion for a rehearing," as used in the statute relating to appeals, are to be construed broadly as including any motion involving a setting aside or modification of the judgment actually rendered by the court, inclusive both of the motion for a rehearing, strictly so called, and those motions for the modification of a judgment, but not for a reargument of the case, which have come to be termed "motions in the nature of a motion for a rehearing." Ott v. Boring, 111 N. W. 833, 834, 181 Wis. 472, 11 Ann. Cas. 857.

MOTION TO AMEND

See Amend.

MOTION TO DIRECT VERDICT

A motion for verdict is considered in law as in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, and on a motion for a verdict the province of the court is not to weigh the evidence and ascertain where the preponderance is, but it is limited to a determination as to the existence of evidence from which, if true, it may be reasonably inferred that the fact affirmed exists, excluding the effect of all modifying or contrary evidence. Bass v. Rublee, 57 Atl. 965, 966, 76 Vt. 395.

A motion by defendant at the close of plaintiff's testimony, reciting that plaintiff had failed to allege or prove certain specified things, "wherefore defendant moves the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant," was not a "demurrer to the evidence" but a "motion to direct a verdict," and the interposition of the same did not preclude defendant from introducing defensive evidence after it was overruled. Woldert Grocery Co. v. Veltman (Tex.) 83 S. W. 224.

MOTION TO DISMISS

"A 'motion to dismiss' is the equivalent of a general demurrer, and may be made at the trial term, if the petition is fatally defective; but such a motion cannot reach mere defects in pleading, such as may be cured by appropriate amendment." Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Hobbs & Livingston, 49 S. E. 783, 784, 122 Ga. 20.

"A 'motion to dismiss' and a demurrer are not interchangeable. The former can be used to abate an action only when it is apparent from the record that the court has no jurisdiction. The latter admits the jurisdiction but attacks the pleadings." Littelfield v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 71 Atl. 657, 660, 104 Me. 126.

MOTION TO QUASH

A motion to quash the writ in habeas corpus amounts to a demurrer, and, if denied and excepted to, may be urged on appeal, though issues were joined and trial had, providing the proceeding is one which is appealable. Bleakley v. Barclay, 89 Pac. 906, 912, 75 Kan. 462, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 230.

A "motion to quash" an indictment may be made when there is a defect apparent upon the face of the record. Lindsey v. State, 69 N. E. 126, 128, 69 Ohio St. 215.

MOTION TO SET ASIDE JUDGMENT

As part of record, see Record.

MOTION TO STRIKE OUT

A motion to strike seeks an order of court of less dignity than a judgment, while a demurrer raises an issue at law and seeks a trial and judgment on that issue. A motion to strike a petition might lie against a frivolous pleading, a second petition departing from the first, or a sham pleading, or against trifling, nugatory, redundant, or irrelevant matter, or matter of duplicity, but it cannot fill the office of a demurrer on challenging demurrable defects in the petition. Ewing v. Vernon County, 116 S. W. 518, 519, 216 Mo. 681.

A "motion to strike" is applicable where a pleading, either as a whole or any part of it, is so framed as to prejudice, or embarrass, or delay a fair trial, and is thus distinguished from a demurrer which goes to a pleading as a whole for insufficiency. If the answer to an alternative writ of mandamus is wholly irrelevant and impedes a fair trial of the cause, it may be stricken on motion, while, if it is wholly insufficient as a pleading, a demurrer will lie. State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 44 South. 230, 236, 53 Fla. 711.

MOTIVE

See Improper Motive.

As consideration, see Consideration.

"In the sense of the criminal law, 'motive' has been well enough defined as that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge in a criminal act, and it is something that may be resorted to as a legitimate help arriving at the ultimate act in question." Thompson v. United States, 144 Fed. 14, 75 C. C. A. 172, 7 Ann. Cas. 62.

In murder, "motive" is the impulse or purpose that induces the murderer to kill his victim. Where it is demonstrated that the defendant murdered the deceased, no question of motive need arise. State v. Hyde, 181 S. W. 316, 322, 234 Mo. 200, Ann. Cas. 1915, 191.

"Motive" means reason, cause, inducement, and incentive to do the acts and things charged in the indictment. Ball v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 956, 960, 125 Ky. 6. Gambrell v. Commonwealth, 118 S. W. 448, 130 Ky. 513.

"Motive" is an inferential fact, and may be inferred, not merely from the attendant and surrounding circumstances, but, in conjunction with these, all previous occurrences having reference to and connected with the commission of the offense." State v. Boardman, 86 Pac. 43, 48, 12 Idaho, 424 (quoting Wall v. State, 4 South. 686, 85 Ala. 7, 7 Am. Rep. 17).

Intent distinguished

"Intent," in its legal sense, is quite distinct from "motive." It is defined as the purpose to use a particular means to effect a certain result. "Motive" is the reason which leads the mind to desire that result. Ball v. State, 97 N. W. 566, 570, 120 Wis. 135.

"Motive" must be distinguished from "intent." "Motive" is the moving power which impels an action for a definite result. It is that which incites or stimulates a person to do an act. "Motive" is not an essential element of a crime, and a good motive does not prevent an act from being a crime. People ex rel. Hegeman v. Corrigan, 87 N. E. 779, 195 N. Y. 1 (quoting People v. Molineux, 61 N. E. 286, 296, 168 N. Y. 264, 297, 62 R. A. 193; Clark, Cr. Law, § 14).

MOTOR VEHICLE

As wagon, see Wagon.

Running, registration, and license of motor vehicle within police power, see Police Power.

The Maryland Statute (Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 56, § 180) provides that whenever the term "motor vehicle" is used in statute it shall be construed to include automobiles, locomobiles, and all other vehicles propelled otherwise than by muscular power, except those running on rails. Fletcher v. Dixon, 68 Atl. 875, 878, 107 Md. 420.

A motor cycle is a "motor vehicle" within the meaning of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1905, p. 287, Act No. 196, providing for the registration and identification of such vehicles, and regulating their use, and defining the same (section 1) to mean "all vehicles propelled by power, other than muscular power, except traction engines and such motor vehicles as run only upon rails or tracks." People v. Smith, 120 N. W. 581, 582, 166 Mich. 173, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.

A statute requiring the licensing of operators of automobiles and "motor cycles," and defining them as all vehicles propelled by other than muscular power, except railroad and railway cars, and motor vehicles running only upon rails or tracks, and road rollers, includes a road locomotive or traction engine used to draw cars. Emerson v. Roy Granite Co. v. Pearson, 64 Atl. 582, 74 N. H. 22.

MOUNTED

In machine construction, the expression "mounted on" seems to have an ordinary meaning. The thing mounted upon another must be borne or supported by it. Mere riding in or over another in a slot for the purpose, although operating in connection therewith, is not equivalent to being mounted thereon. In re Duncan, 28 App. D. C. 457, 80.

MOUTH ORGAN

As musical instrument, see Musical Instrument.

MOVABLE

The word "movable," as applied to property, is defined as "that which may be lifted, carried, drawn, turned, or conveyed, or in any way made to change place or position." Monarch Laundry v. Westbrook, 63 S. E. 1070, 1072, 109 Va. 382.

"Movables" are converted into immovables by destination, when placed by the owner of a tract of land upon it "for its service and improvement." Civ. Code, art. 468. Hence it would seem that when from any cause a "movable" ceases to be of service to a tract of land, or is detached from a building or improvement of which it formed a part as an accessory, there is no longer ground for a claim that such "movable" appertains to realty. Polse v. Triche, 37 South. 875, 113 La. 915.

The lease required the lessee of rooms in an office building to surrender the premises in as good condition as reasonable use permitted, and provided that all alterations, additions, or improvements made by either party, except movable office furniture put in by the lessee, should be surrendered to the lessor as a part of the premises. The lessee removed some of the permanent partitions with the lessor's consent, agreeing to restore them at the termination of the lease, and constructed temporary partitions, which did not extend to the ceiling, and were lightly nailed to the floor and walls, and at the termination of the lease the permanent partitions were restored. Held, that the reasonable intention of the parties was the test of whether the fixtures were annexed to the realty, and the word "improvements" alone, though of wider meaning than "fixtures," did not include the temporary partitions; and, construing the word in connection with the exceptions in the lease, and in view of the intention shown thereby that such partitions should not be permanently annexed, they were not "improvements," but were "movable office furniture," within the meaning of the lease, and removable by the lessee. United Booking Offices v. Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 216, 217, 65 Misc. Rep. 31.

Where, in a press for making screw insulators, an essential element, to differentiate the prior art, is a rotary table or its equivalent to support the molds and carry them in a fixed and predetermined path to and from other parts of the machine, by which the process involved is carried out, the specification of a "movable mold adapted to travel," although under some circumstances competent to imply a structural arrangement by which the mold is moved back and forth mechanically, in a predetermined way, between designated points, the specific means employed for doing so in the patent in suit being of the essence of the invention, a claim in which it is not made an element of the combination is invalid, as being too broad; or if, disregarding this, the omitted element is read into the claim as being implied, it will also be bad where, as here, it thereby duplicates another claim. Novelty Glass Mfg. Co. v. Brookfield, 170 Fed. 946, 956, 95 C. O. A. 516.

MOVE

The word "moved," as applied to a change of one's residence, may or may not, according to circumstances, warrant an inference of a permanent change. Dixon v. Dixon, 66 Atl. 597, 598, 72 N. J. Eq. 588.

MOVE SLOW SIGNAL

A "move slow signal" is one calling for a slow and gradual movement of the train. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Higgins, 99 S. W. 200, 201, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

MOVED BY HAND

In Code Pub. Gen. Laws Md. art. 83, § 11, exempting from execution all tools or other mechanical instruments or appliances moved or worked by hand or foot necessary to the practice of any trade or profession and used in the practice thereof, the expression "moved or worked by hand or foot" evidently applies only to machinery, and the governing idea of the section seems to be that the articles exempted are those necessary to the practice of the trade or profession, not moved by steam, electricity, or other motive power than hand or foot. Steiner v. Marshall, 140 Fed. 710, 712, 72 C. C. A. 103.

A freight car which was being taken to a repair shop to be repaired was not within Rev. Laws, c. 111, §§ 203, 209, prohibiting a railroad company, in "moving traffic," from hauling a car not equipped with an automatic coupler. Taylor v. Boston & M. R. R., 74 N. E. 591, 188 Mass. 390.

MRS.

In the absence of a statute, parties to a litigation must be designated by name, and not merely by description of the person, and the designation "Mrs." is not a name, but usually distinguishes the person referred to as a married woman. Feld v. Loftis, 88 N. E. 281, 283, 240 Ill. 105; Uhllein v. Gladieux, 78 N. E. 363, 365, 74 Ohio St. 232.

The prefix "Mrs.," before the name of a party in a pleading, indicates that the party is a female, but leaves it doubtful whether she is married or single (using the word "single" in a sense broad enough to include a divorced person). Wrightsville & T. R. Co. v. Vaughan, 71 S. E. 691, 693, 9 Ga. App. 371.

Where the back of a railroad mileage book contained a line for the signature of the purchaser, preceded by a printed M., which was to be followed either by the designation Mr. or Mrs., such designation was a mere matter of courtesy, although intended to show the sex of the purchaser, and a conductor should not refuse to accept mileage where he knows that through some error, a book purchased by plaintiff, a woman, read "Mr." instead of "Mrs." Parish v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 85 N. E. 153, 154, 192 N. Y. 353.

MUCH

See As much as.

The word "many," in a provision of a city charter that notice of the introduction of an ordinance shall be published at least as many as ten days before the adoption of such ordinance, meant the same as though the word "much" had been used, and required merely that the notice be published ten days before the action was taken, but did not require that it be published every day for days. Smith v. Atlanta, 51 S. E. 741, 123 Ga. 877.

MUCK BAR

"'Muck bar' is more advanced than iron, for it is the product of pig iron after its conversion into wrought iron in the puddling furnace. But to make muck bar wrought iron is rolled through a set of rolls. This rolled iron comes from the rolls in a form. . . . Knight's Mechanical Dictionary defines 'muck bar' as 'bar iron which has passed once through the rolls.'" Moorehead Bros. & Co. v. United States, 127 F. 779, 780.

MUCKER

A "mucker" is one who removes ore, rock, and debris thrown down by mine. His work must be done in part, at least, ahead of the timbering, which is to afford protection against the falling of ore, rock, and debris. Smith v. Hecla Min. Co., 84 Pac. 779, 780, 38 Wash. 454; Bird v. Utah Gold Min. Co., 84 Pac. 256-260, 2 Cal. A. 674.

MUD

"Muttler," anything used to muffle wrap up, is an ordinary English word, which fitly describes a neck scarf. The name "mufflet," used as a trade-mark, is not, under the trade-mark law, preclusive of the word "muffler." Hygienic Fleeced Underwear Co. v. Way, 137 Fed. 592, 595, 70 C. C. A. 553 (Circuit Cent. Dict.).

A "muffler" is a device attached to the exhaust pipe of a gas engine and through which the exhaust passes, used to muffle or deaden the sound of the explosion. Wolfe v. Des Moines Elevator Co., 98 N. W. 301, 303, 126 Iowa, 659.

MULATTO

A person too dark to be white and too bright to be a griff is a "mulatto." State v. Treadaway, 52 South. 500, 508, 126 La. 303, 139 Am. St. Rep. 514, 20 Ann. Cas. 297.

MULCT

The words "mulct," "punishment," and "fine," as used in the decisions of the Supreme Court of Alabama in referring to the statutory action for death, given by Code Ala. 1896, § 27, are not used in the sense that is ordinarily attached to such words in the domain of criminal law, and therefore such statute is not a penal one, within the rule that one state will not enforce the penal laws of another state. Whitlow v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., 84 S. W. 618, 620, 114 Tenn. 344, 68 L. R. A. 503 (citing Southern Ry. Co. v. Bush, 26 South. 168, 174, 122 Ala. 470, 488, 489).

MULCT TAXES

The term "mulct taxes," in Code, § 2433, etc., imposing "mulct taxes" on dealers in intoxicating liquors, and providing that the tax shall be a lien on the property where the liquor is sold, is not a license for the privilege of carrying on the business of selling intoxicating liquors, but is a tax without legalizing the business, and its imposition is levied pursuant to the taxing power and may be collected as other taxes. Newton v. McKay, 102 N. W. 827, 828, 130 Iowa, 596.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS

Duplicity synonymous, see Duplicity.

A bill is generally understood to be multifarious when distinct and independent matters are improperly joined in one bill, and thereby confounded, as for example, where several perfectly distinct and unconnected matters against one defendant are united in one bill. Baumgartner v. Bradt, 69 N. E. 912, 913, 207 Ill. 345; State Trust Co. v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co., 128 Fed. 129 (citing Story, Eq. Pl. [10th Ed.] par. 271).

While the rule as to multifariousness may be said to be one of convenience, and there may not be any inflexible rule as to what constitutes fatal multifariousness, yet, broadly speaking, "multifariousness" may be defined as the improper joining in one bill distinct and independent matters. Murrell v. Peterson, 49 So. 31, 34, 57 Fla. 480.

A bill is multifarious when it states distinct, separate, and independent equities that can better be adjudicated in more than one suit. Arcadia Mercantile Co. v. Branning, 52 South. 588, 589, 59 Fla. 428.

"Multifariousness" is the improper joining in one bill of distinct and independent unconnected matters against one defendant or the demand of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants. Martin v. Brown, 59 S. E. 302, 306, 129 Ga. 562.

Strictly speaking, misjoinder of parties plaintiff is not "multifariousness." Breimeyer v. Star Bottling Co., 117 S. W. 119, 122, 136 Mo. App. 84.

A bill is multifarious when it improperly joins several defendants in charging matters of a distinct nature. Baker v. Berry Hill Mineral Springs Co., 65 S. E. 656, 658, 109 Va. 776.

While not entirely synonymous, the common-law term "misjoinder" and the equity term "multifarious" have much in common. They each token improper joinder, and both have reference to the confusing result wrought thereby. Neither goes to the substance of complainant's claim, but merely asserts improper joinder of causes of action. Since these terms go only to form, and not to substance, objections for either or both are not defenses within the accepted meaning of that term. Skains v. Barnes, 58 South. 268, 270, 168 Ala. 426.

"To render a bill 'multifarious,' it must contain, not only separate and distinct matters, but such that each entitles the complainant to separate equitable relief. It is not so if it be single as to the subject-matter and object thereof, and the relief sought, if all the defendants are connected, though differently, with the whole subject of dispute." Braun & Ferguson Co. v. Paulson (Tex.) 95 S. W. 617, 619 (quoting and adopting definition in Love v. Keowne, 58 Tex. 191, and citing Skipwith v. Hurt, 60 S. W. 423, 94 Tex. 322; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Ponder, 18 S. W. 152, 82 Tex. 653).

By "multifariousness" is meant the improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them, as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters, perfectly distinct and unconnected, against one defendant, or the demand of several matters, of a distinct and independent nature, against several defendants in the same bill. United States v. Rea-Read Mill & Elevator Co., 171 Fed. 501, 515 (quoting and adopting definitions in Walker v. Powers, 104 U. S. 245, 26 L. Ed. 729).

The objection of "multifariousness," as containing different causes of action, is not supported unless "two things occur: First, the grounds of suit must be different; second, each ground must be sufficient, as stated, to sustain a bill." Howe & Davidson Co. v. Haugan, 140 Fed. 182, 184 (citing Brown v. Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 128 U. S. 403, 411, 412, 32 L. Ed. 468).

A bill may contain equity and not be "multifarious," which is generally understood to indicate a case where a party is brought in as a defendant on a record, with a large portion of which, and in the case made by which, he had no connection whatever. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Prouty, 43 South. 352, 354, 149 Ala. 71 (quoting and adopting the definition in Adams v. Jones, 68 Ala. 117, and citing Mayfield's Dig. 290, §§ 2104, 2105).

A joinder of two causes of action against the same party for the same relief, one against him as an individual and one against him as an officer, does not make the bill "multifarious." No bill is multifarious which presents a common point of litigation, the decision of which will affect the entire subject-matter and settle the rights of the parties to the suit. Rogers v. Penobscot Mining Co., 154 Fed. 606, 614, 83 C. C. A. 380.

The vice of "multifariousness" is the union of causes of action which, or of parties whose claims, it is either impracticable or inconvenient to hear and adjudicate in a single suit. Where it is practical and convenient for the court and the parties to deal with the claims or causes of action presented, and the parties joined by a petition, in one suit as in many, the pleading is not multifarious and should be sustained. The union of several causes of action for the same demand or relief in a bill or petition does not constitute multifariousness. The joinder of a cause of action to enforce a mechanic's lien and a cause of action to enforce an equitable lien upon the same property, to secure the same debt, in a bill or petition to enforce the preferential payment of the debt, does not render the pleading multifarious; it being more convenient and practicable to try and adjudicate these causes of action in one suit than in several. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 137 Fed. 26, 31-33, 71 C. C. A. 1 (citing Stephens v. McCargo, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 502, 504, 6 L. Ed. 145; Gerrish v. Towne, 3 Gray [69 Mass.] 82; Halsey v. Goddard, 86 Fed. 25, 28; Chaffin v. Hull, 39 Fed. 887, 889, 891; Davis v. Berry, 106 Fed. 761; Barcus v. Gates, 89 Fed. 783, 791, 32 C. C. A. 337, 345; 1 Daniel, Ch. Pl. & Prac. *343, *344 [6th Am. Ed.]; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 531, 532, p. 461 [10th Ed.]; Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Prac. § 108, p. 145).

"A bill in equity is said to be 'multifarious' when distinct and independent matters are joined therein. If the subject-matter in the main relates to one transaction around which the others cluster, and each party has an interest in some matters in the suit, and they are connected, even though all the parties do not have an interest in all the matters in the suit, the bill is not multifarious." Where complainants were all interested in a suit to compel specific performance of a contract to dispose of real and personal property by will, there was no misjoinder of parties complainant, because they were not all interested to the same extent. Stewart v. Smith, 91 Pac. 667, 669, 6 Cal. App. 152 (quoting and adopting definition in Whitehead Sweet, 58 Pac. 376, 126 Cal. 70).

The essence of "multifariousness" is pleading is the improperly blending of distinct demands or independent matters in one bill. A bill alleging that defendant H. was the holder of notes variously indorsed by plaintiffs, representing a single transaction consisting of a series of transactions, consisting of loans and discounts at usurious rates and usurious renewals, that among such notes were two indorsed by defendant N., which were given to H. as collateral without further consideration, that H., in renewing the loans, had purposely so mingled his usurious transactions as to make it difficult, without a full accounting with him, to determine the amount of the legal indebtedness to him either of plaintiff or defendant N. on the notes bearing their names, and prayed for such an accounting, was not objectionable for "multifariousness," in so far as defendant N. and H. were concerned. Horner v. Nitsch, 63 Atl. 1052, 105-103 Md. 498.

"Multifariousness" is avoided if each of the parties is concerned in matters materially provided they are allied to or connected with the others. So, where some defendant may be a necessary party to some essential portion of the relief growing out of the entire controversy, the objection will not obtain. A bill is not "multifarious" which seeks to have an accounting on contracts with one of the defendants, where another defendant is joined under allegations that the two have wrongfully taken the funds equitably belonging to the complainant, and fraudulently sought to cover them up by investing them in lands, taking the legal title thereto in themselves, and the bill seeks to fasten a trust thereon for the use of the complainant. McMullen Lumber Co. v. Strother, 136 Fed. 295, 306, 6 C. C. A. 433 (citing Barcus v. Gates, 89 Fed. 783, 32 C. C. A. 337; Brown v. Guaranty Trust & Safe-Deposit Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 12 U. S. 403, 412, 82 L. Ed. 468; Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 64, 29 C. C. A. 14; Curran v. Campion, 85 Fed. 70, 29 C. C. A. 26; Weiss v. Bay State Gas Co., 91 Fed. 940).

"By 'multifariousness in a bill,' as defined by Story, Eq. Pl. § 271, is meant: 'The improperly joining in one bill of distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them; as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters, perfectly distinct and unconnected, against one defendant, or the demand of several matters of distinct and independent nature against several defendants in the same bill.'" There is no fatal misjoinder of causes of action in equity in any bill which presents a common point of litigation, the decision of which will affect the whole subject-matter and will settle the rights of all the parties to the suit. It is not indispensable that all the parties should have an interest in all the matters contained in the suit. It will be sufficient if each party has an interest in some material matters in the suit, and that they are connected with the others. Where an insurance corporation issued a large number of policies and contracted to pay a certain sum to each policy holder, together with an equitable portion of a profit fund, to be made up from gains and profits from lapses and other sources, and, when such policies were outstanding, the company transferred its assets to another company, disengaging itself from performing its contracts, and went out of business, and its successor, after issuing similar policies, transferred its assets to a third, and the third to a fourth, company, the holders of policies in the transferring companies were entitled to join in a bill in equity for some form of relief with respect to the assets transferred as a trust fund, and where the bill contained allegations tending to negative any novation to join all the companies as defendants. Watson v. National Life & Trust Co., 162 Fed. 7, 10, 88 C. C. A. 380 (quoting and adopting Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 55, 64, 29 C. C. A. 14; Brown v. Guarantee Trust Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 130, 128 U. S. 403, 412, 32 L. Ed. 468).

It is difficult to give any distinct definition of "multifariousness," and the cases so nearly approach each other that it is not easy to distinguish them. A learned author states that "multifariousness means the joining together improperly in one bill of complaint of distinct and independent matters and thereby confounding them"; also that "a claim against two or more defendants cannot be properly united in the same bill with a separate claim against one only." Our own court has said that it "is generally understood to include those cases 'where a party is brought as a defendant on the record,' with a large portion of which, and in the case made by which, he has no connection whatever." A bill for specific performance of a contract for the assignment of an interest of a partner in the firm property, and for an accounting from one who had done business with the assignor in violation of the provisions of the assignment, and for an accounting of the firm business by the other partners, is multifarious. Bentley v. Barnes, 47 South. 159, 161, 151 Ala. 659 (citing 1 Beach, Mod. Eq. Prac. §§ 115, 121; Adams v. Jones, 68 Ala. 117, 119).

"Multifariousness" is incapable of exact definition. The objection is frequently a matter of discretion, and every case must, in a measure, be governed by what is convenient and equitable under its own peculiar facts, subject to the recognized principles of equity jurisprudence. It is always proper to exercise this discretion in such manner as to discourage future litigation about the same subject-matter, and to prevent a multiplicity of suits, but never to do plain violence to the maxim that "courts of equity delight to do justice and not by halves." All that can be done in each particular case, as it arises, is to consider whether it comes nearer to the decisions where the objection has been held fatal or to those where it has not been so held. Complainant purchased a portion of a plat of ground, all of which originally belonged to his vendor, W., who had previously sold another portion of the plat to G., who had taken possession only of the portion so purchased; W. retaining the balance. As the result of inaccuracies and misdescriptions in each of the deeds, there was a confusion of boundaries on the face of the paper titles, and G., claiming that her deed conveyed the land claimed by complainant, instituted ejectment against him to recover the lot of which he was in possession, whereupon complainant filed a bill against G. and W. and wife, seeking to correct the errors and misdescriptions in both deeds, to enjoin the ejectment suit, and for general relief. Held, that the bill was properly maintainable to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and was therefore not demurrable for multifariousness. Sicard v. Guylou, 41 South. 474, 147 Ala. 239 (citing Adams v. Jones, 68 Ala. 117; 1 Daniell, Ch. Pl. & Prac. 334, note 2; Boyd v. Hunter, 44 Ala. 705).

There is no fixed or inflexible rule by which to determine whether or not a bill is "multifarious." The test must be applied to the facts of each particular case, in the light of the general principles regulating singleness in pleading, which forbid the blending in the same suit entirely distinct and separate matters relating to different parties. A bill to reach property fraudulently conveyed is not multifarious because it joins as defendants with the debtor a number of persons alleged to have severally assisted him in covering up separate and distinct portions of his property by accepting transfers thereof. Regester v. Regester, 65 Atl. 12, 13, 104 Md. 359.

As to whether a bill is "multifarious" depends on the particular fact of each case and is largely within the sound discretion of the court. It is not indispensable that all the parties to a suit in equity should have an interest in all the matters contained in the suit, but it is sufficient if each party has an interest in some material matters in the suit and they are connected with the others. In a suit for the appointment of a receiver of a bankrupt prior to adjudication for the purpose of taking possession of property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed to various relatives of the bankrupt, the bill was not "multifarious" because many claimants were joined who were the various alleged fraudulent transferees of the property. Horne-Gaylord Co. v. Miller & Bennett, 147 Fed. 295, 298 (citing United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 128 U. S. 315, 32 L. Ed. 450; Walker v. Powers, 104

"'Multifariousness,' abstractly, has been properly said to be incapable of a distinct definition, but is generally understood to include those cases 'where a party is brought as a defendant on the record, with a large portion of which, and in the case made by which, he has no connection whatever.'" A bill against a cotton compress company and a carrier for discovery and the value of cotton damaged or lost is not multifarious because, on an accounting, it may result that one of the defendants may be shown to be liable to complainant on one or more items for which the other is not, and with which it is in no wise connected. Gulf Compress Co. v. Jones Cotton Co., 47 South. 251, 254, 157 Ala. 32 (citing Adams v. Jones, 68 Ala. 117, 119).

A stockholder's bill to compel the cancellation of an alleged illegal issue of the corporation's common stock and the rescission of a transfer thereof and for a receiver to conduct the corporation's affairs for a reasonable time and an injunction restraining the transferee of the stock from voting the same as stockholders' meetings was not demurrable for multifariousness, under the rule that whether a bill is "multifarious" is a question of discretion, and that the bill will not be so held where there are only separate claims to the same individual subject-matter. Howard v. National Telephone Co., 182 Fed. 215, 220.

A bill filed by the United States to cancel for fraud a large number of separate conveyances made by individual Indians to the several defendants, and having no connection with each other, the suit being on behalf of the various grantors, is multifarious. United States v. Allen, 171 Fed. 907, 928 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4616).

A bill by a judgment creditor against the debtor and others to set aside various conveyances by which it is alleged the debtor fraudulently transferred his property to different corporations organized for the purpose, and of which he owned the stock, the purpose being to cover it up and place it beyond the reach of execution, through which transfers the other defendants have acquired or claimed some interest in different portions of the property, has but a single object, which is to reach and subject the property, is based on a series of transactions forming one course of dealing, and is not demurrable for "multifariousness," although the interests of the other parties defendant are separate and distinct. Where the object of the suit is single, and it happens that different persons have separate interests in distinct questions which arise out of the single object, it necessarily follows that such different persons must be brought before the court in order that the suit may conclude the whole subject; and in order to determine whether a suit is multifarious, or, in other words, contains distinct matters, the inquiry is, not whether each defendant is connected with every branch of the cause, but whether the plaintiff's bill seeks relief in respect of matters which are in their nature separate and distinct. Fowler v. Palmer, 160 Fed. 1, 16, 17, 18, 19, 87 C. A. 157.

A bill in equity, which charges: (1) That certain real estate was bought for the plaintiff corporation by its president, and was paid for in whole or in part with its funds or with the proceeds of its stock unlawfully issued and sold, and not properly accounted for, and that its president fraudulently caused the real estate to be conveyed to his son, one of the defendants, through whom several other defendants, but not all the defendants have legal or equitable titles, which they should convey to the plaintiff; (2) that a part of the above defendants, and two other defendants, have unlawfully received stock in the plaintiff corporation, which they should account for to it; and (3) that still another defendant has unlawfully received and sold the stock of the plaintiff, in part, at least other than that mentioned in the preceding class, for the proceeds of which he should account to it—is bad for "multifariousness." Camden Land Co. v. Lewis, 63 Atl. 523, 526, 101 Me. 78.

MULTIPHASE SYSTEM

Technically the "multiphase system," as used in the transmission of electric power, consists of the use of two or more alternate currents of equal period, but differing in phase. Harrison v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry., 100 N. W. 451, 452, 137 Mich. 78.

MULTIPLICITY

MULTIPLICITY OF PROCEEDINGS

The continuation of a pending suit for infringement of a patent, and the taking of testimony therein by complainant after it has filed a petition for a reissue on the ground of the invalidity of the patent in suit, constitutes a "multiplication of proceedings," so as to unreasonably and vexatiously increase the costs, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 982, and on a dismissal of the suit after the granting of a reissue defendant is entitled thereunder to a special allowance commensurate with the expense occasioned thereby. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Yankee Film Co., 192 Fed. 134, 135.

MULTIPLICITY OF SUITS

A "multiplicity of suits" does not mean a multitude of suits, the term not applying merely because each of several parties jointly and severally liable may be independently ued, but where one may be sued several times respecting the same subject-matter in its entirety, or some element or elements thereof. Illinois Steel Co. v. Schroeder, 113 N. W. 51, 55, 133 Wis. 561, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 339, 126 Am. St. Rep. 977.

MULTITUDE

The law of trespass or forcible entry requires a demonstration of force sufficient to create a reasonable apprehension that the party in possession must yield to avoid a breach of the peace being committed, either by a "multitude" or by weapons, and three persons have been held sufficient to constitute a multitude. State v. Davis, 13 S. E. 883, 99 N. C. 811, 14 L. R. A. 206.

MUNICIPAL

The term "municipal," as commonly used, is appropriately applied to all corporations exercising governmental functions, either general or special. Merchants' Nat. Bank of San Diego v. Escondido Irr. Dist., 77 Pac. 937, 938, 144 Cal. 329.

The word "municipal" is defined as meaning or pertaining to a city or corporation having the right to administer local government. Miller v. People, 82 N. E. 521, 523, 230 Ill. 65.

The word "municipal," as originally used in its strictness, applied to cities only, but it now has a much more extended meaning, and, when applied to corporations, the words "municipal," "political," and "public" are used interchangeably. Smith v. Board of Trustees of Robersonville Graded School, 53 S. E. 524, 527, 141 N. C. 143, 8 Ann. Cas. 529 (quoting and adopting definition in Currier v. District Tp. of Sioux City, 17 N. W. 191, 62 Iowa, 102).

The term "municipal" relates not only to a town or city as a territorial entity but also pertains to local self-government in general, and in a broader sense to the internal government of a state. A town or a city is wholly a creature of the state and wholly subservient to the state, and for that reason is not strictly a corporation, as interpreted by the common law. It is rather a quasi municipal corporation. City of Augusta v. Augusta Water Dist., 63 Atl. 663, 664, 101 Me. 148 (citing Standard Dict. "municipal").

The word "municipal" appears to have been derived from "municipium," meaning a town, particularly in Italy, which possessed the right of Roman citizenship, but was governed by its own laws, a free town; and it may be thus defined: (1) Of or pertaining to a city or corporation having the right of administering local government, as municipal rights, municipal officers. (2) Of or pertaining to a state, kingdom, or nation, as municipal law, municipal offense, in contradistinction to international law or international offense—and strictly the word applies only to what belongs to a city. Laws 1905, p. 275, c. 163, creating a board, to be known as the state capitol commission, for the purpose of procuring the erection of a capitol building, and authorizing the commission to procure the erection of a building, adopt plans and specifications, etc., is not in conflict with Const. art. 3, § 26, declaring that the Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission power to perform any "municipal" function; the erection of a capitol building not being a "municipal" function, which in such case is restricted to the affairs of cities and towns. Davenport v. Elrod, 107 N. W. 883, 834, 20 S. D. 567 (citing Webst. Int. Dict. and Bouv.).

The word "municipal" applies strictly only to a city or community within a state possessing rights of self-government. Practice Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 110) § 118, which provides that appeals from and writs of error to circuit courts and the superior court of Cook county shall be taken direct to the Supreme Court in cases in which the validity of a "municipal" ordinance is involved, upon a certificate of the trial court that the public interest so requires, applies only to ordinances of cities and villages and not to ordinances of the sanitary district of Chicago. People ex rel. Mortell v. Bergman, 97 N. E. 695, 696, 253 Ill. 469.

The term "municipal officer," as used in Const. art. 16, § 6, limiting the terms of office thereof to two years, means "city officers"; the word "municipal" having its origin in the idea of a free town or city, and in its popular use is applied to cities, though in its general meaning it embodies the idea of local self-government, as distinguished from centralized government. "Municipal" may either refer to a town or a city. State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 99 Pac. 940, 941, 946, 88 Mont. 250 (quoting and adopting definition in 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4618).

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

The phrase "municipal affairs" has a meaning and a most significant one, and, as used in the organic law, referred to the internal business affairs of the municipality. Const. art. 11, § 6, provides: "Cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed and adopted by authority of this Constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." The wording of this provision shows that all matters of legislation pertaining to and bearing upon municipalities do not come within the signification of the words "municipal affairs" as used in the Constitution. Fragley v. Phelan, 58 Pac. 923, 925, 126 Cal. 383, 388.

The power to impose a license tax for revenue purposes, granted by the state to a municipality for municipal purposes, became a "municipal affair," within Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that cities and their charters shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, except in municipal affairs, and the Legislature was without authority to withdraw or modify such power. Ex parte Braun, 74 Pac. 780, 783, 141 Cal. 204.

A provision in a charter authorizing a municipality to impose and collect a license tax for purposes of municipal revenue is a "municipal affair," and within the proper scope of a municipal charter. Ex parte Jackson, 77 Pac. 457, 460, 143 Cal. 564.

The election and dismissal of teachers in the public schools are not "municipal affairs," which may, by a freeholder's charter, be regulated in a manner in conflict with that provided by the general law. Barthel v. Board of Education of City of San Jose, 95 Pac. 892, 893, 153 Cal. 376.

The amendment of Const. art. 11, § 6, by insertion of the words "except in municipal affairs," so as to protect the cities and counties and parties thereof except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, and was intended to give municipalities the sole right to regulate, control, and govern their internal conduct independent of general laws, while intended to give municipalities the sole right to regulate, control, and govern their internal conduct, independent of general laws, and this internal regulation and control by municipalities comprises the municipal affairs spoken of in the Constitution. Dinan v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 91 Pac. 806, 808, 6 Cal. App. 217 (citing Fragley v. Phelan, 58 Pac. 923, 126 Cal. 383).

The election of municipal officers is strictly a municipal affair, within Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that general laws shall not be applicable to municipalities as to matters which are strictly "municipal affairs." Socialist Party v. Uhl, 103 Pac. 181, 186, 155 Cal. 776.

The licensing of bawdy houses, and the sale of intoxicating liquors is not "municipal affairs" within Const. art. 11, § 6, declaring that "all charters, * * * except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." Farmer v. Behmer, 100 Pac. 901, 904, 9 Cal. App. 773.

The regulation and fixing of charges to be made by telephone companies doing business within a city is none the less a "municipal affair," within the jurisdiction of the city, because rates so fixed would not be uniform throughout the state; the reasonableness of the charge depending on the value of the plant, cost of maintenance and operation, which vary in different localities. The regulation of the charges of a public service corporation within the limits of the city is a "municipal affair." The streets of the city are public highways in which the people of the whole state are interested; and yet the opening and widening of streets are "municipal affairs," and the regulation of telephone rates in a city would seem to be more clearly a matter of local concern than the control of streets. Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Los Angeles, 155 Fed. 554, 560.

The construction and maintenance of telephone wires along the streets of a city and the terms and conditions under which they shall be constructed and maintained is a municipal affair within Const. art. 11, § 6, as amended in 1896, making the provision of a freeholders' charter, adopted by a city paramount to general laws enacted by the state Legislature in municipal affairs. Since the rights of a telephone company to maintain and operate a telephone line on the streets of a city is a municipal affair within Const. art. 11, § 6, making the provisions of a freeholders' charter paramount to general statutes in municipal affairs, the rights of a telephone company, using the streets of a city governed by a freeholders' charter, were not extended by Civ. Code, § 536, as re-enacted by St. 1905, p. 492, authorizing telegraph or telephone corporations to construct lines along and on any public road or highway, etc. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Pasadena, 118 Pac. 796, 802, 803, 144 Cal. 265.

Where the power to impose a license tax for revenue for municipal purposes is conferred upon a municipality, that power becomes a "municipal affair," within the meaning of those words, as used in Const. art. 11, § 6, declaring that cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this Constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws. Ex parte Helm, 77 Pac. 453, 454, 143 Cal. 553.

Under Const. art. 2, § 6, providing that the charters of cities heretofore or hereafter organized shall be subject to the general laws, except in "municipal affairs," San Francisco has power to incur a bonded indebtedness for the erection of new school houses for the acquisition of land for the purposes, and for additional land for playgrounds of established schools; they being "municipal affairs." Law v. San Francisco, 77 Pac. 1014, 1017, 144 Cal. 384.

San Diego City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 1 provides that the common council shall determine the necessity for public improvements and that where the ordinary revenues are insufficient, bonds may be issued, the proceedings for which shall be in accordance with the general laws relating to municipal bonded debts, but the charter is silent as to how money so raised shall be spent. Hence, that, in the silence of the charter, the expenditure of the money was not a "municipal affair" within Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that city charters shall be controlled by general laws, "except in municipal affairs," so that the general law followed as to the mode of issuing the bonds for the improvement, Laws 1901, c. 30, § 9, was controlling, which forbids spending such funds, except on competitive bidding. Clouse v. City of San Diego, 114 Pac. 573, 574, 159 Cal. 434.

Proceedings for annexation of territory to a city are had under Act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), a general law providing a complete scheme for annexation which, under the Constitution, controls and is superior to city charter provisions, except in "municipal affairs," annexation of territory to a city being in no sense a "municipal affair" within the Constitution; and hence an annexation was not void because the ordinance calling the special election on that question and ordering notice thereof to be given, published as provided by the act of 1889, was not published for 10 days as prescribed by the city charter for ordinances calling elections. People ex rel. Peck v. City of Los Angeles, 97 Pac. 311, 314, 154 Cal. 220.

General Municipal Incorporation Act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 893), § 862, empowering cities of the sixth class to acquire and maintain waterworks and works for light, relates to a "municipal affair," and is not special legislation because confined to cities of the sixth class. Cary v. Blodgett, 102 Pac. 668, 369, 10 Cal. App. 463.

The supplying of water by a city to outside territory, when incidental to the main purpose of supplying water to its own inhabitants is a "municipal affair" of the city, within Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that the charters of cities "except in municipal affairs" shall be controlled by general laws, and the charter of the city prevails over the general legislation embodied in Act March 27, 1897, St. 1897, p. 182, c. 121, authorizing a city, having in its supply more water than is necessary for its inhabitants, to sell the surplus, etc. City of South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co., 93 Pac. 490, 496, 152 Cal. 579.

Act March 8, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 133), providing for the care and custody of children who are likely to develop criminal tendencies, and giving additional powers to the superior courts in respect thereof, provides for an exercise of the police powers of the state through the judicial department, and its subject-matter is not embraced within "municipal affairs" as used in Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that charters of cities and towns except in municipal affairs shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, though the functions of the particular extension of the system may be exercised exclusively within incorporated cities having a freeholders' charter. Nicholl v. Koster, 108 Pac. 302, 303, 157 Cal. 416.

Act April 10, 1908 (P. L. p. 266), providing for a special election in any election district in which the Secretary of State has placed voting machines to determine upon the retention or rejection of such machines, is not in violation of the constitutional prohibition against private, local, or special acts affecting the internal affairs of municipalities. Mara v. City of Bayonne, 71 Atl. 1181, 77 N. J. Law, 288; Id., 75 Atl. 1101, 78 N. J. Law, 740.

MUNICIPAL BOND

As negotiable instrument, see Negotiable Instrument.

The term "municipal bond" imports a municipal debt or obligation. The common mind understands, from the fact that a municipal bond is issued, that a municipal debt has been created, and that the faith and good credit of the municipality issuing the bond is pledged to its payment. As used in Const. art. 16, § 5, as amended in 1894, permitting the investment of the school funds in national, state, county, municipal, or school district bonds, the term does not include bonds of a city indebted to its constitutional limit, issued under the express provisions of Laws 1901, p. 177, c. 85, for the payment of a waterworks plant, payable out of a special fund composed of a fixed per cent. of the gross receipts of the plant, and such further sum as the city may from time to time by ordinance transfer from the receipts of the plant or from its general revenue, without pledging the credit of the city. State ex rel. City of Port Townsend v. Clausen, 82 Pac. 187, 190, 192, 40 Wash. 95.

"By the term 'municipal bonds' is meant evidences of indebtedness issued by cities, incorporated towns, townships, school districts, and other corporate public bodies negotiable in form payable at a designated future time, bearing interest payable annually or semiannually, and usually having coupons attached evidencing the several installments of interest. Municipal bonds issued in the usual negotiable form and authorized by law have all the attributes of negotiable commercial paper of individuals and private corporations; they are usually made payable to bearer; they pass by delivery and, like other negotiable papers, are not subject to equities between prior holders in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value, before due, without notice of such equities." But, despite the similarity in form, county commissioners, authorized to issue new bonds to take up old ones, have no power to issue bonds to take up the promissory notes. Muskingum County Com'rs v. State, 85 N. E. 562, 566, 78 Ohio St. 287 (quoting and adopting definition in Harris, Mun. Bonds, 8).

MUNICIPAL CHARTER

See Charter.

MUNICIPAL CLAIM

Registered taxes are "municipal claims," within a statute providing for service for posting and advertisement in proceedings on a "municipal claim." Jones v. Beale, 66 Atl. 254, 217 Pa. 182.

MUNICIPAL CONTRACT

As privilege of citizen, see Privileges and Immunities.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION

Charter of, see Charter.

See, also, Municipality; Public Corporation.

Municipal corporations are mere governing bodies having charge of and jurisdiction over particular political subdivisions of the state. Uvalde Asphalt Paving Co. v. City of New York, 184 N. Y. Supp. 50, 51, 149 App. Div. 491.

A municipal corporation proper is created mainly for the interest, advantage, and convenience of the locality and its people. People v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 172, 31 Colo. 369, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23).

The term "municipal corporation" implies the organization of a certain geographical district under authority of law including within its jurisdiction and control a certain geographical area. Short v. Gouger (Tex.) 130 S. W. 267, 269.

A "municipal corporation" is one created by a government for political purposes, having subordinate and local powers of legislation; and the word "municipal" applies strictly only to a city or community within a state possessing rights of self-government. People ex rel. Mortell v. Bergman, 97 N. E. 695, 696, 253 Ill. 469.

A "municipal corporation" is a body corporate, established by law to share in the civil government of the country, but chiefly to regulate the local or internal affairs of the city, town, or district incorporated. State v. Mayor, etc., of City of Knoxville, 90 S. W. 289, 293, 115 Tenn. 175 (citing East Tennessee University v. Mayor, etc., of City of Knoxville, 6 Baxt. [65 Tenn.] 166).

The term "municipal corporations" involves the idea of a voluntary association by the inhabitants of a particular territory, sanctioned by the power of the state for the purposes of local government. But the sovereign power may, without regard to any prior agreement or action on the part of the inhabitants of the territory involved, provide for the exercise of powers, such as the election of local officers by the inhabitants, and these organizations, though public in character and partaking somewhat of the nature of a corporation, are not, strictly speaking corporations, but "quasi corporations." Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109, 1110, 1111, 132 Iowa, 533.

A municipal corporation in its historical and proper sense is the incorporation by the authority of the government of the inhabitants of a particular place or district and authorizing them in their corporate capacity to exercise subordinate specified powers legislation and regulation with respect to their local and internal concerns. This power of local government is the distinctive purpose and the distinguishing feature of a municipal corporation proper. Ex parte Simmons, 112 Pac. 951, 955, 4 Okl. Cr. 662.

A complaint, in an action for damages for a change in the grade of a street, which alleges that the defendant is a municipal corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the state, and that in a specified year the defendant committed the act causing the injury complained of, sufficiently alleges that the city which committed the act was at that time a municipal corporation and a "body politic and corporate," within Re Codes, § 3202. Drew v. City of Butte, 1 Pac. 279, 280, 44 Mont. 124.

Action for lands may not be brought in the name of the state for the use of the board of directors of a levee district, such board being under Acts 1893, p. 24, a "body politic and corporate" with power to sue, and so having the right to sue for the lands in its own name. State v. Southwestern Lumber & Timber Co., 126 S. W. 73, 75, 93 Ark. 6.

A municipal corporation is a legal institution formed by charter from sovereign power, erecting a populous community of people, and describing a certain area into a body politic and corporate, with corporate name and continuous succession, and for the purpose and with the authority of subordinate self-government and improvement and local administration of the affairs of state. Ancrum v. Camden Water Light & Ice Co., 64 S. E. 151, 154, 82 S. 284, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029.

"Municipal corporations" or governments are creatures of the law, and the warrant for their creation must be found in a valid statute or they have no legal existence. Hurlburt v. Motz, 152 S. W. 248, 250, 151 Ky. 451.

A "municipal corporation" is a creature of statute, and the adjustment of its powers and duties and its rights relative to those of the citizens is the province of the Legislature. Scott v. Village of Saratoga Springs, 115 N. Y. Supp. 796, 797, 131 App. Div. 347 (quoting MacMullen v. City of Middletown, 79 N. Y. 863, 187 N. Y. 37, 11 L. R. A. [N. S.] 391).

Municipal corporations are bodies politic vested with many political and legislative powers for local government and police regulations, established to aid the government of the state, and a municipal government has power to make more definite regulations than are usually provided by general legislation and to enforce them by appropriate penalties. City of Chicago v. Union Ice Cream Mfg. Co., 96 N. E. 872, 873, 252 Ill. 311, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 675.

"Municipal corporations" are bodies politic and corporations vested with political and legislative powers for local civil government and police regulations of the inhabitants of particular districts included in the boundaries of the corporations. They are in many respects local governments established to aid the government of the state. The necessity of their organization may be found in the density of the population of localities and the conditions incidental thereto. Town of Neola v. Reichart, 109 N. W. 5, 7, 131 Iowa, 192.

"Municipal corporations" are bodies politic, created by laws of the state for the purpose of administering the affairs of the unincorporated territory. They exercise powers of government, which are delegated to them by the Legislature, and they are subjected to certain duties. They are the auxiliaries, or the convenient instrumentalities, of the general government of the state for the purpose of municipal rule. The consideration of the grant of a charter is the benefit to the public, and their relation to the state is not contractual, in the constitutional sense, for there is no element of reciprocity, and the corporate duties are incompatible with the notion of a compact. The whole interests are the exclusive domain of the government itself, and the power of the Legislature over them is supreme and transcendent, except as restricted by the Constitution of the state. Their charters being granted for the better government of the particular districts, the right to insert such provisions as seem to best subserve the public interest would seem, from the very nature of such institutions, to be inherent. MacMullen v. City of Middletown, 79 N. E. 863, 864, 187 N. Y. 37, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391 (citing People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, 544; People v. Tweed, 63 N. Y. 207; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 511, 26 L. Ed. 197; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. [17 U. S.] 518, 4 L. Ed. 629; Cooley, Const. Lim. *pp. 191-193; Dill Mun. Corp. §§ 9, 30; Ang. & A. Corp. § 31).

"A 'municipal corporation' is, for the purposes of its creation, a government possessing, to a limited extent, sovereign powers, which in their nature are either legislative or judicial, and may be denominated 'governmental' or 'public.' The extent to which it may be proper to exercise such powers, as well as the mode of their exercise by the corporation, within the limits prescribed by the law creating them, are of necessity intrusted to the judgment, discretion, and will of the properly constituted authorities to whom they are delegated; and, being public and sovereign in their nature, the corporation is not liable to be sued either for a failure to exercise them or for errors committed in their exercise." Hull v. Town of Roxboro, 55 S. E. 851, 852, 142 N. C. 453, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638 (quoting and adopting the definition in Kistner v. Indianapolis, 100 Ind. 210).

"A 'municipal corporation' is, for the purposes of its creation, a government possessing, to a limited extent, sovereign powers. * * * The extent to which it may be proper to exercise such powers, as well as the mode of their exercise by the corporation, within the limits prescribed by the law creating it, are of necessity intrusted to the judgment and discretion and will of the properly constituted authorities to whom they are delegated." Indiana Ry. Co. v. Calvert, 80 N. E. 961, 964, 168 Ind. 321, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 780, 11 Ann. Cas. 635 (quoting and adopting definition in Brinkmeyer v. City of Evansville, 29 Ind. 187).

"The framers of our Constitution intended, by the term 'municipal corporations,' to use it in its restricted sense as applicable only to cities, towns, or villages invested with the power of local legislation." Davenport v. Elrod, 107 N. W. 833, 834, 20 S. D. 567 (quoting and adopting the definition in Town of Dell Rapids v. Irving, 64 N. W. 149, 7 S. D. 810, 29 L. R. A. 861).

The term "municipal corporations," as used in Const. 1898, art. 48, prohibiting the General Assembly from passing any local or special law creating corporations or renewing or amending the charter thereof, provided that "this shall not apply to municipal corporations having a population of not less than 2,500 inhabitants, or to the organization of levee districts and parishes," is limited by the context to cities, towns, and villages. Board of School Directors of Madison Parish v. Coltharp, 54 South. 299, 300, 127 La. 956.

"Counties, cities, and towns are 'municipal corporations' created by the authority of the Legislature, and they derive all their powers from the source of their creation, except where the Constitution of the state otherwise provides. Beyond doubt they are, in general, made bodies politic and corporate, and are usually invested with certain subordinate legislative powers, to facilitate the due administration of their own internal affairs, and to promote the general welfare of the municipality. They have no inherent jurisdiction to make laws, or to adopt governmental regulations; nor can they exercise any other powers in that regard than such as are expressly or impliedly derived from their charters, or other statutes of the state." State ex rel. Potter v. King County, 88 Pac. 935, 936, 45 Wash. 519 (quoting Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. Ed. 552).

As an agent or instrumentality of the state

A "municipal corporation" is an agent of the state for local purposes. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Catlettsburg, 129 Fed. 421, 422.

"Municipal corporations" are but public agencies with limited rights and powers."

Peters v. City of St. Louis, 125 S. W. 1134, 1135, 226 Mo. 62, 21 Ann. Cas. 1069.

A "municipal corporation" is, so far as its purely municipal relations are concerned, simply an agency of the state for conducting affairs of government, and as such it is subject to the control of the Legislature. They owe their origin to, and derive their powers and rights wholly from, the Legislature. Ryan v. City of New York, 69 N. E. 599, 601, 177 N. Y. 271 (quoting Williams v. Eggleston, 18 Sup. Ct. 617, 619, 170 U. S. 304, 310, 42 L. Ed. 1047; City of Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 24 Iowa, 455).

A "municipal corporation" in the machinery of the state is a mere agency. It possesses no inherent and independent authority to create rights in others which affect the public interests. Rhinehart v. Redfield, 87 N. Y. Supp. 789, 791, 93 App. Div. 410.

"Municipal corporations" are instrumentalities of the state for the more convenient administration of local affairs, and for that purpose are invested with certain legislative powers. Wolff v. City of Denver, 77 Pac. 364, 365, 20 Colo. App. 135 (citing Lewis v. Denver City Waterworks Co., 34 Pac. 993, 19 Colo. 236, 41 Am. St. Rep. 248).

"Municipal corporations" are mere instrumentalities of the state for the more convenient administration of local government. Their powers are such as the Legislature may confer, and these may be enlarged, abridged, or entirely withdrawn at its pleasure. Attorney General ex rel. Battisshell v. Township Board of Springwells, 107 N. W. 87, 90, 143 Mich. 523 (quoting and adopting definition in Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 511, 26 L. Ed. 197).

"A 'municipal corporation' is but a governmental agency or local organization for governmental purposes. Its officers are none the less governmental officers because elected or chosen by the people of a particular locality." Livesley v. Litchfield, 83 Pac. 142, 143, 47 Or. 248, 114 Am. St. Rep. 920.

"'Municipal corporations' are political subdivisions of the state, created as convenient agencies for exercising such of the governmental powers of the state as may be intrusted to them." Hunter v. City of Pittsburgh, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 46, 207 U. S. 161, 52 L. Ed. 151.

"Municipal corporations" are political subdivisions of the state, created as convenient agencies for exercising such of the governmental powers of the state as may be intrusted to them. The charter of a municipal corporation is conferred for political purposes, and the power to alter municipal charters or to repeal them exists without limitation; and Const. 1901, § 229, providing that the charter of any corporation shall be subject to amendment or repeal under general laws, applies only to private business corporations.

"'Municipal corporations,' such as counties, cities and towns, and incorporated cities and towns, are instrumentalities of the state government. They serve its political and civil purposes more or less generous in their nature and extent and more particularly where they are located. They are public in their nature, and the Legislature has control over them. It may determine and establish their powers and enlarge or modify their powers and authority from time to time; it may create new ones prescribing their powers and authorities as public necessity and convenience require." Folsom v. Greenwood County, 137 Fed. 445, 69 C. C. A. 473 (quoting definition given in Wood v. Town of Oxford, 2 S. E. 655, N. C. 230).

"'Municipal corporations,' including chartered municipalities, are agencies in the work of government. They are created by the Legislature, which delegates to them certain clearly defined portions of the sovereign power. Except as restrained by constitutional provisions, these auxiliary agencies of government are under the absolute control of the Legislature. Powers and duties may be imposed and taken away at the legislative will." Schigley v. City of Waseca, 118 N. W. 252, 260, 106 Minn. 94, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 68, 16 Ann. Cas. 169.

"'Municipal corporations' are the instrumentalities of the state for the more convenient administration of local affairs, and for that purpose are invested with certain legislative power. In the exercise of the power upon the subjects submitted to their jurisdiction, they are as much beyond judicial interference as the Legislature itself. Glides v. Superior Court of County of Yolo, 81 Pac. 225, 226, 147 Cal. 21.

"'Municipal corporations' are the administrative agencies established for the local government of towns, cities, and counties, or other particular districts. The special powers conferred on them are not vested rights as against the state, nor are they the nature of contracts, but, being wholly political, they exist only during the will of the Legislature. Such powers may at any time be changed, modified, repealed, or destroyed by the Legislature, saving only the vested rights of the individuals." Ex parte Collins, 114 N. W. 962, 981, 16 N. D. 470 (citing Black, Const. Law, § 132).

"A 'municipal corporation' is simply a political subdivision of the state, and exists by virtue of the exercise of the power of the state through its legislative department. The Legislature could at any time terminate the existence of the corporation itself, and provide other and different means for the government of the district comprised within the

"Municipal corporations," as ordinarily constituted, possess a double character—the one, governmental, legislative, or public; the other, in a sense proprietary or private—and over its civil, political, or governmental powers the authority of the Legislature is, in the nature of things, supreme and without limitation, unless the limitation is found in the Constitution of the particular state. But, in its proprietary or private character, the theory is that the powers are supposed not to be conferred primarily or chiefly from considerations connected with the government of the state at large, but for the private advantage of the compact community which is incorporated as a distinct personality or corporate individual; and as to such powers, and to property acquired thereunder, the corporation is to be regarded quo ad hoc as a private corporation. Town of Nahant v. United States, 136 Fed. 273, 281, 70 C. C. A. 641, 69 L. R. A. 723 (citing Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] §§ 66, 67, and notes).

A "municipal corporation" is the delegate of sovereign power to legislate as to the public needs of the locality, and in a sense it possesses a dual character. It acts in a governmental capacity to the extent that it exercises its powers in matters of public concern, and it acts in a private capacity in so far as it exercises its powers under its by-laws for private advantage in matters pertaining to the municipality, as the proprietor of the various works and properties. It cannot be held liable for the nonexercise of governmental powers delegated by the state, which are discretionary powers, and which are classed as a public or legislative character; neither can it be held responsible for the manner in which it exercises those powers. O'Donnell v. City of Syracuse, 76 N. E. 738-740, 184 N. Y. 1, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053, 112 Am. St. Rep. 558, 6 Ann. Cas. 173 (citing Lloyd v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347).

As corporate body or person

See Corporate Body.

Corporation as including

See Corporation.

As embracing inhabitants

A "municipal corporation" is a fictitious being created for the sole and exclusive purpose of administering the public interest. Such corporation and the inhabitants of its territory are in law distinct separate persons, and a corporation is not the mandatary of the inhabitants individually for entering into contracts for them individually. It does not follow, from the fact that the inhabitants are interested, that the obligations of contractors toward the "municipal corporation" shall be faithfully complied with, or, from the fact that they, as taxpayers, contribute the money with which the payments have to be made, that they are principals in the contracts entered into by the corporation. Allen & Currey Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 37 South. 980, 981, 118 La. 1091, 68 L. R. A. 650, 104 Am. St. Rep. 525, 2 Ann. Cas. 471.

As part of state

As political subdivision, see Political Subdivision.

A "municipal corporation" is a subordinate subdivision of the state government. It derives its existence, powers, and privileges from the state. State v. City of Aberdeen, 74 Pac. 1022, 1023, 34 Wash. 61.

"Municipal corporations" constitute a part of the civil government of the state, and their streets are highways." Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Mobile, 162 Fed. 523, 529.

A "municipal corporation" is a subordinate branch of the domestic government of the state. It is instituted for public purposes only, and has none of the peculiar qualities and characteristics of a trading corporation, instituted for the purpose of private gain, except that of acting in a corporate capacity. Its objects, its responsibilities, and its powers are different. As a local governmental institution it exists for the benefit of the people within its corporate limits. The Legislature invests it with such powers as it deems adequate to the ends to be accomplished. State v. Butler, 77 S. W. 560, 570, 178 Mo. 272 (quoting Nashville v. Ray, 19 Wall. [86 U. S.] 468, 475, 22 L. Ed. 164).

A "municipal corporation" is a part of the governmental machinery of the state, organized for the purpose of exercising certain functions of government, within a specified locality; and it possesses such powers, and such only, as are conferred upon it by the Legislature; and they are to be exercised in such form, mode, and manner, and by such agencies, as the Legislature may from time to time prescribe, within the limits of the Constitution. Tommasi v. Bolger, 100 N. Y. Supp. 367, 372, 114 App. Div. 838; People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 65 N. E. 956, 958, 173 N. Y. 103 (quoting People ex rel. City of Rochester v. Briggs, 50 N. Y. 553-550).

It is within the power of the Legislature to abolish the office of chief of police of the city of New York, and as chapter 33, Laws 1901, to that effect, does not purport to abrogate any right of such chief of police to any pension, he has the power to assert any vested rights which he may have to such pension or in the pension fund by a proper proceeding. People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 65 N. E. 956, 958, 173 N. Y. 103.

As political or public corporation

"The American 'municipal corporation' is simply and purely a strictly public corporation. It is a corporation of citizens, for citizens, and by citizens. Its sole object is local government." Beale v. Pankey, 57 S. E. 661, 663, 107 Va. 215, 12 Ann. Cas. 1134.

For the purpose of general designation, it is not uncommon to use the term "municipal corporation" as including quasi corporations to distinguish public or political corporations from those which are termed "private." A county is a "municipal corporation," within a constitutional provision providing that no right of way shall be appropriated for the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation shall have been made, irrespective of benefits. Lincoln County v. Brock, 79 Pac. 477, 478, 37 Wash. 14.

The term "municipal corporations," as used by text-writers in discussing the delegation of the power of taxation to municipal corporations, is not used in the restricted sense of cities and towns, but in a more enlarged and generally received acceptation, which includes municipal corporations technically so termed, and also public corporations created by the state for the purpose of exercising defined and limited governmental functions in certain designated portions of the state's territory. These are termed by authors of approved excellence and decisions of authority to be "public quasi corporations," and are said to include counties, townships, school districts, and the like. Smith v. Board of Trustees of Robersonville Graded School, 53 S. E. 524, 527, 141 N. C. 143, 8 Ann. Cas. 529.

"The term 'municipal,' as used in defining a corporation, indicates by its historical meaning a corporation proper, as distinguished from a quasi corporation, and designates only cities and incorporated towns which have powers of local self-government, and, in strictness of meaning, would not include counties and school districts, although they are expressly declared by statute to be bodies corporate. But, in common speech, the term 'municipal corporation' is used to include all public or political corporations having corporate powers." Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109, 1112, 132 Iowa, 533 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4620).

Board of drainage commissioners

Code 1906, § 3485, providing that money deposited in banks by an officer having the custody of public funds, "state, county, municipal, or levee board," is prima facie public money, and a trust fund, and may not be taken by the general creditors of the bank, is in derogation of the common law and must be strictly construed, and the word "municipal" embraces only municipal corporations represented by cities, towns, and villages, and does not include the board of drainage commissioners, and the funds of such board deposited in a bank are not within the protection of the statute. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Bank v. First State Bank of Shaw (Miss.), 60 South. 47.

Board of education

Under Detroit City Charter (Comp. 1904, § 596), providing the school inspectors shall be a body corporate, known as "board of education of the city of Detroit," and in that name may sue and be sued, and hold and convey real and personal property, such board is a "municipal corporation," and not liable for the negligence of its employes and agents. Whitehead v. Board of Education of City of Detroit, 102 N. W. 1028, 1029, 139 Mich. 490.

County

A county is a "municipal corporation." Wadsworth v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 115 N. Y. Supp. 8, 16 (citing County Law [Laws 1892, p. 1744, c. 686] § 2; General Corporation Law [Laws 1890, p. 1061, c. 563] § 3, subd. 1).

A county, properly speaking, is not a "municipal corporation." Knowles v. Board of Education of City of Topeka, 7 Pac. 561, 564, 33 Kan. 692 (citing Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22).

A county is a "municipal corporation," within the rule that a municipal corporation cannot be estopped by the unauthorized or illegal agreements or acts of their agents. People ex rel. Sweet v. Board of Sup'rs of St. Lawrence County, 91 N. Y. Supp. 948, 949, 101 App. Div. 327.

While a county is not strictly a municipal corporation, yet, in the sense that it is a body corporate with only such powers as are expressly conferred by statute, it is within the rules applicable to such corporations. Morse v. Granite County, 119 Pac. 286, 289, 44 Mont. 78.

A county is a municipal or quasi municipal corporation invested with legislative powers to be exercised for local purposes, subject to the control of the state, but is not, in a strict sense, a "municipal corporation." Schubel v. Olcott, 120 Pac. 375, 378, 60 Or. 503.

"Municipal corporations" are subordinate parts of the state, and invested with limited powers. In Montana counties are at most only quasi municipal corporations, with no legislative authority vested in the several boards of county commissioners, in the sense that they may adopt ordinances and prescribe penalties for a violation thereof, or define nuisances and provide for their abatement. In re O'Brien, 75 Pac. 196, 199, 29 Mont. 530, 1 Ann. Cas. 373 (citing Wilcox v. Deer Lodge County, 2 Mont. 574).

A "municipal corporation" proper is created mainly for the interest, advantage, and convenience of the locality and its people, as distinguished from a county organization which is created almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the state at large. People ex rel. Attorney General v. Johnson, 86 Pac. 233, 235, 34 Colo. 143 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23).

A "county" is a governmental agency of the state, and in a sense a "municipal corporation." Kumpe v. Bynum, 48 South. 55, 56, 158 Ala. 311.

A special school district is not within the constitutional provision declaring that no county, city, town, or municipality shall issue any interest bearing evidence of indebtedness. All corporations intended as agencies in the administration of civil government are public, as distinguished from private, corporations. Cities are "municipal corporations," while school districts and "counties," properly speaking, are not. Schmutz v. Special School Dist. of City of Little Rock, 95 S. W. 438, 439, 78 Ark. 118 (citing Memphis Trust Co. v. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist., 62 S. W. 902, 69 Ark. 284; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22).

The "county" is a political subdivision of the state, though for many purposes it is deemed a municipality. Its power of contracting indebtedness is limited to the matters expressly conferred by the Legislature, or which are conferred by necessary implication as an incident of powers expressly conferred. Not only is it limited as to the things for which, but it is limited as to the manner in which, it may become bound by contract. McDonald's Adm'x v. Franklin County, 100 S. W. 861, 862, 125 Ky. 205.

A "county" is a local subdivision of the state, created by the state of its own will, and is not a "municipal corporation" proper, which is called into existence either at the direct solicitation or by the consent of the persons composing it, for the promotion of their private advantage, and a county cannot be sued except on an express contract. Marion County v. Rives & McChord, 118 S. W. 309, 311, 133 Ky. 477.

Drainage district

"Municipal corporations" cease to exist only by legislative consent, and a failure for a term of years to exercise the functions of a municipality does not effect a dissolution, neither does a failure to elect officers. Drainage districts are classed as municipal corporations. People ex rel. Gauen v. Niebruegge, 91 N. E. 115, 117, 244 Ill. 82.

A drainage district, although a quasi public corporation, is not a "municipal corporation" within the purview of Const. art. 5, § 5, providing that property belonging to the state or municipal corporations shall be exempt from taxation, and hence under Const. art. 5, § 3, art. 7, § 9, respectively, providing that all moneys, stocks, and personal property shall be taxed by uniform law, and that all taxes levied by any county, city, or town shall be uniform, the Legislature was without power to exempt from taxation bonds issued by a drainage district, as was attempted by Pub. Laws 1911, c. 177. Drainage Com'rs v. C. A. Webb & Co., 78 S. E. 552, 160 N. C. 594.

Irrigation district

Irrigation districts organized under the laws of the state are quasi municipal corporations, and are governed by the general election laws of the state; and the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution for voters at elections apply to an election held in an irrigation district. Pioneer Irr. Dist. v. Walker, 119 Pac. 304, 307, 20 Idaho, 605.

Levee board or district

Acts 1909, p. 660, creating levee district No. 2, in Jackson county, provides by section 2 that the district shall have power to make such by-laws and regulations as they may deem proper, not inconsistent with their charter and state law, to carry into effect the object of their incorporation, and to do all other acts not inconsistent with state law which may be proper to effectuate the purpose of the act, and section 9 authorizes them to hear complaints from parties aggrieved by the assessment and make all necessary corrections therein. Held, that the district is not a municipal corporation within Const. art. 12, § 4, prohibiting a municipal corporation from levying a tax on realty to a greater extent in one year than five mills on the dollar of the assessed valuation. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Board of Directors of Levee Dist. No. 2, Jackson County, 145 S. W. 892, 895, 103 Ark. 127.

Levee boards, under the Constitution, are bodies politic, entirely separate and distinct from "municipal corporations," for the purpose of taxation. United Railroad & Trading Co. v. Mevers, 86 South. 797, 799, 112 La. 897.

Parish precinct

A parish precinct is not one of the subdivisions mentioned in Const. art. 232, authorizing special election to be held in any parish, "municipal corporation," ward, or school district. Regard v. Police Jury of Avoyelles, 42 South. 438, 117 La. 952.

Port district

A port district incorporated to provide public terminal facilities for both sea and land commerce is a "municipal corporation," within a constitutional limitation as to the amount of indebtedness of "counties, cities, towns, school districts, and other municipal corporations," and when properly and legally organized it will possess the same powers as the municipal corporations specifically mentioned; and, though it be superimposed over territory occupied by such other municipalities, existing for an entirely different purpose, the limit of its power to incur indebtedness is independent of and not measured by the portion of the constitutional limitation not taken up by the indebtedness of the other divisions. Paine v. Port of Seattle, 127 Pac. 580, 581, 70 Wash. 294.

Reclamation district

A reclamation district is a public, as distinguished from a private, corporation, acting as a state agency invested with limited powers, but it is not a "municipal corporation," possessing in any degree general powers of government, though, within the limits of the authority granted to it, it exercises public functions. Metcalf v. Merritt, 111 Pac. 505, 508, 14 Cal. App. 244.

School district

A school district is not a "municipal corporation." State ex rel. Carrollton School Dist. No. 1, Tp. 53, R. 23, v. Gordon, 133 S. W. 44, 51, 231 Mo. 547; Knowles v. Board of Education of City of Topeka, 7 Pac. 561, 564, 33 Kan. 692 (citing Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22).

A school district is not a municipal corporation within Const. art. 7, § 6, prohibiting the Legislature from imposing taxes for the purpose of any municipal corporation. Fenton v. Board of Com'rs of Ada County, 119 Pac. 41, 44, 20 Idaho, 392.

A school district is a "municipal corporation," within Const. art. 8, § 1, excepting such corporations from the prohibition against creating corporations by special act. Board of Education of Union Free School Dist. No. 6 of Town of Cortlandt v. Board of Education of Union Free School Dist. No. 7 of Town of Cortlandt, 78 N. Y. Supp. 522, 524, 76 App. Div. 355.

Graded school districts are public quasi corporations within the term "municipal corporation," as used in Const. art. 7, § 7, prohibiting any city, town, or other municipal corporation from contracting debts except for necessary expenses, unless by vote of the qualified voters; so that a graded school district could not issue bonds to erect a school building unless their issue was approved by a majority of the qualified voters; the erection of a school building not being a "necessary expense" within section 7. Ellis v. Trustees of Graded School of Oxford, 72 S. E. 2, 3, 156 N. C. 10.

School districts are public quasi corporations included in the term "municipal corporations" as used in article 7, § 7, of our Constitution, and so come within the express provisions of section 7, that "no county, city, town, or other municipal corporation, shall contract any debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit, etc., nor shall any tax be levied unless by a vote of the qualified voters." And the principle of uniformity is established and required by section 9 of this article. Smith v. Board of Trustees of Robersonville Graded School, 53 S. E. 524, 527, 141 N. C. 143, 8 Ann. Cas. 529.

Const. art. 5, § 1, directing the General Assembly to levy a poll tax equal to the tax on property valued at $300, but providing that the state and county poll tax combined shall not exceed $2 a head, does not apply, as to such limitation, to a special school district created pursuant to Revisal 1905, § 4115, but such district is a public quasi corporation included within the term "municipal corporations," as used in Const. art. 7, and subject only to the limitations contained in that article, forbidding a municipal corporation to contract any debt or to levy any tax, except for the necessary expenses thereof, unless by a vote of a majority of the qualified voters, and requiring all taxes levied to be uniform and ad valorem. Perry v. Commissioners of Franklin County, 62 S. E. 608, 609, 148 N. C. 521.

State

Laws 1905, p. 370, c. 175, in amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, authorizing an execution against the wages or salary of the judgment debtor, and making it the duty of any person or corporation, municipal or otherwise, to whom the execution shall be presented, and who shall be indebted to the judgment debtor, to pay over to the officer the amount of the debt, does not authorize the issuance of an execution against the salary of a state officer; the state being neither a person nor a corporation nor a municipal corporation. Osterhoudt v. Keith, 117 N. Y. Supp. 809, 810, 133 App. Div. 83.

Town or township

A township is clearly to be classed with quasi corporations, and not with "municipal corporations." Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1106, 1112, 132 Iowa, 533.

"Townships" are the lowest grade of "municipal corporations," being created for specific purposes, and endowed with limited powers and liabilities, acting through officers duly authorized by the law for that purpose. Posey Tp., Franklin County, v. Senour, 86 N. E. 440, 441, 42 Ind. App. 580.

Under General Corporation Laws, §§ 2, 3, Town Law, § 2, and General Municipal Law, § 1, a "town" is a "municipal corporation." Town of Hempstead v. Lawrence, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1037, 1039, 138 App. Div. 473.

New York Town Law defines a "town" as a "municipal corporation" comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries, and formed for the purpose of exercising such powers and discharging such duties of local government and administration of public affairs as may be conferred or imposed upon it by law; and hence a town is a municipal corporation which may enter into a lighting contract. Dunn v. Whitestown, 185 Fed. 585, 588.

Code Civ. Proc. § 264, provides that no award shall be made on any claim against the state, except upon such legal evidence as would establish liability against an individual or corporation. Canal Law, § 47, provides that no judgment shall be awarded by the Court of Claims for damages from neglect or conduct of any state officer having charge of canals, or from any accident connected with the canals, unless the facts make out a case which would create a legal liability against the state, were they established in court against an individual or corporation. Held, that the phrase "individual or corporation" includes a town; Town Law, § 2, defining a "town" as a "municipal corporation" comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries. O'Bryan v. State, 125 N. Y. Supp. 490, 491, 68 Misc. Rep. 618.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL

See Council.

MUNICIPAL COURTS

As state court, see State Court.

There is no substantial or material difference between the terms "city court" and "municipal court." Miller v. People, 82 N. E. 521, 523, 230 Ill. 65.

MUNICIPAL DEPARTMENT

A covenant in a lease that the tenant shall comply with the orders of "municipal departments" of the city of New York included the tenement house department of such city, although its existence began at a date subsequent to the execution of the lease. Palmieri v. Antinozzi, 95 N. Y. Supp. 865, 866, 47 Misc. Rep. 237.

MUNICIPAL ELECTION

See Next General Election.

Included in any election, see Any.

Under Rev. Laws 1905, § 336, municipal elections, as well as state and county collections, may be contested, and a village election is a "municipal election." State ex rel. Village of Excelsior v. District Court of Hennepin County, 120 N. W. 894, 895, 107 Minn. 437.

An election authorized by the general council of a city of the fourth class to submit the question of whether the city should issue bonds to raise money for the erection of common school buildings was not held under any statutes relating to common schools, but was a "municipal election" held under Ky. St. § 3490, subsec. 34, authorizing cities of the fourth class to issue municipal bonds for municipal purposes, and providing that the city council, if they deem it necessary to incur a debt, shall give notice of an election to determine whether the debt shall be incurred, and, if two-thirds of the qualified electors vote therefor, shall provide by ordinance for creating the debt, so that the election was properly held by secret ballot, as provided by the Constitution, even if elections relating to common public schools must be held viva voce. Frost v. Central City, 120 S. W. 367, 368, 134 Ky. 434.

MUNICIPAL FUNCTION

Const. art. 11, § 13, providing that the Legislature shall not delegate to any association or individual power to perform any "municipal function," has no application to St. 1899, p. 358, c. 247, permitting territory to be annexed to towns at the discretion of the inhabitants, nor does it effect the validity thereof, for "the fixing of the boundaries of the territory to be annexed is in no sense of the words a 'municipal function.'" There is no constitutional provision that intimates that this power can be conferred only on some legislative body, and not upon the electors of the locality to be affected, and, in the absence of such a provision, the question as to whether it shall be given to the one or the other is purely one of policy, upon which the determination of the Legislature is conclusive. People v. Town of Ontario, 84 Pac. 205-208, 148 Cal. 625.

Laws 1905, p. 275, c. 163, creating a board, to be known as the state capitol commission, for the purpose of procuring the erection of a capitol building, and authorizing the commission to procure the erection of a building, adopt plans and specifications, etc., is not in conflict with Const. art. 3, § 26, declaring that the Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission power to perform any "municipal function"; the erection of a capitol building not being a "municipal function," which in such case is restricted to the affairs of cities and towns. Davenport v. Elrod, 107 N. W. 833, 834, 20 S. D. 567.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT

"Municipal governments" are entities distinct from the state government, incurring liabilities of their own, in no way binding upon the state, and acquiring rights and property in which the state has no property interest. Except where the law makes the municipal government an agent for the state in collecting the state's taxes, or in discharging some other state function, there is no relation between the one and the other of principal and agent, as that relation is usually understood in the law. The state may, through its legislative branch, confer upon, and withdraw from, the counties and cities power of taxation. But, when the power thus conferred is for the benefit of the local community in which it is to be exercised, its exercise is not by agent for a principal. It is by a quasi independent government for the benefit of the people within its limits." Bank of Kentucky v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 94 S. W. 620, 621 (quoting and adopting definition in Northern Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. 413).

MUNICIPAL INDEBTEDNESS

An indebtedness created by bonds for a street improvement as authorized by statute, allowing a city to order the original construction of a city improvement at the cost of abutting owners, and to issue 10-year bonds against the property not paying in cash, is not a "municipal indebtedness" within the Constitution, limiting municipal indebtedness. Guilfoyle's Ex'r v. City of Maysville, 112 S. W. 666, 667, 129 Ky. 532.

MUNICIPAL LAW

"Municipal law" is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power of a state. That definition is a part of Sir William Blackstone's, which adds, commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong. Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis v. Knott, 111 S. W. 565, 571, 212 Mo. 616 (citing 1 Kent, Comm. 447).

MUNICIPAL LEGISLATION

The only acts of a city council subject to the referendum by Const. art. 4, § 1a, reserving the referendum as to "municipal legislation," are such as come within the term "municipal legislation"; and such legislation must be considered in the sense of laws of general application, and does not include transient orders to a particular person, and the latter may be adopted without reference to the referendum. Long v. City of Portland, 98 Pac. 1111, 1112, 53 Or. 92.

To understand the signification of the words "municipal legislation," as used in Const. art. 11, § 2, prohibiting the Legislature from amending the charters of cities and towns, the right of which is reserved to the voters thereof, and article 4 providing that the referendum may be demanded by the people, which power is reserved to the legal voters of every municipality and district, as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character in and for their respective municipalities and districts, requires an interpretation of the term "local and special legislation," the right to formulate rules in relation to which is impliedly denied to cities and towns, on the principle that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. The qualifying words "local" and "special" are synonymous, and, in the sense in which they are used, mean any enactment that is plainly intended to affect a particular person or thing or to be in effect in some specified locality only. The words "municipality" and "district" are evidently expressions of equivalent import, for a district legally created from a designated part of the state and organized to promote the convenience of the public at large is a "municipal corporation." The authority of such a corporation has been heretofore derived from an act of the legislative assembly creating it, and, as such statute is applicable to and enforceable in a part of the state only, it is a local or special law. The change in the organic law deprives the legislative assembly of all authority to act, amend, or repeal any charter of a town, the legal voters of which reserve to themselves the exercise of all such power, except the right of repeal, and it was evidently the intention of the framers of such constitutional provision, and also the people, when they ratified it, to vest an incorporated city or town with authority to provide the means of exercising the initiative and referendum powers as to amendments of a charter, which change is reasonably within the term of "municipal legislation." Acme Dairy Co. v. City of Astoria, 90 Pac. 153, 154, 49 Or. 520.

MUNICIPAL OFFENSE

As crime, see Crime.

MUNICIPAL OFFICE

A "village," as defined in the statutes relating to elections (Rev. Laws 1906, § 154), is a municipality, and an office therein is a "municipal office," within section 336. State ex rel. Village of Excelsior v. District Court, Hennepin County, 120 N. W. 894, 895, Minn. 437.

MUNICIPAL OFFICER

See, also, City Officer.

In the broad sense "municipal officer" includes all local elective or appointive officers. Uvalde Asphalt Paving Co. v. City of New York, 134 N. Y. Supp. 50, 52, 149 A. Div. 491.

The mayor and aldermen constitute the "municipal officers of a city," under Rev. Laws 1903, c. 1, § 6, par. 25. Huntington v. City of Calais, 73 Atl. 829, 830, 105 Me. 144.

The term "municipal officer," as used in Const. art. 16, § 6, limiting the terms of office to two years, means "city officers." See State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 99 Pac. 940, 38 Mont. 250 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4618).

Sergeant at arms of council

"The distinction is plainly taken between a person acting as a 'servant' or 'employee,' who does not discharge independent duties but acts by the direction of others, and an 'officer' empowered to act in the charge of a duty or legal authority in public life." Where a fireman, wrongfully discharged from the fire department of the City of New York, pending reinstatement, accepted a position as sergeant at arms to the council of the municipal assembly, he was not an "employee" of the city, and not an "officer," within New York City Charter (Laws 1897, p. 543, c. 878, § 1549), prohibiting "municipal officers" from holding two offices. Padden v. City of New York, 92 N. Y. Supp. 926, 928, 45 Misc. Rep. 517 (quoting the adopting definition in Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481, and People v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 535).

Judge

Judges of city courts, organized by Rev. St. 1899, c. 37, § 240, are municipal officers, within Const. art. 9, § 11, providing that the fees, salary, or compensation of no municipal officer elected or appointed for a definite term shall be increased or diminished during the term. Wolf v. Hope, 70 N. E. 1082, 1087, 210 Ill. 50.

Policeman

A policeman is not strictly a state officer, nor is he a "municipal officer" or servant of a city in which his duties are to be performed, and is therefore not within Const. art. 16, § 6, limiting the terms of office of municipal officers to two years. State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 99 Pac. 940, 946, 38 Mont. 250.

A private policeman or watchman employed by a private corporation, who is paid by the corporation and who may be discharged by it, is not a municipal officer, so as to make his wages exempt from garnishment, notwithstanding the fact that he was empowered to make arrests and subject to the supervision and control of the city police department. Tabb v. Mallette, 47 S. E. 587, 588, 120 Ga. 97, 102 Am. St. Rep. 78.

State officer distinguished

The distinction between "state officers" and "municipal officers" is that the duties of the former concern the state at large and the general public, although exercised within definite territorial limits, while the functions of the latter relate to a particular community. Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 962, 968, 16 N. D. 470.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE

See Ordinance.

As statute, see Statute.

Violation of ordinance as crime, see Crime.

MUNICIPAL PROPERTY

As private property, see Private Property.

A tax legally imposed by a municipality is "municipal property" of which the municipality cannot be deprived without due process of law. Harris v. Stearns, 97 N. W. 361, 363, 17 S. D. 439.

MUNICIPAL PURPOSES

See Corporation for Municipal Purposes.

The erection of a school building was a "municipal purpose" for which the city was authorized to issue bonds. Frost v. Central City, 120 S. W. 367, 368, 134 Ky. 434.

Acts Ala. 1894-95, p. 593, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to incorporate the city of Columbia," etc., provides (section 29) for the construction of a bridge across the Chattahoochee river, and authorizes the issue of bonds therefor. Held that, since the river constitutes the south and east boundary of the city, as declared in its amended charter, the construction of a bridge across the river was a "municipal purpose," and hence the authority for the bond issue was valid and within the title to the act. City of Columbia v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 200 Fed. 569, 571, 119 C. C. A. 49.

Under a charter authorizing a city to incur indebtedness for "municipal purposes," the furnishing of water for street sprinkling, for use in public buildings, etc., is a municipal purpose. City of Winchester v. Winchester Waterworks Co., 148 S. W. 1, 6, 149 Ky. 177.

The acquisition of parks is, without any express words of authorization, included whenever a grant of power is conferred to acquire property for "municipal purposes." City of Oakland v. Thompson, 91 Pac. 387, 388, 151 Cal. 572.

An ordinance of a town out of debt, levying a property tax for "municipal purposes" and a poll tax "for said purposes," sufficiently specifies the purposes for which the taxes are levied, within Const. § 180, requiring an ordinance imposing a tax to specify distinctly the purpose for which the same is levied. The expression "for municipal purposes," in the ordinance, is the same in meaning as if it had read "for ordinary municipal purposes" or "for carrying on the town government in the ordinary routine." Town of Mt. Pleasant v. Eversole (Ky.) 96 S. W. 478, 479.

Laws 1905, p. 2096, c. 737, § 11, providing that no municipality shall build and operate for other than "municipal purposes" any systems for furnishing gas or electricity for lighting purposes, without a certificate of authority granted by the state gas commission, enacted when Laws 1897, p. 438, c. 414, authorizing a village to maintain a lighting system for lighting its streets and the private buildings of its inhabitants, was in force, prohibits a village from erecting a lighting system for lighting the private buildings of its inhabitants unless authority therefor is granted by the commission. Potsdam Electric Light & Power Co. v. Village of Potsdam, 97 N. Y. Supp. 190, 192, 49 Misc. Rep. 18.

Const. art. 8, § 8, gives the Legislature power to establish and abolish municipalities, to provide for their government, to prescribe their jurisdiction and powers, and to alter the same. Article 9, § 5, provides that the Legislature shall authorize counties or incorporated cities and towns to impose taxes for county and municipal purposes, and for no other. Article 12, § 1, provides that the Legislature shall institute a uniform system of public free schools and provide for the liberal maintenance thereof. Section 10 requires the Legislature to provide for the division of the counties into convenient school districts, and for the levying and collecting of a district school tax for the exclusive use of public free schools within the district. Section 11 provides that any incorporated town or city may constitute a school district, and the fund raised by section 10 may be extended in the district where levied for building or repairing schoolhouses, purchase of school libraries and text-books, etc., so that the distribution among all the schools of the district be equitable. Held, that the power given the Legislature to prescribe the "powers" of municipalities and to authorize cities and towns to assess and impose taxes for "municipal purposes" does not authorize the giving to municipalities, as such, authority to issue bonds and levy a municipal tax to pay them, when the proceeds are to be used to erect schoolhouses and maintain a system of public education in the municipality, as provided by Laws 1899, c. 4869, § 37, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 5817, § 3. Brown v. City of Lakeland, 54 South. 716, 717, 61 Fla. 508.

MUNICIPAL TREASURY

Expenses of municipal treasury, see Expenses.

MUNICIPAL YEAR

The "municipal year" has usually been taken to be the political year, or year intervening between the taking of office by the respective city officers elected in each year. So where the time of elections was fixed as the first Tuesday of April in each year, and as this day may fall on the first or any day up to and including the 7th day of the month, the municipal year may vary several days in length. It is not a fixed number of days or weeks or months. The term "municipal year," as used in Comp. St. 1903, c. 50, § 25, providing that a liquor license shall expire on the last Monday of the "municipal year," means the political year. Reusch v. City of Lincoln, 112 N. W. 377, 378, 78 Neb. 828.

MUNICIPALITY

See Freeholder of the Municipality.

As owner, see Owner.

Improvement of municipality, see Improvement.

Other municipalities, see Other.

Private powers of municipality, see Private Powers.

"Municipalities" are statutory creatures. Burke v. State, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 1099, 64 Misc. Rep. 558.

"Municipalities" are but mere departments or agencies of the state, charged with the performance of duties for and on its behalf, and subject always to its control. Straw v. Harris, 103 Pac. 777, 782, 54 Or. 424.

"'Municipalities' are agencies of the commonwealth created by the sovereignty of the people." Adams v. Oklahoma City, 95 Pac. 975, 979, 20 Okl. 519.

A "municipality" is merely an agency instituted by the sovereign for the purpose of carrying out in detail the objects of government, essentially a revocable agency, subject to legislative control "which may destroy its very existence with the mere breath of arbitrary decision." In re City of Pittsburg, 66 Atl. 348, 352, 217 Pa. 227 (quoting and adopting the definition in City of Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169).

"A 'municipality' is a mere political subdivision of the state." "It is a public corporation having for its object the administration of a portion of the powers of the government delegated to it for that purpose." Penick v. Foster, 58 S. E. 773, 775, 129 Ga. 217, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159, 12 Ann. Cas. 346.

A "municipality" is an arm of the state, an effluence from its sovereignty, and is an instrumentality by which the state seeks to give its citizens the best government possible; hence a municipal waterworks system is of a governmental and public nature, and is exempt from taxation. Commonwealth v. City of Covington, 107 S. W. 231, 232, 128 Ky. 36, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214.

The word "municipality," as used before the independence of Texas, comprehended not only the town but certain adjacent country, and the square set apart for municipal buildings was granted for the use of the people of the whole district, municipality, or precinct, and was not granted to the central or capitol town alone. City of Victoria v. Victoria County (Tex.) 94 S. W. 368, 371.

The term "municipality" has sometimes been limited by definition to include municipal corporation in the proper and strict sense. But the term is also used by good authority in a broader sense to include public and political corporations which are not strictly municipal. Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109, 1112, 132 Iowa, 533 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4630).

As used in Const. art. 4, providing that the referendum may be demanded by the people, which power is reserved to the legal voters of every "municipality" and district, as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character in and for their respective municipalities and districts, the words "municipality" and "district" are evidently expressions of equivalent import, for a district legally created from a designated part of the state and organized to promote the convenience of the public at large is a municipal corporation. The authority of such a corporation has been heretofore derived from an act of the legislative assembly creating it, and, as such statute is applicable to and enforceable in a part of the state only, it is a local or special law. Acme Dairy Co. v. City of Astoria, 90 Pac. 153, 154, 49 Or. 520.

County

A county is within Const. art. 4, § 1a, reserving the initiative and referendum powers to the voters of every municipality and district, and the people of the several counties are authorized, by article 9, § 1a, to regulate taxation and exemptions within their several counties, as provided by article 4, § 1a, in a manner subservient to any general law which may be enacted, though the word "district," as used in article 4, § 1a, has a broader signification than "county," and may designate territory comprising more than a county, or containing less area. Schubel v. Olcott, 20 Pac. 375, 379, 60 Or. 503.

The original meaning of a "municipality" was a "free town under the Roman Empire, with powers of local self-government." Its precise use now would confine it to subordinate subdivisions of the state having powers of local self-government. Dillon, however, points out in the same section, after stating the proper signification of the word: "But sometimes it is used in a broader sense that includes also public or quasi corporations, the principal purpose of whose creation is as an instrumentality of the state, and not for the regulation of the local and special affairs of a compact community." Act March 30, 1892 (P. L. p. 369; Gen. St. p. 2078), providing for liens for persons doing labor or furnishing materials under any contract for a public improvement made with any city, town, township, or other municipality authorized by law to make contracts for public improvements, applies to contracts with counties for public improvements. Union Stone Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 65 Atl. 468, 469, 71 N. J. Eq. 657 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] p. 39, 20).

Act March 30, 1892 (P. L. p. 369; 2 Gen. St. p. 2078), provides that any person who, pursuant to the terms of a contract for any public improvement in any city, town, township, or other "municipality," within the state, authorized by law to contract for such improvement, shall perform labor or furnish materials for the completion of such contract, shall have a lien on the moneys due under the contract. Held that, where a county let a contract for the construction of a county courthouse, the county was a "municipality," within such act. Herman & Grace v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 64 Atl. 742, 71 N. J. Eq. 541.

A special school district is not within the constitutional provision declaring that no county, city, town, or "municipality" shall issue any interest bearing evidence of indebtedness. All corporations intended as agencies in the administration of civil government are public, as distinguished from private, corporations. Cities and school districts are public corporations. Cities are municipal corporations, while school districts and counties, properly speaking, are not. A municipality is a corporation having the right to administer local government as a city or incorporated town. A school district is merely an agency of state with limited corporate powers belonging to a class of corporate bodies known as quasi corporations. Schmutz v. Special School Dist. of City of Little Rock, 95 S. W. 438, 439, 78 Ark. 118 (citing Memphis Trust Co. v. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist., 62 S. W. 902, 69 Ark. 284; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22).

Township

Code Supp. 1902, § 2575, provides that when a controversy arises between municipalities or boards of health thereof respecting the location of pesthouses, reference shall be made to the president of the state board of health, who shall appoint a committee whose order in the premises shall be final. Code, § 394, declares each county to be a body corporate for civil and political purposes, and gives it power to sue and be sued and other corporate powers. A township is not expressly declared to be a body corporate, and has no right to sue or to be sued and none of the characteristics of a corporation. Held, that, in view of the evident legislative intention, a township is a "municipality" within the statute. Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109, 1112, 132 Iowa, 533.

Village

A village, as defined in the statute on elections (Rev. Laws 1905, § 154), is a "municipality." State ex rel. Village of Excelsior v. District Court of Hennepin County, 120 N. W. 894, 895, 107 Minn. 437.

MURDER

See Assault with Intent to Commit Murder; Common-Law Murder.

Willful murder, see Willful—Willfully.

See, also, Express Malice; Intent to Kill; Kill.

The word "murder" defines the crime itself, and is not a constituent element thereof. Hocker v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 111 S. W. 676, 679.

"Murder" is an unlawful killing with malice. Cole v. State, 59 S. E. 24, 26, 2 Ga. App. 734.

"Murder" is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. State v. Tinkler, 83 Pac. 830, 831, 72 Kan. 262; State v. Ireland, 83 Pac. 1036, 1038, 72 Kan. 265; State v. Wetter, 83 Pac. 341, 346, 11 Idaho, 433; State v. Abbott, 62 S. E. 693, 64 W. Va. 411; State v. Johnson (Del.) 78 Atl. 605, 2 Boyce, 49; State v. Brown, 60 S. E. 945, 946, 79 S. C. 390; State v. Moore (Del.) 74 Atl. 1112, 1114, 1 Boyce, 142.

Murder is the unlawful killing of a human creature in being with malice aforethought, either express or implied. State v. Pepe (Del.) 76 Atl. 367, 369, 1 Boyce, 232; State v. Jackson (Del.) 82 Atl. 824, 825; State v. Stockley (Del.) 82 Atl. 1078, 1079; State v. Moore (Del.) 74 Atl. 1112, 1114, 1 Boyce, 142.

"Murder" is the killing of a human being by a person of sound memory and discretion with malice aforethought, either express or implied. State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497; State v. Willson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 230, 5 Pennewill, 77; State v. Di Guglielmo (Del.) 55 Atl. 350, 351, 4 Pennewill, 336; Smith v. State, 55 S. E. 475, 126 Ga. 544 (quoting and adopting the definition in Pen. Code 1895, § 60.)

"Murder" is the unlawful killing of a human creature with malice aforethought, either express or implied, and is of the first or second degree, as the malice is express or implied. State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 214.

"'Murder,' at common law, was committed when a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully killed any reasonable creature in being, in the peace of the sovereign, with malice aforethought, either expressed or implied. According to this rule, if one feloniously and with malice aforethought wounded another, from which wound death ensued within a year and a day, it was murder, unless excuse or justification was shown. Under our statute, such act would not constitute an element of murder, unless perpetrated with a premeditated design, to effect the death of the person killed or of some other person, but would be embraced within some one of the lower degrees of homicide." Morris v. Territory, 99 Pac. 760, 767, 1 Okl. Cr. 617 (quoting with approval from Jewell v. Territory, 4 Okl. 53, 43 Pac. 1075).

Under a statute defining "murder" as the unlawful killing of a human being, an indictment charging that the act was done "feloniously," and which omits the word "unlawfully," is sufficient, as the word "feloniously" includes that which would be charged by the use of the word "unlawfully." People v. St. Clair, 91 N. E. 573, 244 Ill. 444.

"Murder" is the unlawful, willful, and felonious killing of another with malice aforethought, not in the necessary or apparently necessary self-defense of the slayer. Commonwealth v. Mosser, 118 S. W. 915, 133 Ky. 609.

If the killing by a defendant or his aiding or abetting of the killing by another was done with malice unlawfully and willfully in sudden affray, it was murder. Watkins v. Commonwealth, 97 S. W. 740, 742, 123 Ky. 817.

As expressly defined by Pen. Code, § 187, "murder" is the "unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought." People v. Frank, 83 Pac. 578, 579, 2 Cal. App. 283.

By Pen. Code, § 350, "murder" is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. State v. Hilboka, 78 Pac. 985, 31 Mont. 455, 3 Ann. Cas. 934.

Rev. St. 1887, § 6560, defines "murder" as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. State v. Phinney, 89 Pac. 634, 13 Idaho, 307, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935, 12 Ann. Cas. 1079.

An information charging that accused unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, premeditatedly, deliberately, and of his malice aforethought shot and killed decedent, a human being, sufficiently charges murder as defined by Rev. Codes, § 8290, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. State v. Crean, 114 Pac. 603, 605, 43 Mont. 47, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 424.

An information alleging that accused on a specified date did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously and with malice aforethought assault S., with intent then and there to kill and murder her, was not fatally defective for failure to allege that S. was a human being, the term "murder" being defined as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, under Pen. Code, § 950, subd. 2, providing that an information shall contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. People v. Vaughn, 111 Pac. 620, 622, 14 Cal. App. 201.

"Murder" in this state is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Allegations sufficient for a common law indictment are sufficient for an information under the statute defining murder as above. State v. McGowan, 93 Pac. 552, 555, 36 Mont. 422 (citing Territory v. Stears, 2 Mont. 324; State v. Lu Sing, 85 Pac. 521, 34 Mont. 31).

Where the act of killing another is done willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, accused is guilty of murder. Combs v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 658, 659.

A deliberate killing committed in revenge for an injury inflicted in the past, either near or remote, is "murder." Ex parte Fraley, 109 Pac. 295, 297, 3 Okl. Cr. 719, 138 Am. St. Rep. 988.

"The word 'murder' is a legal and technical term and implies something more than mere killing, though it includes all the elements of the latter word, but there is nothing technical about the word 'kill.' It means to deprive of life; to put to death; to slay." An allegation that defendant did "kill and murder" the deceased is a sufficient allegation that the latter died. State v. Sly, 30 Pac. 1125, 1127, 11 Idaho, 110.

Homicide is "murder" when perpetrated without authority of law and with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed. Baysinger v. Territory, 82 Pac. 728, 730, 15 Okl. 386.

"All voluntary felonious homicide, without a provocation, is undoubtedly 'murder.' " The presumption of murder arises from proof of voluntary homicide, and, when the killing is admitted or proved, the burden of proof is thenceforth on the defendant to excuse or justify his act. Rutherford v. Foster, 125 Fed. 187, 190, 60 C. C. A. 129 (quoting and adopting definition in Fost. Crown Law, p. 313).

"Murder" is distinguishable from every other species of homicide by the absence of circumstances which reduce the offense to negligent homicide or manslaughter, or which excuse or justify the homicide. Jones v. State, 96 S. W. 930, 931, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 329.

The crime of "murder" includes the lesser crimes of second degree murder and manslaughter. State v. Pepoon, 114 Pac. 449, 451, 62 Wash. 635.

Under a statute providing that where an involuntary killing happens in the commission of an unlawful attack, which, in its consequences, naturally tends to destroy the life of a human being, or is committed in the prosecution of a riotous intent, or of a crime punishable by death or confinement in the penitentiary, the offense shall be deemed "murder," one indicted for murder may be convicted of involuntary manslaughter, where the evidence on the part of the state would authorize a verdict of murder. Chatman v. State, 65 S. E. 360, 6 Ga. App. 564.

In view of Pen. Code 1901, § 172, defining "murder" as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, an indictment sufficiently charges murder by alleging facts showing the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, without alleging facts bringing it within one of the statutory degrees of murder; it being for the jury to determine the degree. Williams v. Territory, 114 Pac. 556, 13 Ariz. 306.

"Murder," as defined in Pen. Code, § 187, declaring that "murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought," includes murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree. People v. Ung Ting Bow, 75 Pac. 899, 142 Cal. 341 (citing People v. De la Cour Soto, 63 Cal. 166).

One is guilty of murder who by feloniously severing another's blood vessel causes him to bleed to death, where through want of assistance decedent is unable to prevent excessive loss of blood. Rigsby v. State, 91 N. E. 925, 927, 174 Ind. 284.

An information in extradition proceedings charging accused with "assault with intent to kill and murder" sufficiently brings the offense within article 10 of the treaty with Great Britain, authorizing extradition of persons charged with "assault with intent to commit murder." An assault with intent to kill and murder is practically the same as an assault with intent to commit murder, though the words "to kill" do not necessarily imply more than the destruction of life, which may have been caused without guilt, while to commit murder implies killing with malice aforethought. But the use of the word "kill" in the conjunctive with "murder" shows that it was intended to charge the commission of the crime of assault with intent to kill with malice aforethought. United States v. Plaza, 133 Fed. 998, 999.

In view of Pen. Code 1901, § 172, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, an indictment charging that accused unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, and of his deliberately premeditated malice aforethought made an assault with a loaded revolver upon R., "a human being, with the intent, then and there, willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and of his deliberately premeditated malice aforethought to kill and murder him, the said R.," sufficiently alleged the crime of assault with intent to murder. Williams v. Territory, 114 Pac. 556, 13 Ariz. 306.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 187, 189, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and defining murder in the first and second degrees, and section 192, defining manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and dividing manslaughter into voluntary and involuntary manslaughter, and section 274, making it a felony to perform a criminal abortion, an unlawful killing with malice aforethought is "murder," and is also "manslaughter," because it is the unlawful killing of a human being, though it cannot be logically classed as voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, and under a charge of murder by attempting a criminal abortion, a verdict of manslaughter may be returned. People v. Huntington, 97 Pac. 760, 762, 8 Cal. App. 612.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 242, 246, 254, declaring that a homicide is either murder, manslaughter, excusable homicide, or justifiable homicide, that homicide is "murder," when perpetrated with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, and that homicide is "manslaughter," when perpetrated without a design to effect death, and in heat of passion, etc., and Code Cr. Proc. § 409, authorizing a conviction of any offense necessarily included in the offense charged, the jury may find accused guilty of manslaughter in the first degree under an indictment charging murder. State v. Stumbaugh, 132 N. W. 666, 668, 28 S. D. 50.

An indictment which shows that the homicide complained of is the result of a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, and is without authority of law, sufficiently alleges "murder." Cavett v. Territory, 98 Pac. 890, 893, 1 Okl. Cr. 493.

Under 2 Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2167, defining "murder" as "homicide when perpetrated without authority of law and with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or of any other human being," a killing of a human being, perpetrated without authority of law and with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, is "murder." Walcher v. Territory, 90 Pac. 887, 888, 18 Okl. 528.

"Murder" must be committed by an act applied to or affecting the person either directly, as by inflicting a wound, or indirectly, as by exposing the person to a deadly agency or influence, from which death ensues, and the working upon the fancy of another, or treating him harshly or unkindly, by which he dies of fear or grief, would not constitute this offense. State v. McGowan, 93 Pac. 552, 554, 36 Mont. 422 (citing Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. [59 Mass.] 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711; State v. Turner [Ohio] Wright, 20).

If a man shoots at another with the intention of killing him (and such killing if consummated would be murder), and kills a bystander or another, he is guilty of the murder of the person killed, whether the killing of the latter was due to a mistake as to his or her identity, or to recklessness in the aim of the one doing the killing. United States v. Hart, 162 Fed. 192, 197.

Where one shoots with intent to kill an intended victim, it is immaterial, on a prosecution for killing a different person, whether he saw the person who was killed by the shot when he fired. Gater v. State, 37 South. 692, 695, 141 Ala. 10.

In an indictment for the murder of one person, committed with a premeditated design to effect the death of a different person, it is not necessary to allege an actual assault upon the person designed to be killed, under a statute defining murder as the killing of one human being by another, without authority of law, and with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or of any other human being. Fooshee v. State, 108 Pac. 554, 559, 560, 3 Okl. Cr. 686.

Under Rev. St. 1906, § 1624, the term "murder" includes all killing perpetrated from a deliberate and premeditated design, unlawfully and maliciously, to effect the death of any human being other than him who is killed, so that where defendant was damaged in an altercation with two others, and shortly thereafter, when a half dozen or more persons, including these two, were gathered, defendant came around the corner with a revolver in each hand, and fired five or six shots toward the crowd, resulting in the death of deceased, who was unknown to him and only accidentally there, the provision of the statute is expressly applicable. Ryan v. People, 114 Pac. 306, 308, 50 Colo. 99, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1232.

One who, as heir, would, under Civ. Code, § 1386, share in the estate of decedent, is not, by reason of his conviction of manslaughter for killing intestate, within section 1409, declaring that no one convicted of "murder" of deceased shall succeed to any of his estate; "murder" not only being a technical word within section 13, requiring such words to be construed according to their peculiar or technical meaning, but being precisely defined by Pen. Code, § 187, so as to exclude manslaughter, and Pol. Code, § 4480, requiring, with relation to each other, the provisions of the four Codes to be construed as though they were all parts of the same statute. In re Kirby's Estate, 121 Pac. 370, 162 Cal. 91, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1088, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 928.

The word "murder" is often used in the dual character of both a noun and a verb. When it is said that A. concealed himself with intent to murder B., it is understood that his purpose was to commit "murder" upon B., without the use of the verb, "commit." Hence a verdict finding defendant guilty of an assault with intent to "murder" is not objectionable for failure to use the verb "commit" before "murder." Nickles v. State, 37 South. 312, 313, 48 Fla. 46.

The statute dividing murder into two degrees has not added to or taken away any ingredients of murder at common law, and every murder at common law is murder under the statutes of Alabama. McMahan v. State, 53 South. 89, 90, 168 Ala. 70.

Deliberation and premeditation

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, there was evidence that defendant killed deceased deliberately, intending so to do, the length of time that such intention existed was immaterial to make the offense of murder. State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24.

Under Rev. Codes, § 8290, defining "murder" as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, an information charging accused with willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, and of his "deliberately premeditated" malice aforethought, killing another sufficiently charged that the killing was with malice aforethought, and that the words quoted characterized the malice, and not the killing, was immaterial. Deliberation and premeditation need not be alleged. State v. Nielson, 100 Pac. 229, 230, 38 Mont. 451.

Under White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 708, providing that though a homicide occurs under circumstances showing no deliberation, if the guilty person provoked a contest with the apparent intent of killing decedent, or doing him serious bodily harm, the offense is not manslaughter, if accused provoked the contest with the apparent intention of killing decedent, or doing him serious bodily injury, he is guilty of murder, though he may have killed him suddenly without deliberation and to protect his own life, though, if he provoked the contest without intent to kill, or inflict serious bodily injury and suddenly without deliberation killed decedent, the offense might be a lower grade than murder. Keeton v. State, 128 S. W. 404, 413, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 316.

To constitute "murder," the homicide must be committed with the premeditated design, on the part of the accused, to unlawfully take the life of the person slain or some other person. Kent v. State, 126 Pac. 1040, 1042, 8 Okl. Cr. 188.

In its last analysis murder in Oklahoma consists in the unlawful killing of a human being with a premeditated design to effect his death, or the death of some other person. This premeditated design to effect death must be established either by direct evidence as a matter of fact, or it arises as a conclusive presumption of law in the class of cases mentioned in paragraphs 2 and 3 of section 2268, Comp. Laws 1909. These paragraphs do not state a rule of pleading to be followed in an indictment, but they establish a rule of evidence for the trial judge in the admission of testimony and in his instructions to the jury. Turner v. State, 126 Pac. 452, 457, 458, 8 Okl. Cr. 11.

As felonious homicide

See Felonious Homicide.

Malice

To constitute "murder," it is sufficient if the malice existed at the moment of the killing. State v. Heidelberg, 45 South. 256, 258, 120 La. 300.

At common law the reckless killing of another with a deadly weapon was murder; malice being implied. Ewing v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 352, 355, 129 Ky. 237.

Malice is the essence of "murder." In murder of the first degree such malice must be express, and may be indicated by all such facts and circumstances as show a deliberately formed design to take life. In murder of the second degree, malice may be shown by such cruel acts and conduct as indicate a reckless disregard of human life, although unaccompanied with a deliberate design to take life. In manslaughter there is no malice. State v. Collins (Del.) 62 Atl. 224, 226, 5 Pennewill, 263.

"Murder" is the unlawful killing of a human creature in being with malice aforethought, either express or implied; it being sufficient that the malice is implied from any unlawful act which in itself denotes a wicked heart, fatally bent on mischief, or a reckless disregard for human life. State v. Lee (Del.) 74 Atl. 4, 5, 1 Boyce, 18.

"Murder" does not consist merely in the killing of a human being. The killing must be done with malice." Where, on a trial for murder, the accused admitted the killing, but coupled such admission with declarations, which, if believed, showed justification, no presumption that the homicide was murder arose from such admission. Perkins v. State, 52 S. E. 17, 124 Ga. 6.

"Murder" is where a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully kills any human being with malice aforethought, either express or implied. The chief characteristic of this crime, as distinguished from other homicides, is malice aforethought. State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 230, 5 Pennewill, 77.

The crime of murder is the unlawful killing of a human creature in being with malice aforethought, either express or implied. If the killing is proved, it must be also proved that it was done with malice, either express or implied, before the person charged can be convicted of murder; but such malice may be implied from any unlawful act, such as in itself denotes a wicked heart fatally bent on mischief, or a reckless disregard of human life. The deliberate selection of a deadly weapon has been held to be evidence of malice, and where malice exists, together with the killing, the crime of murder is complete. State v. Scott (Del.) 57 Atl. 534, 535, 4 Pennewill, 538.

Under Revisal 1905, § 3631, providing that a murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, etc., or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, shall be deemed "murder in the first degree," and that all other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder in the second degree, malice is always an essential ingredient of murder. State v. Baldwin, 68 S. E. 148, 151, 152 N. C. 822.

To constitute "murder," the evidence must show that accused thought of it beforehand, though as to the time it is immaterial whether it was thought of an hour beforehand, or a day beforehand, or a minute beforehand. If the thought came to the mind of the accused, "I will kill," and he did kill immediately after that, the killing is "murder"; there being malice aforethought. Green v. United States, 104 S. W. 1159, 1160, 7 Ind. T. 733.

Both before and since the statute dividing the crime of "murder" into two degrees (Revisal 1905, § 3631), "murder" is the unlawful killing of another with malice aforethought. This malice may arise from personal ill will or grudge, but it may also be said to exist whenever there has been a wrongful and intentional killing of another without lawful excuse or mitigating circumstances. The statute does not undertake to give any new definition of murder, but classifies the different kinds of murder as they existed at common law, and which were before the statute all included in one and the same degree. Thus all murder done by means of poison, lying in wait, etc., or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, or premeditated killing, or murder done in the effort to perpetrate a felony, shall be murder in the first degree, and punished with death. All other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder in the second degree, and punished by imprisonment in the state's prison. But the constituent definition of murder remains as it was, and in neither degree is it necessarily required that the unlawful killing should be from personal ill will or grudge. State v. Banks, 57 S. E. 174, 176, 143 N. C. 652 (citing Clark, Cr. Law, p. 187; State v. Wilcox, 23 S. E. 928, 118 N. C. 1131; State v. Finley, 24 S. E. 495, 118 N. C. 1161).

An instruction that when a homicide occurs, and the circumstances are absent which would excuse or justify the act or reduce it to manslaughter, the law implies malice, and the killing would be murder, was a mere abstract statement applicable to all degrees of murder, as prescribed by St. 1898, § 4365, and was not erroneous, the court having also charged that the law presumes that every person intends all the natural and probable consequences of his acts, and when one assaults another with a dangerous weapon, likely to kill, not in self-defense, nor in sudden heat of passion caused by provocation apparently sufficient to make passion irresistible or involuntary, and the life of the person assaulted is taken in consequence of such assault, then the legal presumption is that death was intended, and the law implies malice making the killing murder, etc. Hedger v. State, 128 N. W. 80, 90, 144 Wis. 279.

Killing in commission of unlawful act

If an involuntary killing happens in the commission of an unlawful act, which, in its consequences, naturally tends to destroy life of a human being, the offense is murder, under Pen. Code 1895, § 67. Gadsden v. State, 68 S. E. 497, 134 Ga. 785.

Killing in perpetration of a felony

Under Code, § 4727, defining "murder" as the killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and under section 4728 providing that all murder committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any robbery is murder in the first degree, one who, with intent to rob, displaced the rails of a railroad for the purpose of wrecking a train is guilty of murder, where the train was wrecked in consequence of his act, and a person named was fatally injured. State v. Von Kutzleben, 113 N. W. 484, 487, 136 Iowa, 89.

An indictment for murder while committing robbery, under Code, § 798 (31 Stat. 1321, c. 854), providing that one who kills another in perpetrating any offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary is guilty of murder, is not demurrable on the ground that robbery is not punishable by such imprisonment; section 810 punishing robbery by imprisonment for not less than 6 months or more than 15 years, and section 934 providing for jail imprisonment where the sentence is for more than 6 months and not exceeding a year, and for imprisonment in penitentiary where it exceeds a year. United States v. Evans, 28 App. D. C. 264, 2.

Manslaughter distinguished

Voluntary manslaughter distinguished see Voluntary Manslaughter.

The unlawful killing of another with malice is "murder," as distinguished from "manslaughter," which is an unlawful killing without such malice. State v. Lee, 60 S. 524, 525, 79 S. C. 228.

"Murder" and "manslaughter" are distinguished, in that malice is essential to the former offense, and by absence of premeditation or deliberation in the latter. Reed v. State, 145 S. W. 206, 208, 102 Ark. 525.

While, in one sense "murder" and "manslaughter" are separate and distinct crimes, yet, in a broader sense, they both involve one offense and are simply different degrees of felonious homicide. On an indictment for murder, defendant may be convicted of manslaughter. Rhea v. Territory, 105 Pac. 3316, 8 Okl. Cr. 230.

"Homicide" is "murder," unless it is attended with extenuating circumstances which must appear to the satisfaction of a jury. If A. assaults B., giving him a severe blow, or otherwise making the provocation great, and B. strikes him with a deadly weapon, and death ensues, the law, in deference to human passion, says this is "manslaughter." * * * If the provocation be slight and it can be collected from the weapon used or any other circumstances that the prisoner intended to kill or do great bodily harm, and death follows, it is "murder." State v. White, 51 S. E. 44, 48, 138 N. C. 704 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Smith, N. C. 488).

If the slayer provoked the combat or produced the occasion in order to have a pretense for killing his adversary or doing him great bodily harm, the killing will be "murder," no matter to what extremity he may have been reduced in the combat. But if he had no felonious intent, intending, for instance, an ordinary battery merely, the killing in self-defense would be "manslaughter" only; the distinction being between the right of perfect and the right of imperfect self-defense. State v. Kelleher, 100 S. W. 470, 475, 201 Mo. 614 (citing State v. Partlow, 4 S. W. 14, 90 Mo. 608, 59 Am. Rep. 31).

"Manslaughter" is distinguished from "murder" by the absence of malice as a contingent element. If, under the influence of some violent emotion, a sudden intent was formed, which on adequate provocation overwhelmed the reason of the appellant, the killing was not murder, but manslaughter only. State v. Clark, 77 Pac. 287, 288, 6 Kan. 576.

The chief distinction between "murder" and "manslaughter" is deliberation and malice in murder, and the want thereof in manslaughter, and, where the issue was whether accused or a third person inflicted the fatal wound, the error in an instruction that if accused killed decedent without authority of law, and not in necessary self-defense, he was guilty of manslaughter, arising from the omission of the words "without malice, and in the heat of passion," was not prejudicial. Guest v. State, 52 South. 211, 212, 96 Miss. 71.

Generally it is not "murder" but "manslaughter" to kill an officer, or other person, to prevent an illegal arrest. Consequently, shooting at an officer without killing him, if done to prevent an illegal arrest, is prima facie not an assault with intent to murder, but the statutory crime of shooting at another, described in Code 1882, § 4370. Jenkins v. State, 59 S. E. 435, 436, 3 Ga. App. 146 (quoting with approval from Thomas v. State, 18 S. E. 306, 91 Ga. 206).

Under Pen. Code, §§ 187, 189, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and defining murder in the first and second degrees, and section 192 defining manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and dividing manslaughter into voluntary and involuntary manslaughter, and section 174 making it a felony to perform a criminal abortion, an unlawful killing with malice aforethought is "murder," and is also "manslaughter," because it is the unlawful killing of a human being, though it cannot be logically classed as voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, and, under a charge of murder by attempting a criminal abortion, a verdict of manslaughter may be returned. People v. Huntington, 97 Pac. 760, 762, 8 Cal. App. 612.

"Manslaughter" is an unlawful killing, which becomes "murder in the second degree" when it has the added element of malice. State v. Fowler, 66 S. E. 567, 151 N. C. 731.

"Manslaughter" consists of the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and so, in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, the accused cannot be convicted if, had his victim died, his crime would have only been manslaughter. State v. Stockley (Del.) 82 Atl. 1078, 1079.

"Manslaughter" is an unlawful killing in anger without malice. Proof of prior provocation may exclude the idea of malice in the homicide, but does not exclude the idea of unlawfulness. It merely substitutes the element of anger without malice for the element of malice, thus distinguishing manslaughter from "murder." Cole v. State, 59 S. E. 24, 26, 2 Ga. App. 734.

"Murder" in the second degree consists of the killing of another without a formed design to take life, and without provocation to reduce the offense to "manslaughter," and under the influence of a wicked or depraved heart, or with cruel and wicked indifference to human life. "Manslaughter" is where one in a sudden affray, in the heat of blood, or in a transport of passion, without malice, inflicts a mortal wound, without time for reflection or for the passions to cool. It is where one person unlawfully kills another without malice. In order to reduce the crime to 'manslaughter,' the provocation must be very great, so great as to produce such a transport of passion as to render the person for the time being deaf to the voice of reason. While 'murder' proceeds from a wicked and depraved heart and is characterized by malice, 'manslaughter' results, not from malice, but from unpremeditated and unreflecting passion." State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 151, 6 Pennewill, 160.

When a killing is intentional and is not lawful, it is generally "murder"; but under circumstances of provocation, or of mutual combat, it may be reduced to "manslaughter." State v. Goldsby, 114 S. W. 500, 503, 215 Mo. 48 (citing 2 Bish. Cr. Law [6th Ed.] § 695).

Murder is where a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully kills any human being under the peace of the state, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. The chief characteristic of this crime, distinguishing it from manslaughter and every other kind of homicide, and therefore indispensably necessary to be proved, is malice preconceived or aforethought. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262, 4 Pennewill, 551.

A charge that, where an officer is shot and killed by one whom he is seeking legally to arrest, the offense is "murder" and not manslaughter was not erroneous when taken in connection with the evidence, which was sufficient to show that defendant was violating the law in the presence of the officer, and that, upon an effort to arrest him, he drew a pistol and shot the officer. Johnson v. State, 60 S. E. 160, 161, 130 Ga. 27.

In an instruction correctly defining murder and manslaughter, the statement that, "You see by these definitions that in murder malice must exist, but that manslaughter is the killing of a human being without malice," made only to distinguish the two, is not reversible error. Prince v. United States, 109 Pac. 241, 242, 3 Okl. Cr. 700.

If two persons deliberately agree to fight with deadly weapons on a subsequent day at a definite time and place, and, both being armed, meet by chance near the appointed place and near the appointed time, and without any fresh cause of a quarrel or other altercation one slays the other without justification, the crime is "murder," and not voluntary manslaughter. Bundrick v. State, 54 S. E. 683, 685, 125 Ga. 753.

MURDER IN FIRST DEGREE

As felonious homicide, see Felonious Homicide.

"Murder in the first degree" is the willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing of a human being. State v. Briggs, 52 S. E. 218, 219, 58 W. Va. 291.

"Murder in the first degree" is the willful, felonious, deliberate, and premeditated killing of a human being with malice aforethought. State v. Hottman, 94 S. W. 237, 239, 196 Mo. 110.

Willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, without any motive appearing at all, is murder in the first degree. State v. Jaggers, 58 Atl. 1014, 1015, 71 N. J. Law, 281, 108 Am. St. Rep. 746.

"Murder of the first degree" is where the killing was done with malice aforethought. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 2 Boyce, 164; State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310, 2 Boyce, 140.

To constitute murder in the first degree, the offender's mind must be cool and sedate; and there must be express malice aforethought. Dixon v. State, 103 S. W. 399-401, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 555.

"Murder in the first degree" is defined in Rev. St. 1890, § 4950, as a purposeful and premeditated malicious killing. Hollibaugh v. Hehn, 79 Pac. 1044, 1047, 13 Wyo. 269.

To constitute "murder in the first degree," the killing must be done with malice aforethought, express or implied, and with willful premeditation and determination. State v. McKay, 63 S. E. 1059, 1060, 150 N. C. 813.

A homicide committed with express malice aforethought is "murder in the first degree." State v. Brooks (Del.) 84 Atl. 225, 227.

An indictment charging that accused purposely, feloniously, and with premeditated malice killed a person named charges murder in the first degree. Stout v. State, 92 N. E. 161, 162, 174 Ind. 395, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 37.

"Murder of the first degree" is a killing done with express malice aforethought, or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate a crime punishable with death. State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 634, 7 Pennewill, 127; State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1078, 5 Pennewill, 339; State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24; State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 745, 1 Boyce, 538; State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497; State v. Samuels (Del.) 67 Atl. 164, 165, 6 Pennewill, 36; State v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174; State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 773; State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310; State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479; State v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 5 Pennewill, 192.

"Murder in the first degree" occurs where the killing was done in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate a crime punishable with death. State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 221, 2 Boyce, 434.

Murder in the first degree consists in killing a human being with malice aforethought or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate a crime punishable with death, where the murder is committed with sedate deliberation of mind, and formed design to take life. State v. Adams (Del.) 65 Atl. 510, 511, 6 Pennewill, 178.

Murder in the first degree is the taking of human life with express malice aforethought or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate a crime punishable with death when the act is done deliberately and with formed design to take life or do some great bodily harm. State v. Collins (Del.) 62 Atl. 224, 226, 5 Pennewill, 263; Same v. Brown (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 5 Pennewill, 19; Same v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1078, Pennewill, 339.

Under Code Iowa, § 4728, killing shown not only to have been done in malice, but with deliberation, premeditation, and with specific intent to kill, is "murder in the first degree." State v. Baldes, 110 N. W. 440, 441, 133 Iowa, 158.

An instruction on murder in the second degree which fails to state that there must be no circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse is erroneous. Campbell v. Territory (Ariz.) 125 Pac. 717, 721.

Under L. O. L. § 1893, defining "murder in the first degree" as a homicide with deliberate and premeditated malice, or in the commission or attempt to commit any rape, arson, robbery, or burglary, the state, charging a killing while in the commission of such other offenses, need not prove deliberate premeditated malice; but, as malice is not necessarily excluded by such other offenses in which homicide results, defendants cannot complain if the state elects to predicate the murder upon a killing with deliberate and premeditated malice. State v. Humphrey, 128 Pac. 824, 827, 63 Or. 540.

Under the statute declaring that whoever purposely and with premeditated malice kills another is guilty of "murder in the first degree," the intent to kill, the premeditation or deliberation, and malice are as much elements of the crime as the act of killing, and each must exist and be established beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Pressler, 100 Pac. 806, 808, 16 Wyo. 214, 15 Ann. Cas. 8.

The statutes define "murder in the first degree" as follows: "Every person who shall purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice kill another shall be deemed guilty in the first degree." State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

The crime of "murder" is divided into two degrees in North Dakota, according to the facts and circumstances attending the killing.

ing, depending upon the presence or absence of deliberation and premeditation. These degrees are not distinct crimes but are simply degrees of murder dependent upon the facts attending the killing. There are no degrees of murder in the first degree; the elements of murder in the second degree are necessarily included in the charge of murder in the first degree. State v. Noah, 124 N. W. 1121, 1124, 20 N. D. 281.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2392, defining "murder in the first degree" as the killing of a human being with the premeditated design to effect death, an information alleging that accused did, with a premeditated design to effect her death, kill and murder a specified person, is sufficient, without alleging that the person died. State v. Jahns, 112 Pac. 747, 51 Wash. 636.

Where death naturally ensues from the force, manner, or instrumentality of a chastisement, and the chastisement is made regardless of its probable result in death, the jury may convict of murder in the first degree. Rosemond v. State, 110 S. W. 229, 230, 98 Ark. 160.

Where accused entered into a plot with another, by which the latter was to do the killing, while he was to wait at some little distance from the house to allow the murderer to escape, and then to set fire to the house, and the plot was carried out, accused could be convicted of murder in the first degree. Commonwealth v. Johnson, 66 Atl. 233, 235, 217 Pa. 77.

One who kills another, who is approaching in a friendly manner, with no weapon in his hand, and making peaceable overtures, by shooting at him, both at close range and after he has fled across the street and into another's house, is guilty of murder in the first degree. State v. Williams, 84 S. W. 924, 927, 186 Mo. 128 (citing State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 13; State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. loc. cit. 218, 219; State v. Robinson, 73 Mo. 306; State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1015, 177 Mo. 699).

Where defendant, having manifested express antecedent malice against deceased, followed him down a creek, in which he and his wife were fishing, and without any cause shot him to death, and threw his body into the creek, and there were no mitigating circumstances, he was properly convicted of murder in the first degree. Young v. State, 84 S. W. 822, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 530.

The killing of a human being in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate the crime of arson is "murder in the first degree." Ludwig v. State, 85 N. E. 845, 847, 170 Ind. 648.

An instruction that all murder committed with express malice is "murder in the first degree," and that all murder committed in the perpetration of robbery is "murder in the first degree," is correct. Ransom v. State (Tex.) 70 S. W. 960, 963.

An indictment charging the commission of murder by accused while engaged in perpetrating a burglary charges murder in the first degree. Stout v. State, 92 N. E. 161, 162, 174 Ind. 895, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 37.

A murder which is perpetrated by poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing is murder in the first degree. State v. Abbott, 62 S. E. 693, 64 W. Va. 411.

All murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or by any kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate a felony, is "murder of the first degree." State v. Hliboka, 78 Pac. 965, 31 Mont. 455, 3 Ann. Cas. 934.

Rev. St. § 6808, provides that whosoever purposely and either of deliberate and premeditated malice or by means of poison or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any rape, arson, robbery or burglary kills another is guilty of "murder in the first degree." State v. Schiller, 70 N. E. 505, 506, 70 Ohio St. 1.

Pen. Code 1901, § 173, providing that all "murder" which is perpetrated by means of poison, etc., shall be murder in the first degree, and all other kinds of murder are in the second degree, does not prescribe that all "killing" perpetrated by means of poison is murder in the first degree, but that all "murder" so perpetrated is so; the word "murder" being used to denote all that is covered by section 172, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, etc. Eytinge v. Territory, 100 Pac. 443, 445, 12 Ariz. 131.

By Rev. St. 1887, § 6562, "murder of the first degree" includes all murder "which is performed by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, robbery, burglary, or mayhem." State v. Phinney, 89 Pac. 634, 13 Idaho, 307, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935, 12 Ann. Cas. 1097.

Pen. Code, § 189, provides that murder committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, robbery, rape, burglary, or mayhem is murder in the first degree. Held, that it is immaterial on a trial for such a murder whether the killing was willful, deliberate, and premeditated, or absolutely accidental. People v. Milton, 78 Pac. 549, 145 Cal. 169.

Where two persons acting together armed themselves and broke into a dwelling to rob it, and were, when discovered, engaged, one in robbing the house and the other in watching, and one of them killed an occupant of the dwelling in their attempt to escape, both were guilty of "murder in the first degree," under Pen. Code, § 183, defining murder in the first degree as murder committed by a person "engaged in the commission of, or in an attempt to commit, a felony." People v. Giro, 90 N. E. 432, 434, 197 N. Y. 152.

"Murder in the first degree," as defined by Comp. Laws 1897, § 1063, is "all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison or lying in wait, torture, or by any kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, and which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any felony, or perpetrated from any deliberate design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being, or perpetrated by any act greatly dangerous to the lives of others, and indicating a depraved mind regardless of human life." Territory v. Hendricks, 84 Pac. 523, 524, 13 N. M. 300.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1815 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1258), providing that every homicide committed in perpetration or attempt to perpetrate robbery shall be deemed murder in the first degree, where poison was administered willfully and deliberately in the perpetration of a robbery and death ensued, malice aforethought and premeditation were not elements of the offense, and it was unnecessary for the court to define such terms in the instructions. State v. Daly, 109 S. W. 53, 57, 210 Mo. 664.

Crimes and Punishments Act, § 17 (Comp. Laws, § 4672), making all murder by poison, lying in wait, or torture, or any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, murder in the first degree, does not create separate statutory homicides, but the killing of a human being in either one of the methods described is "murder in the first degree," and a felony and a homicide committed in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate a felony constitute together the one crime of murder in the first degree. State v. Mangana, 112 Pac. 693, 696, 33 Nev. 511.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 711, providing that murder committed in the perpetration or in the attempt at the perpetration of arson, rape, robbery, or burglary is "murder in the first degree," etc., an indictment for murder which alleges in different counts that the murder was committed in the perpetration of arson and in the perpetration of burglary, and which alleges malice aforethought, sufficiently advises accused of the character of the charge against him; and it is not necessary to define with particularity the constituent elements of the offenses of arson or burglary, or what accused was doing at the time he committed the murder, further than that the same was committed in the perpetration of arson and burglary. Jones v. State, 110 S. W. 741, 742, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 131, 128 Am. St. Rep. 776.

Where the evidence tends to prove that a murder was committed by means of poison, lying in wait, imprisonment, or torture or in perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or other felony, and where there is no evidence to prove murder in the second degree or manslaughter, the trial judge should instruct the jury that it is their duty to render a verdict of guilty of "murder in the first degree," if they are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, or of not guilty. State v. Spivey, 65 S. E. 995, 998, 999, 151 N. C. 676.

P. L. 1898, p. 824, § 107, declares that "murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in perpetrating, or attempting to perpetrate, any arson, burglary, rape, robbery or sodomy, shall be 'murder in the first degree'; and all other kinds of murder shall be murder in the second degree." In this statute the two concrete cases of murder in the first degree, and the general description of the cognate class that immediately follows, are all based upon the existence of a certain condition of mind in the perpetrator of the murder, which, as to the concrete instances, is described by reference to the means employed or the method adopted, viz., by poison or by lying in wait, and as to the general class that follows, by the use of descriptive words of which the two concrete cases are something more than apt illustrations, being, by force of the word "other," criteria controlling the sense in which the more general terms are employed. It is clear, therefore, that murder, whether resulting under the special circumstances first detailed or evincing the state of mind afterwards described, is "murder in the first degree," without regard to any extraneous consideration, and that the determining element in either case is the existence of the reprobated state of mind in the murderer, and not the measure of success that attended its accomplishment. The court correctly instructed that, if the death of R. resulted from a pistol shot intended by the defendant for another person, defendant's guilt and the degree of guilt was to be determined precisely the same as if the bullet had killed the person for whom it was intended. State v. Bectsa, 58 Atl. 933, 935, 71 N. J. Law, 322.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6800 (Pierce's Code, § 2091), abolishes all forms of pleading in criminal acts theretofore existing. Section 6850, subd. 6 (Pierce's Code, § 2103), provides that an information shall be sufficient if it can be understood therefrom that the act or omission charged is clearly and distinctly set out in ordinary language.

without repetition, and so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended. Section 7035 (Pierce's Code, § 554) defines murder in the first degree as the killing of another purposely and of deliberate and premeditated malice, or in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate robbery, burglary, etc. Held that the words, "attempt," "robbery," "burglary," as used in the statute, have a well-defined legal meaning, and in drawing an information charging murder in the first degree, if the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate the included crimes is pleaded in the language of the statute without setting forth the acts constituting the crimes, it is a sufficient compliance with section 6850 (Pierce's Code, § 2103). State v. Fillpot, 98 Pac. 659, 661, 51 Wash. 23.

An information, on the oath of the prosecuting attorney, alleging that on January 3, 1905, in P. county, Mo., defendants did make an assault on deceased, and did feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of their malice aforethought shoot deceased with a pistol loaded with bullets and gunpowder, thereby inflicting on deceased a mortal wound described, of which deceased shortly thereafter died, was sufficient to charge first-degree murder. State v. Barnett, 102 S. W. 506-509, 203 Mo. 640.

"Murder in the first degree," as defined by Pen. Code, § 1044, subd. 1, is the killing of a human being when committed "from a deliberate and premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or of another," is broad enough to embrace murder in the second degree, as defined in the same statute. People v. Schleiman, 90 N. E. 950, 952, 197 N. Y. 383.

Under Rev. Codes, §§ 8290, 8292, 8293, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and murder in the first degree as all murder perpetrated by any kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, and manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, murder in the first degree includes manslaughter, and an information charging murder justifies a conviction of manslaughter within section 9328, authorizing the jury to convict of a lesser offense included in the offense charged. State v. Crean, 114 Pac. 603, 605, 43 Mont. 47, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 424.

Where, on a trial for homicide, the evidence showed that decedent had assaulted accused, and the court charged that willful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing is "murder in the first degree," and that if the assault by decedent was sufficient to arouse in accused passion, and that while under its influence he killed decedent, he was guilty of voluntary manslaughter only, an instruction that if sufficient time elapsed for accused's passion to subside before the killing, and if accused deliberately drew a pistol and shot decedent with malice aforethought, and with the intent to take his life, accused was guilty of "murder in the first degree" was not erroneous for failing to state the elements constituting murder in the first degree. Duckworth v. State, 97 S. W. 280, 281, 80 Ark. 360.

An instruction on a trial for homicide that murder in the first degree consists in the taking of a human life with intent to kill and with deliberation and premeditation; that it is not necessary that deliberation and premeditation should continue for an hour or for a minute, but that it is enough that the design to kill be fully formed and purposely executed; and that the elements constituting the crime are an intent to kill and an execution of that intent with deliberation and premeditation—properly defines murder in the first degree. State v. Lang, 66 Atl. 942, 945, 75 N. J. Law, 1.

An indictment for homicide charging that accused feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly and of his malice aforethought assaulted deceased with a pistol, which he feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly and of his malice aforethought discharged against and upon him, thereby feloniously, willfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly striking, penetrating, and mortally wounding deceased, of which mortal wound he instantly died, sufficiently charges the offense of murder in the first degree. State v. Clay, 100 S. W. 439, 441, 201 Mo. 679.

An instruction that if the jury believes from the evidence that the defendant shot and killed L. as charged, and that at the time, or before the shot was fired, the defendant had formed in his mind the willful, premeditated, and deliberate design or purpose to take the life of the deceased, and that the shot was fired in furtherance of that design or purpose, and without any justifiable cause or legal excuse therefor, as explained in these instructions, then the jury should find the defendant guilty of "murder in the first degree" sufficiently defines that offense. State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 691, 194 Mo. 717.

Comp. Laws 1907, § 4159, defines murder as "the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought." Section 4161 makes a killing committed in an attempt to perpetrate robbery murder in the first degree. An information for murder alleged that accused "unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought, and with the specific intent to take the life" of a person named, shot and killed him. The undisputed evidence at the trial showed that the murder was committed during an attempt to perpetrate a robbery, and the evidence of accused was to the effect that the killing was due to an unintentiontional discharge of his pistol. The state adduced evidence that the killing was willful and intentional, and occurred during the attempt to perpetrate a robbery. Held, that it was not error for the court to instruct that though the killing was done in perpetrating or in an attempt to perpetrate a robbery, and though the information contained no allegations of the killing under such circumstances, nevertheless the accused could, under the allegations contained in the information, be convicted of first degree murder. State v. Thorne, 117 Pac. 58, 60, 39 Utah, 208.

In a prosecution for statutory murder in the first degree, the state claimed that accused killed deceased with premeditated design. The court charged that premeditated design was simply an intent to kill, that "design" meant "intent," and that both words implied premeditation, that premeditation did not exclude sudden intent, and that whether it be described by the words "actual intent," "design," or "premeditated design" was immaterial; that the intent was understood to be premeditated because without mental action the purpose could not be formed; that, when there were no circumstances to prevent the presumption, the law would presume that the unlawful act was intentional and malicious; that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, he who takes the life of another by some act naturally calculated to produce death would be presumed to have intended that result and to be guilty of murder in the first degree, it being presumed that such person intended the result that followed, and must be guilty of murder in the absence of evidence that the homicide was justifiable or excusable or such as to raise a reasonable doubt on the question; thus that where accused fired a shot, the weapon being aimed at a vital part of the body, and death ensued as a natural result, the presumption of fact as to the intention to take life, in the absence of any explanatory circumstances, makes a prima facie case for the prosecution, the state not being required to negative any probability that there were circumstances reducing the homicide below that of murder in the first degree, or excusing or justifying it. Held, that such charge was correct in so far as it related to statutory murder in the first degree under the facts proved. Hedger v. State, 128 N. W. 80, 90, 144 Wis. 279.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 710, provides that every person who shall unlawfully kill any person with malice aforethought, either express or implied, shall be guilty of murder, and that all murder committed in the perpetration of robbery is murder in the first degree, and that all murder not of the first degree is murder of the second degree. White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc. art. 554, provides that, if the defendant pleads guilty, he shall be admonished of the consequences of such plea, and no such plea shall be received unless it appears that he is sane and is uninfluenced by fear or hope of pardon. Article 555 provides that where a defendant in a case of felony persists in pleading guilty, if the punishment of the offense is not absolutely fixed by law, a jury shall be impaneled to assess the punishment on evidence submitted to enable them to decide thereon. Pen. Code 1895, art. 712, provides that, if a person pleads guilty to murder, a jury shall be summoned to find of what degree of murder he is guilty. Held, that when an accused pleaded guilty of murder, and his plea was accepted by the court after examination, and evidence was introduced before a jury which conclusively showed that the murder was committed in the perpetration of robbery, the court was not compelled to submit the issue of second degree murder, under article 712. Neither was the court in error in not defining for the jury murder in the first degree. Miller v. State, 126 S. W. 864, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 600.

Deliberation, as an element of first degree murder, is established if accused had time for thought, and, thinking, though but for a moment, did intend to kill, and in fact did kill. State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 745, 1 Boyce, 538.

To constitute "murder in the first degree," there must be, not only an intention to kill on the part of the slayer, but there must be a premeditated design to kill or effect death. Keigans v. State, 41 South. 886, 887, 52 Fla. 57.

"Murder of the first degree" is where a homicide is committed with sedate, deliberate mind and formed design to kill, though the deliberate and formed design exist only for a moment. State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866-868, 4 Pennewill, 580; State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

A homicide committed under such circumstances that the law implies malice is not always murder in the first degree, but is such only where there exists at the time on the part of accused a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed or of any human being. Hedger v. State, 128 N. W. 80, 90, 144 Wis. 279.

"Murder in the first degree" is not determined by a design to kill, unless that design originated in, or resulted from, a sedate, deliberate mind, or in other words, at the time the design is formed, the mind must be calm, sedate, and deliberate. Wynne v. State, 127 S. W. 197, 199, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 117 (citing Farrer v. State, 42 Tex. 271).

To constitute "murder in the first degree," there must be both an intent to kill and a deliberate and premeditated design to kill, which design must precede the killing by some appreciable space of time. It need not be long, but it must be sufficient for some reflection on the matter and a choice to kill or not to kill. People v. Boggiano, 72 N. E. 101, 179 N. Y. 267.

To constitute "murder in the first degree," the killing must be willful, premeditated, and deliberate, but willful intent, premeditation, or deliberation need not exist for any prescribed length of time before the crime is committed; it is sufficient that there be premeditation and design to kill distinctly formed in the mind at any time before or at the time the shot is fired. State v. McMullen, 71 S. W. 221, 224, 170 Mo. 608.

The law defining "murder in the first degree" does not fix any invariable rule as to the length of the time that must elapse between a formed design to kill and its execution, but only requires that the killing must have been deliberate and that a formed design to kill existed. Snowberger v. State, 128 S. W. 878, 82, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 580.

If one actually forms the purpose maliciously to kill another, and deliberates and premeditates upon it, and then does the act, he commits "murder in the first degree," no matter how short the time may have been, but the time necessary for one thought to follow another between the purpose and its execution. Wickham v. People, 93 Pac. 478, 81, 41 Colo. 345.

To constitute "murder in the first degree" it is not essential that there should be any appreciable space of time between the intent to kill and the act of killing; i. e., any interval "capable of being appreciated or duly estimated." The intent to kill must be formed deliberately and with premeditation; but, when so formed, there need be no appreciable space of time between the intent and the act. People v. Suesser, 75 Pac. 1093, 1097, 142 Cal. 354.

To constitute "murder in the first degree," there need be no appreciable space of time between the intention to kill and the act of killing—they may be as instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind—and it is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by a concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation; and where such is the case, the killing is murder in the first degree, no matter how rapidly the acts of the mind may succeed each other, or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing. People v. Yee Foo, 89 Pac. 450, 452, 4 Cal. App. 730.

A killing in a combat which engenders not blood is not "murder in the first degree," in the absence of premeditation. Osburn v. State, 73 N. E. 601, 604, 164 Ind. 262.

"In order to constitute 'murder in the first degree,' where only the question of malice is involved, and not robbery, or some of those extraneous matters made murder in the first degree by the statute, the intent to kill must be formed in a mind that is cool, deliberate, and sedate. The intent to kill, formed in a mind that is not cool, deliberate, and sedate, is not murder in the first degree." Manning v. State, 85 S. W. 1149, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 55.

It is not necessary, under our statute, in order to constitute murder in the first degree, that the murder should be committed by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or that it shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem; but any kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, is "murder in the first degree." A murderous purpose to draw some one into a dispute, and then strike him down with a deadly weapon, is sufficient to support a finding that the homicide was deliberate and premeditated. State v. Vinso, 71 S. W. 1034, 1037, 171 Mo. 576 (quoting and adopting State v. Fairlamb, 25 S. W. 897, 121 Mo. loc. cit. 144).

"To constitute 'murder in the first degree' there must have been an unlawful killing done, purposely and with deliberate and premeditated malice. If the person has actually formed the purpose maliciously to kill and has deliberated and premeditated upon it before he performs the act, and then performs it, he is guilty of murder in the first degree, however short the time may have been between the purpose and its execution. It is not time that constitutes the distinctive difference between murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree. An unlawful killing with malice, deliberation, and premeditation constitutes the crime of murder in the first degree. It matters not how short the time, if the party has turned it over in his mind and weighed and deliberated upon it." Reed v. State, 106 N. W. 649, 651, 75 Neb. 509.

"In order to warrant a verdict of 'murder in the first degree,' malice must be shown by the evidence to have existed (that is, the jury must be satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the killing was a consummation of a previously formed design to take the life of the person killed, and that the design to kill was formed deliberately with a sedate mind; that is, at the time when the design was formed, the mind of the person killing was self-possessed and capable of contemplating the consequences of the act proposed to be done). There is, however, no definite space of time necessary to intervene between the formed design to kill and the actual killing; a single moment of time may be sufficient; all that is required is that the mind be cool and deliberate in forming its purpose, and that the design to kill is formed." Gregg v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1161, 1163.

Rev. Laws, c. 207, § 1, declares that murder committed with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought, or in the commission or attempt to commit any crime punishable with imprisonment for life, or committed with extreme atrocity or cruelty, is murder in the first degree, and punishable with death. In a prosecution for such offense, the court charged that the words "deliberately premeditated malice aforethought" meant simply "thought upon, resolved upon beforehand, not a thing done suddenly, not a thing that comes into the mind of a sudden, and is done before there is time to think about it, but a thing thought upon or planned some time before, or thought upon long enough before the act is done so that it can reasonably be said to have become a purpose of the mind," that "no particular length of time is necessary" and illustrated the same by stating that if a robber with a dirk or pistol turns a corner and meets a bank messenger with a roll of bills, and determines in one moment to get it, and the next shoots or stabs the messenger dead, takes the package, and flees, his malice was deliberately premeditated, though it occupied only a few seconds to accomplish. Held, that both the definition and illustration were proper. Commonwealth v. Tucker, 76 N. E. 127, 138, 140, 141, 189 Mass. 457, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056.

An instruction that, to constitute "murder in the first degree," there must be proof of malice and premeditation, and that if either of these elements is absent there can be no conviction for that grade of homicide, that a "premeditated design or purpose" is one resulting from thought and reflection, a design conceived and afterwards so deliberately considered as to become resolved and fixed, that when the design to take human life is formed after deliberation, and there is adequate time and opportunity for deliberate thought, then, no matter how soon the felonious killing follows the formation of the settled purpose, it is murder in the first degree, that there need be no appreciable space of time between the formation of the intention to kill and the killing, but that it is as much "premeditation" if it enters into the mind of the guilty agent a moment before the act as if it entered years before, and that it is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by the concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation, but that, when there is no time and opportunity for deliberate thought, the unlawful killing cannot be murder in the first degree, is correct. Welty v. State (Ind.) 100 N. E. 73, 81.

Intent

"Murder in the first degree" cannot be predicated on the mere existence of an intent to kill at the time of committing the crime. State v. Mangano, 72 Atl. 366, 367, 77 N. J. Law, 544.

It is not necessary that a prior intention to do the act of killing be conceived for any particular period of time in order to constitute murder in the first degree. Ferguson v. State, 122 S. W. 236, 237, 92 Ark. 120.

If there was a fixed, deliberate, and settled purpose to kill, usually termed "specific intent to take life," willful, deliberate, and premeditated, although in the course of mutual combat, the offense was "murder of the first degree." State v. Taylor, 50 S. E. 2d 252, 57 W. Va. 228.

To constitute "murder in the first degree," the killing must be intentional, must be deliberate and premeditated, and no killing can be murder in the first degree unless the act of killing is preceded by a willful, deliberate, premeditated, and specific intent to kill. State v. Marx, 60 Atl. 690, 692, 78 Conn. 18.

Under Mills' Ann. St. § 1176, providing that murder in the perpetration of robbery shall be deemed murder in the first degree, the intent is immaterial, so that, where several conspire to rob, and one of the conspirators commits murder in the perpetration of robbery, the others are responsible for his act, though murder was not originally intended. Andrews v. People, 79 Pac. 1031, 1033, Colo. 193, 108 Am. St. Rep. 76.

"Under Code, § 4728, all murder which is perpetrated by means of poison is 'murder in the first degree.' Hence a homicide committed by the administration of poison, with a bad motive or intent, is murder in the first degree, no matter whether there was specific intent to kill." State v. Burns, 99 N. W. 721, 722, 124 Iowa, 207 (citing State v. Vassel, 72 N. W. 497, 103 Iowa, 6; State v. Wells, 17 N. W. 90, 61 Iowa, 629, 47 Am. Rep. 822; State v. Bertoch, 83 N. W. 94, 112 Iowa, 195).

The distinctive feature of "murder in the first degree" is a willful, deliberate, malicious and premeditated intent to take life, and, though it is not indispensable that the premeditated design should have existed in the mind of the slayer for any particular length of time before the killing, yet to constitute murder in the first degree it is indispensable that the evidence should show that the killing was not only done with malice but that it was preceded by a clearly formed design to kill, a clear intent to take life. Howard v. State, 100 S. W. 756, 757, 82 Ark. 97 (citing Bivens v. State, 11 Ark. 460; Fitpatrick v. State, 37 Ark. 239).

Under Code, § 4728, providing that the killing of a human being by means of a willful, unlawful, and felonious administration of poison is "murder in the first degree," an indictment for homicide so committed is not objectionable for failing to allege a specific intent. A homicide so committed cannot constitute murder in the second degree or manslaughter, and hence a specific intent to kill is not an essential allegation in the indictment. State v. Robinson, 101 N. W. 634, 635, 126 Iowa, 69 (citing State v. Van Tassel, 72 N. W. 497, 103 Iowa, 9; State v. Wells, 17 N. W. 90, 61 Iowa, 629, 47 Am. Rep. 822; Epstein v. State, 1 N. E. 491, 102 Ind. 539).

If a person takes the life of another by an act naturally calculated to produce the result, in the absence of any explanatory circumstance or circumstances rendering the homicide excusable or justifiable, or criminal in some degree less than the highest, or creating a reasonable doubt in regard to one of such contingencies, the law presumes that he intended the result effected, and he is guilty of murder in the first degree. Cupps v. State, 77 N. W. 210, 214, 120 Wis. 504, 102 Am. St. Rep. 996.

Pen. Code 1901, § 172, declares that "murder" is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Such malice is express or implied. Section 173 declares that all murder perpetrated by poison or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration of certain crimes, is murder in the first degree, and all other kinds of murder are in the second degree. Held, that the word "other" in section 173 was used to supply the sense of addition to the enumeration; and hence an instruction that it was not essential to a verdict of murder in the first degree by poison that there should be proof that defendant administered the poison to decedent with a specific intent to kill him was proper; malice being implied. Eyttinger v. Territory, 100 Pac. 443, 445, 12 Ariz. 131.

Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 1044, subd. 1, provides that the killing of a human being is "murder in the first degree" when committed from a deliberate and premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed or of another. Subdivision 2 provides that it is murder in the first degree when committed without a design to effect death while in the commission of a felony. Section 610 provides that, upon the trial of an indictment, the prisoner may be convicted of the crime charged therein or of a lesser degree of the same crime. Held, that although murder in the first degree as defined by section 1044, subd. 1, is broad enough to embrace murder in the second degree or manslaughter in either degree, where accused was tried for murder under section 1044, subd. 2, the power of the jury to convict of a lesser degree could not be exercised, since an intent to kill is not a necessary ingredient to the crime, and it was enough to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was done in committing or attempting to commit a felony. People v. Schleiman, 90 N. E. 950, 951, 197 N. Y. 883, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1075, 18 Ann. Cas. 588.

In a prosecution for statutory murder in the first degree, the state claimed that accused killed deceased with premeditated design. The court charged that premeditated design was simply an intent to kill, that "design" meant "intent," and that both words implied premeditation, that premeditation did not exclude sudden intent, and that whether it was described by the words "actual intent," "design," or "premeditated design" was im-material; that the intent was understood to be premeditated because without mental action the purpose could not be formed; that, when there were no circumstances to prevent the presumption, the law would presume that the unlawful act was intentional and malicious; that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, he who takes the life of another by some act naturally calculated to produce death would be presumed to have intended that result and to be guilty of murder in the first degree, it being presumed that such person intended the result that followed, and must be guilty of murder in the absence of evidence that the homicide was justifiable or excusable or such as to raise a reasonable doubt on the question; thus that where accused fired a shot, the weapon being aimed at a vital part of the body, and death ensued as a natural result, the presumption of fact as to the intention to take life, in the absence of any explanatory circumstances, makes a prima facie case for the prosecution, the state not being required to negative any probability that there were circumstances reducing the homicide below that of murder in the first degree, or excusing or justifying it. Held, that such charge was correct in so far as it related to statutory murder in the first degree under the facts proved. Hedger v. State, 128 N. W. 80, 90, 144 Wis. 279.

Malice or motive

Malice is an essential element of "murder in the first degree." State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 220, 2 Boyce, 434.

To establish "murder of the first degree," it must be shown that the killing was committed with express malice aforethought. State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 606, 1 Boyce, 349.

First degree murder is included within the term "felonious homicide" and malice is an essential ingredient thereof. State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 745, 1 Boyce, 538.

"Murder of the first degree" is where the killing was done with malice aforethought. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164.

"Murder in the first degree" occurs where the killing was done with express malice aforethought. State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 221, 2 Boyce, 434.

"Murder of the first degree" exists where the killing is done with express malice aforethought, and express malice aforethought exists where the killing is done with a sedate, deliberate mind and formed design to kill. State v. Brelawski (Del.) 84 Atl. 950, 952.

"Murder of the first degree" is committed when the killing is done with express malice aforethought; that is, with a sedate, deliberate mind, and formed design to kill. State v. Miele (Del.) 74 Atl. 8, 9, 1 Boyce, 33; State v. Uzzo (Del.) 65 Atl. 775, 777, 6 Pennwili, 212; State v. Short (Del.) 82 Atl. 239, 241, 2 Boyce, 491.

If a person puts poison in flour with intent that it shall be cooked and eaten by B., but it is eaten by C., who dies therefrom, such person will be guilty of murder, though he had no malice against C. Chelsey v. State, 49 S. E. 258, 259, 121 Ga. 340.

An instruction that, if any person in the perpetration, or in the attempt to perpetrate, a robbery shall take the life of the person intended to be robbed, he is guilty of "murder in the first degree" is erroneous as eliminating malice. Oates v. State, 103 S. W. 859, 860, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 449.

"Murder," within Rev. St. 1908, § 1624, cl. 4, providing that murder perpetrated by any act greatly dangerous to the lives of others, but indicating a depraved mind regardless of human life, shall be "murder in the first degree," is such as is committed by an act greatly dangerous to the lives of persons other than the one killed, and showing a reckless disregard of human life; and it therefore does not include a killing resulting from intentional shooting of the individual slain, and where there is no element of what is termed "universal malice" shown. Longinotti v. People, 102 Pac. 165, 168, 46 Colo. 173 (citing and adopting Darry v. People, 10 N. Y. 120; Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 26; Jewell v. Territory, 43 Pac. 1075, 4 Okl. 53; and Goldring v. State, 8 South. 311, 26 Fla. 530).

Revisal 1905, § 3631, declaring that murder by means of poison, lying in wait, etc., or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, or premeditated killing, shall be murder in the first degree, and that all other kinds of murder shall be murder in the second degree, classifies the different kinds of murder at common law, without giving any new definition, and the malice essential to constitute murder in the first degree need not arise from personal ill will, but may exist where there has been a wrongful and intentional killing without lawful excuse or mitigating circumstances. State v. Banks, 57 S. E. 174, 176, 143 N. C. 652.

Murder may be committed without any motive. It is the intention, deliberately formed after premeditation, so that it becomes a definite purpose to kill, and a consequent killing without legal provocation or excuse, that constitutes "murder in the first degree." The existence of a motive may be evidence to show the degree of the offense, or to establish the identity of the defendant as the slayer; but motive is not an essential element of the crime, nor is it indispensable to a conviction of the person charged with its commission. State v. Adams, 50 S. E. 765, 768, 138 N. C. 688.

Murder in second degree distinguished

"Murder in the first" and "murder in the second degree" are distinguished, in that specific intent to kill is essential to the offense in the first degree. Reed v. State, 1 S. W. 206, 208, 102 Ark. 525.

The distinction between murder in the first and second degrees is that in "murder in the first degree" a specific intent to take life must be shown, while in murder in the second degree it is not necessary to prove such intent. Petty v. State, 89 S. W. 465, 466, Ark. 515.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1766, declaring that all murder by means of poison, lying in wait, or other malicious or premeditated killing, which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or larceny, shall be deemed "murder in the first degree," when the fact of killing alone is proved, it will be presumed that the crime is murder in the second degree. Ferguson v. State, 122 S. W. 236, 237, 92 Ark. 120.

Where there exists a design deliberately formed in the mind of accused to take life, and death ensues from his act, the homicide is "murder in the first degree"; but where there exists no design to take life, but death results from an unlawful act of violence, and there is no adequate provocation, the homicide is murder in the second degree. State v. Honey (Del.) 65 Atl. 764-766, 6 Pennw. 148.

The statute, providing that all murder by means of poison, lying in wait, etc., or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, or premeditated killing, shall be "murder in the first degree," eliminates murder in the second degree in homicide committed in robbery or in the perpetration of robbery, and the killing of one in the perpetration of the robbery of another is "murder in the first degree." Milo v. State, 1 S. W. 1025, 1029, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 196.

Revisal 1905, § 3631, declaring that murder by means of poison, lying in wait, etc., or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, or premeditated killing, shall be "murder in the first degree," and that all other kinds of murder shall be "murder in the second degree," classifies the different kinds of murder at common law, without giving any new definition. State v. Banks, 57 S. E. 174, 176, 143 N. C. 652.

The degree of murder under the statute is declared that murder perpetrated by any kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing shall be "murder in the first degree," and all other kinds of murder shall be murder in the second degree, depends on the question whether the crime was willful, deliberate, and premeditated, and on that question it becomes material whether accused was in such a condition of mind by reason of intoxication as to be incapable of deliberation and premeditation. Brennan v. People, 86 Pac. 79, 81, 37 Colo. 256.

The characteristic quality of "murder in the first degree," and that which distinguishes it from murder in the second degree or any other homicide, is the existence of a set purpose and fixed design on the part of the assailant that the act of assault should result in the death of the party assaulted; that death being the end aimed at, the object sought for and wished. The distinctive characteristic of murder in the first degree is premeditation. When the act of killing is not done in the commission or attempt to commit some felony nor by poison, or lying in wait, the killing must be done willfully, deliberately, maliciously, and with premeditation. Turner v. State, 108 S. W. 1139, 1142, 19 Tenn. 663, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988, 123 Am. St. Rep. 758, 14 Ann. Cas. 990 (quoting Dale v. State, 10 Yerg. [18 Tenn.] 551; Swan v. State, 4 Humph. [23 Tenn.] 136; Lewis v. State, 3 Head [40 Tenn.] 148).

A willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or a killing done in the perpetration, or attempted perpetration, of robbery, is "murder in the first degree." Otherwise a killing is "murder in the second degree," where accused unlawfully and with malice aforethought killed decedent, and in determining the degree any evidence of the mental status of accused is proper. State v. Johnny, 87 Pac. 3, 8, 29 Nev. 203.

An unlawful killing, done purposely and with deliberate and premeditated malice, is "murder in the first degree," and it matters not how short the time may be between the time of the formation of the purpose to kill and its execution, if the person committing the crime has deliberated upon it. "Murder in the second degree" consists in an unlawful killing done purposely and maliciously, but without deliberation and premeditation. Hamblin v. State, 115 N. W. 850, 853, 81 Neb. 148, 16 Ann. Cas. 569.

The only essential difference between "murder in the first degree" and "murder in the second degree" is that the former is committed after deliberation and premeditation, which elements do not inhere in the lower grade of the crime, but all the elements of murder in the second degree are included in the statutory definition of murder in the first degree. To render one who is not present and does not aid or assist in a murder guilty thereof, by reason of a former conspiracy with the slayer, it must appear that the murder was within the contemplation of the conspiracy, or was the natural and probable outcome thereof. State v. Keleher, 87 Pac. 738, 739, 74 Kan. 631.

In a prosecution for murder, the court charged that "malice is also necessary to murder in the first degree. The distinguishing feature, so far as malice is concerned, is that, in murder of the first degree, malice must be proven to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt as an existing fact, while in murder of the second degree malice will be implied from the fact of an unlawful killing." Held that, if the instructions stood alone, the latter part of the paragraph might be erroneous, but as it was followed by an instruction defining malice as being that which the law infers from certain acts, however suddenly done, as when the fact of an unlawful killing is established and the facts do not establish malice beyond a reasonable doubt, though they tend to excuse or justify the act, then the law implies malice, and the murder is murder of the second degree, and also that if the killing is unlawful and done with implied malice aforethought, it would be murder in the second degree, the instructions taken together were correct. Eggleston v. State (Tex.) 128 S. W. 1105, 1109.

The next lower grade of culpable homicide than "murder in the first degree" is "murder in the second degree." Malice is also a necessary ingredient of the offense of murder in the second degree. The distinguishing feature, however, so far as the element of malice is concerned, is that in murder in the first degree malice must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt as an existing fact, while in murder in the second degree malice will be implied from the fact of an unlawful killing. Implied malice is that which the law infers from or imputes to certain acts, however suddenly done. Thus, when the fact of an unlawful killing is established, and the facts do not establish express malice beyond a reasonable doubt, nor tend to mitigate, excuse, or justify the act, then the law implies malice, and the murder is in the second degree, and the law does not further define murder in the second degree than if the killing is shown to be unlawful, and there is nothing in evidence on the one hand showing express malice, and, on the other hand, there is nothing that will reduce the killing below the grade of murder, then the law implies malice, and the homicide is murder in the second degree. Dobbs v. State, 113 S. W. 923, 927, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 550.

MURDER IN SECOND DEGREE

As felonious homicide, see Felonious Homicide.

All murder not of the first degree is "murder of the second degree." Waters v. State, 114 S. W. 628, 632, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 322.

By Pen. Code, § 352, "murder of the second degree" is all murder which does not amount to murder of the first degree. State v. Hliboka, 78 Pac. 965, 966, 81 Mont. 455, 3 Ann. Cas. 934.

"Murder of the second degree" is all murder not murder in the first degree, as defined by Rev. St. 1887, § 6562. State v. Phinney, 89 Pac. 634, 13 Idaho, 307, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935, 12 Ann. Cas. 1079.

To render one guilty of "murder in the second degree," he must have inflicted an act of violence on decedent which produced death, with the intention to kill decedent or to do an act of violence from which ordinarily, in the usual course of events, death or great bodily harm might result. Fowler v. State, 49 South. 788, 789, 790, 161 Ala. 1.

"The law requires that, before a homicide can be 'murder in the second degree,' it must be unlawfully done, and upon malice aforethought." Thomas v. State, 74 S. W. 36, 38, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 111.

Where one person unlawfully kills another with implied malice, the crime is "murder in the second degree." State v. Short (Del.) 82 Atl. 239, 241, 2 Boyce, 491.

Killing with implied malice constitutes "murder in the second degree"; that is, where the malice is not express, as in murder in the first degree, but is an inference or conclusion of law from facts proved, where there is no deliberate mind and formed design to take life, but where the killing is done without justification or excuse, and without provocation, or without sufficient provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter. State v. Brooks (Del.) 84 Atl. 225, 227; Same v. Brelawski (Del.) 84 Atl. 950, 952; Same v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 214.

Where the killing with a deadly weapon was established, or admitted, and the plea was self-defense, the two presumptions that the killing was unlawful and that it was done with malice arose, and, where accused merely rebutted the presumption of malice, the presumption that the killing was unlawful stood, justifying a conviction of "manslaughter," which is an unlawful killing, which becomes "murder in the second degree" when it has the added element of malice. State v. Fowler, 66 S. E. 567, 151 N. C. 731.

Murder in the second degree is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice, but without deliberation or premeditation. Miller v. State, 40 South. 47, 48, 145 Ala. 677.

"Murder in the second degree" is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, but without deliberation, premeditation, or preconcerted design to kill. State v. Bradley, 24 Atl. 1053, 1055, 64 Vt. 466.

An instruction that "murder in the second degree" is the killing of a human being, "willfully, premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought," is correct. State v. Myers, 121 S. W. 131, 135, 221 Mo. 598.

"Murder in the second degree" is the killing of a human being willfully, premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought, but without deliberation. State v. West, 100 S. W. 478, 481, 202 Mo. 128.

A killing with malice aforethought, but without express malice is "murder in the second degree." McMeans v. State, 114 S. W. 837, 839, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 69.

"Murder in the second degree" is constituted by the absence of express malice upon one side and extenuating circumstances or self-defense or adequate cause upon the other. Wheeler v. State, 121 S. W. 166, 167, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 547.

"Murder in the second degree" consists in design to take life, and without provocation of the killing of another without a formed design to reduce the offense to manslaughter, and under the influence of a wicked or depraved heart, or with cruel and wicked indifference to human life. State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 151, 6 Pennewill, 160.

Murder in the second degree is a killing with implied malice; that is, without design or premeditation, but under the influence of a depraved heart and with a cruel and wicked indifference to human life. State v. Uzze (Del.) 65 Atl. 775-777, 6 Pennewill, 212.

Murder of the second degree is where there is no sedate, deliberate mind and formed design to take life, but when the circumstances show that the homicide was committed under the influence of a wicked and depraved heart, and with a cruel and reckless indifference to human life. State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866-868, 4 Pennewill, 580.

"Murder in the second degree" is the killing of a human being without a sedate, deliberate purpose and formed design to take life, but one which is committed suddenly, without justification or excuse, and without provocation sufficient to reduce the crime to manslaughter. State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497.

"Murder in the second degree" is where the killing is done with implied malice; that is, without justification or excuse or without provocation or sufficient provocation to reduce it to manslaughter. State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 773.

"Murder of the second degree" is where there is no deliberate mind and formed design to take life, but where the killing is malicious and without justification or excuse, without provocation, or without sufficient provocation to reduce the homicide to manslaughter. State v. Adams (Del.) 65 Atl. 510, 511, 6 Pennewill, 178.

"Murder of the second degree" is committed when the killing is done with implied malice, where there is no deliberate mind or formed design to take life or to perpetrate a crime punishable with death, but where the killing is without justification or excuse, and without sufficient provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter. State v. Miele (Del.) 74 Atl. 8, 9, 1 Boyce, 33; Same v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1078, 5 Pennewill, 339; Same v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174.

"Murder of the second degree" occurs where the killing is done with implied malice; that is, where there is no deliberate and or formed design, to take life, but where the killing was done without justification or excuse, or without provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter. State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 220, 2 Boyce, 434; Same v. Pennewill (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24.

"Murder of the second degree" is the killing with implied malice, inferred from the facts proved, where there is no deliberate mind or formed design to take life, but where the killing is done without justification or excuse, and without provocation sufficient to reduce the offense to manslaughter. State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 746, 1 Boyce, 538; State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310, 2 Boyce, 140.

"Murder of the second degree" is when the killing is done with implied malice, not with a deliberate or formed design, but without justification or excuse, and without provocation, or sufficient provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164.

"Murder in the second degree" is where there is no such deliberate mind and formed design to take life, but where, nevertheless, the killing is malicious and without justification or excuse, without any provocation, or without sufficient provocation to reduce the homicide to the grade of manslaughter. State v. Emory (Del.) 58 Atl. 1036, 1038, 5 Pennewill, 126.

Where there is no deliberate mind or formed design to take life, or to perpetrate a capital crime, but where the killing is done without justification or excuse, and without provocation, or sufficient provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter, it is "murder of the second degree." State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 606, 1 Boyce, 349.

"Murder in the second degree" is where the killing was done with implied malice; where there was no deliberate mind or formed design to take life or to perpetrate a crime punishable with death; but where the killing was done without justification or excuse and without provocation, or without sufficient provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter. State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 77, 1078, 5 Pennewill, 339.

"Murder in the second degree" is the killing of a human being without a deliberately formed design to take life, or to perpetrate an attempt to perpetrate a crime punishable with death, but without justification, excuse, or sufficient provocation to reduce the homicide to manslaughter. State v. Collins (Del.) 62 Atl. 224, 226, 5 Pennewill, 263; Same v. Pennewill (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 5 Pennewill, 192.

"Murder in the second degree" is proved where it is satisfactorily shown that the killing was done with a sedate, deliberate purpose and formed design to take life, or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any crime punishable with death, but is usually shown to have been done suddenly, without justification or excuse, and without provocation sufficient to reduce the homicide to manslaughter or in the committing or attempting to commit a noncapital felony or an act of violence from which malice is presumed. State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 230, 5 Pennewill, 77.

"Murder in the second degree" is constituted by the absence of express malice on one side and extenuating circumstances or self-defense or adequate cause on the other; and where the one who killed another laid in wait for him and shot him, adequate cause and self-defense were not in the case, and the killing could not be lower than murder in the second degree. Wheeler v. State, 121 S. W. 166, 167, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 547.

"Murder in the second degree" is defined in Comp. Laws 1897, § 1064, as "every murder which shall be perpetrated without a design to effect the death, by a person while engaged in the commission of a misdemeanor, or which shall be perpetrated in the heat of passion without design to effect death, but in a cruel and unusual manner or by means of a dangerous weapon, unless it is committed under such circumstances as constitute excusable homicide or which shall be perpetrated unnecessarily either while resisting an attempt by the person killed to commit any offense against person or property or after such attempt shall have failed." Territory v. Hendricks, 84 Pac. 523, 524, 13 N. M. 300.

"Murder in the second degree" is: First, all murder which shall be perpetrated without a design to effect death by a person while engaged in the commission of a misdemeanor; or, second, all murder which shall be perpetrated in the heat of passion without design to effect death, but in a cruel and unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon, unless it is committed under such circumstances as constitute excusable or justifiable homicide; or, third, all murder which shall be perpetrated unnecessarily, either while resisting an attempt by the person killed to commit an offense against the person, or property, or after such attempt shall have failed. Comp. Laws 1897, § 1064. An instruction that premeditation and malice aforethought are not elements of the crime of murder in the second degree, and defining it as the killing of a human being by the use of a dangerous weapon without premeditation and without malice aforethought, is erroneous. Territory v. Gutierrez, 79 Pac. 716, 718, 13 N. M. 138.

A killing in a combat which engenders hot blood is not "murder in the second degree," unless the elements of purpose and malice concur in the act. Osburn v. State, 73 N. E. 601, 604, 164 Ind. 262.

To constitute "murder in the second degree" in Texas, the statute only requires that the killing be done in a passion aroused without adequate cause. Redman v. State, 108 S. W. 365, 367, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 591.

If a design to kill is formed in a mind excited by passion, or disturbed by any inadequate cause, and cooling time has not elapsed before the execution of the design, the homicide is not greater than "murder in the second degree." Manning v. State, 85 S. W. 1149, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 55.

"Murder in the second degree" is the wrongful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, but without deliberation. It is where the intent to kill is in a heat of passion, executed the instant it is conceived, or before there has been time for the passion to subside. State v. Robertson, 77 S. W. 528, 530, 178 Mo. 496.

One who intentionally and premeditatedly kills another with a deadly weapon, but while smarting under the insult and passion aroused by vile epithets spoken of him in his presence and hearing by deceased, is guilty of "murder in the second degree." State v. Williams, 84 S. W. 924, 927, 186 Mo. 128 (citing State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 18; State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. loc. cit. 218, 219; State v. Robinson, 73 Mo. 306; State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1015, 177 Mo. 699).

To reduce a murder from the first to the second degree, it is not necessary that the homicide should occur in a sudden transport of passion. A passion is not required to be sudden, nor is it necessary that there be a transport of passion, and if the mind of the slayer is not cool and deliberate when the intent is formed, but is laboring under any excitement or passion, this will reduce the homicide to the second degree. It is an undue limitation and restriction, calculated to cause a conviction of "murder in the first degree," for a charge on "murder in the second degree" to require the jury to believe that accused shot decedent in a sudden transport of passion. Kannmacher v. State, 101 S. W. 238, 242, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 118.

Though deceased brought on the difficulty by calling defendant names, and struck the first blow, yet, it having been with his hands, and he not having offered to strike him with anything else, and defendant having from the first cut and slashed deceased with his knife, and continued it after deceased had fallen, mortally wounded, a conviction of "murder in the second degree" is justified. Hatchell v. State, 84 S. W. 234, 237, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 380.

Mere words or epithets, however opprobrious or insulting, cannot justify the killing of the person who uses them, but his killing by one while in a violent passion aroused by such language, though not deliberate, is "murder in the second degree," if done willfully, premeditatedly, and of malice aforethought. State v. Ballance, 106 S. W. 60, 64, 207 Mo. 607.

"If a person to whom opprobrious epithets or insulting gestures are applied is thereby aroused to a sudden heat of passion, and, before such passion has had time to cool, with a deadly weapon kills the person who applies such opprobrious epithets or gestures to him, then such killing is done without deliberation, and a homicide committed under such circumstances is 'murder in the second degree.'" State v. Brown, 7 S. W. 1111, 1112, 181 Mo. 192.

Defendant, with another, went into a saloon of decedent, and there proposed to throw dice for the drinks, and invited decedent to throw and also to drink, both of which decedent refused to do, using at the time insulting language toward defendant. Thereupon, after drinking, defendant, with his companion, left the saloon. While walking away defendant suggested to his companion that decedent had it in for him (companion) as the reason why he had insulted defendant, to which his companion replied that decedent had nothing against him, but that he (defendant) was the man decedent was after. Defendant's companion then left him, and about 15 minutes later defendant returned to decedent's place with a pistol, and in a renewal of the difficulty shot decedent. Held that, if defendant's intent to kill was formed at the time of the first meeting, or after the conversation with his companion, and he then went for a pistol, and his mind was inflamed by the insulting language either at the time it was spoken or in the subsequent conversation with his companion, and cooling time had not elapsed before he returned and shot decedent, he was guilty of no greater offense than "murder in the second degree." Rice v. State, 103 S. W. 1154, 1168, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 255.

Our statute declares murders committed by lying in wait, by poison, and in attempt to perpetrate certain felonies, and all other willful, deliberate, and premeditated murders, to be of the first degree, and all other kinds of murder at common law, not hereby declared to be manslaughter or justifiable or excusable homicide, to be "murder in the second degree." Those murders committed in a heat of passion engendered, not by what was legal provocation at common law to reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter, but by opprobrious epithets or other insults, sufficient to arouse the same heat of passion which would be caused by a technical, legal provocation, are of second degree. An instruction that, if deceased used words toward defendant which were a reasonable provocation for an assault by defendant on deceased, defendant is only guilty of manslaughter if the fourth degree was properly refused, since such provocation by mere words would only reduce the grade of the offense to murder in the second degree, where the party provoked used a deadly weapon with which he killed his opponent. State v. Gartrell, 71 S. W.

45, 1053, 171 Mo. 489 (quoting and adopting State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 247).

The killing of a human being with malice aforethought, without premeditation or deliberation, is, generally speaking, "murder in the second degree." Hence an instruction that the intoxication of accused should be considered in determining the degree of the murder was improperly refused. State v. Williams, 97 N. W. 992, 995, 122 Iowa, 115.

"Murder in the second degree" is the wrongful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, but without deliberation. Where the court, on a trial for murder, had defined "premeditatedly" as "thought of beforehand," and "malice aforethought" as meaning that the killing was done with malice and premeditation, an instruction that, if the defendant did unlawfully, premeditatedly and of his malice aforethought, but without deliberation, as defined in these instructions, kill the deceased," etc., to find him guilty of "murder in the second degree," was not objectionable in that it omitted to tell the jury that, to constitute that degree of murder, the homicide must be committed "willfully" or "intentionally." State v. Marsh, 71 W. 1003, 1004, 171 Mo. 523.

Any error in defining "murder in the second degree" as the felonious killing of a human being could not have misled the jury, where the court subsequently defined it as the felonious killing of a human being by one of sound memory and discretion with malice aforethought, which might be either express or implied, and such charge was afterwards repeated. State v. Tweed, 68 S. E. 139, 152 C. 843.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, the court properly presented the issue of self-defense, and correctly defined murder in the second degree, and then charged the jury to find defendant guilty if he shot deceased with a gun, which was a deadly weapon, and that such shooting was not under the immediate influence of sudden passion, produced by an adequate cause, and was not in defense of himself against an unlawful attack, etc., the charge is not erroneous, as nowhere charging that the killing must be unlawful or that such killing was done on malice, since, to justify a conviction of murder in the second degree, facts must be found which would make the killing unlawful under circumstances which would imply malice. Pratt v. State, 27 S. W. 827, 829, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 167.

An instruction, on a trial for murder alleged to have been committed in the perpetration of burglary by setting fire to the house burglarized and occupied by decedent, that if decedent occupied the house, and if accused broke and entered the same with the intent to fraudulently take corporeal personal property of value then and there in the house, and without the consent of decedent, and if accused, acting with implied malice aforethought, set fire to the house, and by reason thereof decedent was burned and died therefrom, etc., accused was guilty of "murder in the second degree," etc., sufficiently defined arson and burglary. Jones v. State, 110 S. W. 741, 742, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 131, 126 Am. St. Rep. 776.

In a prosecution for homicide, the court charged that, if a person by his own wrongful act brings about the necessity of taking the life of another to prevent being killed himself, he cannot claim that the killing is in self-defense, but the killing will be imputed to malice; that a person provoking a difficulty with another with the willful intention of killing the latter or of doing him serious bodily harm is guilty of murder, though he may have done the killing suddenly and without deliberation to save his own life, and if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant by his acts or language, or both, provoked the difficulty with deceased, and cause deceased to attack defendant with a gun, and defendant, pursuant to his original, unlawful and willful intention to kill deceased, shot and killed him to save his own life, the homicide would be "murder in the second degree." Held a correct charge on the issue of provoking a difficulty. Woodard v. State, 111 S. W. 941, 943, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 86.

Where accused intentionally shot decedent with a pistol and killed him, and the state failed to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was done with deliberation and premeditation, accused was guilty of "murder in the second degree." State v. Jones, 59 S. E. 353, 354, 145 N. C. 466.

Where accused admitted that he killed decedent while holding the pistol so close to her body as to scorch her clothing, and he offered no excuse therefor except decedent's refusal to surrender a child of the parties, and that he fired to make her release the child, he was at least guilty of "murder in the second degree." State v. Thompson, 69 S. E. 254, 255, 153 N. C. 618.

Defendant and decedent, brothers, had an altercation, in which a knife was used, and defendant was ordered from their mutual home, and he returned an hour later, secured his clothing and a gun, and in a renewal of the difficulty killed decedent. Held, that if the intention to kill was formed through passion, without adequate cause, and a sufficient time had not elapsed for his mind to cool to the extent of contemplating the consequences of his act, he was guilty of no greater offense than "murder in the second degree." Dixon v. State, 103 S. W. 399, 401, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 555.

Accused admitted the shooting of decedent twice with a rifle, inflicting wounds either of which would produce death, and relied on self-defense. The killing took place in the woods while the parties were hunting. Both had whisky with them, and accused admitted that he was a little drunk at the time of the shooting. There was no motive for the killing. The evidence showed a quarrel between them after a deer had been killed. Held to justify a finding of "murder in the second degree" within St. 1898, § 4339, defining murder in the second degree, as a killing perpetrated by any act imminently dangerous to others and evincing a depraved mind, though without any premeditated design to effect the death, instead of finding him guilty of murder in the first degree. Where the case was one where the jury might conclude from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that murder either in the first or second degree had been committed, but, not being wholly convinced that the greater offense had been perpetrated, the jury properly gave accused the benefit of the doubt, and found him guilty of murder in the second degree. Lillystrom v. State, 132 N. W. 132, 133, 146 Wis. 525.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 710, provides that every person who shall unlawfully kill any person with malice aforethought, either express or implied, shall be guilty of murder, and that all murder committed in the perpetration of robbery is murder in the first degree, and that all murder not of the first degree is murder of the second degree. White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc. art. 554, provides that, if the defendant pleads guilty, he shall be admonished of the consequences of such plea, and no such plea shall be received unless it appears that he is sane and is uninfluenced by fear or hope of pardon. Article 555 provides that where a defendant in a case of felony persists in pleading guilty, if the punishment of the offense is not absolutely fixed by law, a jury shall be impaneled to assess the punishment on evidence submitted to enable them to decide thereon. Pen. Code 1895, art. 712, provides that, if a person pleads guilty to murder, a jury shall be summoned to find of what degree of murder he is guilty. Held, that when an accused pleaded guilty of murder, and his plea was accepted by the court after examination, and evidence was introduced before a jury which conclusively showed that the murder was committed in the perpetration of robbery, the court was not compelled to submit the issue of second degree murder, under article 712. Neither was the court in error in not defining for the jury murder in the first degree. Miller v. State, 126 S. W. 864, 865, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 600.

Intent

Where there was a fixed purpose to do bodily harm, without killing, and death resulted, it was "murder of the second degree." State v. Taylor, 50 S. E. 247, 252, 57 W. Va. 228.

Malice

Malice is an essential element of "murder in the second degree." State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 220, 2 Boyce, 434.

"Murder in the second degree" is a killing done with implied malice. State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 635, 7 Pennewill, 127. Same v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 606, 1 Boyce, 349; Same v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491.

If the killing is shown to be unlawful without any other proof, malice is implied, so as to make the slayer guilty of second degree murder. Wilson v. State, 129 S. W. 613, 614, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 1.

"Murder of the second degree" is committed where the killing is with malice aforethought implied by law, arising as an inference or conclusion of law from the facts found. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

Where a killing is committed under the influence of a depraved heart, or with cruel indifference to human life, the law implies malice, and makes the offense "murder of the second degree"; the killing neither being deliberate nor in the heat of passion. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164.

A charge that, when an unlawful killing is established, and the facts neither show express malice nor tend to mitigate, excuse, or justify the act, the law implies malice, and the killing constitutes "murder in the second degree," is a correct definition of murder in the second degree. Burns v. State (Tex.) 141 S. W. 356, 364.

"The crime of 'murder in the second degree' necessarily involves an act done with malice aforethought, but that term, used in defining the crime, is technical rather than descriptive. It does not necessarily require an intent to murder. Malice aforethought may be implied where there is no intent to kill but an intent to commit a felony, from which death results, although that result is unintended. That death resulting from a criminal attempt to commit an abortion constitutes murder in the second degree is in this state well settled." State v. Gibbons, 120 N. W. 474, 475, 142 Iowa, 96.

An instruction with reference to "murder in the second degree" that malice was not an essential ingredient of that offense, the distinguishing feature being that in murder in the first degree malice must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, while in murder in the "second" degree malice will be implied from an unlawful killing, where the facts do not reduce it to manslaughter, that implied malice is that which the law infers from certain acts, however suddenly done, as when the fact of an unlawful killing is established and there are no facts which establish the existence of express malice, and none which tend to reduce the killing to manslaughter or to excuse it, then the law implies malice, correctly defined second degree murder. Edwards v. State, 135 S. W. 540, 546, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 307.

A charge that implied malice is what the law infers from or imputes to certain acts, however suddenly done, as when the fact of an unlawful killing is established, and the facts do not establish express malice beyond a reasonable doubt, nor tend to mitigate, excuse, or justify the act, then the law implies malice and the murder is in the second degree, was not upon the weight of the evidence, but was a general definition in effect that where an unlawful killing is shown, of which accused is guilty, and the evidence does not show express malice or facts justifying or excusing the homicide, or reducing it to manslaughter, such killing, being unlawful, is "murder in the second degree," stating the distinguishing features between murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, and manslaughter. Carson v. State, 123 S. W. 590, 592, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 394, 136 Am. St. Rep. 981.

MURDER IN THIRD DEGREE

"Murder in the third degree," as defined in Comp. Laws 1897, § 1065, is "every killing of a human being by the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of another, which under the provision of this act is not murder in the first or second degrees and which is not excusable or justifiable homicide, as now defined by law." Territory v. Hendricks, 84 Pac. 523, 524, 13 N. M. 300.

MUSHROOMS

Truffles in tins are dutiable as "mushrooms in tins," by similitude, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170. Von Bremen, MacMonnies & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 839, 94 C. C. A. 801.

The provision in paragraph 241, Schedule G, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 170, for "mushrooms prepared or preserved," does not include mushrooms dried merely by evaporation, which are dutiable under paragraph 257 of said act, 30 Stat. 171, as "vegetables in their natural state." Kraut v. United States, 139 Fed. 94.

Mushrooms dried in order to preserve them and placed in hermetically sealed tins holding from 30 to 45 pounds, are within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, relating to "mushrooms prepared or preserved, in tins, jars, bottles or similar packages," rather than paragraph 257, 30 Stat. 171, relating to "vegetables in their natural state." Choy Chong Woh & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 879, 82 C. C. A. 608.

MUSICAL

"A well-recognized definition of 'musical' is of or pertaining to music or the performance of music." Aolian Co. v. Hallett & Davis Piano Co., 134 Fed. 872, 880.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION

"A 'musical composition' is a rational collocation of sounds apart from concepts, reduced to a tangible expression from which the collocation can be reproduced either with or without continuous human intervention." White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 319, 324, 209 U. S. 1, 52 L. Ed. 655, 14 Ann. Cas. 628.

In Rev. St. § 4952, the author or proprietor of any "musical composition," on compliance with the provisions of the copyright act, being given the exclusive liberty of copying and vending the same, the words "musical composition" undoubtedly relate to the intellectual conception of the composer. The act confers protection to only the material semblance in which the musical composition finds expression. A perforated record or sheet, designed to be played with mechanism, is not to be protected. White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., 139 Fed. 427, 430.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

Certain metallophones and mouth organs or harmonicas, having at least one full octave, and capable of playing a musical air, but not so finished as to musical qualities that they would be used by musicians, being fitted rather for the amusement of children, are dutiable as "toys," under paragraph 418, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11 (30 Stat. 191), and not as "musical instruments," under paragraph 453 of said act (30 Stat. 193). Borgfeldt v. United States, 124 Fed. 473, 474.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3018, forbids a dramshop keeper to keep, exhibit, or use, or suffer to be kept, exhibited, or used in his dramshop, a piano, organ, or other musical instrument whatever, "for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon in such dramshop." While a Regina Concerto, which is a musical machine set playing by dropping a coin in a slot, and thereby releasing the spring setting the machinery in motion, is a musical instrument, and winding it up and dropping a coin in the slot constitutes performing on it, it is not such a "musical instrument" as the Legislature meant to designate in the statute, which meant the keeping of an instrument with the intention of the dramshop keeper to perform on it himself or engaging some one else to do so; the word "having" in the phrase "having the same performed on" not being synonymous with "permitting," but importing making an arrangement to have an act done. Thiebes-Stierlin Music Co. v. Weiss, 121 S. W. 1099, 1101, 142 Mo. App. 598.

A mechanical piano player is a "musical instrument." Æolian Co. v. Hallett & Davis Piano Co., 134 Fed. 872, 880.

As mandatory

May construed as must, see May.

The word "must" is not always to be construed as mandatory. It has been construed as directory only. People ex rel. Jerome v. Goff, 98 N. Y. Supp. 66, 67, 49 Misc. Rep. 72 (citing In re Hennessy, 58 N. E. 446, 164 N. Y. 393).

"It is true the word 'must' is sometimes construed as 'may'—permissive—but this only when the context requires it. Where the context plainly shows the provision to be mandatory, the word 'must' is a command, and cannot be construed as permissive, but must be given the signification which it imports." Gibbs v. Gibbs, 73 Pac. 641, 653, 26 Utah, 382.

Const. art. 2, § 20, declaring that "the style of the laws of this state shall be," etc., is mandatory and must be complied with; the word "shall" being equivalent to "must." State ex rel. Gouge v. Burrow, 104 S. W. 526, 529, 119 Tenn. 376, 14 Ann. Cas. 809.

The word "must," in Code Civ. Proc. § 483, providing that, where the complaint sets forth two or more causes of action, the statement of the facts constituting each cause of action "must" be separate and numbered, and section 507 providing that defendant may set forth as many defenses as he has, and that each defense "must" be separately stated and numbered, is a mandatory word, and the provisions are mandatory, and the court cannot disregard them. Stern v. Marcuse, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1026, 1027, 119 App. Div. 478.

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2627, prescribing the order of trial in criminal cases, and providing that the prosecuting attorney must first state the case, the word "must" is used in a mandatory or imperative sense. Hence it is not permissible for hired counsel to open and close to the jury on behalf of the state. State v. Price, 85 S. W. 922, 923, 111 Mo. App. 423.

In a statute providing for a hearing and determination of by the Supreme Court of an election contest, the provision that, on the presentation of the petition, the court "must" proceed to a summary canvass of the vote" should not be construed as depriving the court of its discretion to determine whether the petition presented facts justifying such action. Metz v. Maddox, 105 N. Y. Supp. 702, 708, 121 App. Div. 147 (concurring opinion of Judge Rich).

The word "must," in Municipal Court Act, § 25, subd. 5, providing that actions to recover a penalty or a fine for a violation of any provision of the Sanitary Code must be brought in the district where the violation happened or occurred, when that subdivision is read in connection with subdivision 4, providing that, if an action is brought in a different district, it may nevertheless be tried therein unless transferred to the proper district before trial on demand of the defendant made on or before joinder of issue, is not mandatory in the sense of taking away jurisdiction from a court other than the one specified as the place of trial, but simply gives the defendant an absolute right of removal to the proper district, if demand is made at the proper time and in the proper way. Department of Health of City of New York v. Halpin, 81 N. Y. Supp. 679, 681, 40 Misc. Rep. 248.

The word "must," as used in Pol. Code, § 4645, providing that the clerk of the district court must give each juror, when excused from service, a certificate, signed by himself under seal, stating the amount due him, etc., and on its presentation to the county treasurer the amount must be paid, etc., indicates that the duty of the clerk becomes imperative as soon as a juror is entitled to his pay, and that the duty of the treasurer is imperative as soon as a certificate properly issued by the district court is presented to him. Ex parte Farrell, 92 Pac. 785, 786, 36 Mont. 254.

Code Cr. Proc. § 466, provides that: "The application for a new trial 'must' be made before judgment, except an application made under subdivision 7 of section 465, which may be made at any time within one year, and except in case of a sentence of death, when the application may be made at any time before execution." The court says: "The learned judge at special term in his opinion herein said: Not always is the word 'must' to be construed as mandatory." "That is quite true, but, considering the history of these provisions, the prior state of the law, and that new trials in criminal cases are permissible by statute only, it seems to me that the words are too plain and imperative to permit of such construction. It is like a statute of limitations. If the motion for a new trial 'may' be made after judgment, 'may' a motion upon the ground of newly discovered evidence other than capital be made after a year?" People ex rel. Jerome v. Court of General Sessions, 98 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 112 App. Div. 424.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1670, provides that, when a notice of pendency of action is filed with the complaint, personal service of the summons "must" be made upon defendant within 60 days after the filing, or else, before the expiration of that time, publication of the summons must be commenced, or service thereof must be made without the state. Section 1674 authorizes the court in its discretion to cancel a lis pendens if a plaintiff filing the notice unreasonably neglects to proceed in the action. Held, that the provision of section 1670 is peremptory, and a failure to comply with it is a form of unreasonable neglect which requires the court to cancel the notice; and hence where a lis pendens was filed November 14, 1907, and an amended summons and complaint was filed November 18, 1907, and the summons and complaint were not served on defendant until January 20, 1908, no attempt being made to serve it until January 6th, and no attempt made to effect substituted service, the lis pendens should be canceled. Brown v. Mando, 109 N. Y. Supp. 726, 125 App. Div. 380.

Code Civ. Proc. § 134, as amended, provides that no court other than the Supreme Court "must" be open on any of the holidays mentioned in section 10, except to give instructions to juries on their request, to receive a verdict or discharge a jury, or for the exercise of the powers of a magistrate in a criminal action, and that injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued on any day. Previous to the amendment of 1907 the section read no court "shall" be open nor shall any judicial business be transacted, etc., provided that the Supreme Court and the superior courts shall always be open for the transaction of business, and that injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued on any day. Among the holidays mentioned in section 10 is any day appointed by the Governor for a holiday. Section 133 provides that courts of justice may be held and judicial business transacted on any day except as provided in section 134. Section 135 provides that, if any day mentioned in section 134 happens to be the day appointed for the holding of a court or to which it is adjourned, it shall be deemed appointed for or adjourned to the next day. Held, that section 134 as amended March 19, 1907, still means what it has always meant, that the superior court shall not on a legal holiday transact any judicial business outside of the constitutional and statutory exceptions, notwithstanding the substitution of the word "must" for "shall"; and hence a sentence pronounced on a day appointed by the Governor as a legal holiday was void. Ex parte Smith, 93 Pac. 191, 193, 194, 152 Cal. 566.

MUTATIS MUTANDIS

Where profits are defined by a certain article, all the provisions of which are to apply to the relations between the parties springing into existence after the expiration of the contract "mutatis mutandis," these latter words mean necessary changes in details to conform to a single vital alteration, and suggest a reversal of the relative positions of the parties under the contract, which was to continue the same in other respects. Copeland v. Eaton, 95 N. E. 291, 209 Mass. 139, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 521.

MUTE

See Stood Mute.

MUTILATE—MUTILATION

"Mutilate" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as follows: "To cut off or deprive of a limb or essential part of, as an animal body; maim; cut or break off, or otherwise remove any part of, as a statue; disfigure; to retrench, remove, expunge, or delete an essential or material part of, so as to render incomplete or imperfect, as a literary composition; as to mutilate a speech." The main idea of such a definition is the removal of an essential part, so that the whole is rendered imperfect. A railroad ticket is not mutilated, within the meaning of a stipulation on the face thereof that it should not be good for passage if mutilated in any way, where both pieces are presented to the conductor at the same time, and it is apparent that they are parts of the same ticket, and that together they form the entire ticket. Young v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 47 S. E. 556, 120 Ga. 25, 65 L. R. A. 436, 102 Am. St. Rep. 68, 1 Ann. Cas. 24.

Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 470, provides that, when an indictment or information has been lost, mutilated, or obliterated, the district or county attorney may suggest the fact to the court, and another indictment or information may be substituted. Held, that the county attorney had no authority to change the date of filing on an information and complaint, and that such change constituted a mutilation, rendering the same nugatory. Kelly v. State, 127 S. W. 544, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 14.

MUTUAL

The words "mutual" and "mutually," as applied to an exception in the charter of a vessel, providing for allowances for demurrage and dispatch money, that delay from causes beyond control of the parties shall be "always mutually excepted," cannot be construed in the sense of reciprocal in respect to the same broken engagement, but should be understood as meaning that the exception was intended to protect the parties from liability to each other, whenever performance of any covenant was prevented or delayed by any exception. Pool Shipping Co. v. Samuel, 200 Fed. 36, 118 C. C. A. 264.

MUTUAL ACCOUNTS

An account of a miller for supplies furnished on the credit of a physician, pursuant to his orders, and an account of the physician for professional services rendered the miller and his family during the period of the furnishing of the supplies, consist of reciprocal demands constituting a mutual current account, within Code Civ. Proc. § 386, declaring that a cause of action on a mutual current account accrues from the time of the last item proved in the account on either side. Miller v. Longshore, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1041, 147 App. Div. 214.

An account of loans between the lender and the borrowing firm, kept on the firm's books or on slips of paper, did not constitute a "mutual, open, and current account," within Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 386, providing that in an action to recover a balance due on a mutual, open, and current account, where there have been reciprocal demands between the parties, the cause of action was deemed to have accrued from the time of the last item proved in the account on either side. In re Girvin, 160 Fed. 197.

That one party kept one side of the account and the other party the other side thereof is immaterial in determining whether there were mutual accounts. Lapham v. Kansas & Texas Oil, Gas & Pipe Line Co., 123 Pac. 863, 87 Kan. 65, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 813.

A current account kept by a husband of his transactions with his wife's money does not constitute a "mutual account," nor is an account mutual where it simply contains items of money, received and paid, nor one in which there were but three items of credit during a period of five years; cash items being also held to form no part of a mutual, open, and running account. In re Girvin, 160 Fed. 197.

A husband transferred his business and accounts due him to his wife, who executed to him a power of attorney to manage the business for her. At the time of the transfer, a debtor was indebted to the husband for goods sold at various times. After the transfer, an account therefor was rendered the debtor, who made a cash payment, and at various times delivered materials to the husband. Subsequently the wife reassigned the account to the husband. Held, that the account was an open account as distinguished from an account stated, since mutual accounts are made up of matters of set-off, and there must be a mutual credit founded on a subsisting debt on the other side, or an express or an implied agreement for a set-off of mutual debts. Culver v. Newhart, 122 Pac. 975, 18 Cal. App. 614.

A bill alleging damages to property growing out of the laying of a pavement and change of grade and praying for an accounting, alleging that it was necessary to raise plaintiff's residence, surface her yard, and various other things, does not state a cause wherein "the accounts to be investigated are mutual," within Const. 1890, § 161, relating to causes of which the chancery court and district courts have concurrent jurisdiction. Murphy v. City of Meridian (Miss.) 60 South 48.

Where an officer of a corporation, acting as general manager with the knowledge and consent of the other officers and others interested, kept the books of the corporation in the usual course of business, and during the period of his service as manager credited himself from time to time with salary and charged against such credits items of cash received from time to time during such period, the account between him and the corporation was a "mutual, open account," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 166, declaring that in an action on a mutual, open account the cause of action accrues from the time of the last item proved in the account on either side; there being nothing to show that the officer had not actually received the amounts charged from time to time. Blom v. Blom Codfish Co., 127 Pac. 596, 71 Wash. 41.

Items on both sides required

Under Rev. St. § 4228, providing that the cause of action for the balance due on a mutual and open account current accrues at the time of the last item proved therein, it is proper to charge that such an account "is an account consisting of credits as well as debits, charges, and credits, between the parties. An account in which A. charges B. with a number of items extending through a considerable time, but in which B. has no credits, is not a 'mutual and open account current.'" Dunn v. Howard, 41 N. W. 707, 73 Wis. 545 (citing and adopting Hannon v. Engelmann, 5 N. W. 791, 49 Wis. 282; Fitzpatrick v. Estate of Phelan, 16 N. W. 606, 53 Wis. 254).

Payments alone insufficient

The claim for services and the 47 items of expenses set forth in the petition, with proper credits of payments thereon, constitute one account only. The answer challenges the correctness of the charge for services and of the items of expenses therein, and sets forth 34 items of alleged payments which, if correct, should have been included in the account. Held, that no "mutual accounts" were involved. Lapham v. Kansas & Texas Oil & Gas & Pipe Line Co., 123 Pac. 863, 87 Kan.

55, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 813 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4647).

Where the items of an account are all on one side, there being none on the other side, except credits of payment, or where the account consists merely of matters of charge on the one side and demands of set-off on the other, it is not a "mutual account." Hoosier Const. Co. v. National Bank of Commerce of Seattle, 73 N. E. 1006, 1008, 35 Ind. App. 270.

A "mutual account" implies a reciprocity of dealing between the parties to the account, and is made up of matters of set-off wherein each party has a right of action against the other; and a set-off can be pleaded only when the right of action is against the plaintiff in the same capacity as that in which he is prosecuting his claim; and an individual obligation is not a matter of set-off to a partnership claim or to a claim by the plaintiff in a representative capacity; nor can a partnership debt be a set-off to a claim by one of the members of the partnership; and, on a general payment on an open account between them, the account would not for that reason have been rendered mutual, since the mere payment of money upon an account does not have that effect, but operates simply as a reduction pro tanto of the claim. Flynn v. Seale, 84 Pac. 263-265, 2 Cal. App. 665.

Where the items of an account are all on one side as between a shopkeeper and his customer, and where goods are charged and payments credited, there is no "mutuality" which will prevent the statute from barring the account. Under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 64, providing that an action for a balance due upon an open account, where there have been reciprocal demands, shall be deemed to accrue from the time of the last item proved on account on either side, an account consisting entirely of charges on one side and a payment on account on the other is not a mutual account; the important prerequisite being a condition of mutuality and reciprocity of dealing sufficient to reasonably justify the inference of an understanding between the parties that the items of one account are to be set off against the items of the other, so far as they go. McArthur v. McCoy, 112 N. W. 155, 157, 21 S. D. 814 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

MUTUAL AGREEMENT

A "mutual agreement" implies an offer and acceptance, or a promise for a promise, and means a reciprocal agreement, or one that requires something to be done or forborne by either party for the other. Grossman v. Schenker, 100 N. E. 89, 206 N. Y. 466.

MUTUAL AND DEPENDENT COVENANTS

Where a written contract for the sale of land recited the payment of a sum down by the purchaser, and required him to pay the remainder of the purchase money on a specified date, and further provided that on such payment being made the vendor should "on demand thereafter" cause to be executed to the purchaser "a good and sufficient deed in fee simple of the premises above described, free and clear of all legal liens and incumbrances," the covenants for payment of the purchase money and for the delivery of the deed conveying a good title were "mutual and dependent," and a tender of performance by the vendor in accordance with the contract was a condition precedent to his right to maintain an action to recover the purchase money from the purchaser. Michigan Home Colony Co. v. Tabor, 141 Fed. 332, 336, 72 C. O. A. 480.

MUTUAL AND OPEN ACCOUNT

See Mutual Accounts.

MUTUAL AND RECIPROCAL

Where a husband and wife, advanced in years, and each owning separate property, agreed that they would have their wills made, and he made a will giving her a life estate in his property, and she conveyed her property to him, the deed to take effect on her death, but it did not appear that any agreement was made between them as to the terms of the will, or that one was to be the consideration for the other, a contention that the deed and the will were "mutual and reciprocal," and for that reason irrevocable, was without merit. Sappingfield v. King, 90 Pac. 150, 49 Or. 102, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066.

MUTUAL ASSENT

Element of sale, see Sale.

"Mutual assent" is assent to the same thing in the same sense and under a common understanding of the stipulations agreed to. Martin v. Thrower, 60 S. E. 825, 3 Ga. App. 784.

MUTUAL COMBAT

"Mutual combat" can exist where there is "mutual intent" to fight, though only one of the parties strikes a blow. Lee v. State, 58 S. E. 676-678, 2 Ga. App. 481.

"Mutual combat," within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 73, providing that, if a person kill another in his defense, it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing that to save his own life the killing of the other was absolutely necessary, and that it must appear also that the person killed was the assailant, or that the slayer had in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle, is a mutual fight following a mutual intention to fight with felonious purpose. Warnack v. State, 60 S. E. 288, 290, 3 Ga. App. 590.

A charge that if defendant believed a deceased had taken possession of a field claimed by him, and would be there with an armed party on the morning of the killing, and they had made threats against the life of defendant, and defendant, knowing all these things, voluntarily organized a party, arming them with deadly weapons for the purpose of meeting such parties in deadly conflict, and a conflict ensued and the deceased was killed, then such conflict was a "mutual combat," and all parties intentionally engaged in it are guilty of murder, was not under the theory of the prosecution erroneous. Driggers v. United States, 95 Pac. 612, 21 Okl. 60, 129 Am. St. Rep. 823, 17 Ann. Cas. 66.

MUTUAL CONSENT

To constitute a contract, the agreement must be mutual and communicated to each other, and "consent is not mutual" unless the parties all agree upon the same thing in the same sense. Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co., 75 Pac. 528, 533, 12 Okl. 413.

MUTUAL CONTRACTS

See Mutuality of Contract.

For a contract to be "mutual," an obligation must rest on each party to do or permit to be done, something in consideration of the act or promise of the other; that is, neither party can be bound, unless both are bound. Cal Hirsch & Sons Iron & Rail Co. v. Paragould & M. R. Co., 127 S. W. 623, 148 Mo. App. 173.

MUTUAL COVENANTS

See Mutual and Dependent Covenants.

MUTUAL CREDITS

"Mutual debts or mutual credits," within the Bankruptcy Act, providing that, in all cases of "mutual debts" or "mutual credits" between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated and one debt shall be set off against the other, and the balance only shall be allowed or paid, are established on proof that an insolvent has money on deposit in a bank subject to check, and also owes the bank on a promissory note, the money deposited being the money obtained on the note, and the bank may, before the insolvent is declared a bankrupt, credit the amount of the deposit on the debt due on the note. West v. Bank of La-homa, 85 Pac. 469, 471, 16 Okl. 328.

The Bankruptcy Act of 1898, providing that, in all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated and one debt shall be set off against the other, and only the balance paid. The Bankruptcy Act of 1867 had a substantially similar provision taken from the earlier English acts, under which it was decided that "mutual credits" must in their nature terminate in debts, or a debt be in the contemplation of the parties. Some of the latter English cases arose under the more recent English acts, in which the term "mutual dealings" was used, and this the court said is a much more comprehensive term than "mutual credits." It was held that the act of 1898 does not authorize the setting off against the claim of a landlord for rent under a lease to the bankrupt of an unliquidated claim for damages in favor of the bankrupt, sounding in tort, and arising independently of the contract of lease. In Becker Bros., 139 Fed. 366, 367.

A bailment contract, transferring the possession of a mercantile business to the bankrupts to operate the same for a year, provided that, for the use of the property, the bankrupts should pay to the bailor certain percentages on sales, and rent and insurance; that the bankrupts should keep the stock up to within $500 of the original inventory value; that on termination of the contract the bailor should pay any inventory excess up to $500; and that the bankrupts should be liable for any deficiency. On the termination of the contract, the inventory excess amounted to $1,323.42, but the bankrupts were indebted to the bailor on account of unpaid insurance and percentages on sales, etc., $679.73. Held, that such items were "mutual debts and credits," as defined by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68 (30 Stat. 565), providing that such claims shall be set off in bankruptcy. Walther v. Williams Mercantile Co., 169 Fed. 270, 94 C. C. A. 546.

A claim for money expended as quasi surety for a bankrupt is a "mutual credit," within section 68 of the bankrupt act, providing inter alia that, in all cases of mutual credits between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated, and one debt shall be set off against the other, etc. Wagner v. Burnham, 73 Atl. 990, 991, 224 Pa. 586.

While equity usually follows the statute allowing a set-off or counterclaim in an action at law, and while ordinarily a mere claim or account will not furnish ground for equitable relief, and while equity will intervene and effect a set-off only when, under the strict rules of law, justice cannot be effectuated, equity, independent of statute, and under its general jurisdiction, will grant relief where, though there are mutual and independent debts, there is a mutual credit between the parties founded on the existence of some debt due by the crediting party to the other; "mutual credit" meaning mutual trust. Tuttle v. Bisbee, 120 N. W. 699, 144 Iowa, 53.

MUTUAL DEALINGS

"Mutual dealings," within the statute of limitations applicable to an account, may consist of one item or many items on each side of the account. It is the nature and not the extending of the dealings that give them the character of mutuality. Benjamin v. Webster, 65 Me. 170, 171.

MUTUAL DEBTS

"Mutual debts or mutual credits," within the Bankruptcy Act, providing that, in all cases of "mutual debts or mutual credits"

between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated, and one debt shall be set off against the other, and the balance only shall be allowed or paid, are established on proof that an insolvent has money on deposit in a bank subject to check, and also owes the bank on a promissory note, the money deposited being the money obtained on the note, and the bank may, before the insolvent is declared a bankrupt, credit the amount of the deposit on the debt due on the note. West v. Bank of Lahoma, 5 Pac. 469, 471, 16 Okl. 328.

A firm note to a bank, assumed by an insolvent partner on dissolution, became his individual indebtedness, and such debt with the amount due him as a depositor, independent of any partnership consideration, became mutual debts within Bankruptcy Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 565), § 68, allowing set-offs. Hooks v. Gila Valley Bank & Trust Co., 100 Pac. 806, 12 Ariz. 315.

A bailment contract transferring the possession of a mercantile business to the bankrupts to operate the same for a year provided that, for the use of the property, the bankrupts should pay to the bailor certain percentages on sales, and rent and insurance, that the bankrupts should keep the stock up within $500 of the original inventory value, that on termination of the contract the bailor should pay any inventory excess up to $500, and that the bankrupts should be liable for any deficiency. On the termination of the contract, the inventory excess amounted to $1,323.42, but the bankrupts were indebted to the bailor on account of unpaid insurance and percentages on sales, etc., $79.73. Held, that such items were "mutual debts and credits" as defined by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68, 30 Stat. 565, providing that such claims shall be set off in bankruptcy. Walther v. Williams Mercantile Co., 169 Fed. 270, 94 C. C. A. 546.

MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

A mutual fire insurance company organized under the laws of the state is an association to provide mutual relief for loss by fire, and all policy holders are members, and each has the same proportionate interest, and is liable to the same proportionate extent. J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 119 N. W. 1048, 18 N. D. 253.

MUTUAL INSURANCE

"Mutual insurance" is essentially different from 'stock insurance,' and much of the litigation that has grown out of this species of insurance has been owing to inattention to this difference. Its original design was to provide cheap insurance by means of local associations, the members of which should insure each other. Such associations are in their nature adapted only to local business. They need many by-laws and conditions that are not required in stock companies; and it is necessary and equitable that each person who gets insured in them should become subject to the same obligations towards his associates that he requires toward himself." J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 119 N. W. 1048, 1049, 18 N. D. 253 (quoting with approval from May, Ins. § 146).

MUTUAL IRRIGATION COMPANY

An irrigation company organized under the laws of the state, which derives no revenue from the operation of its canal and conducts its business solely to irrigate the lands of its stockholders, is, de facto, a "mutual irrigation company" as defined by Cobbey's Ann. St. 1909, § 6845. Swanger v. Porter, 128 N. W. 516, 87 Neb. 761.

MUTUAL MISTAKE

To constitute a "mutual mistake" so as to authorize reformation of an instrument, the minds of the parties must meet in a common intent. Potter v. Frank, 76 Atl. 489, 106 Me. 165.

In an action on a contract, findings held not to show a mutual mistake, entitling defendant to equitable relief from the contract for a breach of which plaintiff seeks to recover damages. C. H. Young Co. v. Springer, 129 N. W. 773, 113 Minn. 382.

A "mutual mistake," which will justify the reformation of an instrument, is a mistake reciprocal and common to both parties, where each alike labored under the same misconception in respect to the terms of the instrument. Equity will not reform a written contract, unless the mistake is proved to be a mistake of both parties, but may rescind and cancel a contract upon the ground of mistake of facts material to the contract by one party only. Coleman v. Illinois Life Ins. Co. (Ky.) 82 S. W. 616, 617 (citing Botsford v. McLean [N. Y.] 45 Barb. 478; Pritchett v. Frisby [Ky.] 63 S. W. 10; Bush v. Starks [Ky.] 65 S. W. 589; Reeder v. Lewis & Mason Turnpike Road, 7 Ky. Law Rep. 373; Tandy's Assignee v. Hatcher & Co., 9 Ky. Law Rep. 151; Stockhoff & De Witt v. Brannin, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 717).

A mistake in a conveyance as to the subject-matter surveyed, superinduced by ignorance of the true description of the land which the grantor intended to sell and the grantee intended to buy, when participated in by both parties, is a "mutual mistake of fact" which equity will correct. American Ass'n v. Williams, 166 Fed. 17, 93 C. C. A. 1.

MUTUAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION

A "live stock insurance company" incorporated under Rev. St. 1895, art. 642, subd. 46, authorizing the incorporation of fire, marine, life, and live stock insurance companies, to conduct a live stock insurance company on a mutual or co-operative plan without capital stock, and to issue policies of indemnity on live stock to its members, is a live stock insurance company conducted on the mutual or co-operative plan, and is not a "mutual relief association" within article 3096, providing that nothing in the title—title 58, entitled "Incorporation of Insurance Companies"—shall apply to mutual relief associations. State v. Burgess, 109 S. W. 922, 101 Tex. 524.

MUTUAL STANDARD

The term "mutual standard," as used with reference to mutual standards in the construction of ambiguous words or clauses in contracts, means the meaning in which an ambiguous word or phrase was used and accepted by both parties to the contract or undertaking to express in writing the terms of the actual agreement. It is subject to the modification that a clear and unambiguous meaning will not be overthrown by resort to parol to determine what the parties actually meant. West v. Hermann, 104 S. W. 428, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 131.

MUTUAL WILL

See, also, Reciprocal Will.

A joint will is a single instrument containing the wills of two or more persons. A "mutual will," or, more strictly speaking, a reciprocal will, is one by which each testator makes testamentary disposition in favor of the other. Bower v. Daniel, 95 S. W. 347, 357, 196 Mo. 269 (citing Schumaker v. Schmidt, 44 Ala. 454, 4 Am. Rep. 135; In re Diez, 50 N. Y. 88; Cawley's Estate, 20 Atl. 567, 136 Pa. 628, 10 L. R. A. 93).

A "joint will" is one where the same instrument is made the will of two or more persons and is jointly signed by them, being not necessarily either mutual or reciprocal, while "mutual wills" are the separate wills of two persons reciprocal in their provisions. A will that is both joint and mutual is one executed jointly by two or more persons, the provisions of which are reciprocal, and which shows on its face that the devises are made one in consideration of the other. A joint will which is not reciprocal is simply the individual personal will of each of the persons signing it and is subject to the same rules as apply to several wills. Frazier v. Patterson, 90 N. E. 216, 243 Ill. 80, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 17 Ann. Cas. 1003.

A testamentary disposition contained in one writing disposing of property held jointly is a "joint will"; whereas, the same document, if it refers to and deals with property held separately, would be a "mutual will." Deseumeur v. Rondel, 74 Atl. 703, 76 N. J. Eq. 394.

MUTUALITY OF CONTRACT

See Mutual Contracts.

"Mutuality of contract" means that an obligation rests upon each party to do or permit to be done something in consideration of the act or promise of the other; that is, neither party is bound unless the both are bound. Where a contract under which plaintiff was to cut and deliver, at defendant's factory, timber of certain dimensions at a certain price, did not bind plaintiff to furnish any specified quantity thereof, but left him at liberty to cease cutting and delivering at any time, there was no mutuality of contract. Campbell v. American Handle Co., 94 S. W. 815, 816, 117 Mo. App. 19.

"Mutuality of contract" means that an obligation must rest on each party to do or permit to be done something in consideration of the act or promise of the other; that is, neither party is bound unless both are bound." Where it was alleged that plaintiff promised to marry defendant on his request, and that defendant promised plaintiff to so marry her on his request, the agreement was unenforceable for lack of mutuality; defendant's engagement being a mere option to marry plaintiff. Smythe v. Greacen, 91 N. Y. Supp. 450, 457, 100 App. Div. 275.

"Mutuality of contract" means that an obligation must rest upon each party to do or permit to be done something in consideration of the act or promise of the other; that is, neither party is bound unless both are bound. A contract by which a city gave defendant the privilege of sorting and appropriating to his own use refuse at specified dumps of the department of street cleaning for one year, in consideration of a certain weekly payment, the city reserving the right to at any time change the locations and increase the number of dumps, was not void for want of mutuality; there being an implied obligation on the part of the city to provide for one year the refuse for defendant's use at the places named in the contract. City of New York v. Paoli, 116 N. Y. Supp. 544, 546, 63 Misc. Rep. 411 (quoting and adopting definition in Laclede Construction Co. v. Tudor Iron Works, 69 S. W. 384, 169 Mo. 137).

"Mutuality of contract" means that an obligation must rest on each party to do or permit to be done something in consideration of the act or promise of the other; that is, neither party is bound unless both are bound." Where plaintiff contracted with third persons to make excavations for them for railroad side tracks, on the agreement of defendant railroad company, held out by it as an inducement for his making the excavation contract, that it would furnish the cars and take away the dirt, there is no lack of mutuality in the agreement between plaintiff and defendant. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Clark, 119 S. W. 825, 827, 90 Ark. 504.

An engagement lacks "mutuality" where one party is bound and the other is not; for example, where one offers to supply another with such goods of a certain kind as he may choose to order or may wish during a certain time, and the other accepts the offer. In such case, there is no consideration for the promise or offer; for the promisee has not bound himself to anything and has incurred no legal liability at all. Steinwender-Stoffregen Coffee Co. v. F. T. Guenther Grocery Co. (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1170, 1171 (citing 7 Cyc. p. 327).

A contract is void for lack of "mutuality" where there is no consideration for the promise of one party to furnish or sell so much of the commodity as the other may want, except the promise of the other to take and pay for so much of the commodity as he may want, and there is no agreement that he shall want any quantity whatever, and no method exists by which it can be determined whether he will want any of the commodity, or what quantity he will want. Higble v. Rust, 71 N. E. 1010, 1011, 211 Ill. 333, 103 Am. St. Rep. 204.

"Where there is an agreement founded on a consideration, it is not invalid for want of 'mutuality' because one party has an option and the other has not; or, in other words, because it is obligatory on one and optional on the other. So want of 'mutuality' cannot be set up as a defense by the party who has received the benefit simply because it was left optional with the other as to whether he would enforce his right." Pittsburg Vitriified Paving & Building Brick Co. v. Bailey, 90 Pac. 803, 805, 76 Kan. 42, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 745 (quoting and adopting definition in 9 Cyc. p. 334).

A contract between an iron company and a railroad company, evidenced by a writing reciting that the iron company obligated itself to furnish such rails of a certain kind and splice bars as it might have, without any showing of any contract or act of the railroad company recognizing the existence of the contract between the parties, is void for lack of mutuality. Cal Hirsch & Sons Iron & Rail Co. v. Paragould & M. R. Co., 127 S. W. 623, 148 Mo. App. 173.

A contract of employment, reciting that the employé "is to begin service for" the employer on a specified date "and as manager of local agencies for" the employer at a specified salary, "it being mutually understood that the said position here given" the employé "is for five years," and the ability and willingness of the employé "to perform the duty of his position are also a part of the essentials" of the agreement, is not void for want of "mutuality"; there being an obligation on the employé to serve for five years and on the employer to continue him in the service for such period. The word "mutually" means reciprocally given and received. It means an interchange of promises between the parties that the thing stated is agreed to. Butterick Pub. Co. v. Whitcomb,

MUTUALITY OF LEGAL RIGHT

The term "mutuality of legal right," as used in the rule that specific performance will not be decreed unless there is mutuality of legal right as well as of remedy, means only that the contract must be binding on both parties, i. e., that it is nudum pactum. Naylor v. Parker (Tex.) 139 S. W. 93.

MUTUALLY BOUND

The words "mutually bound," as used in Civ. Code, § 1301, with reference to the obligations of coterminous owners in respect to the maintenance of boundaries and fences between them, necessarily suggest that the burden must rest equally upon each, and as applied to fences, this burden includes one-half of the ground upon which the fences shall rest. Hoar v. Hennessy, 74 Pac. 452, 454, 29 Mont. 253.

MUTUALLY INDEBTED

Rev. St. 1899, § 4487, provides that, if any "two or more persons are mutually indebted" in any manner whatsoever, and one of them commences an action against the other, one debt may be set off against the other, though such debts are of a different nature. Held, that where plaintiff was indebted to defendant on certain judgments, and plaintiff claimed that defendant was liable for damages for conversion of personal property, plaintiff and defendant were not "mutually indebted," defendant's claim being in contract, while plaintiff's was in tort; and hence the claims could not be set off. Caldwell v. Ryan, 108 S. W. 533, 210 Mo. 17, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494, 124 Am. St. Rep. 717, 14 Ann. Cas. 314.

MY

All my estate, see All.

All my lands, see All.

All my property, see All.

A mortgage, though using the pronouns "I" and "my," being signed by both husband and wife, included the wife as well as the husband, though she was not named in the body of the instrument, and was therefore sufficient to cover the grantors' homestead interest in the land. Bray v. Ellison (Ky.) 83 S. W. 96, 97.

While the words "I" and "my" in a mortgage ordinarily refer to the actor or speaker, who expresses himself through the draftsman, the connection in which they are used may sometimes make it doubtful to whom they refer, and they will not be considered to have been so used, where the effect would be to burden the mortgagee with a condition which the mortgagor could not impose. Jones v. Norris, 60 S. E. 714, 715, 147 N. C. 84.

My estate

An agreement to sell "my estate," without any provision as to the vendor's title, did not clearly show that the land was free from incumbrance or define the title to be conveyed, so that parol evidence was admissible to show that it was understood that the deed was to be subject to a lease on the property. Jennings v. Puffer, 89 N. E. 1036, 203 Mass. 534.

Where certain real estate had been conveyed for the use of testatrix for life, with remainders over, by a deed providing that she at any time, by any writing or writings sealed and attested, might revoke, annul, change, and alter all and every use or uses, estate or estates, previously and expressly limited and declared concerning the premises granted, testatrix properly executed such power by a will reciting that as to all "my" estates, real and personal, and "with intent to execute all powers vested" in her, she gave, devised, bequeathed, and appointed the property as follows, etc. Du Bois v. Walnut, 70 Atl. 796, 221 Pa. 285.

My executor

A will empowering "my executor" to compromise claims and to sell and dispose of property, and providing that, in case of the executor's death, it is testator's wish that designated other persons act as trustees and executors, with all the powers vested in the original executor, vests the legal title to the real estate, with power to sell and convey the same in the executor, as trustee under the will, and not by virtue of appointment by the court. Haggart v. Ranney, 84 S. W. 703, 704, 73 Ark. 344.

My farm

A devise of "my farm" includes, not only the testator's homestead, but also other outlying lots, which had been used by the testator in carrying on the business of farming for years before he wrote his will, and which had been referred to in business transactions as his farm. Scoville v. Mason, 57 Atl. 114, 115, 76 Conn. 459.

My hand and seal

The clause in a will, "I have hereunto set my hand and seal," does not necessarily import that testatrix signed her name with her own hand, as it became her hand if her name was written by some one at her direction to the same extent as if she had written it with her own hand. Elston v. Montgomery, 90 N. E. 3, 242 Ill. 348, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

My house and lot

"In Warvelle on Vendors, § 135, it is said that a description as 'my house and lot' imports a particular house and lot rendered certain by the description that it is the one that belongs to 'me.'" Moayon v. Moayon, 72 S. W. 33, 38, 114 Ky. 855, 60 L. R. A. 415, 102 Am. St. Rep. 303.

My land

The words "my land," prefixed to an uncertain description of a tract of land in a certain section wherein a testator devised the land had but one tract, would remove the uncertainty. In re Lynch's Estate, 75 Pa. 1086, 1088, 142 Cal. 373.

My legal heirs

A clause in a will providing for the division of property among "my legal heirs" refers to the next of kin and legal heirs of the testator, and does not include the next of kin or legal heirs of his wife. Miller v. Metcalf, 58 Atl. 743, 744, 77 Conn. 176.

My moneys, bonds, etc.

A bequest to a hospital of "my moneys, bonds, notes, and money in savings bank" included railroad stock and scrip, when considered in the light of the other provisions and the general construction of testator's will, which provided for the payment of all testator's debts and two small legacies, then disposed of testator's live stock, household furniture, and land to the hospital, which was left to be disposed of merely notes, bonds, money in savings bank, and the railroad stock and scrip; the stock and scrip being the avails of the bonds, and the testator's evident intention being to dispose of the bulk of his whole estate to the hospital. Scoville v. Mason, 57 Atl. 114, 115, 76 Conn. 459.

My property

Testator gave all "my" furniture and stock and the farm on which "I now reside" to his wife for life, with remainder over, and directed that all legacies should be paid out of "my" estate. The residuary clause purported to pass only "my" property. Held, that the will disposed only of testator's separate property, and did not purport to dispose of community property, so as to require the wife to elect whether to take under the will or her own property. Sauvage v. Wauhatchie (Tex.) 143 S. W. 259.

"My property," and the "property I possess," mean one and the same thing. Thomas v. Blair, 35 South. 811, 813, 111 La. 678.

My wife

A bequest in a will to "my said wife, C." is to C. as testator's wife, and, if she failed to answer that description, the gift to her would fail. The words "my wife," as used here, are not words of description to designate ate the legatee, but rather to indicate the character or capacity in which alone she could take. Collard v. Collard (N. J.) 67 Atl. 100, 192.

My will

Insured assigned all his right, title, and interest in certain life insurance policies to trustees to be named in my will," for plain-tiff's use. Held to mean the trustees named in the document finally admitted to probate as the will of insured. Frost v. Frost, 88 N. E. 446, 202 Mass. 100, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 184, 132 Am. St. Rep. 476.

MYELITIS

As disease, see Disease.

N

N. P.

The initials "N. P." will be recognized by the court as the usual and ordinary abbreviation for the official title of a notary public. Towler v. Carithers, 61 S. E. 1132, 1133, 4 Ga. App. 517; Williams v. Lobban, 104 S. W. 58, 59, 206 Mo. 399 (citing Sumner v. Mitchell, 10 South. 562, 29 Fla. 179, 14 L. R. A. 815, 30 Am. St. Rep. 106; Rowley v. Berrian, 12 Ill. 198); Worley v. Adams, 69 S. E. 929, 931, 111 Va. 796.

N. W.

The abbreviation "N. W." in the column headed "Part of Section," is sufficient to identify the land as the northwest quarter of the section named in the assessment roll. Beggs v. Paine, 109 N. W. 322, 15 N. D. 436 (distinguishing Power v. Bowdle, 54 N. W. 404, 406, 3 N. D. 107, 21 L. R. A. 328, 44 Am. St. Rep. 511; Power v. Larabee, 49 N. W. 724, 2 N. D. 141).

NAKED POWER

A "naked power," or a power simply collateral and without interest, "is when, to a mere stranger, authority is given of disposing of an interest, in which he had not before, nor hath, by the instrument creating the power, any estate whatever." Weaver v. Richards, 108 N. W. 382, 387, 144 Mich. 395, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855 (quoting and adopting definition in Chancellor Kent in Bergen v. Bennett [N. Y.] 1 Caines Cas. 1, 15, 2 Am. Dec. 281).

NAME

See Christian Name; Fictitious Name; Good Name; Legal Name; Nickname; Surname; Trade-Name.

As property, see Property.

As trade-mark, see Trade-Mark.

Identity of names, see Idem Sonans.

Ignorant of name, see Ignorant.

Suffix Sr. as part of, see Sr.

By the common law since the Norman Conquest, a legal name has consisted of one "Christian name," or that which is given one after his birth or at baptism, or is afterwards assumed by him in addition to his family name, and of one "surname," or family name, which is that derived from the common name of his parents, or borne by him in common with other members of his family. Schaffer v. Levenson Wrecking Co., 81 Atl. 434, 82 N. J. Law, 61.

In law, the name of a person consists of one given name and one surname; the two, using the given name first and the surname last, constituting such person's legal name; and to be ignorant of either the given or surname is to be ignorant of the person's name within Code Civ. Proc. § 148, providing that, when plaintiff shall be ignorant of the name of a defendant, such defendant may be designated in any pleading or proceeding by any name and description, and that, when his true name is discovered, the pleading or proceeding may be amended accordingly, and that plaintiff must state in the verification of his petition that he could not discover the true name, and the summons must contain the words "real name unknown" and a copy thereof be personally served upon defendant. McNamara v. Gunderson, 181 N. W. 183, 184, 89 Neb. 112.

"The word 'Junior,' 'Jr.,' or words of similar import are ordinarily mere matters of description, and form no part of a person's legal 'name,' and to omit or add such appellation or cognomen is harmless error, both in civil and in criminal proceeding." Windom v. State, 72 S. W. 193, 194, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 514.

In giving constructive notice to a defendant not sued on a written instrument signed by himself, his legal name includes his full first Christian name and surname. Butler v. Smith, 120 N. W. 1106, 1107, 84 Neb. 78, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436.

On service by publication on defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage where he is not sued on a written instrument signed by himself, notice to "R. B. Ballard" not showing his Christian name is insufficient. McCabe v. Equitable Land Co., 129 N. W. 1018, 1019, 88 Neb. 453.

As indicating identity

A person's name is the designation by which he is known and called in the community in which he lives and is best known. Loeer v. Plainfield Savings Bank, 128 N. W. 1101, 1103, 149 Iowa, 672, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112.

The word "name" is defined as "a word by which a person or thing is denoted; the word or words by which an individual, person, or thing, or class of persons or things, is designated and distinguished from others." Koth v. Pallachucola Club, 61 S. E. 77, 78, 79 S. O. 514; Uihlein v. Gladioux, 78 N. E. 363, 365, 74 Ohio St. 232 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. 467).

A "name" is a word or words, designation, or appellation used to distinguish a person or thing or class from others, and words indicated by single letters are only less adapted to that purpose than words indicated by several letters. Griffith v. Bonawitz, 103 N. W. 327, 329, 73 Neb. 622.

"A man's 'name' is simply the sound or sounds by which he is commonly designated by his fellows, and by which they distinguish him. It is a mere means of description. Sometimes a man is known by several different names, and it was formerly the custom, in drawing indictments, to charge him under all the names by which he was known, connecting them with the words 'alias dictus,' or with simply 'alias.' These words mean 'otherwise called' or 'otherwise.'" State v. Howard, 77 Pac. 50, 51, 30 Mont. 518.

An indictment for rape on an illegitimate child, whose mother married when the child was three years old, which gives as the surname of the child the surname of the husband of the mother, is sufficiently supported by proof that after the marriage the child was generally known by such name; a bastard not necessarily bearing its mother's name; a "name" being one or more words to designate a person or thing. People v. Gray, 6 N. E. 268, 273, 251 Ill. 431.

Middle name or initial

It is necessary in court proceedings to correctly give all the initials in a person's name, though at common law mistakes in a middle name or initial were not material. Carney v. Bigham, 99 Pac. 21, 22, 51 Wash. 52, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905.

"The common law recognizes but one Christian 'name,' and a middle initial may be dropped or changed at pleasure. Its presence or absence or difference affects nothing. While a letter of the alphabet does not constitute a name, yet the initial letter of the Christian name is so commonly used that it is to be regarded, not as the name of some other person, but as an abbreviation of the Christian name of the person intended." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Hasenwinkle, 83 N. E. 815, 816, 232 Ill. 224, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129.

The middle name is no part of the name, and under Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 118, relating to notice to owners of land in a drainage district, a notice to "Emma Forsythe Jones," whose maiden name was "Forsythe," was a sufficient notice to "Emma Jones." Collins v. Board of Sup'rs of Pottawattamie County (Iowa), 138 N. W. 1095, 1097.

NAMED

See Herein Named.

A trustee who is named in the way the testator has provided to perpetuate the trust is "named in the will," within the meaning of Pub. St. 1901, c. 185, § 2, cl. 12, authorizing the probate court to appoint the trustees named in the will. Carr v. Corning, 62 Atl. 168, 169, 73 N. H. 362.

NAPHTHA

A commercial compound, of which one of the substantial parts is naphtha, but which, when compounded with other ingredients, becomes a distinct product, is not within Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 108, punishing the sale or keeping for sale of "naphtha" under an assumed name; but where the contributed parts merely supply color to the fluid, with a slight thickening, making the mixture adhesive when applied, the jury must determine whether the article does not remain essentially naphtha, which is a product of petroleum intermediate between the associate products of gasoline and benzine, all of which do not differ in their essential nature, but vary only in the degree of inflammability when brought into contact with radiant heat. Gately v. Taylor, 97 N. E. 619, 621, 211 Mass. 60, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

NAPKIN

As printed matter, see Printed Matter.

NARROW

The word "narrow," as used in the definition of "galloon" as a "narrow, tapelike fabric used for binding hats, shoes, etc.," is a relative term of varying meanings. It is easy to conceive of a tapelike fabric so narrow as to come within the definition, and equally easy to conceive of one so wide that it must fall without it. There is nothing in the dictionary which indicates just where the dividing line occurs. Certain woven cotton articles, from 1 to 2½ inches wide, chiefly used as hat bands for trimming men's hats, are not galloons, under Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 1, Schedule I, par. 263, 28 Stat. 529. United States v. Walter H. Graef & Co., 127 Fed. 688, 689, 62 C. C. A. 414.

NARROW CHANNEL

"Narrow channels," within the meaning of article 25 of the inland navigation rules (Act June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. 96), are bodies of water navigated up and down in opposite directions, and do not include harbor waters, with piers on each side, where the necessities of commerce require navigation in every conceivable direction. Tested by such rule, the Hudson river above Twenty-Third street, New York, and within the city limits is not a narrow channel. The Number 4, 161 Fed. 847, 850, 88 C. C. A. 665; The Islander, 152 Fed. 385, 386, 81 C. C. A. 511.

The Hudson river in the vicinity of Yonkers, where it has a single deep and straight channel for a number of miles, is a "narrow channel," within the meaning of the inland navigation rules. The Benjamin Franklin, 145 Fed. 13, 15, 76 C. C. A. 43.

NATION

See Comity of Nations.

"The terms 'state' and 'nation' are used in the law of nations, as well as in common parlance, as importing the same thing; and imply a body of men, united together, to procure their mutual safety and advantage by means of their union. Such a society has its affairs and interests to manage; it deliberates, and takes resolutions in common, and thus becomes a moral person, having an understanding and a will peculiar to itself, and is susceptible of obligations and laws." Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 52, 8 L. Ed. 25 (Thompson, J., dissenting).

The term "nation," as applied to the Indian nations, means a people distinct from others. The Indians have always been regarded as having a semi-independent position when they preserved their tribal relations, not as states, not as nations, not as possessed of the full attributes of sovereignty, but as a separate people, with the powers of regulating their internal and social relations, and thus far not brought under the laws of the Union, or of the state within whose limits they reside. Glenn-Tucker v. Clayton, 70 S. W. 8, 13, 4 Ind. T. 511.

NATIONAL BANK

A "national bank" is a corporation, the powers of which are defined and limited by the acts of Congress authorizing the creation of such institutions. Hansford v. National Bank of Tifton, 73 S. E. 405, 406, 10 Ga. App. 270.

"National banks" are federal instrumentalities, subject to the paramount authority of the United States. An attempt by a state to define their duties, or control the conduct of their affairs, is absolutely void whenever such attempted exercise of the authority conflicts with the laws of the United States, and either frustrates the purpose of the national legislation, or impairs the efficiency of those agencies of the federal government to discharge the duties for the performance of which they were created. Schlesinger v. Kelly, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1083, 1087, 114 App. Div. 546 (citing Easton v. Iowa, 23 Sup. Ct. 288, 188 U. S. 220, 47 L. Ed. 452; Davis v. Elmira Savings Bank, 16 Sup. Ct. 502, 161 U. S. 275, 40 L. Ed. 700).

"National banks" are instrumentalities of the federal government, created for a public purpose, and as such necessarily subject to the paramount authority of the United States." The coverture of the legatee of shares of stock in a national bank, when her name was placed upon the bank's books as a stockholder, and when she received the certificate of stock, does not protect her against a personal judgment at law for the amount due as a shareholder under an assessment made by the Comptroller of the Currency to pay the debts of the bank, although a married woman may be incapable, under the local law, if making or binding herself personally by contract, if such law does not incapacitate her from becoming an owner of such stock, by bequest or otherwise. Christopher v. Norvell, 26 Sup. Ct. 502, 505, 201 U. S. 216, 50 L. Ed. 782, 5 Ann. Cas. 740 (quoting and adopting definition in Davis v. Elmira Sav. Bank, 16 Sup.

"For some purposes a 'national bank' is a public institution, notwithstanding it is the subject of private ownership. It may issue bills, which circulate as part of the currency of the country. It is subject to examination, and, in a large measure, to the supervision, of the Comptroller of the Currency. It is examined at stated periods, and may be the subject of special examination by order of the Comptroller. But it is owned by shareholders, like other banking institutions." Any legal right which a stockholder of a "national bank" may have to obtain an inspection of its books may be enforced in the state courts by mandamus, in view of the provision of the act of August 13, 1886 (25 Stat. 433, c. 866), that, for actions against national banks at law or in equity, they shall be deemed citizens of the state in which they are located, and that in such cases the federal circuit and district courts shall have jurisdiction only as in cases between individual citizens of the same state. Guthrie v. Harkness, 26 Sup. Ct. 4, 7, 199 U. S. 148, 50 L. Ed. 130, 4 Ann. Cas. 433.

"A 'national bank' is an instrumentality of the United States; its circulating notes are guaranteed by the United States; and if the United States should be compelled to pay them, the United States has a paramount lien on the assets of the bank for reimbursement. The administration of the bank's assets is therefore vested in the Comptroller of the Currency as an officer of the United States. He appoints the receiver, and directs his acts. The individual liability of a stockholder can only be enforced by his order. The provision is as much for the benefit of the stockholders as for the United States, and it is indispensable to the bringing of a suit against the stockholder. In other words, the liability dates from the order of the Comptroller." Rankin v. Barton, 26 Sup. Ct. 29, 30, 199 U. S. 228, 50 L. Ed. 163.

NATIVE WINE

The words "native wine," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 100, § 1, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor without a license, except "sales by the makers thereof of native wine or of cider manufactured in this commonwealth," mean wine made in the commonwealth, and not wine made in any of the states in the Union. Commonwealth v. Petranich, 66 N. E. 807, 183 Mass. 217.

NATURAL

An instruction that no form of words was necessary to constitute a contract, but that, if the "natural" inference from what appeared to have passed between the parties was that their minds met presently in an agreement, a valid contract was made, whatever might have been the verbal expression used, is not prejudicial because of the use of the word "natural" instead of the better word "reasonable." An inference can hardly be reasonable without being natural. Sicard v. Albenberg Co., 118 N. W. 179, 180, 136 Wis. 622.

NATURAL AFFECTION

"Natural affection" is such as naturally exists between near relatives, as a father and child, brother and sister, husband and wife, and it is regarded in law as a good consideration. The word "father" is interchangeable with "mother" in so far as relationship is concerned, and the presumable natural affection of a child for the mother is a good consideration to support a contract. Worth v. Daniel, 57 S. E. 898, 900, 1 Ga. App. 15 (quoting and adopting definitions in 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 269; Black's Law Dict. 6).

NATURAL BOUNDARY

Courses and distances must, as a general rule, give way to a call for a natural boundary, because a natural boundary, if fixed, is unchangeable, and more likely to be the true call than courses and distances. A well-known and established line of an adjacent tract is a "natural boundary" within the rule that courses and distances give way to a natural boundary, because the line is more certain than course and distance. Wilson Lumber & Milling Co. v. Hutton & Bourbonnais, 68 S. E. 2, 4, 152 N. C. 537.

The line of another tract of land is a "natural boundary" if, at the time a deed calling for it is made, the line is indicated by visible marks, so that it can be identified and located, or if it can be otherwise located with reasonable certainty. Lance v. Rumbough, 63 S. E. 357, 360, 150 N. C. 19.

NATURAL CAUSES

Other natural causes, see Other.

"It is not essential that the negligence should be the direct cause of the injury. It suffices that it is the natural and probable cause. It is the 'natural cause' when either it acts directly in producing the injury, or sets in motion other causes so producing it and forming a continuous chain in natural sequence down to the injury, thus linking the negligence with the injury by a chain of natural and consequential causation, although the former may be neither the immediate nor the direct cause of the event. But such causation cannot be proximate cause in law to arouse liability, unless an ordinarily prudent and intelligent person ought, in the exercise of such intelligence, to have foreseen that an injury might probably result from the negligence under like circumstances." Meyer v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 93 N. W. 6, 8, 116 Wis. 336 (citing Delsenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co., 72 N. W. 735, 97 Wis. 279; Dehsoy v. Light Co., 85 N. W. 973, 110 Wis. 412; Seaver v. Town of Union, 89 N. W. 163, 113 Wis. 322).

NATURAL CEMENT

"Natural cement" is the quick-setting product of a low temperature kiln burning a cement rock of irregular composition. Donaldson v. Roksament Stone Co., 170 Fed. 192, 193.

NATURAL CONDITION

The phrase "natural condition," in an ordinance requiring any person who opens or excavates a highway to restore the same to its "natural condition," is applicable to the erection of electric light poles, as the phrase means only that the street is to be restored to the condition which is natural to the street with the contemplated improvements for which the excavation is required. "No street that has been improved at all is, strictly speaking, in a 'natural condition'; it can only be in a condition natural to a street." Cook v. North Bergen Tp., 59 Atl. 1035, 1036, 72 N. J. Law, 119.

NATURAL CONSEQUENCES

A "natural consequence" of an act is the consequence which ordinarily follows it; the result which may reasonably be anticipated from it. The Santa Rita, 173 Fed. 413, 417 (quoting and adopting definition in Cole v. German Savings & Loan Soc., 124 Fed. 115, 59 C. C. A. 595, 63 L. R. A. 416).

"A 'natural consequence' is one which has followed from the original act complained of, in the usual, ordinary, and experienced course of events; a result, therefore, which might reasonably have been anticipated or expected. Natural consequences, however, do not necessarily include all such as, upon a calculation of chances, would be found possible of occurrence, or such as extreme prudence might anticipate, but only those which ensue from the original act, without any such extraordinary coincidence or conjunction of circumstances as that the usual course of nature should seem to have been departed from." Winfree v. Jones, 51 S. E. 153, 154, 104 Va. 39, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201 (quoting and adopting definition in Watson, Damages, § 33).

For the purpose of civil liability, those consequences, and those only, are deemed "natural" and probable which a person of average competence and knowledge, being in the like case with the person whose conduct is complained of, and having the like opportunities of observation, might be expected to foresee as likely to follow such conduct. The doctrine of "natural and probable" consequences is illustrated in the law of negligence, and there the substance of the wrong itself is failure to act with due foresight. The negligent delay of a carrier in moving goods intrusted to it for transportation, not so unreasonable as to amount to a conversion, would not render it liable for the loss of the goods after they have been carried to their destination, if they are there destroyed by an act of God before delivery. Rodgers v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 88 Pac. 885, 75 Kan. 222, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 858, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 12 Ann. Cas. 441 (quoting with approval from Pollock, Torts).

For damages to be the "natural and proximate consequence" of a breach of contract of carriage by failure to deliver the goods within a reasonable time, the loss must be immediately connected with the supposed cause of it, and, if in the ordinary course of events a certain result usually follows from a given cause, the immediate relation of the one to the other is established. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 48 South. 209, 212, 56 Fla. 735, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 131 Am. St. Rep. 169 (citing Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6).

NATURAL DRAIN

As used in Laws 1910, c. 183, which creates a special drainage district to provide effectual drainage by artificial drains or other drainage facilities, and provides for a commission to develop a drainage system by artificial canals and by improving all natural drains, the words "natural drains" mean a natural water course, including creeks, streams, brooks, or rivers, and the act is therefore in violation of Const. § 90, par. "q," prohibiting the Legislature from passing special laws relating to water courses. Belzoni Drainage Commission v. Winn, 53 South. 778, 779, 98 Miss. 359.

NATURAL EFFECT

The rule of law requires that the damages recoverable from a wrongdoer must be the natural and proximate effects of his delinquency. The term "natural" imports that they are such as might reasonably have been foreseen. Smith v. Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, 75 Atl. 937, 938, 78 N. J. Law, 478, 20 Ann. Cas. 151.

NATURAL FLOWERS

Statice wreaths, which have all the appearance of "natural flowers * * * preserved," are dutiable under the enumeration of such articles in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 251, 30 Stat. 170. Bayersdorfer & Co. v. United States, 171 Fed. 286, 287.

NATURAL FOOL

A "natural fool" is one that hath no understanding of his nativity and therefore is by law presumed never likely to obtain any. Hauber v. Leibold, 107 N. W. 1042, 1044, 76 Neb. 706 (quoting and adopting definition of Blackstone, cited in Clark v. Robinson, 88 Ill. 498, 502).

NATURAL GAS

As mineral, see Mineral.

As property, see Personal Property.

"Natural gas" is a mineral, and is a part of the land until severed. Osborn v. Arkansas Territorial Oil & Gas Co., 146 S. W. 122, 124, 103 Ark. 175.

NATURAL GUARDIAN

The father is the "natural guardian" of his child. In re Knott, 126 N. W. 1040, 1042, 162 Mich. 10.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 3757, and under the common law, the father, unless incompetent or unfit, is the "natural guardian" and entitled to the care, custody, and education of his minor children, and, even as between the father and the mother, the custody in the father is generally allowed unless the child on account of tender years, or being a female, imperatively requires that attention which a mother only can supply. But between the parent and the grandparent or any one else, the law prefers the former as custodian of the child, unless the parent is incompetent, or unfit because of his or her poverty or depravity to provide the proper physical comforts and moral training. Baker v. Durham, 129 S. W. 789, 790, 95 Ark. 655.

NATURAL INCREASE

Testator devised shares of stock of a corporation in trust to pay to his daughter the income during life, and at her death to divide the same between her children and grandchildren. After testator's death, the corporation issued additional shares under a resolution reciting that it accumulated a surplus, and that it was desirable to increase the capital to a certain sum, and that additional shares to the amount of the surplus capitalized be issued to the stockholders. Held, that under Civ. Code 1910, § 3667, providing that the natural increase of the property belongs to the tenant for life, and any extraordinary accumulation goes to the remainderman, the additional shares attached to the corpus can go to the remainderman; the words "natural increase of the property," as applied to corporate stock, meaning dividends. Jackson v. Maddox, 70 S. E. 865, 866, 136 Ga. 31, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1216.

NATURAL JUSTICE

By "natural justice," in the rule that, where one makes a will contrary to natural justice, that fact may be considered with other facts, means that which is founded in equity, honesty, and right, and "natural justice" requires that a parent shall care for his children. The fact that testatrix, 70 years of age, gave the bulk of her property a public library to the exclusion of her sisters and her brother living in other cities did not show lack of testamentary capacity; there having been litigation tending to embitter them, and their relations not being intimate. Spencer v. Terry's Estate, 94 W. 372, 374, 133 Mich. 39.

NATURAL LIFE

NATURAL MONUMENT

The limitation on the rule that a body of water appearing on the original government survey and plat as the boundary of a tract of land is a "natural monument," and will constitute the boundary, however distant from the position indicated for it by the meander line, and that, where the meander line is drawn on one side of one of the regular survey lines, the one-quarter line, or the one-sixteenth line, the boundaries cannot be extended across such line to reach the water front, especially if such survey line appears on the government plat as a boundary of a lot conveyed to another, is inapplicable, where, though in some places the meander line falls south of the east and west one-sixteenth line and west of the north and south one-sixteenth line, yet at other points located north of the one and east of the other, thus conclusively refuting the inference that the government intended that the line should be confined within either of such one-sixteenth lines. Brown v. Dunn, 5 N. W. 1097, 1098, 135 Wis. 374.

The mouth of the second right-hand fork of a stream called for in a survey is a "natural, indestructible monument," which will prevail over courses and distances. Morgan Renfro, 99 S. W. 311, 313, 124 Ky. 314.

NATURAL MOTHER

Mother as including, see Mother.

NATURAL OBJECT OF HIS BOUNTY

If a person has sufficient capacity to comprehend perfectly the condition of his property, his relations to the persons who could or should or might be the objects of his bounty, and the scope and power of the provisions of his will, he has testamentary capacity; the term "natural objects of his bounty" does not mean that he should know and recognize every distant relative who is entitled to inherit from him under the existing canons of descent, and does not include cousins to the second and remoter degrees of propinquity, but refers to his near relatives. In re Campbell's Will, 136 N. Y. Supp. 1088, 1097.

NATURAL OBLIGATION

"I think it incontestably true that the 'natural obligation' of private contracts between individuals in society ceases and is converted into a civil obligation, by the very act of surrendering the right and power of enforcing performance into the hands of the government. The right and power of enforcing performance exists, as I think all must admit, only in the law of the land, and the obligation resulting from this condition is a civil obligation." Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 320, 6 L. Ed. 606 (per Trimble, J., dissenting).

NATURAL OFFSPRING

As heir

A deed of land to a woman and her "children, the natural offspring of her body," creates an estate tail, the quoted words being equivalent to the expression "heirs of her body," which estate by statute is changed to a life estate in the first holder with a remainder in fee to the first taker after termination of the life estate. Dempsey v. Davis, 136 S. W. 975, 976, 98 Ark. 570.

NATURAL PERSON

Corporation distinguished, see Corporation.

Under the bankruptcy act providing that any "natural person" may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, the word "person" does not include an infant or a lunatic. In re Kehler, 153 Fed. 235, 237.

"'Natural persons' are such as the God of nature formed us." A "natural person" is a man, woman, or child. John C. Orr Co. v. Cushman, 104 N. Y. Supp. 510, 511, 54 Misc. Rep. 121 (quoting and adopting definition in Blackstone and 2 Abb. Law Dict. p. 151).

The provision of the bankrupt act exempting a person engaged chiefly in farming from liability to be adjudged a bankrupt does not apply to a corporation. The use of the phrase "natural person," when construed in connection with the phrase "except wage-earners and those chiefly engaged in farming," and all that follows it, excludes corporations from the exception. In re Lake Jackson Sugar Co., 129 Fed. 640, 643.

NATURAL POSSESSION

"Natural possession" is that by which a man detains a thing corporeally, as by occupying a house, cultivating ground, or retaining a movable possession. Civ. Code, art. 3428. Such a possession in its nature must be visible, open, and public. Albert Hanson Lumber Co. v. Baldwin Lumber Co., 52 South. 537, 539, 126 La. 347.

NATURAL PREMIUM

The term "natural premium plan," is used in the law of insurance to represent what is commonly known as the "assessment plan," or the writing of insurance by companies limiting their assessments to such sum as is necessary to cover the actual cost of insurance from one renewal period to another. Westerman v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 94 S. W. 470, 481, 196 Mo. 670, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114.

NATURAL RIGHTS

The right to demand that property pass by inheritance or will is a "natural" and inherent right, which cannot be wholly taken away or substantially impaired by the Legislature, but is subject only to reasonable regulation. Nunnemacher v. State, 108 N. W. 627, 628, 129 Wis. 190, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121, 9 Ann. Cas. 711. But see Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 596, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. Ed. 1037; Pullen v. Wake County Com'rs, 66 N. C. 361, 363.

NATURAL STATE

See Arrowroot in Its Natural State.
Pearls in their natural state, see Pearl.

Hanks and balls of dried and salted cabbage, the salting and manipulation of which were done as a preparation, fitting the cabbage for cooking purposes, and intended to be permanent, are dutiable as vegetables "prepared or preserved," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, and not as vegetables in their "natural state," under paragraph 257, 30 Stat. 171. Sun Kwong On v. United States, 177 Fed. 595, 596.

NATURAL WANT

A finding of the master directed to find and report whether an upper proprietor's use of a stream by maintaining a dam across it was reasonable, that the stream was so small that the amount of water flowing in it during certain seasons of the year was barely sufficient under the best conditions to supply the "natural" wants of the users thereof, was a finding that the upper proprietor's use was unreasonable because the stream was so small that at times it furnished barely enough water for the domestic uses of lower proprietors; the term "natural wants" designating domestic uses. Lawrie v. Sillsby, 74 Atl. 94, 95, 82 Vt. 505.

NATURAL WATER COURSE

See, also, Water Course.

A "natural water course" is a stream having defined bounds and continuity of flow. Jennings v. Bohner, 134 N. Y. Supp. 943, 944.

A "natural water course" is a natural stream flowing in a definite bed or channel with banks and sides, and having a permanent source of supply. McHenry v. City of Parkersburg, 66 S. E. 750, 753, 66 W. Va. 533, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860 (citing 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 468, 1219; Neal v. Ohio River R. Co., 34 S. E. 914, 47 W. Va. 316).

A living stream, with a well-defined channel, is a "natural water course." Wilson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 1101, 1108, 129 App. Div. 821.

A water course with well-defined banks, which is the natural outlet of lakes, and through which the waters will reach a common place, is a "natural water course," though it is called a swag or a swamp or creek, and whether its course is straight or crooked. Hastie v. Jenkins, 101 Pac. 496, 53 Wash. 21.

It is not essential to the existence of a "natural water course" that the supply should be living water, but it may be surface water collected on a large watershed which cuts for itself a well-defined channel; nor is it necessary that there should be a constant and continuous flow of water. Brown v. Schneiders, 106 Pac. 41, 81 Kan. 486, 135 Am. St. Rep. 396; Palmer v. Waddell, 22 Kan. 352, 355.

To constitute a "natural water course" it is not necessary that the flow of water be sufficient to wear out a channel having well-marked sides and banks; but, if the surface water uniformly or habitually flows over a given course having reasonable limits as to width, the line of its flow is a water course. Hull v. Harker, 106 N. W. 629, 630, 130 Iowa 190 (citing Lambert v. Alcorn, 33 N. E. 514, 144 Ill. 313, 21 L. R. A. 611).

A depression or slough separating an island from the Mississippi river, so that at a time of high water it became an arm of the river with water flowing into it at the north end and emptying at the south end, and also forming a drain for surface water, was a "natural water course." St. Louis Merchants Bridge Terminal Ry. Ass'n v. Schultz, 80 Ill. E. 879, 882, 226 Ill. 409.

Where the flow of water through an artificial ditch for many years was such as would constitute a "natural water course," the flow had begun without artificial aid, and a finding that it was a water course to which the same rules of law apply as are applicable to natural water courses was warranted. Stimson v. Inhabitants of Brookline, 83 N. E. 893, 894, 895, 197 Mass. 568, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 280, 125 Am. St. Rep. 382, 14 Ann. Cas. 907.

After high-water channels are artificially opened, and the cuts connecting them with the main stream are used by the parties in opening them and such use is acquiesced in as branches of the main stream for the purpose of limitations, they become natural channels, and owners of land adjacent thereto are entitled to the same rights as those on the main channel. Hough v. Porter, 95 Pac. 73, 98 Pac. 1083, 1101, 51 Or. 318.

To constitute a "natural water course" it is not necessary that there should be a stream with well-defined banks and bed, but that the water flow at all seasons of the year, but, where the conformation of the land is such as to give surface water flowing from one tract to another, a fixed determination of the course, so as to uniformly discharge it on the venient tract at a fixed and definite point, the course thus uniformly followed by the water in its flow is a water course. Town of v. D'Arc v. Convery, 90 N. E. 666, 668, 5 Ill. 511.

Where surface water in a hilly region of high bluffs seeks an outlet through a gorge or ravine during the rainy season and by its flow assumes a definite and natural channel, and such has always been the case so far as the memory of man runs, such accustomed channel through which the water flows possesses the attributes of a "natural water course." The flow of the water need not be continuous, and the size of the stream is immaterial. Jaquez Ditch Co. v. Garcia (N. M.), 4 Pac. 891, 893.

NATURAL WEAR AND TEAR

A lease by which the lessee not only agreed to exercise every precaution in the use of the leased machinery, but agreed to assume all cost of repairs, and, at expiration of the term, turn over the machinery and equipment in perfect condition, "saving natural wear and tear," required the lessee to make whole damage to machinery resulting from accidents, like the fracture of an engine shaft, though not resulting from its negligence; "natural wear and tear" signifying wear resulting from friction and the gradual wearing apart of joints, rivets, and other portions in the operation of the machinery. Peter v. St. Louis Brass Mfg. Co., 123 S. W. 12, 1015, 146 Mo. App. 187 (citing Jaques v. Gould, 4 Cush. [58 Mass.] 384; Thompson v. Cummings, 39 Mo. App. 537; Green v. Kelly, 10 N. J. Law, 544; Waddell v. De Jet, 23 South. 437, 76 Miss. 104; McIntosh v. Lown [N. Y.] 49 Barb. 550; Lockrow v. Horgan, 58 N. Y. 635).

NATURALIZATION

See Lawfully Naturalized.

As civil action, see Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc.

Order as judgment, see Judgment.

"Naturalization" creates a political status which is entirely the result of legislation by Congress, and, in the case of a person not born a citizen, naturalization can be obtained only in the way in which Congress has provided that it shall be granted, and upon such showing of facts as Congress has determined must be set forth. In re Knight, 171 Fed. 99, 301.

NATURE

See Crime against Nature; Intensely Alkaline Nature; Local Nature; Style and Nature.

Of accusation

The contention that an indictment charging subornation of perjury before a federal grand jury did not sufficiently set forth "the nature and cause of the accusation," within the meaning of Const. U. S. Amend. 6, because it did not "set forth in some definite way the matter or thing which was under investigation at the particular time, so that the defendant may know as to what particular controversy the alleged false testimony is claimed to be material, and how to meet the allegation of materiality," is too frivolous to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a circuit court, to review a conviction under such indictment, where the description therein of the proceeding in which the perjury was committed is as follows: " * * * Sitting as a grand jury * * * and, among other matters, inquiring into certain criminal violations of the laws of the said United States relating to the public lands and the disposal of the same, and the unlawful fencing thereof, which had then lately before been committed within the said district." Hendricks v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 813, 815, 223 U. S. 178, 56 L. Ed. 394.

Of act

An instruction on insanity, in a prosecution for homicide, that, if accused was sufficiently sane to know the nature and quality of his act, he was then legally responsible therefor, was not objectionable for failure to also require that he was sufficiently sane to know that his act in killing deceased was wrong; the term "nature of act" being defined to mean the attributes which constitute the thing and distinguish it from all others, while "quality of act" is the power to clearly and distinctly apprehend its nature, so that, if a person has sufficient mental power to fully appreciate and know what he is doing, he must necessarily know that the killing of a human being is wrong. Montgomery v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 813, 817.

Of proposition submitted to voters

A requirement that the voter be apprised of the "nature" of a public utility means that the ballot title shall in specific language notify him only of the kind, sort, or character of such public utility. A ballot title reading, "Shall the city of W. * * * incur an indebtedness * * * for an electric plant in and to be owned exclusively by said city? * * *" was sufficient to apprise the voter of the nature of such utility, within the contemplation of Const. art. 10, § 27, as construed in Coleman v. Frame, 109 Pac. 928, 26 Okl. 193, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 556, wherein it is stated that the proposition submitted "must be stated in such specific language as to apprise the voter of the 'nature' of the specific utility the city wishes to purchase, construct, or repair." City of Woodward v. Raynor, 119 Pac. 964, 966, 29 Okl. 493 (citing State v. Murphy, 48 Pac. 628, 23 Nev. 390; State v. Birchim, 9 Nev. 95; also citing Webster's International Dict.).

NAVAL STORES

"The term 'naval stores' includes rosin, turpentine, products of crude turpentine, tar, and rosin oil." Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 118 Fed. 613, 617.

In Florida, where the production of spirits of turpentine and rosin, otherwise known as "naval stores," constitutes one of the state's leading industries, the courts will take judicial notice of the fact that such naval stores are the manufactured products of the gum extracted from pine trees. Knight v. Empire Land Co., 45 South. 1025, 1026, 55 Fla. 301.

In England the term "navigable waters" is synonymous with tidewaters. Olds v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 112 N. W. 952, 958, 150 Mich. 134 (quoting and adopting Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. Ed. 1018).

A nontidal stream, which was not meandered in the survey by the United States in 1823, is prima facie a nonnavigable stream. In determining the navigability of a freshwater stream, navigable for only a part of the year, not less than all of the following considerations should be considered: Whether the stream is suitable for valuable floatage for a sufficient length of time for its beneficial use by the public; whether the public or only a few individuals are interested in transportation on it, or any great public interests are promoted in its use for transportation; whether it has been previously used generally, and how long it has been and will be used, by the public; and whether it was meandered by government surveys, or included therein. Blackman v. Mauldin, 51 South. 23, 25, 164 Ala. 337, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 670.

A meandered lake is "navigable," under St. 1898, § 1596, making navigable all streams meandered by the government. Runyard v. Oetting Bros. Ice Co., 125 N. W. 931, 932, 142 Wis. 471.

The part of a river above falls and above the ebb and flow of the tide is not a "navigable river" at common law. Charles C. Wilson & Son v. Harrisburg, 77 Atl. 787, 788, 107 Me. 207.

The term "navigable" at common law and in a legal sense means a stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, and the fact that a river is quite a large one and capable of furnishing considerable water power does not change the rule, nor does the fact that the river may in certain portions of it be a navigable stream. In fact, for that merely affects the question of the public right to transportation over it. Laws 1786, p. 334, c. 67, permitting the commissioners of the land office to grant land under "navigable rivers" as they might deem necessary to promote the commerce of the state, provided the grant should be made to the adjacent owner, is only applicable to a nontidal stream and does not extend to a nontidal stream, though in fact navigable. Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 118 N. Y. S. 1000, 1006, 1013, 62 Misc. Rep. 18.

At common law a "navigable river" was confined to rivers or arms of the sea in which the tide ebbed and flowed, all fresh water rivers being nonnavigable; but all streams actually capable of navigation were common highways for commerce. Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 94 N. E. 199, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

Actual navigability

Though by the English common law "navigable waters" are tidal waters only, in the United States those waters are navigable in contemplation of law which are navigable in fact. McGilvra v. Ross, 161 Fed. 399; Smart v. Aroostook Lumber Co., 68 Atl. 527, 531, 103 Me. 37, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 106 (citing The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 557, 19 L. Ed. 999; Brown v. Chadbourne, 3 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Treat v. Lord, 4 Me. 552, 66 Am. Dec. 298; Lancey v. Clifford, 54 Me. 487, 92 Am. Dec. 561; The Montello, 20 Wall. [87 U. S.] 430, 22 L. Ed. 891; Heal v. Joliet & C. R. Co., 6 Sup. Ct. 352, 116 U. S. 191, 29 L. Ed. 607; Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 578, 73 Am. Dec. 439; Moore v. Sanborne, 15 Mich. 519, 59 Am. Dec. 209; Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 333, 18 Am. Rep. 184; Kinhead v. Turgeon, 10 N. W. 1061, 1062, 74 Neb. 573, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762, 121 Am. St. Rep. 740, 13 Ann. Cas. 43.

The term "navigable," as applied to waters, includes streams navigable in fact, though not subject to the ebb and flow of the tide, though the term does not necessarily extend to streams that are only capable of use for pleasure boating, fowling, cutting ice, or skating. Hobart v. Hall, 174 Fed. 433, 46.

While the common-law rule as to navigable waters is in force in Illinois in so far as it relates to the questions of boundary and ownership, yet, on the question of navigability, the common-law rule that waters are

"navigable" only where the tide ebbs and flows is not the law, and waters navigable in fact are navigable in law; the test being whether they are of sufficient depth to afford a channel for useful commerce or practicable public utility. Schulte v. Warren, 75 N. E. 783, 785, 218 Ill. 108, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 5.

A stream, in order to be "navigable," must be of common or public use for the carriage of boats and lighters, and of bearing and floating vessels for the transportation property conducted by the agency of man. It is navigable in fact only when it affords a channel for useful commerce, and is a practical utility to the public as such, and in its ordinary natural condition furnishes a highway over which commerce is or may be carried in the customary modes of conducting commerce by water. It is not sufficient that it is available in places for rowboats or small launches, or that hunters and fishermen pass over the water in boats used for that purpose. People v. Economy Light & Power Co., 89 N. E. 760, 771, 241 Ill. 290; Schulte v. Warren, 75 N. E. 783, 785, 218 Ill. 9, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 745.

The term "navigable waters," as applied to the dominion of the national and state governments over shore lands and the rights which they have or can convey, means waters which are navigable in fact and not simply tidal waters. McGillivray v. Ross, 30 Sup. Ct. 31, 215 U. S. 70, 78, 54 L. Ed. 95.

The term "navigable stream" is not limited to a tidewater stream, but the question in each case is whether it is in fact navigable; that is, used or susceptible of being used, in its ordinary condition, as a highway for commerce, over which trade and travel may or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Willow River, an indirect tributary of the Mississippi, capable of floating logs at certain seasons of the year and carrying rowboats, although not meandered, and so shallow that in places the boats have to be pushed, is a public "navigable stream." Willow River Club v. Wade, 83 N. W. 273, 276, 100 Wis. 86, 42 L. R. A. 35.

In general those rivers are "public and navigable" in law which are navigable in fact. State ex rel. Citizens' Electric Lighting Power Co. v. Longfellow, 69 S. W. 374, 377, 39 Mo. 109 (quoting and adopting definitions of Gould, Waters [3d Ed.] § 45).

A stream running into the sea, and in which the tide ebbs and flows, is "navigable water," and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States as far up as it is actually navigable for the purposes of interstate and foreign commerce. United States v. President, etc., of Jamaica & R. Turnpike Road, 183 Fed. 598, 601.

"If a stream is 'navigable in fact, it is navigable in law.' Gould, Waters (3d Ed.) § 67. The capability of being used for purposes of trade and travel in the usual and ordinary mode is the test, and not the extent and manner of such use. * * * Navigability cannot be affected by the conditions on the adjacent land, such as there being a large town on the shore, with numerous streets and wharves, or whether * * * one riparian owner has a monopoly of the land, with no public road to the water, thus cutting off access to the land. It is the navigability of the water that is the test." State v. Twiford, 48 S. E. 586, 587, 136 N. C. 603.

A stream is "navigable" legally if it is navigable in fact. A stream which is only navigable for three or four miles from its mouth at high tide by small boats drawing from three to four feet of water, and is floatable for its entire length, is not a navigable stream within Act Sept. 19, 1890, c. 907, § 10, 26 Stat. 454, prohibiting the creation of an obstruction not authorized by law to the navigable capacity of any waters over which the United States has jurisdiction. State ex rel. Pealer v. Superior of Chehalis County, 109 Pac. 340, 341, 58 Wash. 565.

A "navigable river" is a natural highway for commerce. The Cumberland river is navigable in fact from its mouth to a point far above Nashville, and it is therefore a natural highway for commerce between two or more states, and, as such, is the property of the public constituting the country at large, and jurisdiction over it for purposes of interstate commerce is in Congress. Ryman Steamboat Line v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 403, 125 Ky. 253, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1187.

A river in fact nonnavigable, which is declared by Laws 1844-45, p. 299, a public highway, is not thereby made a navigable river, within Rev. St. 1899, § 8278, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 234, § 1, and re-enacted by Laws 1905, p. 180 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3917), authorizing the improvement of a nonnavigable stream for the drainage of lands, for a "public highway" is a way open to all persons, and all streams which are actually capable of floating and of permitting the passage of ordinary boats are "navigable." State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 123 S. W. 892, 919, 224 Mo. 393.

Capacity for navigation

Any water, to be "navigable," must be susceptible of use for purposes of commerce, or possess the capacity for valuable floatage in transportation to market of the products of the country through which it runs, and must be of practical usefulness to the public as a public highway in its own state and without the aid of artificial means; a theoretical or potential navigation or one that is temporary, precarious, and unprofitable not being sufficient. Hurst v. Dana, 122 Pac. 1041, 1042, 86 Kan. 947.

A "navigable stream" is one capable of bearing on its bosom, either for the whole or a part of the year, boats loaded with freight in regular course of trade. The mere rafting of timber or transporting wood in small boats at certain seasons of the year is not sufficient to render the stream navigable. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Sikes, 60 S. E. 868, 869, 4 Ga. App. 7.

A "navigable stream" is one which is large enough to float a boat of some size, engaged in carrying trade, and implies the possibility of transporting men and things. Burns v. Crescent Gun & Rod Club, 41 South. 249, 251, 116 La. 1038.

The words "navigable stream" ordinarily mean a stream navigable in part, one of sufficient capacity to permit of saw logs being floated down the same at high water, and of small row boats being used thereon to some extent, and such meaning must be attributed to such words when used in a statute, in the absence of ambiguity suggesting that a different meaning might have been intended, which is discoverable by judicial construction. Village of Bloomer v. Town of Bloomer, 107 N. W. 974, 979, 128 Wis. 297.

It is not necessary that the waters should be "navigable" in all their parts, or that the navigable portion is open for use all the year, in order that the public may have a right of navigation where the waters are deep enough and fit for such use. Schulte v. Warren, 75 N. E. 783, 785, 218 Ill. 108, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 745; People v. Economy Light & Power Co., 89 N. E. 760, 767, 241 Ill. 290.

A slough emptying into the sea, which during the ebb and flow of the tide is navigable for scows and for rafting and booming logs, is a "navigable stream." Dawson v. McMillan, 75 Pac. 807, 808, 34 Wash. 269.

A stream has "navigable capacity" when it is capable of being navigated over any part of the waters in their normal condition. Hubbard v. Fort, 188 Fed. 987, 996.

Streams in the state of Idaho are "navigable" if used either for transporting freight or passengers by boats, or for floating lumber, logs, wood, or any other product to market. The rule applied in that state is stated in Black's Pomeroy on Water Rights, § 218, as follows: "In those states, where lumbering is a principal industrial interest, it has been found necessary to establish a new rule in respect to the use of the streams, which is not founded upon any principle or precedent of the common law, but solely on the local exigencies and customs. This rule is that a fresh water stream which is capable of being used for the purpose of floating down logs to mills or to market, although it may be too small to admit of navigation, is 'navigable' (or, more properly, 'floatable'), and a public highway in the sense that the general public have an easement of passage over it for that purpose, though the title to the bed of the stream may remain in the riparian owner subject to such public easement." The rule generally applied is that "to be 'navigable' a water course must have a useful capacity as a public highway of transportation"; but, where the streams of a state are more generally used for floating timber than for carrying passengers or freight, this rule does not apply. Johnson v. Johnson, 95 Pac. 499, 507, 14 Idaho, 561, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1240 (quoting Harrison v. Fite, 148 Fed. 781, 78 C. C. A. 447); Moss & Bros. v. Ramey, 95 Pac. 513, 14 Idaho, 598.

"To be 'navigable' a water course must have a useful capacity as a public highway of transportation. Mere depth of water, without profitable utility, will not render a water course navigable in the legal sense, so as to subject it to public servitude, nor will the fact that it is sufficient for pleasure boating or to enable hunters or fishermen to float their skiffs or canoes." Harrison v. Fite, 148 Fed. 781, 784, 78 C. C. A. 447.

A channel in a tide river which at half tide is navigable with a rowboat, and which at full tide is navigable for boats, is a "navigable channel," though at low tide there is not much water therein. Judson v. Tide Water Lumber Co., 98 Pac. 377, 379, 51 Wash. 164.

A lake on which a steamboat carrying pleasure parties is operated, and on which numerous small boats are used for rowing and fishing, the average depth of water being 16 feet, is a "navigable water." Kalez v. Spokane Valley Land & Water Co., 84 Pac. 395, 396, 42 Wash. 43.

A lake not of sufficient size to warrant its use for maritime or commercial purposes is not "navigable" within the definition of navigable waters, and such a lake is properly subject to individual ownership by the riparian owners. City of Geneva v. Henson, 124 N. Y. Supp. 588, 593, 140 App. Div. 49.

Where a lake had a total area of 905 acres, 499 of which were covered to a depth of over 25 feet with a maximum depth of 50 feet, and boats of considerable dimensions, as well as smaller craft at different times, had plied on its waters, and booms of logs, piles, shingle bolts, and other timber products had been transported from place to place thereon, as well as moored in booms while awaiting the process of manufacture, the lake was navigable, though little used for navigation. Brace & Hergert Mill Co. v. State, 95 Pac. 278, 281, 49 Wash. 326.

The extended application of the right of the public to use "navigable streams," whether tidal or nontidal, even those of inconsiderable size, as highways for transporting merchandise, rafting and driving logs, and propelling boats, has made the terms "navigable" and "floatable" practically synonymous. Smart v. Aroostook Lumber Co., 68 Atl. 527, 531, 103 Me. 37, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083 (citing Knox v. Chaloner, 42 Me. 150).

Public usefulness

A "navigable stream" is a highway open to the use of all. State ex rel. Guenther v. Charleston Light & Water Co., 47 S. E. 979, 33, 68 S. C. 540.

A body of water deep enough in places for hunters and fishermen to use it for small boats is not legally "navigable" as a whole, but there may be a public right of navigation in the places where the water is deep enough for use. Schulte v. Warren, 75 N. E. 783, 35, 218 Ill. 108, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 745.

Same—Floatage of logs

A river capable of floating logs is a navigable stream. In re Southern Wisconsin Paper Co., 122 N. W. 801, 805, 140 Wis. 245; Weatherby v. Melkiohn, 13 N. W. 697, 698, 3 Wis. 78; Stevens Point Boom Co. v. Reilly, 44 Wis. 295, 305; Cohn v. Wausau Boom Co., 2 N. W. 546, 548, 47 Wis. 314.

That a stream is capable of floating logs thereby entitling the public to a right of highway therein for that purpose is wholly insufficient to establish that it is "navigable" within St. 1898, § 3874, authorizing the erection and maintenance of a dam across any stream not navigable. Allaby v. Mauston Electric Service Co., 116 N. W. 4, 6, 135 Wis. 345, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

A stream which in its natural state can be practically used for the floating of shingle bolts to market is a "navigable stream." Monroe Mill Co. v. Menzel, 77 Pac. 813, 815, 5 Wash. 487, 70 L. R. A. 272, 102 Am. St. Rep. 905.

Where streams were large enough to be used for floating logs and for commerce the greater part of the year, one being about a mile long, 300 feet wide, and from 6 to 8 feet deep, and the other 2 or 3 miles long, 50 feet wide at its mouth, and 10 or 12 feet deep in high water, they were navigable streams. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4147, defining "navigable stream," the public would have a right to the use of such streams as navigable public highways whenever they have sufficient water for such purpose. Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex.) 126 S. W. 604, 605.

A stream capable of transporting rafts of railroad ties for several months during the spring of the year, without the aid of men on the banks thereof, is "navigable," within the meaning of the law for that purpose and subject to the use of the public therefor, and the rights of the riparian owners to the soil adjacent to and underlying the bed of such stream are subject to this right or easement in the public, which rests upon the necessities of commerce; and, where it appears that there was no other practical route by which ties could be transported to market, the adjacent owners would have no right to interfere with one using the stream for the commercial purposes indicated. Mc-

Kinney v. Northcutt, 89 S. W. 351, 355, 114 Mo. App. 146.

Actual use

A stream which is used only a few times in many years by a boat for a picnic or excursion is not "navigable," within the meaning of Laws 1850, p. 224, c. 140, § 28, subd. 5, authorizing railroads to cross streams, but providing that nothing in the acts shall be construed to authorize the erection of any bridge across any navigable stream or lake. People v. New York, O. & W. Ry. Co., 117 N. Y. Supp. 1048, 1061, 133 App. Div. 476.

Continual navigability

Any stream sufficient during the high-water season to be used for floating logs or timber to market or the place of use is "navigable," and to that extent and for that purpose is a public highway; and it is not necessary that such stream be navigable the whole year for such purpose or any purpose. Idaho Northern R. Co. v. Post Falls Lumber & Mfg. Co., 119 Pac. 1068, 1101, 20 Idaho, 665, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 114. But it is sufficient that the stream have periods of navigable capacity, ordinarily recurring from year to year, and continuing long enough to make it useful as a highway. A. C. Conn Co. v. Little Swamco Lumber Mfg. Co., 43 N. W. 680, 74 Wis. 652.

The court's instruction, in an action for the obstruction of a stream so as to interfere with the rafting of logs, that a navigable stream is one capable of being used at all times or periodically during the year for times long enough to make it susceptible of beneficial use to the public as a means of transportation, sufficiently defined a "navigable stream" for the purpose of the case, and defendant's requested instruction upon the same matter was properly refused. Burr's Ferry, B. & C. Ry. Co. v. Allen (Tex.) 149 S. W. 358, 360.

A stream is a "navigable" or "floatable" one if, by the increased precipitation at seasons, recurring periodically with reasonable certainty, the flow of water will be sufficient to be substantially useful to the public for transportation. Hot Springs Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Revercomb, 55 S. E. 580, 582, 106 Va. 176, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

A stream which had been successfully used for more than 20 years during the winter for floating logs to the market from a distance at least 10 miles above plaintiffs' mill was a "navigable stream" at the mill, notwithstanding opinions of witnesses that the stream was not navigable. Trullinger v. Howe, 97 Pac. 548, 53 Or. 219, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545.

The navigability of a stream is shown where it appears that, a great many years previously, boats navigated it at certain seasons of the year, and there is no evidence that its condition has changed. Miller & Lux

v. Enterprise Canal & Land Co., 75 Pac. 770, 771, 142 Cal. 208, 100 Am. St. Rep. 115.

In an action for damages for placing obstructions in a bayou and river alleged by plaintiff to be navigable, thus preventing him from floating logs placed therein to market, an instruction to find for plaintiff, if the jury believed from the evidence that he had placed logs in the bayou and river, and further believed that said bayou and river "were navigable for the purpose of floating said logs to market," is inaccurate, as such waters might have been navigable at the time that plaintiff wished to market his logs and not navigable at other times, and the stream to be navigable must be capable of use by the public, either at all times during the year, or for times long enough to make them useful to the public as a means of transportation. Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex.) 118 S. W. 563, 564.

Natural navigability

According to the general definition, water is "navigable" when in its ordinary state it forms by itself or its connection with other waters a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried in the customary mode, and a stream not naturally navigable, but made so by artificial means, is not navigable water in a legal sense. State ex rel. Lyon v. Columbia Water Power Co., 63 S. E. 884, 887, 82 S. C. 181, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 435, 129 Am. St. Rep. 876, 17 Ann. Cas. 343.

A stream incapable of carrying logs without the construction of dams to increase the volume of water is not "navigable" for floating logs. La Veine v. Stack-Gibbs Lumber Co., 104 Pac. 668, 667, 17 Idaho, 51, 134 Am. St. Rep. 253.

Every stream, which in its natural state is capable of floating logs or other commercial and floatable commodities for any practical period of time, is to such extent and for such time a "navigable stream," and the bed thereof is for such purposes subject to the regulation of the state. Mashburn v. St. Joe Improvement Co., 113 Pac. 92, 95, 19 Idaho, 30, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824.

Whether a stream is "navigable" must be determined with reference to its natural condition. Where a stream is in fact navigable in its natural state, it may be improved to enlarge its usefulness for the public's benefit. People v. Economy Light & Power Co., 89 N. E. 760, 769, 241 Ill. 290.

A river which in its natural condition, unaided by artificial means, is susceptible to public use to float vessels, rafts, or logs, is a navigable or floatable stream according to the law of Maine, though not a navigable river in the technical sense of the common law. Charles C. Wilson & Son v. Harrisburg, 77 Atl. 787, 789, 107 Me. 207.

A stream, to be "navigable" or floatable for saw logs, must be capable, in its natural condition, at ordinary recurring freshets, of being successfully and profitably used for that purpose, and a stream not navigable or floatable in its natural condition cannot be made so by artificial means. Where a stream is such that in its natural condition sawlogs cannot be floated therein, except at extreme high water, continued for a few hours at a time, and then only small logs, it is not a navigable stream for the purpose of floatage. Kamm v. Normand, 91 Pac. 448, 451, 50 Or. 9, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290, 126 Am. St. Rep. 698.

Public termini necessary

A "navigable body of water" is one which the public has a right to use for navigation. The term includes all waters having sufficient capacity to float water craft for a period long enough to be of commercial value, or to float to market the products of the country through which the water extends so as to be useful to the population along its banks. The stream must be of some value to trade, commerce, or agriculture, and the term therefor excludes waters which are merely capable of floating a skiff for pleasure. To be useful for commercial purposes, the water must connect with other waters or lead from one public place to another, so as to be in the path of commerce. A stream which leads from a public river to a private house, or to which the public had no access, except at one point where the highway approaches it, is not navigable so as to render it a public highway. A "navigable body of water" must have a terminus by which the public can enter it and another from which it can leave it, but it need not lead from one county to another. The rights of the public in a body of water are entirely dependent on its capacity for navigation. King v. Muller, 67 Atl. 880, 384, 73 N. J. Eq. 32 (citing 1 Farnham, p. 100; 3 Farnham, p. 2407).

NAVIGABLE WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

The term "navigable waters of the United States" applies: First, to all waters capable of sustaining or being used for interstate or foreign commerce, covering every part of any body of water, tidal or otherwise, any portion of which is capable of such use; and, second, to all waters under the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and over which the District Court of the United States can exercise its peculiar admiralty jurisdiction. United States v. Banister Realty Co., 155 Fed. 583, 593.

Where a river within a state was navigable for some distance from its mouth, and was actually navigated by small steamboats and river craft for the purpose of carrying up groceries, supplies, clothing, loggers' tools, etc., to the head of navigation, and returning with farmers' products, a bill was maintainable in the federal courts to restrain a boom company from maintaining a boom in the river in such a manner as to be an obstruction to navigation, though the river was chiefly valuable for floating logs, and there was no proof of actual carriage of goods on the river in interstate commerce. To render a river navigable in law, it must be navigable in fact. A river is navigable in fact when it is used, or is susceptible of being used, while in its ordinary condition, as a highway for commerce, over which trade and travel may be conducted in customary modes of trade and travel on water. "Navigable waters" of the United States, within the meaning of the Acts of Congress, in contradistinction with the navigable waters of the states, are those waters which form, in their ordinary condition, by themselves or by unity with other waters, a continued highway, over which commerce is or may be carried on with other states or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water. The term "navigable waters of the United States" has reference to commerce of a substantial and permanent character. United States v. Wishkah Boom Co., 136 Fed. 42, 45, 47, 68 C. C. A. 592 (citing The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 57, 563, 19 L. Ed. 999; Leovy v. United States, 20 Sup. Ct. 797, 177 U. S. 621, 44 L. Ed. 914).

State waters distinguished

The Erie Canal, which, though lying wholly within the state of New York, forms part of a continuous highway for interstate and foreign commerce by connecting Lake Erie with the Hudson river, is a "navigable water" of the United States, as contradistinguished from a navigable water of the state. Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 1, 181 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

"Navigable waters" lying within the limits of a state are both state and national in their character, with a paramount right of control or regulation in the general government, when Congress chooses to exercise the authority over the same. But, until such authority is exercised, the jurisdiction and power of the state to authorize the erection or construction of bridges over the same is clearly established. Act Cong. March 3, 1899, § 10, 30 Stat. 1151, which provides that "the creation of any obstruction, not affirmatively authorized by Congress, to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States, is hereby prohibited," is prospective purely, and not intended to take away from a railroad company, which, under a duly authorized grant from a state, has constructed a bridge over a navigable interstate river, the implied power to make all necessary repairs. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. J. T. Wygul & Son, 33 South. 965, 967, 968, 82 Miss. 223, 61 L. R. A. 578 (quoting and adopting Rhea v. Newport News & M. V. R. Co., 50 Fed. 16).

"Navigation" is defined by Bouvier as whatever relates to traversing the sea in ships; the art of ascertaining the geographical position of a ship and directing its course. The construction of a dock, while it may be useful to individuals engaged in navigation, is not involved in the public right of navigation as understood by the law. *Trustees of the Freeholders & Commonalty of Town of Brookhaven v. NE EXEAT

Under the English practice, the "writ of ne exeat" regno was a prerogative writ which issued to prevent a person from leaving the realm. In America it has been treated, not as a prerogative writ, but as a writ of right in the cases in which it is properly grantable. Lamar v. Lamar, 51 S. E. 763, 123 Ga. 827, 107 Am. St. Rep. 169, 3 Ann. Cas. 294.

"The object of a writ of 'ne exeat' is to secure to the plaintiff the presence of the defendant at the termination of the suit, either by his detention or by his giving equitable bail." Dunsmoor v. Bankers' Surety Co., 91 N. E. 907, 908, 206 Mass. 23.

A writ of "ne exeat," at common law, was simply a writ to obtain equitable bail. It was issued by a court of equity upon application of the complainant against the defendant when it appeared that there was a debt positively due, certain in amount, or capable of being made certain on an equitable demand not suable at law (except in cases of account and possibly some other cases of concurrent jurisdiction), having conveyed away his property, or under other circumstances which would render any decree ineffectual. Davidor v. Rosenberg, 109 N. W. 925, 130 Wis. 22, 118 Am. St. Rep. 986.

A writ of "ne exeat" is one of right, and not prohibited by the constitutional provision regarding imprisonment for debt. It is little more than an order to hold to equitable bail, the party generally getting rid of it by giving security to abide the event of the litigation. Gooding v. Reid, Murdock & Co., 177 Fed. 684, 686, 101 C. C. A. 310 (citing Dean v. Smith, 23 Wis. 483, 99 Am. Dec. 198; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. [10th Ed.] § 1469; preface to Warner's 1st Am. Ed. of Beames' Ne Exeat Regno;

NEAR

See As Near as May Be; At or Near; In or Near; Property On or Near Premises.

"Near" means "adjacent to, close by, not far from." It is a relative term, and its precise import can only be determined by surrounding facts and circumstances. Killgore v. Jackson, 118 S. W. 819, 821, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 99; Karczenska v. City of Chicago, 88 N. E. 188, 189, 239 Ill. 483.

As an indefinite term

"Near" is a relative term, the precise import of which can only be determined by the surrounding facts and circumstances in the case in which it is used, and so an averment that plaintiff lived near a telegraph station is not equivalent to an allegation that he lived within a mile thereof. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Klitzke, 89 N. E. 405, 406, 45 Ind. App. 550.

Stating that plaintiff was in front of and "near" to defendant's car alleged to have injured her when it started was not sufficiently certain to warrant a conclusion that the starting of the car was negligence as matter of law; the word "near" being an indefinite word which may mean a foot, a chain, or any other distance. Cobe v. Malloy, 88 N. E. 620, 622, 44 Ind. App. 8.

The word "near," in the Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 147), as amended by St. 1891, p. 196, providing for the posting of notices in street assessment proceedings "on or near the chamber door of" the city council, etc., is a relative term, and its meaning must be determined by reference to the subject-matter, and the posting of the notices on a bulletin board in the city hall in which the council chamber was located was sufficient where such bulletin board was in plain view from the main entrance of the hall, and so placed as to be likely to bring the notices to the attention of persons visiting the council chamber, though the bulletin board was far removed from the council chamber. Haughwout v. Percival, 119 Pac. 649, 650, 161 Cal. 491, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 115.

As allowing discretion as to place

The word "near," as applied to space, can have no positive or precise meaning. It is a relative term depending for its significance on the subject-matter in relation to which it is used and the circumstances under which it becomes necessary to apply it to surrounding objects. A charter granting a railroad a right to cross a river "above" or "near" a certain town conferred a right to locate its bridge "below" such town. Pedrick v. Raleigh & P. S. R. Co., 55 S. E. 877, 883, 143 N. C. 485, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 555 (quoting and adopting the definition in Fall River Iron Works Co. v. Old Colony & F. R. R. Co., 5 Allen [87 Mass.] 221; Wood, Nuisance, § 274).

The title of Acts 1909, c. 1, an act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage "near" any schoolhouse, where a school is kept, whether it be in session or not, cannot be said not to warrant the provision of the act prohibiting such a sale within four miles of such a schoolhouse, especially where such provision has repeatedly been made before under a like title; the word "near" being a relative term, the proper import of which is dependent on the sense and connection in which it is used, considered together with the purposes to be accomplished. J. W. Kelly & Co. v. State, 132 S. W. 193, 201, 123 Tenn. 516.

Civ. Code 1902, § 203, provides that at all general elections held in the state the same shall be conducted at the polling precincts fixed by law in the various counties, cities and towns, the location of which shall be as designated, and then declares that, at the Waverly precinct, in R. County, the polling place shall be "at or near the fork of the Rice Creek spring and Camden road." Held, that it could not be said as a matter of law that a polling place located a quarter of a mile from the crossing of the stream and road was not properly located "near" such point. Verner v. Muller, 71 S. E. 654, 656, 89 S. C. 117.

See On—Upon.

The call from the third to the fourth corner of a survey of land, made under warrant of the state of Kentucky and afterwards carried into a patent issued by the state, was from a stake on the top of Cumberland Mountain, "thence south, 60 degrees west, 8,320 poles, to a stake near Cumberland Gap." If the course and distance be followed, it would carry the fourth corner several miles within the state of Tennessee; whereas, if the line be run following the state line along the crest of the Cumberland Mountains in a general southwesterly course, it would strike the center of the Gap at the Tennessee line. Held, that the words "near Cumberland Gap" should be construed to mean at or in Cumberland Gap, and that, as so construed, such natural object would control the calls for course and distance, and fix the corner at the center of the Gap. Davis' Heirs v. Hinckley, 141 Fed. 708, 710; Davis v. Farmer, 141 Fed. 703, 707.

NEAR BEER

"Near beer" is an imitation of beer. Manus v. State, 66 S. E. 1037, 7 Ga. App. 377.

One who has paid the tax imposed by Acts 1908, p. 1112, known as the "near beer act," and has obtained a license thereunder, is not entitled to keep on hand at his place of business any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, but only such liquors as if drunk to excess, will not produce intoxication. Cassidy v. State, 72 S. E. 939, 941, 8 Ga. App. 123.

The court will take judicial notice of the nonintoxicating qualities of "near beer," a term currently used to designate all that class of malt liquors which contain so little alcohol that they will not produce intoxication, though drunk to excess, and including malt liquors not within the purview of the general prohibition law. Loh v. City of Macon, 70 S. E. 149, 150, 8 Ga. App. 744.

Act March 12, 1908 (Laws 1908, p. 275, c. 9), known as the "Byrd Liquor Law," is entitled "An act to define and regulate the sale, distribution, rectifying, manufacture and distilling of intoxicating liquor and malt beverages, and to impose a license thereon," and defines what shall be deemed intoxicating spirits, including beer, etc., therein, and section 23½ provides that "malt beverage" shall mean the by-products of a brewery, but must be nonintoxicating, and shall not contain more than 2¼ per cent. of alcohol, and shall only be sold by the manufacturer to the customer and in quantities of not less than one-half dozen bottles or more than four dozen bottles at a time; that the name "malt beverage" shall be blown in the bottles in the manner stated, with the name and address of the manufacturer, and that no person shall place in such bottles liquid containing more than 2¼ per cent. volume of alcohol, and prescribes a penalty for its violation. Held, that the section was intended to regulate the manufacture and sale of all classes of malt liquors not containing 2¼ per cent. alcohol, "malt beverage" being synonymous with "small brew" and "near beer," and was a valid exercise of the state's general police power, as well as of the authority granted by Const. § 62 (Code 1904, p. ccxxiii), authorizing the General Assembly to enact laws regulating or prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors; that section of the Constitution not being designed to limit but to enlarge the police power over intoxicants. Commonwealth v. Henry, 65 S. E. 570, 572, 110 Va. 879, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 33.

"Near beer" is a term used to designate all malt liquors which contain so little alcohol that they will not produce intoxication, though drunk to excess, and includes all malt liquors not within the purview of the general prohibition law. Campbell v. City of Thomsville, 64 S. E. 815, 818, 6 Ga. App. 212.

NEAR COMPACT PART OF TOWN

The phrase "near the compact part of a town" in Rev. St. c. 52, § 86, providing that no engine or train shall run across a highway near the compact part of a town at a speed greater than 6 miles an hour, unless the railroad maintains a flagman, a gate, or certain signals at such crossing, is not limited to the largest or principal compact part of a town, but applies to any compact portion, and includes a village with church, schoolhouse, engine house, store and dwelling houses, in all at least 25 buildings, and all situated within 350 feet of the central point. Moore v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 76 Atl. 871, 872, 106 Me. 297.

NEAR RELATIVES

The term "near relatives," in a petition for leave to appeal from a decision admitting a will to probate, averring that the petitioners are "near relatives" and heirs at law of the deceased and entitled to a distributive share of the estate if the will should be set aside, is used as synonymous with the term "heirs," and is sufficient to show that the petitioners are beneficially interested in the estate and entitled to appeal. Perry v. Scaife, 105 N. W. 920, 921, 126 Wis. 405.

NEAREST

There is a shade of difference between the words "next" and "nearest." The word "next," in a certificate of membership of a mutual benefit society, providing for payment of a benefit on the death of a member to the beneficiary named, who under the by-laws must be either the wife, children, adopted children, parents, etc., and, if the member outlived the beneficiary named and died without naming another beneficiary, the benefit was to go to the member's "next" living relation in the order named, is used as a synonym of "nearest," and refers to the member and not to the beneficiary. Therefore, where a member named his wife as beneficiary, and she died, and he married again, leaving a second wife, without having changed the beneficiary, the second wife, and not his children, took the benefit. Speegle v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World, 58 S. E. 435, 436, 77 S. C. 517.

NEAREST BLOOD RELATIONS

The words "my nearest blood relatives," used in wills, generally mean such persons as take under the statute regarding the distribution of estates of intestates, but any reasonably different meaning may be given thereto when necessary to effectuate the intention of the testator. In re Sander's Estate, 105 N. W. 1064, 1065, 126 Wis. 660, 5 Ann. Cas. 508.

No one is "nearest" in degree of blood, if some one else be "nearer." In re Weaver's Estate, 119 N. W. 69, 70, 140 Iowa, 615, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161, 17 Ann. Cas. 947.

NEAREST CAUSE

As proximate cause, see Proximate Cause.

NEAREST ENTRANCE

In Liquor Tax Law, § 17, subd. 8, requiring the consent of owners of dwellings, the nearest entrance of which is within 200 feet, measured in a straight line, of the nearest entrance to the premises on which traffic in liquor is to be carried on, the expression "nearest entrance to the dwelling" includes all entrances, front, side, or rear, and by the same course of reasoning the "entrance to the place where the liquor is to be sold" means any entrance. By the use of the word "nearest," the statute clearly contemplates that there might be more than one, and, as it is not probable that there would ordinarily be more than one front entrance, it must include rear and side entrances. In re McMonagle, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1068, 1071, 41 Misc. Rep. 407.

NEAREST OF KIN

"It is certainly difficult to distinguish between the expressions 'next of kin,' 'nearest of kin,' 'nearest of kindred,' and 'nearest blood relations'; and primarily the words indicated the nearest degree of consanguinity." De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 635, 20 Okl. 687 (quoting Swasey v. Jacques, 10 N. E. 758, 144 Mass. 135, 59 Am. Rep. 65).

The term "nearest of kin," in a will, signifies those standing in the nearest relationship to testator, according to the legal rules for computing degrees of kinship; brothers and sisters taking to the exclusion of the children of a deceased brother or sister. Clark v. Mack, 126 N. W. 632, 634, 161 Mich. 545.

NEAREST RELATIONS

The term "nearest relation," as used in a statute, giving the property of an intestate who has no children to the "nearest relation," means some one person, and that person is neither husband nor wife of the intestate. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 635, 20 Okl. 687.

Testator, after giving his entire estate to his wife, stated: "It is my wish that my nearest relatives, brother, sister or their children shall inherit one-half of all the estate my wife may possess at the time of her death * * * the other half shall come to the nearest relatives of my wife, or if she wants to make a will to anyone else, she can dispose of one-half of all she may leave just as she pleases." Held, that "nearest relatives," as applied to the wife's half, did not carry the same meaning as in the case of the husband's half, but that the presumption was that testator meant such relatives as should be properly defined as nearest, and that a sister of the wife took to the exclusion of children of a deceased sister. In re Atldorfer's Estate, 73 Atl. 1068, 1069, 225 Pa. 136.

NEARLY EQUAL

See As Nearly Equal as May Be.

NEARSILK

Imitation silk yarn, which is made from cotton waste, subjected to a chemical process, whereby it loses its identity as cotton, and which resembles silk yarn in quality, texture, and use, is held, by virtue of the similitude clause in section 7, Tariff Act July 24, 1897 (30 Stat. 205, c. 11), to be dutiable at the rate applicable to silk yarn, under paragraph 385 of said act (30 Stat. 185, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L). All yarns of this character, whether made from silk waste or from cotton waste, are known as "imitation silk," and the fabric woven therefrom is known as "nearsilk." Von Bernuth v. United States, 133 Fed. 800, 801.

NECESSARIES

Other necessities, see Other.

A contract for necessities made by an infant is binding, but the word "necessaries" is a relative term, except when applied to such things as are obviously requisite for the maintenance of existence, and depends on the social position and situation in life of the infant, as well as on his own fortune and that of his parents. International Text Book Co. v. Connelly, 99 N. E. 722, 725, 206 N. Y. 188, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115.

What are included in the word "necessaries," when applied to goods purchased by a wife, and for which it is sought to charge the husband, are such articles of utility as are suitable to maintain her according to the degree and estate of her husband and his ability to pay. Schwartz v. Oohn, 129 N. Y. Supp. 464, 465.

In order that articles purchased by a wife for herself and children may be classed as necessities under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2970, 2971, providing that the wife may contract debts for necessities furnished herself and children, if the expenses incurred be reasonable and proper, such articles must be reasonable and proper under the conditions and surroundings of the parties. Desmond v. Dockery (Tex.) 116 S. W. 114, 115.

Where a person is so insane as to attempt to injure himself or to destroy property, the services of a nurse or watchers fall within the class of "necessaries" for which the estate of the insane person is liable. Waldron v. Davis, 58 Atl. 293, 294, 70 N. J. Law, 788, 66 L. R. A. 591.

The services of a nurse during confinement are "necessaries" for which a husband is liable, although he is living apart from his wife and paying her a certain sum per week. Schneider v. Rosenbaum, 101 N. Y. Supp. 529, 52 Misc. Rep. 143.

A judgment for damages caused by negligence is not for "necessaries," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, authorizing execution against wages or salary, when the judgment was obtained wholly for necessaries furnished. Kelly v. Mulcahy, 116 N. Y. Supp. 61, 131 App. Div. 639.

A judgment, in an action on a judgment of another state, is not one recovered for "necessaries," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 1071, c. 461, authorizing an order for execution on such a judgment, against income from a trust fund. Neuman v. Mortimer, 90 N. Y. Supp. 524, 525, 98 App. Div. 64.

Attorney's fees

Protection of a wife's character in a suit against her by employing counsel is as much a necessary as food, etc., within the rule requiring one to provide his wife with necessities suitable to their station in life. Hamilton v. Salisbury, 114 S. W. 563, 133 Mo. App. 718.

Attorney's services in bringing an action of divorce for a wife are not "necessaries," within the meaning of a statute making a husband liable to a person furnishing his wife articles necessary for her support. Sears v. Swenson, 115 N. W. 519, 520, 22 S. D. 74.

False teeth

Artificial teeth made by a dentist for a married woman constituted "necessaries" for which her husband was primarily liable. Clark v. Tennessee, 130 N. W. 895, 896, 146 Wis. 65, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 141.

Groceries

Groceries bought by a wife are "necessaries" which the husband is bound to furnish or pay for. Fisher v. Brady, 94 N. Y. Supp. 25, 26, 47 Misc. Rep. 401.

Insurance

Insurance is not an article of merchandise or manufacture, or one of the "necessaries" of life, within the laws against engrossing, prohibiting combinations among dealers in merchandise or manufacture or necessities of life. Harris v. Commonwealth, 73 S. E. 561, 563, 113 Va. 746, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 597.

Medical attendance and medicines

The phrase "necessaries of life," as used in connection with the subject of restraint of trade, must be regarded as broad enough to include proprietary medicines and articles, of which the public consumes $60,000,000 worth in a year. John D. Park & Sons v. National Wholesale Druggists' Ass'n, 67 N. E. 136, 141, 175 N. Y. 1, 62 L. R. A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578.

A claim for surgical services is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, relating to exemptions and providing that where a judgment has been recovered wholly for "necessaries," etc., and execution has been returned unsatisfied, the judgment creditor may have execution against wages due the debtor. Taylor v. Barker, 95 N. Y. Supp. 474, 108 App. Div. 21.

Medical services are necessities of life which parents are required to furnish their children, and hence within the purview of Civ. Code, § 171, as amended in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 206), making a wife's separate estate liable for necessities furnished the family while living with her husband. Evans v. Noonan, 128 Pac. 794, 795, 20 Cal. App. 288.

Question of law or fact

In the absence of notice to the contrary, the law will imply authority on the part of a wife, who is living with her husband, to buy such articles on his credit as pertain to the household arrangements, which are commonly under a wife's care, or, as has been said, she is presumed to have authority to purchase "necessaries" on the husband's credit as his agent. When the parties are maintaining conjugal relations, the necessity of the wife's purchase may be a material circumstance to prove her authority. As to "necessaries," in the sense of food, clothing, shelter, medical attendance, and such things as every one must have, there can never be a question of a wife's right to provide them if her husband does not. But when the "necessaries" are taken to mean not only articles of strict necessity, but things needed to equalize the wife in comfort to other women of her condition, an element of uncertainty is introduced. As to such things, the husband's responsibility does not depend on the question of necessity but on the wife's agency, which is a question for the jury. The necessity of the articles bought, the means of the parties, their condition in life, and the previous conduct of the husband with reference to the wife's purchases in his name, all enter into the inquiry, as circumstances bearing on the measure of authority she has received, or appears to have received, from him. Johnson v. Briscoe, 79 S. W. 498, 499, 500, 104 Mo. App. 493.

Rent of house

A claim for rent is not one for "necessaries," within the law permitting execution against the wages of the debtor. Beard v. Covill, 102 N. Y. Supp. 204, 205.

NECESSARIES (For Infants)

Articles used in business

Articles furnished to an infant for use in business, such as merchandising, farming, or conducting a shop of any kind, are not regarded as "necessaries." Wallace v. Leroy, 50 S. E. 243, 244, 57 W. Va. 263, 110 Am. St. Rep. 777.

Attorney's fees

Beneficial services rendered a minor by an attorney are classed as necessities, and payment therefor cannot be avoided on the ground of the client's minority. Sutton v. Heinze, 115 Pac. 560, 561, 84 Kan. 756, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 145, § 25, requiring guardians to sue for and receive debts due their wards, and to represent their wards in all actions unless some other person is appointed as guardian ad litem or next friend, and section 23 providing for guardians ad litem for minors in suits in which the latter may be interested, services of an attorney in settling the estate of a deceased person, in which a minor is interested, are not "necessaries" for which the minor is liable, in the absence of an employment of the attorney by the minor's guardian. McIsaac v. Adams, 76 N. E. 654, 190 Mass. 117, 112 Am. St. Rep. 321, 5 Ann. Cas. 729.

Buggy

A buggy is not a "necessary" to an infant not engaged in any business requiring the use of a buggy, nor attending school, so as to make it necessary for him to ride to and from school. Heffington v. Jackson & Norton, 96 S. W. 108, 109, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 560.

Clothing, education, food, lodging, and medicine

The question of what are "necessaries" for an infant depends largely upon his rank, social position, and like circumstances. Generally speaking, necessaries for an infant include support and maintenance, food, lodging, clothing, medical attendance, and education suitable to his station in life. McLean v. Jackson, 76 S. E. 792, 12 Ga. App. 51.

"What may be included in the term 'necessaries' is a question upon which the authorities are not entirely harmonious, but certainly the term is not so limited as to include only what is necessary to the actual support of life, and it is usually held to be sufficiently extensive to include articles fit to maintain a particular person in the state, station, and degree in life in which he is, so that things may be necessary for one person which would not be necessary for another in a different station in life (quoting and adopting definition in Clark on Contracts [2d Ed.] 156). 'Necessaries' are defined by Mr. Greenleaf to be such things as are useful and suitable to the party's state and condition in life, and not merely such as are requisite for bare existence." In order to determine the question whether or not the contract of an infant for a course in stenography was a contract for necessaries, in the sense in which the term "necessaries" is used to render the contract binding upon such infant, the evidence in the case should show the state, degree, and condition in life in which the infant is whose contract is under consideration; and it should also affirmatively appear that the parents or guardian of such infant failed or refused to furnish the alleged necessary. Mauldin v. Southern Short- hand & Business University, 55 S. E. 922, 126 Ga. 681, 8 Ann. Cas. 130.

Question of law or fact

Articles suitable and which would be beneficial to an infant are not ex vi termini necessaries, but the question is for the jury. Nielson v. International Textbook Co., 75 Atl. 330, 331, 106 Me. 104, 20 Ann. Cas. 591.

NECESSARIES (For Vessels)

The "necessaries" for which the master of a vessel may, in a proper case, bind his vessel means whatever is fit and proper for the service on which a vessel is engaged. The Pleroma, 175 Fed. 639, 640.

NECESSARILY

See Unnecessarily.

As used in an instruction that, if plaintiff was employed by defendant, plaintiff assumed all the dangers "necessarily" incident to such employment, but plaintiff did not assume any dangers arising from or caused by defendant's carelessness and negligence, the word "necessarily" means inevitably, not to be avoided even by the exercise of the highest degree of care, and such instruction is erroneous as imposing too high a degree of care. Reickert v. Hammond Packing Co., 118 S. W. 525, 527, 136 Mo. App. 565.

NECESSARILY ACQUIRED KNOWLEDGE

"By 'necessarily acquired knowledge' is meant that which arises from the obvious and open negligence which the servant must have seen and known in performing his work by the use of ordinary care." Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Stoy, 99 S. W. 135, 136, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 448 (citing Bonnet v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 33 S. W. 334, 89 Tex. 72; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Hannig, 43 S. W. 508, 91 Tex. 347; Peck v. Peck, 87 S. W. 248, 99 Tex. 10; El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Vizard, 88 S. W. 457, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 534).

NECESSARILY AFFECT JUDGMENT

Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, provides that a writ of review shall issue only where an inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction and there is no appeal or other adequate remedy. Section 956 provides that, upon an appeal from a judgment, the court may review the verdict or decision and any intermediate order or decision excepted to which involves the merits or "necessarily affects the judgment," held that, though no appeal lies from an order dismissing or refusing to dismiss an action, an erroneous order denying plaintiff's motion to dismiss the action affects the judgment thereafter rendered on the merits against the plaintiff, so that such order may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, and hence a writ of review will not lie. Huntington Park Imp. Co. v. Supe- or Court of Los Angeles County, 121 Pac. 1, 703, 17 Cal. App. 692.

NECESSARILY AND SOLELY

The requirement of an accident policy that death must have resulted "necessarily and solely" from accidental injury is satisfied, where the injury was the predominating and efficient cause of the death, and that other conditions were set in motion by the injury which may have contributed to the death immaterial. Continental Casualty Co. v. Polvin, 95 Pac. 565, 568, 77 Kan. 561.

NECESSARILY CONFINED TO HOUSE

A policy insuring against diseases provided for a weekly indemnity for the period assured "should be necessarily confined to the house." Held, that the clause, in the case of a person taking treatment for tuberculosis, meant confined to any part of the house, either inside or upon the porches attached to it on the outside. Dulany v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 66 Atl. 14, 617, 106 Md. 17.

A health indemnity policy provided for payment for the number of consecutive days after the first week that insured was necessarily and continuously confined within the house and regularly visited by a physician by reason of illness contracted after the policy had been in force for 30 days. Plaintiff was taken ill in a hotel while in Florida, where he was treated by a physician, and, after getting somewhat better, was transported in a Pullman car to his home, where it was determined that it was necessary for him to undergo an operation by surgeons in a nearby city. He was operated upon, attended by them daily by being taken to them in a carriage from his hotel near by and occasionally walking to them when able, and on being returned to his home was yet under the treatment of physicians and confined to his house, except occasionally when he sat on the porch, and was once driven to his place of business without taking any part in business matters. At another time he was taken to the physicians' office, and with these exceptions he was in the house and much of the time in bed. Held, that the policy did not require that plaintiff should be literally confined within the walls of his house all the time, and that he was necessarily and continuously confined within the house within the terms of the policy. Ramsey v. General Accident, Fire & Life Ins. Co., 142 S. W. 763, 160 Mo. App. 236.

NECESSARILY INCLUDED

To be "necessarily included" in the offense charged, the lesser offense must not only be part of the greater in fact, but it must be embraced within the legal definition of the greater as a part thereof. People v. Kerrick, 77 Pac. 711, 712, 144 Cal. 46.

Code Cr. Proc. § 444, provides that on an indictment for crime consisting of different degrees the jury may find defendant not guilty of the crime charged in the indictment, and guilty of any degree inferior thereto, or of an attempt to commit the crime. Section 445 provides that in all other cases defendant may be found guilty of any crime the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged in the indictment. Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 404, provides that a person who with intent to commit a crime therein breaks and enters a building, etc., is guilty of burglary in the third degree. Section 405 provides that a person who, under circumstances or in a manner not amounting to a burglary, enters a building or any part thereof, with intent to commit a felony, or a larceny or any malicious mischief, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "necessarily included" in said section 445 should not be so construed as to require that the lesser offense for which a conviction may be had must be so included in the statutory definition of the crime for which defendant is indicted, but it suffices that the acts constituting the lesser crime be charged in the indictment and duly proven, and hence one charged with burglary in the third degree may be convicted of an unlawful entry with intent to commit a larceny, where the indictment charges the commission of all the acts necessary to establish the latter crime. People v. Miller, 128 N. Y. S. 549, 550, 143 App. Div. 251.

NECESSARILY INCURRED

Code Civ. Proc. § 1033, allowing recovery of disbursements "necessarily" incurred in the action, does not make the premium paid a surety company for a replevin bond, procured pendente lite by a plaintiff ultimately successful, a proper item of costs; it not being a necessity to plaintiff's cause of action that he take into possession the property pending the action, but a privilege granted on filing the bond, and the filing of the bond by a surety company likewise being a privilege, and not a necessity. Williams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 103 Pac. 885, 156 Cal. 140, 134 Am. St. Rep. 117, 19 Ann. Cas. 1260.

NECESSARY

See Proper and Necessary.

The word "necessary" must be considered in the connection in which it is used, as it is a word susceptible of various meanings. It may import absolute physical necessity or inevitability, or it may import that which is only convenient, useful, appropriate, suitable, proper, or conducive to the end sought. Rexroth v. Holloway, 90 N. E. 87, 45 Ind. App. 36.

Though plaintiff in an employer's personal injury action alleged in his complaint that it was "necessary" for him to do his work in a particular way, it was not error to refuse to instruct that he was bound to prove that allegation, and to instruct, in lieu thereof, that it was not essential that plaintiff was absolutely required to do his work in that way if the method he adopted was customarily pursued and was a reasonably safe method; it not appearing that plaintiff intended to use the term "necessary" in its restricted sense as meaning indispensable. Killeen v. Barnes-King Development Co., 127 Pac. 89, 93, 46 Mont. 212; State v. Marron (N. M.) 128 Pac. 485, 491.

The word "necessary" has no fixed meaning or character peculiar to itself. It is flexible and relative. It is an adjective expressing degrees, and may express mere convenience or that which is indispensable or an absolute physical necessity. It may mean something which in the accomplishment of a given object cannot be dispensed with, or it may mean something reasonably useful and proper, and of greater or lesser benefit or convenience, and its force and meaning must be determined with relation to the particular object sought, and is a relative and comparative term, depending upon its application to the object sought, the character of and reasons for the convenience as public or private, and its adaptation to the public needs or public convenience, and especially is this true where it is based upon a condition or state of affairs in which the public are directly interested, and as to which a public duty is imposed upon a public instrumentality, as a railroad. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Baugh, 94 N. E. 571, 573, 175 Ind. 419.

The word "necessary" is a somewhat elastic term, and according to Webster's Dictionary may mean such as must be; impossible to be otherwise; not to be avoided; inevitable; or, according to Bouvier's Law Dict., it may mean that one thing is convenient, or useful, or essential to another. In an action against a railroad company to recover for the death of employes of a contractor, the court instructed the jury that if it was contemplated in the construction contract that the workmen should use the tracks in going to and from their work, or that such use was practically necessary, such use of the track did not constitute the employes trespassers or mere licensees, but they were there by the invitation of the company. It is plain from the context that in the instruction under consideration the word "necessary" was used in its primary sense as given in Webster's Dictionary, especially as the court in another instruction said: "If, on the contrary, the jury believe from the evidence that such use was neither contemplated nor necessary, as aforesaid, then the mere use of said tract, by said employes, even with the company's knowledge, whether for the sake of convenience or otherwise, constitutes them mere licensees, and as such the defendant owed them the same duty as to trespassers."

"To have been 'necessary,' the administration of chloroform must have 'such as would be; that cannot be otherwise;' or (2) 'such that it cannot be disregarded or omitted; indispensable, requisite, essential, needful, required.'" Mella v. Northern S. S. Co. 162 Fed. 499, 511 (quoting and adopting Cent. Dict.).

The word "necessary," as used in Rev. St. 1898, c. 48, providing for the taxation of railroads according to gross profits, and section 1038, subd. 14, declaring that all the track, right of way, depot grounds, and buildings, machine shops, rolling stock, and all other property necessarily used in operating any railroad, shall be exempt from taxation for any purpose, except special assessments for local improvements, means neither inevitable nor merely convenient or profitable, but refers to a stage of utility or materiality to the general business of a common carrier less than the first and greater than the latter of such expressions. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co. v. Douglas County, 99 N. W. 1030, 1031, 122 Wis. 273.

The word "necessary," in St. 1898, § 4075, giving the privilege of secrecy to all information, required by a physician from a patient in attending the latter professionally, necessary to enable prescription for such patient, will not receive any technical or unduly restricted meaning, and the testimony and opinion of a decedent's attending physician as to her mental capacity, based entirely on information derived from her statements or the physician's observation while treating her professionally, and for the purpose of such treatment, are properly excluded in a proceeding contesting the probate of decedent's will. In re Hunt's Will, 100 N. W. 874, 876, 122 Wis. 460 (citing In re Bruend's Will, 78 N. W. 169, 102 Wis. 45).

"When it comes to determining what is 'necessary' for the conduct of the business and transaction of the affairs for which a corporation has been chartered, it must, of course, be understood that what is meant is a due and profitable prosecution of its lawful purposes; that the 'necessity' contemplated is a relative one having reference to economy, convenience, efficiency, and success; and that some latitude is to be allowed to the discretion of the corporation itself in deciding what, from time to time, is or is not, in that sense, necessary." Folk v. State Capital Savings & Loan Ass'n, 63 Atl. 1013, 1016, 214 Pa. 529.

The term "necessary or in use in the proper operation," in Comp. Laws 1897, § 6277, providing that specified railroad taxes shall be in lieu of other taxes, except such real estate as is owned and can be conveyed by such corporations, and not actually occupied in the exercise of its franchises, and not necessary or in use in the proper operation" of its road, includes land owned by a railroad but in the possession of private individuals and used exclusively by them in their individual business for wood and coal yards and sheds and storage of grain, and such property is taxable as other real estate. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 100 N. W. 1012, 1013, 137 Mich. 37, 4 Ann. Cas. 1185.

As convenient

The declaration in an action for injuries to an employé in a coal mine while placing a loaded car on a side track alleged that it became "necessary" for the employé in the performance of his duty to place the car on the side track. The evidence showed that it was convenient, and tended to greatly facilitate the performance of the work to place the car on the side track, which was not more than 200 feet from where it was loaded, instead of taking it from one-fourth to one-half a mile distant. Held, that the proof sustained the allegation; the word "necessary" not meaning indispensable, unavoidable, or that which must be, but meaning reasonably convenient. Brooks v. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co., 84 N. E. 1023, 1031, 34 Ill. 372.

The word "necessary," as used in an agreement permitting the construction of a switch necessary for the accommodation of a railway company, does not mean absolutely requisite, but is equivalent to the words "reasonably convenient." Reeser v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 64 Atl. 376, 377, 215 Pa. 336.

The word "necessary," as used in an allegation, in a railroad company's complaint to restrain the enforcement of an order requiring the construction of a connection with another road, that all the land it was required to use for such connection was "necessary" to enable it to handle its traffic, meant nothing more than that the lands would be reasonably convenient. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Indiana, 86 N. E. 328, 334, 171 Ind. 189 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4705).

As expedient or appropriate

In determining what is reasonably necessary in making a public improvement, and what the authorities in charge are therefore empowered to do, the word "necessary" does not mean indispensable, but includes whatever is appropriate to render the improvement effective. Meriwether v. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee District, 165 Fed. 317, 319, 91 C. C. A. 285.

The word "necessary," as used in Rev. St. c. 34, § 28, making it the duty of the county board of each county to provide a suitable courthouse when "necessary" and the finances of the county will justify it, "is not to be interpreted as referring to such measures as are absolutely and indispensably necessary, but as including all appropriate means which are conducive or are adapted to the end to be accomplished, and which in the judgment of the board will most advantageously effect it." Coles County v. Goehring, 70 N. E. 610, 617, 200 Ill. 142.

As involving discretion

The words "when necessary," as used in a statute, making it the duty of the court, whether requested or not, to instruct the jury on all questions of law necessary for their information, which instruction shall include, whenever necessary, the subject of good character, do not mean that it is discretionary with the court as to including, in its instructions, good character, when there is evidence upon which to base the instruction. The province of the court is to guide the jury by proper instructions upon the facts in proof and not to consider the necessity of an instruction which practically, if that rule should be adopted, would permit the court to determine whether the facts in proof would have any effect upon the conclusion to be reached, and the court must instruct on good character whenever there is testimony as to good character in evidence. State v. Anallinger, 71 S. W. 1041, 1043, 171 Mo. 600.

As material or relevant

Code Civ. Proc. § 886, making it a prerequisite to the granting of an order for the appointment of a referee to take depositions of the officers of a corporation that the affidavit show that it is "necessary" for use on a motion, etc., requires that it shall appear first that the person sought to be examined can, and if compelled will, swear to the facts desired, and that the facts to which he can swear are relevant to the proceeding. Calvet-Rogniat v. Mercantile Trust Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 241, 243, 46 Misc. Rep. 20.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 870 et seq., and general rule of practice 82, requiring, for the examination of an adverse party before trial, a showing by affidavit that the testimony is material and necessary, the words "material" and "necessary" are not used synonymously, even if the word "necessary" does not mean indispensable to the making of an issue. Koplin v. Hoe, 108 N. Y. Supp. 602, 603, 123 App. Div. 827.

In Code Supp. 1907, § 3060a14, providing that, where a negotiable instrument is wanting in any "material particular," the person in possession has prima facie authority to complete it by filling up the blank therein, etc., the word "material" was not used as synonymous with "necessary," so as to restrict the right to filling in an omission essential to the completion of a negotiable instrument, but included all omitted matter usually found in such instruments, and where a negotiable note was delivered to the payee complete, except for the filling of a blank left for the place of payment, the payee had prima facie authority, before indorsing it to a bona fide holder for value before maturity, to fill the blank so as to make the note payable at a place other than that where the maker resided. Johnston v. Hoover, 117 N. W. 277, 278, 139 Iowa, 143.

As probable, usual, and ordinary

In prosecutions for homicide, in charging as to the presumption that persons intend the ordinary results of their acts, the words "necessary," "probable," "usual," and "ordinary" are substantially synonymous. Beauregard v. State, 131 N. W. 347, 351, 146 Wis. 280.

As reasonably necessary

The phrase "necessary ballast," as used in a contract for necessary ballast for a traction company's tracks, means the ballast reasonably necessary to complete the road for the purposes for which it was built, and the contract is not void for want of mutuality of obligation, where the necessary amount can be determined from the testimony of experts. Blue Grass Traction Co. v. Hedges & Adair, 104 S. W. 370, 372, 139 Ky. 358.

NECESSARY (In Eminent Domain)

As convenient

The word "necessary," as used in a statute authorizing the taking of land necessary for canals, does not mean absolute and indispensable, or that, without the use of the land in the given case, the work could not possibly go on. That would be the same as extreme necessity. The Legislature used the word in a more reasonable and popular sense. It is sufficient that the land used and the materials taken from it are needful and conducive to the object and more convenient in the application and less valuable, and the use of them less injurious to the owner than any that might readily be selected. There must, from the reason of the thing and the nature of the case, be great latitude of discretion in the selection of land and the materials. Under Canal Law (Laws 1894, p. 635, c. 338) § 70, providing that the superintendent of public works may take any lands, the appropriation of which, for the use of canals and the works connected therewith, shall in his judgment be necessary, section 71 (page 636) authorizing a permanent appropriation, and section 72 (page 636) authorizing a temporary appropriation, the determination as to necessity of appropriation, which need not be an absolute necessity, and as to whether a permanent appropriation of the lands be necessary or whether a permanent easement or a temporary use of the lands will be sufficient, is for such superintendent acting in good faith and with sound discretion. People v. Fisher, 83 N. E. 482, 485, 190 N. Y. 468 (quoting Jerome v. Ross [N. Y.] 7 Johns. Ch. 315, 339, 11 Am. Dec. 484).

As indispensable

The word "necessary," as used in the rule that a party having the right of condemning private property for public purpose can only condemn such amount thereof as is "necessary," is not meant to be used in the sense of indispensable. Necessity for public use is not such an imperative necessity that it would render the contract of a railroad, for instance, impossible without the amount of land in question. Piedmont Cotton Mills v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 62 S. E. 52, 53, 131 Ga. 129 (citing 15 Cyc. p. 633).

Evidence that the tracks proposed to be located over and across the streets sought to be appropriated are necessary in the use and operation of the switching yards of the railroad company does not authorize a trial court to find that such tracks are necessary within Rev. St. § 3283, authorizing the railroad company to appropriate so much of any street as may be necessary for the purpose of its road. Village of Rockport v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 97 N. E. 133, 134, 85 Ohio St. 73.

As reasonably necessary

The word "necessary," in acts involving the right of eminent domain, does not mean "absolutely necessary or indispensable," but "reasonably necessary," to secure the end in view. Sayre v. City of Orange (N. J.) 67 Atl. 933.

"Necessary accommodations," to maintain which a carrier can condemn lands, are such as are reasonably suitable and useful, and are not limited to those which are absolutely necessary. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Baugh, 94 N. E. 571, 573, 175 Ind. 419.

As used in Rev. Codes, § 7334, providing that, before property can be taken by eminent domain, it must appear that the use is authorized by law, and that the taking is necessary to such use, the term "necessary" does not import absolute necessity, but only such as may be characterized as reasonable, in view of the purpose to which the property sought to be condemned is to be devoted and the benefits to accrue therefrom to the public. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. McAdow, 12 Pac. 473, 474, 44 Mont. 547.

The word "necessary," as used in Balinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4335, providing that a corporation formed for the construction of a railroad shall have power to cross or join its railway with any other railway, before constructed, and that, if the two corporations cannot agree as to the amount of compensation, it may be ascertained in the manner provided by law for the taking of lands necessary for the construction of its road, does not mean an absolute "necessity," or that there shall be no other place for the location of the road, but means a reasonable necessity, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case. State ex rel. Ken Lumber Co. v. Superior Court of King County, 90 Pac. 663, 665, 46 Wash. 516.

The word "necessity" in Code 1904, § 038, as amended by Acts 1908, c. 349, authorizing any city or town to acquire land necessary for the acquisition and operation of waterworks and other public utilities, but no property shall be condemned, unless the necessity therefor shall be shown to exist, does not mean absolutely necessary, but reasonably necessary for the greatest benefit to the public with the least inconvenience and expense. Miller v. Town of Pulaski, 75 S. E. 87, 768, 114 Va. 85.

NECESSARY AND PROPER

The words "necessary and proper," as used in the provision of the federal Constitution declaring that Congress shall have power to pass all laws which are "necessary and proper" for carrying into execution the power to regulate commerce between the states, etc., do not imply the employment of only such means as are absolutely necessary to effect the object sought, but include as well all the means which in the judgment of Congress may be proper to carry out the power so granted. United States v. Hoke, 187 Fed. 92, 994.

The allegation in an information that the board of county commissioners did not make "necessary and proper" rules and regulations to prevent the outbreak and spread of contagious and infectious diseases is not a sufficient allegation that no rules or regulations in regard thereto had been made. Corcoran v. Pence, 85 Pac. 388, 891, 12 Idaho, 152.

NECESSARY BRIDGE

Code 1907, § 5765, provides that the court of county commissioners shall have general supervision of the public roads within the county, and may establish new roads and change or discontinue old ones, and shall have power to maintain public roads, bridges, and ferries, so as to render travel safe. Section 3024 confers on such court the same powers over bridges as it has over public roads. Section 3025 provides that whenever a bridge on the line between two counties is necessary, and the work is too great to be done by the overseers, the same must be built at the joint expense of such counties. Held, that the court of county commissioners of one county cannot without the concurrence of the court of another county make the latter county liable for the expense of erecting a bridge on the line of the two counties, for a bridge, becomes necessary within the meaning of this act only when it has been declared so by the concurring judgment of the commissioners' courts of both counties. Pickens County v. Greene County, 54 South. 998, 999, 171 Ala. 377.

NECESSARY CHANGES

The word "necessary," as used in a contract allowing the state to make necessary changes in the plans and specifications for a canal improvement, should not be construed as meaning indispensably requisite, and the construction of the clause in which it occurs is not to be limited to the particular contract in which the clause is found, as the contract is for only a portion of an entire improvement and must be construed in the light of the whole work, and it may be construed as meaning reasonably necessary, and the changes provided for as being those needful, requisite, or desirable, but not extravagant or wasteful of public funds, or made without the exercise of sound discretion, or arbitrary or such as substantially changed the nature of the cost of the work. What changes are necessary in the contract is a question for the courts. Ferguson Contracting Co. v. State, 128 N. Y. Supp. 808, 811, 70 Misc. Rep. 472.

A contract for the construction of a section of the state barge canal, including a lock, reserved to the state the right to make deductions from the work, or such changes in the plans as might be necessary, and that the contractor should make no claim for any loss of profits resulting from any change so made, and stated that the contractor had satisfied himself by investigation as to the conditions affecting the work, and that he would make no claim against the state because of estimates and representations by any agent of the state, and that the contract should not be invalidated by any changes so made. Held, that the provision for changes necessarily implied reasonable necessity therefor, and where, by reason of the underlying character of the earth, it became impossible to construct the lock on the section covered by the contract, and the state for that reason eliminated the construction thereof within the section, such change did not constitute a breach of the contract by the state nor entitle the contractor to recover profits lost by reason thereof. Kinser Const. Co. v. State, 97 N. E. 871, 874, 204 N. Y. 381.

NECESSARY CHARGES

All other Necessary charges, see All Other.

A vote of a town required the selectmen to insert in any franchise granted a street railway company certain conditions enumerated as to the rails to be laid, and the portion of the street to be paved, and required the company to employ resident laborers at uniform wages, and that there should be but one fare of five cents to any point in another town. A second vote provided for a committee to confer with the selectmen, or independently attend and represent the town on all questions of franchises, etc., to be granted to any street railway company, which committee was authorized to employ counsel, and a third vote instructed the treasurer to borrow $300 to carry the second vote into effect. Held, that the three votes must be construed as a whole, and as in several of the conditions, the town had no corporate interest, the scheme as a whole did not constitute a "necessary charge," within Rev. Laws, c. 25, § 15, authorizing town officers to appropriate money for necessary charges arising in the town. Flood v. Leahy, 66 N. E. 787, 183 Mass. 232.

NECESSARY CONCLUSION

The word "necessary," as used in an instruction that negligence must be based on and be a reasonable, logical, and necessary conclusion from the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence, meant beyond the possibility of a doubt, and therefore rendered the instruction erroneous. Dakan v. G. W. Chase & Son Mercantile Co., 94 S. W. 944, 951, 197 Mo. 238.

NECESSARY COST OF PRESERVING ESTATE OF BANKRUPT

The claim of a landlord for rent of premises occupied by the receiver and trustee of a bankrupt is entitled to rank as a preferred claim under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (1), 30 Stat. 563, as a necessary cost of preserving the estate. The trustee's commissions rank under subdivision 3 as a cost of administration. An allowance made to the attorney for the trustee for services ordinarily falls within the same subdivision, although, when such services were necessary to preserve the estate, such claim may be classified under subdivision 1. In re Grignard Lithographing Co., 158 Fed. 557, 558.

NECESSARY DILIGENCE

"Necessary diligence" is that degree of diligence which men, ordinarily engaged in and acquainted with a particular kind of business, would use in their own affairs. Sanderson v. Brown, 57 Me. 308, 312.

NECESSARY DISBURSEMENTS

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1866, providing that "a party to whom costs are awarded in an action is entitled to include in his bill of costs 'necessary disbursements' as follows: * * * The legal fees paid stenographers for per diem or for copies; * * * the reasonable expense in making transcript for the Supreme Court"—the fact that copies of the testimony were ordered during the trial and prior to a final decision, being paid for by the parties obtaining them, did not prevent a recovery of the amount paid for them within the limitation fixed by statute; such copies being necessary to secure a review of the case. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Montana Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 84 Pac. 706, 707, 33 Mont. 400.

If a witness can recover compensation from the litigant who procured his attendance, the sum so paid would undoubtedly be a "necessary cost or disbursement" in the action. Anderson v. Ferguson-Bach Sheep

Co., 86 Pac. 41, 42, 12 Idaho, 418, 10 Ann. Cas. 395.

NECESSARY EASEMENT

The term "necessary," used to describe the easement which may be established by an implied reservation where there has been a unity of possession and a subsequent sale of a portion of the land over which the easement is claimed, means there can be no other reasonable mode of enjoying the dominant tenement without the easement; there should be an element of absolute necessity. Cherry v. Brizzolara, 116 S. W. 683, 671, 89 Ark. 309, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508 (citing Croeland v. Rogers, 10 S. E. 874, 82 S. C. 130).

NECESSARY EXPENSES

Any and all necessary expenses, see Any. Other necessary expenses, see Other.

Of administrator

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2730, providing that an administrator may be allowed such necessary expenses actually defrayed by him as appears just and reasonable, a litigation can be treated as "necessary" only when it has been prosecuted, not only in good faith, but also in the exercise of a reasonable judgment. In re Huf's Estate, 115 N. Y. Supp. 984, 989, 62 Misc. Rep. 600 (citing Matter of Huntley, 35 N. Y. Supp. 113, 18 Misc. Rep. 375; Matter of Stanton, 84 N. Y. Supp. 46, 41 Misc. Rep. 278; St. John v. McKee [N. Y.] 2 Dem. Sur. 236; Estate of Peyster, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 334).

Of building and loan association

The acquisition of a place or home by a building and loan association for the conduct of its business is a "necessary expense," within Ky. St. 1903, § 863, making provision for the allowance of necessary and proper expenses from moneys accumulated. Home Savings Funds Co. Bldg. Ass'n v. Driver, 112 S. W. 864, 866, 129 Ky. 754.

Of city

Furnishing light and water for public purposes is a "necessary purpose," and the cost thereof is a "necessary expense" of municipalities furnishing the same. Wadsworth v. City of Concord, 45 S. E. 948, 950, 133 N. C. 587.

The construction of water and electric light plants is a necessary expense, within Const. art. 7, § 7, providing that no municipal corporation shall contract any debt, except for the "necessary expenses" thereof, unless by vote of the majority of the voters therein, and the indebtedness therefor need not be approved by popular vote; but under Code, §§ 3800, 3821, authorizing municipal corporations to levy taxes, and providing that their debts shall be paid only by taxation, they have power to contract and provide for payment for such improvements, in the absence of a charter provision forbidding them to do so. Fawcett v. Town of Mt. Airy, 45 S. E. 1029, 1060, 184 N. C. 125, 63 L. R. A. 870, 101 Am. St. Rep. 825.

The protection of a town from fire and disease by providing water and sewerage is a "necessary expense," within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 7, and Revisal 1905, § 2974, providing that no municipal corporation shall contract any debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit, nor shall any tax be levied or collected by any officers of the same except for the necessary expenses thereof, unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein, and, therefore a vote of the people is not required to render bonds issued to provide waterworks and a sewerage system valid, in the absence of statutory restrictions enacted under Const. art. 8, § 4, making it the duty of the Legislature to restrict the power of cities to tax, borrow money, contract debts, or loan their credit. Underwood v. Town of Asheboro, 68 S. E. 147, 152 N. C. 641.

The expense of maintaining the streets of a town in a proper manner is a "necessary expense," within Const. art. 7, § 7, forbidding a municipality to contract a debt, etc., except for a necessary expense, without a popular vote. Town of Hendersonville v. Jordan, 63 S. E. 167, 168, 150 N. C. 35.

In the absence of any legislative restriction on taxation and the contracting of debts, there is no objection to the issuance of bonds for the necessary expenses of a town, without a popular vote authorizing the same; and bonds issued by a town, for the purpose of extending and enlarging its water and sewerage system and making street improvements, fall within the class of "necessary expenses." Town of Murphy v. C. A. Webb & Co., 72 S. E. 460, 461, 156 N. C. 402.

Working the roads is a "necessary expense," within Const. art. 7, § 7, forbidding the levy of any tax by municipal corporations except for the necessary expenses thereof unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters. Crocker v. Moore, 53 S. E. 229, 230, 140 N. C. 429.

Of condemnation proceedings

The use of automobiles by commissioners of appraisal in condemnation proceedings is not a "necessary expense" or "necessary traveling expense," which under Laws 1905, c. 725, § 5, and chapter 724, § 32, is to be allowed them, there being railroads, on which many trains run, going very near all parts of the lands, and livery teams being accessible; the statute contemplating the ordinary method of travel. In re Bensei, 124 N. Y. Supp. 716, 723.

Of district attorney

County Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 11) § 240, subd. 1, provides that the expenses necessarily incurred by the district attorney in criminal actions or proceedings arising in his own county are a county charge. Held to invest a district attorney with much discretion in determining what expenses are necessary; the term "necessary expenses" being a flexible one, to be applied in the district attorney's discretion, depending on the circumstances of each particular case. People ex rel. Koetteritz v. Board of Sup'rs of Herkimer County, 132 N. Y. Supp. 808, 810, 148 App. Div. 392.

Of execution of will

On appeal from the decree of a probate court proving a will, the executor named in the will may, if acting in good faith, prosecute the probate in the appellate court at the expense of the estate, and the reasonable expenses incurred by him in so doing, are "necessary expenses incident to administration." Hazard v. Engs, 14 R. I. 5, 9.

Of guardian

A judgment against the ward for costs is not a liability of the guardian ad litem, and payment thereof by him is not, under ordinary circumstances, to be recognized as a necessary expenditure. In re McNaughton's Will, 118 N. W. 997, 1006, 138 Wis. 179.

Of schools

Graded school districts are public quasi corporations within the term "municipal corporation," as used in Const. art. 7, § 7, prohibiting any city, town, or other municipal corporation from contracting debts except for necessary expenses, unless by vote of the qualified voters; so that a graded school district could not issue bonds to erect a school building unless their issue was approved by a majority of the qualified voters; the erection of a school building not being a "necessary expense" within section 7. Ellis v. Trustees of Graded School of Oxford, 72 S. E. 2, 3, 156 N. C. 10.

Of sheriff

The sum allowed a sheriff for "necessary expenses," under the statute, covers reasonable help and expenses in transporting and delivering convicts and lunatics to the penitentiary and asylum. Lenhart v. Cambria County, 64 Atl. 876, 216 Pa. 25.

Of state

Under Const. art. 5, §§ 30, 31, requiring the general appropriation bill to embrace nothing but appropriations for the "ordinary" expenses of government, and prohibiting the appropriation of money except in specified cases, among which is included defraying the "necessary" expenses of government, unless by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature, extraordinary expenses may be "necessary," and may be authorized by a majority vote. State v. Moore, 88 S. W. 881, 883, 76 Ark. 197, 70 L. R. A. 671.

NECESSARY FOOD

Rev. St. 1909, § 4492, provides that if any father without lawful excuse neglects to provide such infant with "necessary" food, etc., he shall be punished. Defendant and his wife separated, the wife going to her father's house, taking with her one child of the marriage, and another was born at the house of the wife's father, and both the children were there supplied with all necessary food, etc. Defendant after the separation contributed nothing to their support. Held, that "necessary" food, clothing, and lodging, as used in the statute, is food, etc., which the infant actually needed at the time; and that as the infant children were receiving necessary food, etc., defendant was not guilty. State v. Thornton, 134 S. W. 519, 520, 232 Mo. 298, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 841.

NECESSARY FOR THE JOURNEY

See Money Necessary for the Journey.

NECESSARY FURNITURE

The words "necessary furniture," as used in Illinois Administration Act, § 74 (Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 3, par. 74), allowing the widow certain articles of property, such as bedsteads, bedding, and household and kitchen furniture, necessary for herself and family, must be construed with reference to the circumstances and mode of life of the parties, and mean the ordinary and appropriate furniture for such homesteads. Gillett v. Gillett, 69 N. E. 942, 945, 207 Ill. 136 (quoting Strawn v. Strawn, 53 Ill. 263).

NECESSARY IMPLICATION

Plain implication synonymous, see Plain Implication.

By "necessary implication" as used in the rule that it is possible for a testator to dispose of property by necessary implication from his will, taken as a whole, is meant so strong a probability of intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed. Coberly v. Earle, 54 S. E. 336, 339, 60 W. Va. 295 (citing Bartlett v. Patton, 10 S. E. 21, 33 W. Va. 71, 5 L. R. A. 523; Graham v. Graham, 23 W. Va. 36, 48 Am. Rep. 364; Beard v. Beard, 22 W. Va. 130; Irwin v. Zane, 15 W. Va. 646).

"Necessary implication" means, not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of an intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be imposed. Galloway v. Durham, 81 S. W. 659, 660, 118 Ky. 544, 111 Am. St. Rep. 300 (quoting 1 Ves. & B. 468).

"Necessary implication," in cases on the construction of instruments, means, not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed cannot be supposed. Tuttle v. Woolworth, 77 Atl. 684, 686, 74 N. J. Eq. 310.

The phrases "plain implication" and "necessary implication" have exactly the same meaning, when used in reference to the construction of deeds. By these is not meant a physical necessity, but a logical necessity. Where a clause is enlarged in its effect beyond the import of the words used on the theory of an intent established by an implication, it must be necessary to so enlarge in order to give effect to the plain and express provisions of other clauses, or the probability of intent must be so strong that a contrary thereof cannot be supposed. Griffin v. Fairmont Coal Co., 53 S. E. 24, 65, W. Va. 480, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115.

NECESSARY INDEBTEDNESS

The word "necessary," as used in the Constitution and laws of Montana, providing for the extension of the constitutional limit of municipal indebtedness when such increase is "necessary" to construct a sewerage system or procure a supply of water, ratification by a vote of the taxpayers, defines the condition of affairs which require the additional indebtedness. The condition must be such as to create the necessity. A municipality is not indebted in any amount at all, or if it has the necessary funds in its treasury, no additional indebtedness can be incurred; nor can it be said that any necessity has arisen demanding it. A city could only avail itself of the privilege of extending when the financial condition of the city required a resort to it, and could not arbitrarily declare a debt to be in the extended limit when the city was not indebted to the constitutional limit. Butler v. Andrus, 90 Pa. 785, 786, 35 Mont. 575.

NECESSARY INJURY

"The 'necessary injury' resulting to a parent from the negligent killing of his minor child, within the meaning of the damage act (Rev. St. 1899, § 2866), consists in the loss of services of the deceased during minority, the cost of nursing, surgical and medical attendance, and appropriate funeral expenses." Coleman v. Himmelberger-Harrison Land Lumber Co., 79 S. W. 981, 987, 105 Mo. App. 254 (quoting and adopting definition in Railroad v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 71 Mo. 16, 38 Am. Rep. 459).

The term "necessary injury," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2866, relating to damages in death actions, authorizing damages not exceeding $5,000, as may be deemed fair and just with reference to the "necessary injury" resulting to the surviving parties, etc., does not include more than pecuniary injury. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 81 S. W. 84, 85, 112 Mo. App. 623.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2865, authorizing an action for the death of a person caused by a wrongful act, etc., and section 2866, providing that the jury may give such damages as they may deem fair and just with reference to the necessary injuries resulting from such death, the measure of damages in an action by a parent for the wrongful death of his or son does not include loss of comfort society of the son; the words "pecuniary injury" meaning "pecuniary injury," confining damages to property loss. Shall v. Consolidated Jack Mines Co., 95 V. 972, 973, 119 Mo. App. 270.

NECESSARY LITIGATION

Litigation to determine doubtful questions as to the liability of transferees for the inheritance tax, and delays occasioned there- is "necessary litigation or other unavoidable delay," within Laws 1903, p. 69, c. 44, § providing that in such case the penalty of per cent. interest for nonpayment of the shall not be imposed. State v. Pabst, 121 W. 351, 361, 139 Wis. 561.

NECESSARY PARTIES

See Not a Necessary Party.

Persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience, are "necessary parties." Disbrow v. Creamery Packing Co., 115 N. W. 751, 752, 104 Minn. Perkins v. Hendryx, 149 Fed. 526, 528.

The words "necessary" and "indispensable" have sometimes been considered synonymous, and parties in equity have been classified as "necessary parties" and "proper parties." Railroad Commission of Georgia v. Farmer Hardware Co., 53 S. E. 193, 195, 124 Ga. 633.

A distinction has been recognized between necessary and indispensable parties, to ascertain whether some of those, who under established rules of equity pleading and practice were deemed necessary, may not, under such rules, be dispensed with as parties, that equitable relief in a given case may be wholly fail. Mathieson v. Craven, 164 Cal. 471, 475.

"Necessary parties," when the term is accurately used, are those without whom no decree at all can be effectively made determining the principal issues in the cause." Conard v. Pierce, 75 N. E. 318, 315, 182 N. H. 431, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 161 (quoting and adopting definition in Pomeroy's Remedies & Remedial Rights, § 329).

All persons who are interested in the subject-matter of a suit, and who will be affected by the results thereof, are "necessary parties." Sweeney v. Foster, 71 S. E. 8, 550, 112 Va. 499. Such as beneficiaries and trustees. Mitau v. Roddan, 84 Pac. 145, 7, 149 Cal. 1, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275; Benton, 115 Pac. 535, 536, 84 Kan. 691. Or the owners in proceedings to condemn land. Kansas City Interurban Ry. Co. v. Davis, 95 W. 881, 884, 197 Mo. 669, 114 Am. St. Rep. 40. Or the persons in whom the title vested on the death of the grantee in a deed sought to be set aside for fraud. Hagan v. McDermott, 115 N. W. 138, 140, 134 Wis. 490. But not an agent to whom a deed absolute in form was executed as security for a debt to the principal. In re Russell's Estate, 84 Pac. 155, 156, 148 Cal. 768.

"Necessary parties" are all those who have an interest in the subject and object of the action, and all persons against whom relief must be obtained to accomplish the object of the suit. McLean v. Farmers' High-line Canal & Reservoir Co., 98 Pac. 16, 19, 44 Colo. 184.

"Parties in equity are: (1) Formal parties. (2) Persons having an interest in the controversy, and who ought to be made parties in order that the court may act on that rule which requires it to decide on, and finally determine, the entire controversy, and do complete justice, by adjusting all the rights involved in it. These persons are commonly termed 'necessary parties'; but if their interests are separable from those of the parties before the court, so that the court can proceed to a decree, and do complete and final justice, without affecting other persons not before the court, the latter are not indispensable parties. (3) Persons who not only have an interest in the controversy but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience." "The relation of an indispensable party to the suit must be such that no decree can be entered in the case which will do justice between the parties actually before the court, without injuriously affecting the rights of such absent party." United States v. Allen, 179 Fed. 13, 21, 103 C. C. A. 1 (quoting and adopting definition in Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. [58 U. S.] 130, 139, 15 L. Ed. 158; Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 10, 215 U. S. 33, 49, 54 L. Ed. 80).

The use of the word "indispensable," as distinguished from "proper" or "necessary," parties is stated in the citation of a case holding that an indispensable party is one whose interest in the subject-matter of the controversy is such that a final decree cannot be rendered between the other parties to the suit without radically and injuriously affecting his interest, or without leaving the controversy in such a situation that its final determination may be inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Defendants who were joined in a suit in a state court to recover an interest in lands only as trustees holding the paramount title in trust, and whose title as such was not disputed, held not indispensable parties, whose citizenship and residence in the same state as complainant would prevent a removal of the cause by the other defendants, who were the real parties in interest. Lawrence v. Southern Pac. Co., 165 Fed. 241, 243 (citing Rogers v. Penobscot Min. Co., 154 Fed. 606, 83 C. C. A. 380).

Proper parties distinguished

Persons legitimately made parties to suits in equity may belong to three classes: First, proper parties; second, necessary parties; and, third, indispensable parties. The phrases "proper parties," "necessary parties," and "indispensable parties," in their technical sense, are distinguishable from one another; each denoting a separate and independent class. But in a broader sense the first is the most, and the last the least, comprehensive class, for "proper parties" may or may not be either necessary or indispensable, and "necessary parties" may or may not be indispensable. In the same broad sense an indispensable party is both a necessary and a proper party, and, though a necessary party may or may not be indispensable, he is nevertheless a proper party. The distinction between a necessary and an indispensable party, while doing violence to the English language in its usual acceptance, has been recognized for the purpose of determining the question whether some of those who, under the well-established rules of equity pleading and practice, were deemed necessary parties may not, under existing rules governing pleading and practice in equity, be dispensed with as parties in order that equitable relief in a given case may not wholly fail. Mathieson v. Craven, 164 Fed. 471, 475.

"Necessary parties" to a suit are parties who are so vitally interested in the subject-matter that a valid decree could not be rendered without their presence, whether there was an objection to a failure to make them parties or not; but where they are only "proper parties," the right to complain that they were not made parties may be waived by delay. Biggs v. Miller (Tex.) 147 S. W. 632, 637.

NECESSARY POLICE ORDINANCES

City and Village Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 291) art. 5, § 1, subds. 4, 9, 15, 20, 41, 66, 78, 96, empowering cities to regulate traffic on the streets and sidewalks, to license, tax, regulate, suppress, and prohibit peddlers, to make all regulations which may be necessary for the promotion of health, and to pass all ordinances and make all regulations necessary to carry into effect the powers granted to such cities, etc. Held, that by the word "necessary" indispensable was not intended, but power was conferred on the city to pass all ordinances which would be conducive to the promotion of the health, safety, and welfare of its inhabitants, which power may reasonably be held to include the power to pass an ordinance regulating in a reasonable manner the handling of oils in tank wagons, or other wagons or vehicles on the streets of the city. Spiegler v. City of Chicago, 74 N. E. 718-721, 216 Ill. 114.

NECESSARY POWERS

Of corporation

The power given to a railway company to do all acts incidental to the maintenance of the road includes the right to lay conduits in its right of way to conduct water to its buildings, whether the right of way traverses private property or a city street, being a reasonably "necessary" incident to the maintenance of the road. Mayor, et al. of City of Canton v. Canton Cotton Warehouse Co., 36 South. 266, 272, 84 Miss. 268, L. R. A. 561, 105 Am. St. Rep. 428.

NECESSARY PURPOSES

NECESSARY REPAIRS

A covenant by a tenant to make "necessary repairs" means only such repairs as the tenant finds necessary for his use of the premises, and does not require him to put the premises in better condition than they were at the beginning of the tenancy. Threlley v. Smith, 101 N. Y. Supp. 382, 385, 1 App. Div. 708 (citing and construing White v. Albany Ry. [N. Y.] 17 Hun, 98).

The words "necessary repairs," in an order enjoining county officers from doing road work or spending money under a certain resolution, and from expending money after an annual levy was exhausted, excepting from the making of necessary repairs to roads legally designated for expenditure of money in their repair, means emergency repairs such repairs on roads as were necessary to make travel safe, so that the duty of the county to travelers upon its highways might still be discharged. Webster v. Douglas Co., 77 N. W. 885, 888, 102 Wis. 181, 72 Am. St. Rep. 870.

A party wall agreement, providing that each party shall contribute equally if it shall become "necessary" to repair and rebuild, cannot be defeated by either party saying it is not necessary to repair or rebuild. Mapai v. Jackson, 118 N. Y. Supp. 513, 517, Misc. Rep. 407.

To vessel

Although the master of a ship in a foreign port has authority to procure all supplies and repairs "necessary" for the safety of the ship and the due performance of the voyage, on the credit of the owner, he must be restricted to such repairs and supplies as are in a just sense necessary for the ship under the actual circumstances of the voyage and a suit against the owner for their value cannot be maintained without proof that such repairs and supplies were necessary. Whitman v. Tisdale, 43 Me. 451, 452.

NECESSARY RISK

Laws 1902, p. 1750, c. 600, § 3, providing that an employé, by entering on or continuing in the employer's service, shall be presumed to have assented to the necessary risks of the employment, such risks including those inherent in the nature of the business, after the employer has exercised due care for the safety of employées, and complied with laws regulating such business, distinguishes between "necessary risk" and "obvious risk," the latter may be due to the master's failure to perform his duty. Hurley v. Olcott, 19 N. Y. Supp. 430, 435, 134 App. Div. 631.

The New York statute defining "necessary risks" as those "inherent in the nature of the business, which remain after the employer has exercised due care in providing for the safety of his employées," is but declaratory of the common law. Logerto v. Central Bldg. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 604, 607, 123 App. Div. 840 (citing Benzing v. Steinway, 1 N. E. 449, 101 N. Y. 547). See, also, O'Neill v. Karr, 97 N. Y. Supp. 148, 150, 110 App. Div. 71; Wynkoop v. Ludlow Valve Mfg. Co., 98 N. Y. Supp. 1076, 1077, 112 App. Div. 729.

The risk of injury to a servant who, at the suggestion of his foreman, thrust his hand into a wooden box, in which a screw with sharp blades was rapidly revolving, in order to loosen cement in a chute leading into the box, knowing the cement was liable to fall in such quantities as to drive his arm against the screw, was not a "necessary risk" of the business, which are the only risks that an employé is conclusively presumed not to assume, as provided by Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1750, c. 600, § 3). Vaughn v. Glens Falls Portland Cement Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 979, 980, 105 App. Div. 136.

NECESSARY ROAD

The term "necessary plantation roads," as used in Code 1906, § 4058, requiring their construction and maintenance by railroads, means roads necessary to the plantation to which they are annexed, and, while an occasional and isolated use of the crossing by others would not relieve the company from liability to maintain it, the company is not bound to maintain the crossing in good condition and make repairs necessitated by constant heavy driving, done by others than the owner with his consent. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McGowan, 46 South. 55, 56, 92 Miss. 603; Bentley v. Cavallier, 46 South. 55, 56, 92 Miss. 603.

Where a proposed railroad, only 12 miles in length, to be built as an independent road, would serve only a small locality, would probably not earn running expenses, and would be financially disabled from the start, a finding by the board of railroad commissioners that it was "necessary and convenient" was erroneous. People ex rel. Potter v. Board of Railroad Com'rs of State of New York, 108 N. Y. Supp. 288, 289, 124 App. Div. 47.

NECESSARY SELF-DEFENSE

See Self-Defense.

NECESSARY SUPPLIES

Food supplies ordered by the master of a fishing schooner, who was also managing owner, for the use of the crew on a fishing voyage, under the usual lay contracts, in the absence of any showing of bad faith on his part, will be presumed to be supplies "necessary" for the employment of the vessel, within the meaning of the Maine statute giving a lien for such supplies, and the court will not undertake to determine that certain of the articles were "luxuries" for which the vessel is not liable. The term "luxuries" is an entirely relative term. The Mary F. Chisholm, 133 Fed. 598, 600.

Ky. St. § 4426a, subd. 9, provides that the board of education shall lay before the fiscal court the educational needs of the county, and the county shall levy a tax for school purposes, not exceeding 20 cents on each $100, and the proceeds of the tax shall be turned over to the county superintendent, and the county board shall expend the money for certain designated purposes, including the purchase of "necessary supplies" and the "extension of the school term" in the subdistricts; and that upon petition of 10 voters of a subdistrict the board of education shall submit to a vote the question whether an additional tax shall be levied, and when levied it shall be the duty of the sheriff to collect it and hold it, subject to the order of the county board, for the benefit of the subdistrict voting such tax. Held, that such additional tax was to be expended, under the order of the board of education, for the sole use of the subdistrict levying it, and for the purposes enumerated in the statute, and the board had no power to use an additional tax levy for the purpose of transporting children to and from school; such purpose not being mentioned in the statute and not coming within the terms "necessary supplies" or "extension of school term." Shanklin v. Boyd, 142 S. W. 1041, 1042, 1043, 146 Ky. 460, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710.

NECESSARY TO HOLD MINING CLAIM

Comp. Laws, § 231, provides that certificates of location and of labor and improvements necessary to hold claims need not be sworn to, but must truly state the required facts. Held, that the words "necessary to hold claims" did not refer to "certificates of location," but only to the words "labor and improvements," which referred to the provisions of the federal statutes requiring the expenditure of $100 annually in labor or improvements in order to hold a mining claim prior to the issuance of patent. Ford v. Campbell, 92 Pac. 206, 209, 29 Nev. 578.

NECESSARY TRAVELING EXPENSE

The use of automobiles by commissioners of appraisal in condemnation proceedings is not a "necessary expense" or "necessary traveling expense," which under Laws 1905, c. 725, § 5, and chapter 724, § 32, is to be allowed them, there being railroads, on which many trains run, going very near all parts of the lands, and livery teams being accessible; the statute contemplating the ordinary method of travel. In re Bensel, 124 N. Y. Supp. 716, 723.

NECESSARY VEGETABLES

The term "necessary," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1390, providing that all "necessary vegetables" actually provided for family use should be exempt from levy, is a word of qualification, and qualifies the extent of the exemption. McCarthy v. McCabe, 115 N. Y. Supp. 829, 832, 181 App. Div. 396.

NECESSARY WAY

See Way of Necessity.

NECESSITIES

See Actual Necessities; As Their Necessities Might Require.

Plumbers' supplies are "necessities" of life and a staple commodity, and a combination controlling such supplies to the extent that it either does, or tends to, prevent or restrain competition may be prohibited. Knight & Jillson Co. v. Miller, 87 N. E. 823, 832, 172 Ind. 27, 18 Ann. Cas. 1146.

NECESSITY

See Inevitable Necessity; Law of Necessity; Paramount Necessity; Public Necessity; Way of Necessity.

The word "necessity," in common use, connotes different degrees of necessity. It sometimes means indispensable; at others, needful, requisite, incidental, or conducive. In its primary sense, it signifies a thing or act without which some other thing or act cannot be done or exist. The word "necessary," as applied to the determination of an agent's power to do an incidental act, should be held to mean an act or measure requisite to enable him to discharge his main duty—something more urgently required than is signified by the words, "appropriate," "suitable," or "expedient." St. Louis Gunning Advertising Co. v. Wanamaker & Brown, 90 S. W. 737, 743, 115 Mo. App. 270.

For class legislation

By "necessity," which permits legislation on a subject to be divided into classes, is meant practical, and not absolute, necessity. Pepin Tp. v. Sage, 129 Fed. 657, 665, 64 C. C. A. 169 (citing State ex rel. Board of Court- house and City Hall Com'rs of City of Minneapolis and County of Hennepin v. Cooley, N. W. 153, 56 Minn. 551).

For conduct of business and transaction of affairs by corporation

"When it comes to determining what 'necessary' for the conduct of the business and transaction of the affairs for which a corporation has been chartered, it must, of course, be understood that what is merited is a due and profitable prosecution of lawful purposes; that the 'necessity' contemplated is a relative one, having reference to economy, convenience, efficiency, and success; and that some latitude is to be allowed to the discretion of the corporation itself in deciding what, from time to time, is or is not, in that sense, 'necessary.'" Folk State Capital Savings & Loan Ass'n, 63 A. 1013, 1016, 214 Pa. 529.

For easement to enjoy property

Under the rule that all continuous and apparent quasi easements as are reasonable and necessary to the enjoyment of the property granted pass to the grantee, mere inconvenience will not constitute such necessity. The test of such necessity is held to be the question whether the grantee might at a reasonable expense procure for himself an enjoyment of a similar easement. Two persons owning in common land on which were two houses, partitioned it by deed, giving each one of the houses, the boundary line being an alley between the houses and providing that the alley should be kept open for the use and benefit of the owners of the lots, forever, but making no mention of the drain or stairway on the dividing line. Held that, not being reasonably necessary that either grantee should have the part of the drain or stairway on the land of the other maintained, no easement was to be implied. Gannor v. Bauer, 39 South. 749-751, 144 Ala. 448, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1082 (citing Tied. Re. Prop. § 609; Walker v. Clifford, 29 South. 588, 128 Ala. 74, 86 Am. St. Rep. 74; Washington Easem. [4th Ed.] 107).

For forwarding shipment by any carrier

Plaintiff shipped two cars of phosphatic rock from a point on defendant's railroad to a point in another state, the rate stated in the bills of lading being that fixed by joint schedule filed by defendant and other connecting carriers. The bills of lading, however, contained a provision that the carrier should have the right "in case of necessity" to forward by any carrier, and that in such case plaintiff should bear the additional risk and cost. Defendant delivered the cars at Cincinnati to a railroad which was not a party to the through schedule, and plaintiff was required to pay a substantially higher rate. Held, that the fact that there was congestion of traffic at Cincinnati because of which the connecting carrier refused to receive the cars and their retention by defendant would have brought about a congestion and blockade of its own line did not create a "necessity" within the meaning of the bills of lading which authorized defendant to subject plaintiff to the increased cost, being due to insufficiency of equipment on its own part and that of its connecting carrier. Dickerson v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 37 Fed. 874, 879.

For private way

Cases of necessity, contemplated in that provision of the Constitution which declares that 'in cases of necessity' private ways may be granted upon just compensation first being paid, do not arise except where the way sought to be laid out is absolutely indispensable to the applicant as a means of reaching his property. If there is in existence a way suitable for all the purposes for which the property is to be used, a "case of necessity" does not arise, even though such way may be less convenient than the one proposed. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co. v. Fleming, 45 S. E. 664, 666, 118 Ga. 699 (quoting and adopting Chattanooga, R. & S. R. Co. v. Philpot, 37 S. E. 181, 112 Ga. 153).

For suit by administrator

Where an administrator, being an attorney, finds it necessary to institute a suit on behalf of the estate and associates another attorney with him, and he and the other attorney jointly render professional services to the estate, the administrator is entitled to a credit on the settlement of the administration in the probate court to the extent of the reasonable value of such services. Tyson, J., in a dissenting opinion, said: "The 'necessity' spoken of in our cases, authorizing an allowance for compensation upon proof of it for professional services rendered by an administrator in a case like this, is one arising out of the duty of the administrator to enforce the collection of the claim by suit, and not out of any contract he may make with counsel to render him assistance in its collection." John v. Sharpe, 41 South. 635, 38, 148 Ala. 665.

NECESSITY (Sunday Labor)

The term "necessity," as employed in the Sunday statutes, is not an absolute, unavoidable, physical necessity, but rather an economic and moral necessity, and the necessity may grow out of or be incident to a particular trade or calling. Lane v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 637, 638 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4729).

By the word "necessity," as it relates to the exemption of work of necessity on a day when work is forbidden, we are not to understand a physical and absolute necessity, but a moral fitness or propriety of the work done, under the circumstances of each particular case. State v. Lewis, 72 Pac. 121, 123, 31 Wash. 515.

The word "necessity" in Rev. St. 1899, § 2240, prohibiting labor on Sunday, excepting works of necessity, should be construed reasonably and neither too literally nor too liberally. State v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 143 S. W. 785, 787, 239 Mo. 196.

The word "necessity," in Kirby's Dig. § 2030, making it unlawful to work on Sunday except to perform "customary household duties of daily necessity, comfort, or charity," does not mean an absolute unavoidable physical necessity, but rather an economic and moral necessity. Barefield v. State, 107 S. W. 393, 85 Ark. 134.

The sending of a telegram by a husband to his wife, notifying her that he would not return as expected, is a "work of necessity," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2364, prohibiting any work on Sunday, save that of charity and necessity. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Fulling, 96 N. E. 967, 49 Ind. App. 172.

The fact that in gathering a crop it is somewhat less expensive and more convenient to work seven days in the week, rather than six, does not make such gathering a "work of necessity," within St. 1904, p. 477, c. 460, § 2, making it a criminal offense to do any manner of labor, business, or work, except works of necessity and charity, on Sunday. Commonwealth v. White, 77 N. E. 636, 637, 190 Mass. 578, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 320.

Gen. St. 1902, § 1369, prohibits any secular business or labor except works of necessity or mercy, or engaging in any sport between midnight of Saturday and midnight of Sunday. Section 1370 makes it a penal offense to be present at any concert of music, dancing, or other public diversion on Sunday. Held, that the act of selling tickets on Sunday to a moving picture show to be held in an opera house on that day, and thereby promoting attendance at a place of public diversion, where it was unlawful for any one to be present, was not a "work of necessity or mercy." State v. Ryan, 69 Atl. 536, 537, 80 Conn. 582.

Pen. Code 1895, § 420, has made it legal to operate passenger and mail trains on Sunday. Therefore any work necessary to the running of such trains is a "work of necessity," within Pen. Code 1895, § 422, prohibiting the pursuing of business or work on the Lord's day. Kellam v. State, 67 S. E. 683, 7 Ga. App. 575.

Pen. Code 1895, § 420, making it a misdemeanor to run freight or excursion trains on Sunday, but allowing regular trains carrying mail or passengers to run on that day, is an expression of public policy as to the legality of running the excepted trains on Sunday, and a legislative construction that the running of mail and passenger trains is within the exception to section 422, making it a misdemeanor to pursue one's business on Sunday, if not a "work of necessity or charity." Southern Ry. Co. v. Wallis, 86 S. E. 370, 372, 133 Ga. 553, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401, 18 Ann. Cas. 67.

Courts, in construing the term "necessity" as used in statutes relating to the statute prohibiting work on the Sabbath excepting work of necessity, is given a liberal rather than a literal interpretation, and it is "not an absolute, unavoidable, physical necessity that is meant, but rather an economic and moral necessity." Where a belt in a mill employing 200 persons broke on a Saturday through an unexpected defect, and could not be repaired that day because gasoline could not be procured in a town of 3,000 inhabitants, the repairing of it Sunday morning, without which the mill would have to be shut down Monday, as, after the belt was glued, it had to dry 18 hours before it could be used, was a work of necessity, within the statute. State v. Collett, 79 S. W. 791, 792, 72 Ark. 167, 64 L. R. A. 204 (quoting Shipley v. State, 32 S. W. 489, 33 S. W. 107, 61 Ark. 216, 219).

St. 1898, § 4595, provided that any person who shall keep open his shop, warehouse, or workhouse on Sunday, or shall do any manner of labor, business, or work, except only works of necessity and charity, should be punished. Held, that the exception of "works of necessity and charity" related to "labor, business, or work" only, and hence it was no defense to a prosecution for keeping open a shop, warehouse, or workhouse that it was done for necessity or charity. Stark v. Backus, 123 N. W. 98, 101, 140 Wis. 557.

Repairing belt in mill

Courts, in construing the term "necessity" as used in the statutes which forbid work and labor on the Sabbath, have generally given it a liberal, rather than a literal, interpretation. It is not an absolute, unavoidable, physical necessity that is meant, but rather an economic and moral necessity. Where a belt in a mill employing 200 persons broke on a Saturday, through an unexpected defect, and could not be repaired that day, because gasoline could not be procured in a town of 3,000 inhabitants, the repairing of it Sunday morning, without which the mill would have to be shut down Monday, as, after the belt was glued, it had to dry 18 hours before it could be used, was a "work of necessity," within the exception of the law against Sabbath breaking. State v. Collett, 79 S. W. 791, 792, 72 Ark. 169, 64 L. R. A. 204 (citing Shipley v. State, 32 S. W. 489, 33 S. W. 107, 61 Ark. 219).

Keeping barber shop open and shaving

It is not a "work of necessity," within the exception to the Sunday law, for a barber to ply his usual avocation on that day by cutting the hair of and shaving a customer. State v. Kuehner (Mo.) 110 S. W. 605.

The shaving of a customer by a barber is worldly labor in the course of his ordinary calling, and is not a "work of necessity," permitted by Pen. Code 1895, § 422, to be done on the Lord's day. McCain v. State, 58 S. 550, 551, 2 Ga. App. 389 (citing State v. Erick, 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555).

Sale of ice or fresh meat

"Necessity" is an elastic term. It does not mean that which is indispensable, but it means something more than that which is merely needful or desirable. No doubt, something which is merely needful or desirable to the residents of a town might be a "necessity" to the residents of a great city. It is also, that which was a luxury a century ago may have become now a "necessity." There is always, however, a tendency to claim as necessities luxuries as necessities falling within the exception of the Sunday law as to work of necessity. The obvious intention of a statute making it an offense for a person to work on Sunday, unless such work is a work of "necessity," is to set apart one day for rest from ordinary labor, so as to give opportunity to all for leisure and the contemplation of higher things of life. This purpose would be defeated if the courts should hold every work a "necessity," the interruption of which would break into the ordinary habits of the community, or produce a degree of public inconvenience or discomfort. The continuance on Sunday of ordinary sales or deliveries of ice or fresh meat is not a work of "necessity" in a town. State v. James, 62 S. 214, 81 S. C. 197, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 617, 1 Am. St. Rep. 902, 16 Ann. Cas. 277.

NECKTIES

The word "neckties," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, § 1, Schedule I, par. 314 (30 Stat. 178, c. 11), relating to articles of wearing apparel of every description, including neckties not specially provided for, is not a term of commercial designation. Goldenberg Bros. Co. v. United States, 124 Fed. 1003, 1004.

NECKWEAR

The word "neckwear," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, § 1, Schedule I, par. 314 (30 Stat. 178, c. 11), relating to articles of wearing apparel of every description, including neckwear not specially provided for, is not a term of commercial designation. Goldenberg Bros. & Co. v. United States, 124 Fed. 1003, 1004.

NEED

See If Needed.

The word "need," as used in a clause providing that, "if at my decease any of said heirs are not 21 years of age, I wish that the money going to them be invested in the trustees in good city bonds or in some good savings bank, and if said heirs are in need of the money it shall remain invested until they become of age," imports something different from mere desire for the payment of a specified sum at a specified time. The main purpose is to preserve the legacies until the beneficiaries attain majority, and advancement may be made from time to time as a sound judgment and wise discretion may dictate, in the light of all attendant circumstances. Smith v. Haynes, 89 N. E. 158, 160, 102 Mass. 531.

The words, "the ties you may need" during 1899, or "ties as needed," as used in a contract for the furnishing of ties for the construction of a railroad, though plain in their ordinary meaning, are susceptible of various meanings, accordingly as the context in which they appear may throw light upon them or the subject-matter with respect to which they are used. Laclede Const. Co. v. C. J. Moss Tie Co., 84 S. W. 76, 90, 185 Mo. 25.

The word "needed," as used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4156, declaring that the right given to condemn the use of water shall not extend further than to the riparian rights of persons to the natural flow of water through lands on or abutting on streams or lakes as the same exists at common law, and is not intended to allow the taking of water from any person that is used by the person himself for irrigation or that is needed for that purpose, meant water necessary to irrigate the land of a littoral or riparian owner which he has under irrigation at the time his rights are sought to be condemned, or which he intends to and will place under irrigation within a reasonable time, and that, as to such water, no condemnation could be had. State ex rel. Liberty Lake Irr. Co. v. Superior Court for Spokane County, 91 Pac. 968, 969, 47 Wash. 310.

A request for bids for coal for a city asked for coal to be delivered "as needed" and also as fast as "required." The bids offered to deliver at such times and in such quantities as the city might direct, and the body of the contract stated in one place that the coal should be delivered promptly "as ordered," and in another, that on failure to make delivery "as ordered," the city might either forfeit the contract or buy coal at the contractor's expense in the open market. Held, that the words "order" and "direct" should be construed as synonymous with the word "require," and that the word "require" was used as the substantial equivalent of "need." McLean County Coal Co. v. City of Bloomington, 84 N. E. 624, 627, 234 Ill. 90.

Defendants, who were operators of a brewery, contracted for 6,000 bushels of malt to be delivered "as needed," and at the end of the contract plaintiff granted defendants an option to receive 2,000 bushels more at the same rate "in case same is needed." Held, that the word "needed" was not used in the sense of "desired" or "wanted," disconnected with the conduct of defendants' business, but meant required for defendants' brewery business, and hence, the market having advanced, defendants could not exercise the option that they might sell the malt at a profit. Hettiger v. Davenport Malt & Grain Co., 139 S. W. 1072, 1073, 145 Ky. 39.

NEEDED REPAIRS

If one county resolves upon such a course, and proceeds to replace three wooden spans with steel at three times the cost necessary to rebuild them as originally constructed, there being seven or eight times that many spans in the entire bridge, it cannot recover from the other county as for "needed repairs." Platte County v. Butler County, 135 N. W. 439, 440, 91 Neb. 132.

NEEDFUL BUILDINGS

Post offices are among the other "needful buildings," for the erection of which, as well as of "forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards," it is assumed that land will be bought, and for which land has been bought, by the government all over the United States, pursuant to Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 17. Battle v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 422, 423, 209 U. S. 36, 52 L. Ed. 670.

NEGATIVE

NEGATIVE EASEMENT

A "negative easement" is a right in the owner of the dominant tenement to restrict the owner of the servient tenement in respect of the tenement in the exercise of general and natural rights of property, such as rights of light and air. Bernero v. McFarland Real Estate Co., 114 S. W. 531, 534, 134 Mo. App. 290.

The right of an owner of a dominant tenement to restrict the owner of the servient tenement in the exercise of general and natural rights of property, is sometimes called a "negative easement." Such an easement was created where the owner of a building conveyed three inches of land to an adjoining owner, with the right to use his party wall, in consideration of a covenant by the grantee, stipulated to run with the land, that she would not during a specified time use the building to be erected for a saloon. Uihlein v. Matthews, 64 N. E. 792, 793, 172 N. Y. 154.

NEGATIVE KNOWLEDGE

Testimony that a fact did not occur, founded on a witness' failure to hear or see a fact which he could supposedly have heard or seen if it had occurred, is based on what is called "negative knowledge." Cotton v. Willmar & Sioux Falls Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 835, 837, 99 Minn. 368, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 648, 116 Am. St. Rep. 422, 9 Ann. Cas. 935 (citing 1 Wigmore, Ev. § 664; 2 Elliott, Ev. § 969; 6 Thomp. Neg. § 7865; 5 Current Law, 1369).

"Negative knowledge" is the testimony that a fact did not occur, founded on the witness' failure to hear and see a fact which he would supposedly have heard or seen if it had occurred, and the only requirement is that the witness should have been so situated that, in the ordinary course of events, he would have heard or seen the fact, had it occurred. Hoffard v. Illinois Cent. Ry. Co., 110 N. W. 446, 449, 138 Iowa, 543, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 797 (quoting and adopting definition in Wigmore, Ev. § 664).

NEGATIVE PREGNANT

A "negative pregnant" is such form of a negative expression as may carry with it an affirmative. Lemke v. Lemke, 111 N. W. 138, 139, 78 Neb. 525.

A "negative pregnant" in a pleading is a negative implying also an affirmative, and is such a form of negative expression as may carry with it an affirmative. Nobach v. Scott, 119 Pac. 295, 297, 20 Idaho, 558.

A "negative pregnant" is a denial pregnant with an admission of a substantial fact which is apparently controverted, or one which, though in form of a traverse, really admits the important fact contained in the allegation. Electrical Accessories Co. v. Mittenthal, 87 N. E. 684, 685, 194 N. Y. 473.

Under the system of code pleading, a general denial is as broad as the allegations denied, and a general denial of an allegation of value or damages cannot be treated as a "negative pregnant," and an admission of any value or damages less than the sum alleged. McGrath v. Valentine, 167 Fed. 473, 476, 93 C. C. A. 109.

A denial that the defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the precise sum charged in the petition, and that the use and occupation of the premises is worth the sum mentioned in the petition, is a "negative pregnant," and is no denial at all; and where such a pleading is filed by way of an answer the allegations of the petition are treated as admitted. Jackson v. Green, 74 Pac. 502, 503, 13 Okl. 814.

Where a plaintiff alleges that he is and has been for the last 10 years the owner and in possession of land, an answer denying that plaintiff is and has been for the last 10 years the owner and in possession of the land, is in form a "negative pregnant." J. I. Porter Lumber Co. v. Hill, 77 S. W. 905, 906, 72 Ark. 62.

A finding by a jury that a sheriff had not neglected and failed to present and have approved his official bond as sheriff, and take the oath of office, within the time prescribed by law, amounts to a "negative pregnant," and should be treated as an admission of the implied fact. State ex rel. Russell v. Box, 78 S. W. 982, 984, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 435.

Under Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1538) § 150, providing that the answer must contain a denial of each material allegation of the complaint controverted, a complaint alleging that in the month of April, 1904, plaintiff did work, etc., for defendants, is not sufficiently denied by an answer denying that in the month of April, 1904, plaintiff did work, etc., for defendants, but failing to deny that he did so at any other time; it constituting a "negative pregnant." Levin & Meyer Contracting Co. v. Jackson, 92 N. Y. Supp. 307, 308, 46 Misc. Rep. 445.

NEGATIVE TESTIMONY

Where one of two witnesses, having equal facilities for seeing or hearing a thing, swears that it occurred, and the other that it did not, the testimony of neither is negative, within the rule that the existence of a fact testified to by a positive witness is rather to be believed than that of one who swears that it did not occur. Civ. Code 1895, § 5165. Hunter v. State, 62 S. E. 466, 4 Ga. App. 761.

Where the witnesses of the state testified that defendant drew his pistol and had it in his hand during the difficulty, and defendant's witnesses testified that they did not see him have any pistol, it was error to charge that if some witnesses were present and had opportunity to know the facts, and there was another class of witnesses who testified that they did not know, the law requires the jury to believe the positive testimony, and that "positive testimony" is that of witnesses who know the facts, and "negative testimony" is that where the witness "doesn't know the facts, or didn't see it." Daniel v. State, 62 S. E. 539, 4 Ga. App. 843.

On an issue whether a gong of defendant's street car, by which plaintiff was struck, was sounded as the car approached a crossing, a police officer on the car, who saw the motorman set the brake when the accident occurred, testified that no gong was sounded, because as soon as the accident happened he remembered the fact, and knew that the question of warning by bell or gong was an important one; that he supposed the injury was caused by car going in the opposite direction, because no gong was sounded on the one he was on; that his hearing was good, and his attention was not diverted. Plaintiff testified that he was listening for a car coming in the opposite direction from the one from which he had alighted just prior to his injury, because he knew one might be coming at any time, and that he heard no gong or bell. Held, that such testimony was not negative in the sense that it was overborne, as a matter of law, by testimony of defendant's employes that the gong was sounded. Testimony is negative only when it tends to prove the nonexistence of a fact by reason of a mere failure of a witness to observe and remember its existence, but, if the evidence asserts such an observation as to the existence of the fact and the recollection of what that observation was, denial of its existence based thereon is affirmative evidence that the fact does not exist. Coel v. Green Bay Traction Co., 133 N. W. 23, 25, 147 Wis. 229.

In a prosecution for homicide, the court properly defined and distinguished positive and negative testimony: "The testimony of those witnesses who swore positively that they saw the pistol in the hand of the prisoner, and that he fired the fatal shot while the pistol was in his hand, is what the law terms 'positive testimony.' They swear positively that they saw the existence of a fact. The testimony of the witnesses who said that they saw the prisoner and the deceased in a struggle at the time when the last shot was fired, but they did not see the pistol, and did not know in whose hand the pistol was, is what the law terms 'negative testimony.' The reason the law gives greater weight to positive testimony than to negative testimony is because the witnesses who swore to positive testimony swore to what is a fact, an existing fact, or else they deliberately swore to a falsehood, while those who swore to negative testimony may be telling the truth, and yet the fact may exist which they did not see. If one witness swears that he saw Sheriff Markham in the courthouse in Durham on a certain date, the sheriff was there, or else the witness told a lie. Another witness might say: 'I was in the courthouse on that occasion, but I did not see Sheriff Markham in there.' That witness may be telling the truth and may be conscientious, and yet it may be a fact, notwithstanding, that Sheriff Markham was in the courthouse. And for that reason the law says you must attach greater weight to positive testimony than to negative testimony." State v. Murray, 51 S. E. 775, 139 N. C. 540.

NEGLECT

See Culpable Neglect; Excusable Neglect; Failed and Neglected; Inadvertence, Surprise, and Excusable Neglect; Omissions, Neglects, and Defaults; Ordinary Neglect; Wanton Neglect; Willful Neglect.

Gross neglect, see Gross Negligence.

"The word 'neglect,' as sometimes used, imports an absence of care or attention in the doing or omission of a given act, or it may be used in the sense of an omission or failure to perform some act. To neglect is not always synonymous with to omit. Whether the use of the term is intended to express carelessness or lack of attention required by the circumstances, or to express merely a failure to do a given thing, depends upon the connection in which the term is used and on the meaning intended to be expressed. * * * In Webster's Dictionary the verb 'neglect' is defined as meaning 'not to attend to with due care or attention; to forbear one's duty in regard to; to suffer to pass unimproved, unheeded, undone.' In the Standard Dictionary the word is defined as meaning 'to fail to perform through carelessness'; and in the Century Dictionary: '(1) To treat carelessly or heedlessly; forbear to attend to or treat with respect; be remiss in attention or duty toward. (2) To overlook or omit; disregard. (3) To omit to do or perform; let slip; leave undone; fail through heedlessness to do or in doing (something).' As defined in the penal statutes of several of the states, the word 'neglect' is said to import 'a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in action in his own concerns.'" H. Hackfeld & Co. v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 456, 458, 197 U. S. 442, 49 L. Ed. 826 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4740).

The absence of "ordinary diligence," defined by Civ. Code 1895, § 2898, as that care which every prudent man takes of his own property of a similar nature, is termed "neglect." Objection has sometimes been made to the qualifying words "slight," "ordinary," and "gross," as applicable to negligence, and the courts of some jurisdictions have preferred to use the term "ordinary neglect," or "negligence," as applicable to a want of due care under the circumstances, maintaining that at last "ordinary diligence" in the light of the circumstances is all that is required. Southern Railway Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812.

The word "neglect," as used in Rev. St. Idaho, § 4100, providing that, when a person's death is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs and personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, stands in the same category with wrongful act, and implies some omission of duty. The death of a free passenger on a railway train, not due to the omission on the part of the railway company of any duty owing to deceased, cannot be considered as caused by the neglect of the railroad company, and hence the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased cannot maintain an action under the section. Northern P. R. Co. v.

"Care" and "carefulness" are antonyms for "neglect" and "negligence." Negligence is a conclusion of law, and so also are statements in the findings by the jury that work was done carefully. Avery v. Nordyke & Marmon Co., 70 N. E. 888, 893, 34 Ind. App. 541.

The "neglect" mentioned in the statute defining the liability of a city for injuries to pedestrians on defective sidewalks means the want of ordinary care, and the city must, to escape liability, use ordinary care to keep defects out of its streets. Berry v. City of Greenville, 65 S. E. 1030, 1031, 84 S. C. 122, 19 Ann. Cas. 978.

An instruction in an action against a town for injuries to a traveler, caused by a defective bridge, that it was the duty of the town to keep the bridge reasonably safe for the amount and kind of travel that might be expected to pass over it, and that, if the town was chargeable with any fault in respect of such duty, the liability attached, and the town was liable for accidents caused by reason of defects existing through the fault of the town, "and this without notice to it or regardless of the question of 'neglect,'" etc., was not erroneous because of the use of the quoted phrase; the word "neglect" therein being used in its ordinary legal sense, and it being apparent that the part of the charge quoted was intended to mean that the liability of the town was not to be made to depend on the question whether or not it had exercised ordinary care in the maintenance of the bridge. Graves v. Town of Waitsfield, 69 Atl. 137, 140, 81 Vt. 84.

Since in this state the liability of a municipal corporation for injuries caused by defects in street and sidewalks is absolute, an instruction that this was a latent defect, for which the defendant was responsible by reason of its neglect in not repairing the sidewalk, the word "neglect" could not have been used in its ordinary legal sense, and must be deemed to have been used to signify mere failure to repair, although it did not appear that the corporation had had any knowledge of the defect. Campbell v. City of Elkins, 52 S. E. 220, 222, 58 W. Va. 308, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159.

R. L. 1905, § 3696, in limiting the time within which the priorities of right of administration thereby conferred must be asserted, uses the word "neglect" synonymously with "fail." In re Lis' Estate (Minn.) 139 N. W. 300, 307.

The words "fail," "refuse," and "neglect," as used in St. 1903, §§ 795, 797, providing that any railroad company which "shall fail, refuse and neglect to comply with the provisions" of the act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, are used interchangeably, and mean something more than an unavoidable and accidental violation of the statute. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, S. W. 568, 568, 119 Ky. 519.

The purpose of Rem. & Bal. Code, § 863, providing that if any railroad company shall "refuse or neglect" to obey any order of the Railroad Commission, the company shall be subject to a penalty, is to impose a penalty for neglect or refusal, and where a company fails to perform an act required by an order within the time specified therein, it is immaterial whether the failure resulted from willful refusal or neglect, or from mere mismanagement; the word "neglect" means omission, or forbearance to do a thing that can be done, or that is required to be done, and it does not generally imply carelessness or imprudence, but simply an omission to perform. State ex rel. Railroad Commission of Washington v. Great Northern Ry. Co. 123 Pac. 8, 12, 68 Wash. 257.

As used in Gen. St. 1902, § 2499, authorizing an action by a wife against her husband for support when he neglects to support her, "neglect" means more than a mere omission or failure without fault. It imports omission accompanied by some kind of culpability in the conduct of the husband; the design of the statute being to compel the unwilling and not to constrain those who have acted fairly and reasonably in the performance of the duty. Lathrop v. Lathrop, 63 Atl. 511, 515, 78 Conn. 650.

"Neglect," within Rev. St. 1899, § 222, declaring that every able-bodied married man who shall "neglect" or "refuse" to support his family shall be deemed a "vagrant," arises from an inattentive state of mind, want of care for, and utter disregard of the obligation resting on the husband to support his family, whereas the word "refuse" imports a willful disavowal or disregard of such obligation; and hence where a physician of good habits endeavored to establish a practice, maintained an office where he waited for patients, and attended to such calls as he had, contributing his entire income from his practice to the support of his wife and himself, he was not a "vagrant," so as to entitle his wife to a divorce under section 292, declaring that when the husband shall be guilty of such conduct as to constitute him a "vagrant," within the meaning of the law respecting "vagrants," the wife may be divorced, though he did not succeed in earning enough to support both of them, and she was compelled to contribute to their support from her separate means. Gallimore v. Gallimore, 91 S. W. 406, 410, 115 Mo. App. 173.

Of official duty

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 790, providing that no county shall be sued unless the claim on which such suit is founded shall have first been presented to the county commissioners' court for allowance, and such court shall have neglected or refused to audit the same, "neglect" is sufficiently shown by evidence that the court has been given a reasonable time within which to act, and has failed to allow the claim. Williams v. Bowie County (Tex.) 123 S. W. 199, 200.

Under a statute providing that, if any commissioner or other county officer shall "neglect" to perform any act which it is his duty to perform, he shall forfeit his office and be removed, the duty must be personal, and the act must be one which the officer has the legal capacity and authority to perform, or he cannot be guilty of neglect. The purpose of the statute is to prevent persons from continuing to hold office whose inattention to duty endangers the public welfare, and the "neglect" contemplated must disclose either willfulness or indifference to duty so persistent or in affairs of such importance that the safety of public interests is threatened. Irregularities in the publication of statements of sums of money allowed and in advertisements for bids for bridge repair work, failure to publish estimates of expenditures upon which tax levies were made, and failure to advertise for bids for the repair of a bridge do not constitute legal causes for the removal of a county commissioner from office on the ground of neglect of duty. State v. Kennedy, 108 Pac. 837, 841, 82 Kan. 373.

A sheriff, who, notwithstanding public feeling against a negro charged with murder, failed to order the jail doors closed, or to take any precaution to prevent a lynching, being under Code 1907, §§ 132, 7191, the legal custodian of the jail chargeable with the duty of excluding intruders, was subject to impeachment under Const. 1901, § 138, providing that, when any prisoner is taken from jail and killed owing to the neglect of the sheriff, the sheriff may be impeached, for "neglect," as applied to a public officer, means a failure on his part to perform some of the duties of his office. State ex rel. Garber v. Cazalas, 50 South. 296, 162 Ala. 210, 19 Ann. Cas. 886 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4740).

Omission distinguished

Code Civ. Proc. § 1511, provides that, "if an executor * * * neglects for two months after his appointment to give notice to creditors as prescribed, * * * the court must revoke his letters" and appoint another executor. Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 2, provides that the term "neglect" imports a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily uses in acting in his own concerns. Held that, construing section 1511 in view of the policy of the law to effectuate testator's expressed will as far as possible, it gave the court a wide discretion in removing executors thereunder, and an executor should not be removed if the failure to publish the notice within the required time is satisfactorily excused; the terms "to neglect" and "to omit" not being synonymous, since to neglect is to omit by carelessness or design, while an omission may be involuntary and inevitable. In re Chadbourne's Estate, 114 Pac. 1012, 1013, 15 Cal. App. 363.

NEGLECT AND REFUSAL

See, also, Refuse—Refusal.

Plaintiff contracted to procure consignment to defendant of some of the product of silk mills, and defendant agreed to pay commissions on the sale of the product consigned. The contract was to continue for a year, and thereafter from year to year until terminated by notice, and it provided that on "neglect and refusal" of plaintiff to perform his agreement, and at the expiration of the agreement, defendant might sell the goods on hand. The company owning the mills refused to consign any product to defendant so long as plaintiff was retained as sales agent, and defendant was so notified. Held, that plaintiff, on being unable to continue to consign goods, was guilty of a breach of contract, the inability to continue not being "neglect and refusal," and defendant was justified in cancelling the contract for the future, and might enter into a contract with the company for the consignment of future goods. Napier v. Spielmann, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1009, 1016, 127 App. Div. 711.

NEGLECT TO TAKE OATH

Under Const. art. 1, § 7, which provides that an officer who refuses or neglects to take the oath or affirmation of office shall be deemed to have refused the office, and a new selection shall be made, and under Code 1912, art. 20, § 1, which requires constables to so qualify within 30 days after their appointment, neglect of a constable to take the oath, etc., within that time, deprives him of the office; the term "neglect to take the oath," as used in the Constitution, meaning neglect of an appointee to take the oath within the time required by law. Little v. Schul, 84 Atl. 649, 653, 118 Md. 454.

NEGLECTED CHILD

The words "neglected children," as used in Act No. 82, p. 134, of 1906, entitled "An act defining the power of the district courts of this state and the city courts, with reference to the care, treatment, and control of dependent, neglected, incorrigible, and delinquent children, under the age of 16 years," mean any children who are destitute, homeless, abandoned, or depending on the public for support, or who have not proper care or guardianship. In re Parker, 43 South. 54, 55, 118 La. 471.

Laws 1907, c. 41, § 1 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1642), defines a "dependent child" as one under the age stated who is dependent upon the public for support, or who is destitute, homeless, or abandoned, and section 2, Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1643, defines a "neglected child" as one who has not proper parental care or guardianship. Held, that children were neither "dependent" nor "neglected," so as to charge their father for contributing to their neglect under the statute, where their mother, after unsuccessfully attempting to procure a divorce, had taken them to her sister's and refused to bring them to the home which the father offered to furnish on condition that she return to it. Wheeler v. State (Ind.) 100 N. E. 25, 26.

Negligence or otherwise, see Otherwise.

"Negligence" has been variously defined by the courts of this state; but, after all, the different definitions mean substantially one and the same thing. It has been termed the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances. It has been termed the failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another, that degree of care, prudence, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. Lenkewicz v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 74 Atl. 11, 13, 7 Pennewill, 64.

"Negligence" is a failure to observe, for the protection of another, that degree of care which the circumstances justly demand. Warren v. Harlan & Hollingsworth Corp. (Del.) 84 Atl. 215, 219; Gatta v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 83 Atl. 788, 2 Boyce, 551; Temple v. Gilbert, 85 Atl. 380, 382, 86 Conn. 335; Florida R. Co. v. Sturkey, 48 South. 34, 35, 56 Fla. 196.

"Negligence" is thus defined by the text-writers: 'Negligence,' in its civil relations, is such an inadvertent imperfection by a responsible human agent in the discharge of a legal duty as immediately produces, in an ordinary and natural sequence, a damage to another. The inadvertency or want of due consideration of duty is the injuria, on which, when naturally followed by the damnum, the suit is based. 'Negligence,' constituting a cause of civil action, is such an omission by a responsible person to use that degree of care, diligence, and skill which it was his legal duty to use for the protection of another person from injury, as in a natural and continuous sequence, causes unintended damage to the latter. 1 Thompson on Negligence (1st Ed.) p. 135, approved the following definition of 'negligence' by Willes, J., in Vaughan v. Railroad, 5 Hurl. & N. Exch. 678, in which it is said: 'Now, the definition of negligence is the absence of care according to circumstances.' In McMahon v. Pacific Express Co., 34 S. W. 478, 132 Mo. 641, our Supreme Court said: 'Negligence consists in doing something which a reasonably prudent man would not have done under the circumstances, or in failing to do something which a reasonably prudent man, under the circumstances, would have done.' Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 84 S. W. 133, 136, 108 Mo. App. 665 (citing Wharton, Neg. § 3; 1 Shearman & Redfield, Neg. § 3).

The component parts of "negligence" are (1) a legal duty to exercise due care; (2) a breach of that duty; (3) the absence of distinct intention to produce the precise damage, if any, which actually follows. Richmond v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 113 S. W. 708, 710, 133 Mo. App. 463 (citing Bindbeutel v. Street Ry. Co., 43 Mo. App. 463).

The law of "negligence," which means the law of actionable negligence, as applied in most jurisdictions, embraces the doctrine of the assumption of risks on the part of an employé and the doctrine of contributory negligence; also the doctrine announced in Billings v. Breinig, 7 N. W. 722, 45 Mich. 65, 71, that although disobedience of a statute may be conclusive evidence of negligence, a condition of recovery by one urging disobedience is that such disobedience must be the proximate cause of the injury complained of, or that it contributed to the injury. Synesewski v. Schmidt, 116 N. W. 1107, 1108, 153 Mich. 438.

"Negligence" in its essence is always concrete. Hence its proof must always rest upon testimony that tends to the establishment of concrete acts either of omission or of commission. There is no such thing as negligence at large. Wyckoff v. Birch, 71 Atl. 243, 246, 76 N. J. Law, 646 (citing Blen v. Unger, 46 Atl. 593, 64 N. J. Law, 596).

"If a property owner exercises his right to connect his premises by a private drain with a public sewer, he not knowing of a defect therein which, by reason of such connection, will produce injury to such property, and such injury is caused before he knows of the danger, or, knowing thereof, has reasonable time to guard against the same, his instrumentality in the matter will not preclude him from recovering compensation for the injury, if it is referable to 'negligence' on the part of the city. 'Negligence' in such an action may consist of a failure to adopt a plan for the sewer, failure to exercise ordi-ary care in constructing the same, or failure to act with reasonable promptness to remedy defects in the plan, causing direct injuries to abutting property after notice of such defects." Hart v. City of Neillsville, 104 N. W. 699, 703, 125 Wis. 546, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 952, 4 Ann. Cas. 1085.

In an action for injuries to a passenger alleged to have been occasioned by a lurch of the train as he alighted, an instruction to find for plaintiff, if, inter alia, defendant "negligently or carelessly gave the [train] a sudden or violent jerk," defines "negligence" in language not susceptible of criticism by defendant, not requesting a definition of such term. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Deason (Ky.) 98 S. W. 1115, 1118.

"Negligence" of a railroad company, whereby fire is communicated to adjacent premises, may consist in not being provided with the best appliances to prevent the unnecessary escape of fire from its locomotives, in not keeping such appliances in repair, in not keeping its right of way free from combustible material, in operating its locomotives so as to unnecessarily scatter fire, and in not arresting the spread of fire after it has been set by its engines from its negligence on its right of way. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fort, 80 S. W. 429, 434, 112 Tenn. 432 (citing Thomp. Neg.).

As act of commission or omission

"Negligence" may consist in the omission to act as well as in acting. Lewy Art Co. v. Agricola, 53 South. 145, 150, 169 Ala. 60.

"Negligence" implies some act of omission or commission wrongful in itself. Whitworth v. Shreveport Belt R. Co., 36 South. 414, 420, 112 La. 363, 65 L. R. A. 129 (citing Eckert v. Long Island R. Co., 43 N. Y. 503, 3 Am. Rep. 721).

"Negligence" is doing what the ordinary man is not accustomed to do, not what he is in the habit of doing. Goodale v. York, 69 Atl. 525, 526, 74 N. H. 454.

"Negligence" may be active or passive, consisting in heedlessly doing an improper thing or in heedlessly refraining from doing the proper thing. Basler v. Sacramento Gas. & Electric Co., 111 Pac. 530, 532, 158 Cal. 514, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 642.

"Negligence" is the failure to do something which in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have been done, or the doing of something which in the exercise of ordinary care ought not to have been done. Lewis v. Koller & Smith, Inc., 186 Fed. 403, 405.

"Negligence" consists in the doing or omitting to do some act which a person in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence would not do or omit to do, and which act, if done or omitted by him, contributed and helped to produce the injury complained of.

Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mills, 77 N. E. 606-612, 37 Ind. App. 598.

"Negligence" is the failure to do what a prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such person under the circumstances would not have done. The duty is indicated and measured by the exigencies of the occasion. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 906, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536 (quoting and adopting the definition in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Milam [Tex.] 58 S. W. 736).

Even an expert may be guilty of "negligence" in doing what, at the time, his judgment approves. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Aitken, 25 Sup. Ct. 317, 318, 196 U. S. 589, 49 L. Ed. 610.

"Negligence" by a physician consists in doing something which he should not have done in the treatment of a case, or in omitting to do something he should have done. McGraw v. Kerr, 128 Pac. 870, 873, 23 Colo. App. 163.

Same—Cautious and prudent person

"Negligence," in actions for personal injury, means the doing of some act which a cautious and prudent man would not do, or neglecting to do some act which a cautious and prudent man would not neglect. Prudent men often depart from common usage in the performance of duty without overstepping the boundaries of reasonable care. If they did not, there would be little, if any, progress made in any craft. The law does not call a man careless because he refuses to place himself in bondage to custom. The advancement of art, science, trade, or handicraft requires that human effort be given a wider field of operation than that already occupied. Therefore a given act is denominated as negligent, not that it is violative of custom, but because it is a thing no prudent man would do. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 90 S. W. 753, 754, 115 Mo. App. 36.

Same—Ordinarily careful person

"Negligence" is a failure to do that which a man of ordinary care would do under the same or similar circumstances, or doing that which such a man would not do under such circumstances. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Parrott, 92 S. W. 795, 100 Tex. 9; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Beard, 93 S. W. 532, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 427.

Same—Person of highest degree of care and prudence

Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger, the court, in one paragraph of its charge, defined negligence as follows: "The word or term 'negligence,' as applied to a person or corporation engaged in the transportation of passengers for hire, is the failure to do anything which a person of the highest degree of care and prudence engaged in the same kind of employment would have done or performed under similar circumstances, or the doing of anything which a person possessed with the highest degree of care and prudence engaged in the same kind of business would have refrained from doing under like or similar circumstances"—and a paragraph immediately preceding stated that "the term 'a very high degree of care' means that degree of care which a person possessed of the highest degree of care and prudence engaged in the same kind of employment, would exercise under like circumstances," it was held that, when the definition of the term "very high degree of care" was read into the paragraph defining negligence, it was in perfect harmony with the principle announced by the Supreme Court in International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Welch, 24 S. W. 390, 86 Tex. 204, 40 Am. St. Rep. 329. Central Texas & N. W. R. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 73 S. W. 537, 538.

Same—Person of ordinary care, prudence, and caution

In an instruction that "negligence" is a failure to do that which a person of ordinary care, prudence, and caution would do under like or similar circumstances, or the doing of that which a person of like prudence and caution would not do under the same circumstances, the words "like prudence" meant "ordinary prudence." St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Dixon (Tex.) 91 S. W. 626, 627.

Same—Person of ordinary prudence and care

An instruction that "negligence" consists in doing something which a person of ordinary prudence and care would not have done or would not have omitted to do under the same or similar circumstances is not as clear as it might be, but is not reversible error. Dubois v. Luthmer, 126 N. W. 147, 149, 147 Iowa, 315.

Same—Person of ordinary prudence and intelligence

While the ordinary test of "negligence" is whether a man of ordinary intelligence and prudence would have done or omitted the act in question under the circumstances, yet there are circumstances under which the law does not permit an act or its omission to be excused because some persons would have been willing to undertake it, for the hazard may be apparent and serious. Stone v. Union Pac. R. Co., 100 Pac. 362, 35 Utah, 305.

It is not strictly accurate, but not reversible error, to instruct that "negligence" is the failure to do that which a person of ordinary prudence and intelligence would do under the same or similar circumstances, or the doing of that which a person of ordinary prudence and intelligence would not do under the same or similar circumstances. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Gray, 85 S. W. 838, 839, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 249 (citing Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 85 S. W. 44, 37 Tex.

Civ. App. 595; Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Kothmann, 84 S. W. 1089, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 548).

Same—Ordinarily prudent person

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise such care as ordinarily prudent persons exercise under like or similar circumstances. Kentucky & I. Bridge & R. Co. v. Shrader (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1094, 1095.

"Negligence" is the failure to do what an ordinarily prudent person would do under the circumstances. Brown v. Oregon-Washington R. & Nav. Co., 128 Pac. 38, 41, 63 Or. 396.

"Negligence" is the doing of something which one of ordinary prudence would not have done, or the omission of something which such person would have done, under like circumstances. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander, 132 S. W. 119, 120, 103 Tex. 594.

One is not guilty of "negligence" by reason of an act or omission which would not lead an ordinarily prudent man, giving the matter thought, to apprehend danger from it. Cowett v. American Woolen Co., 60 Atl. 703, 704, 100 Me. 65.

What a person of ordinary prudence would or would not do under the particular circumstances is the true test of "negligence." Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Everett (Tex.) 86 S. W. 17, 18.

The test of "negligence" is what a person of ordinary prudence would or would not do, and not what ordinarily intelligent and prudent men would or would not do. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Brown, 85 S. W. 44, 45, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 595.

An instruction that "negligence" is the doing of an act which an ordinarily prudent person would not do in like circumstances is erroneous, as ignoring the fact that negligence may consist in careless omission to act. Stokes v. Sac City, 130 N. W. 786, 788, 151 Iowa, 10.

Assuming the existence of a duty, and where only ordinary care is required, "negligence" is properly defined as the failure to do what an ordinarily prudent person would have done under the circumstances, or the doing of that which an ordinarily prudent person would not have done. Alabama City, G. & A. Ry. Co. v. Bullard, 47 South. 578, 580, 157 Ala. 618 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4744).

"Negligence" is not a mere technical term, but means "a lack of due diligence or care; omission of duty; heedlessness," and in a legal sense is no more nor less than the failure to observe, for the protection of the interest of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury; and as applied to an act done in discharge of a duty imposed is a failure to do what an ordinarily prudent person would have done under the circumstances of the situation, or a doing of that which such a person, under the existing conditions would not have done. St. Louis & F. R. Co. v. Franklin (Tex.) 123 S. W. 150, 1155.

An instruction that "negligence," as used in the charge, meant the failure to do that which a person of ordinary prudence would have done under the same or similar circumstances, or the doing of that which such a person would not have done under such circumstances, that "ordinary care," as used in the charge, meant that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Properly stated the jury's duty to look to the facts and circumstances as they existed at the time the act was done as the standard by which the act was to be judged. Houston & C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 127 S. W. 539, 541, 103 Tex. 320.

The question of "negligence" is determinable by what an ordinarily prudent person would have done under the same or similar circumstances. If a person of ordinary prudence, standing in the place of an engineer, would have kept a lookout and discovered the burning bridge in time to have stopped the engine or slackened its speed, so that plainiff, the fireman, could have alighted with reasonable safety before reaching the bridge, the failure of the engineer to do what such person of ordinary prudence would have done would constitute negligence. Missouri, K. & F. R. Co. v. Keaveney (Tex.) 80 S. W. 387, 489.

Same—Reasonable and prudent man

"Negligence" is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person, under the existing circumstances would not have done. Geiselman v. Schmidt, 68 Atl. 202, 204, 106 Md. 580; Birsch v. Citizens' Electric Co., 93 Pac. 940, 942, 36 Mont. 574. (quoting and adopting definition in Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506); Flaherty v. Butte Electric Ry. Co., 107 Pac. 416, 418, 40 Mont. 454, 135 Am. St. Rep. 630; Thompson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 189 Fed. 723, 725, 111 C. O. A. 261; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 906, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536 (quoting and adopting the definition in McDonald v. International & G. N. R. Co., 22 S. W. 339, 86 Tex. 1, 40 Am. St. Rep. 803); Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Catlett, 177 Fed. 71, 76, 100 C. C. A. 489.

"Negligence" is a failure to do what reasonable and prudent persons would ordinarily have done under the circumstances and situations. L. W. Pomerene Co. v. White, 97 N. W. 232, 233, 70 Neb. 171 (citing Omaha St. Ry. Co. v. Craig, 58 N. W. 209, 39 Neb. 693).

"Negligence" is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person, under the existing circumstances, would not have done. The duty is dictated and measured by the exigencies of the occasion. Klenk v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 76 Pac. 214, 215, 27 Utah, 428; Mason & Perkins v. Post, 54 S. E. 311, 313, 105 Va. 494, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1038 (quoting and adopting the definition in Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506).

"Negligence" has been defined to be the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. It must be determined in all cases by reference to the situation and knowledge of the parties and all the attendant circumstances. What would be extreme care under one condition of knowledge and one state of circumstances would be gross negligence with different knowledge and in changed circumstances. The law is reasonable in its judgments in this respect. It does not charge culpable negligence upon any one who takes the usual precautions against accident which careful and prudent men are accustomed to take under similar circumstances." Globe Navigation Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 81 Pac. 826, 829, 39 Wash. 299 (quoting the Nitroglycerine Case, 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. Ed. 206).

"Negligence" is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person under the existing circumstances would not have done. The essence of the fault may lie in omission or commission. Washington Mills v. Cox, 157 Fed. 634, 640, 85 C. C. A. 154 (quoting and adopting definition in Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506).

"Negligence" is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. Rodgers v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 88 Pac. 885, 75 Kan. 222, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 12 Ann. Cas. 441.

"Negligence" is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. It must be determined in all cases by reference to the situation and knowledge of the parties and all the attendant circumstances." Southern Ry. Co. v. Chatman, 53 S. E. 692, 697, 124 Ga. 1028, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 4 Ann. Cas. 675.

"Negligence" is "the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or the doing of something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do." A reasonable man can be guided only by a reasonable estimate of probabilities. Southern R. Co. v. Carter, 51 South. 147-149, 164 Ala. 103.

"Negligence" is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do, provided, of course, that the party whose conduct is in question is already in a situation that brings him under the duty of taking care." Northern P. R. Co. v. Adams, 24 Sup. Ct. 408, 409, 192 U. S. 440, 48 L. Ed. 513 (quoting Pollock, Torts, p. 355).

Bouv. Law Dict. defines "negligence" to be the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by the considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or the doing of something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. Proof that a telegraph company failed to transmit a message correctly is prima facie evidence of its negligence. Strong v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 Pac. 910, 916, 18 Idaho, 389, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 55 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3168).

An instruction defining "negligence" as the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those ordinary considerations which ordinarily regulate human affairs, would do, or the doing of something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do, is substantially correct. Perryman v. Chicago City R. Co., 89 N. E. 980, 983, 242 Ill. 269.

Same—Reasonable, careful, and prudent man

"Negligence" is the want of ordinary care, viz., such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would exercise under similar circumstances. It is never presumed but must be proved; and the burden of proving it rests on the party alleging it. It may arise from overt acts, or from the failure to perform a duty. Bowen v. Baltimore & P. Steamboat Co. (Del.) 84 Atl. 1022, 1025.

"Negligence" is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances, or doing what such a person would not have done. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Watson, 127 Pac. 693, 694, 36 Okl. 1.

"Negligence" may be defined in a general way as the doing of a thing which the dictates of common prudence or foresight would indicate ought not to be done, or which a reasonably careful and prudent man would not have done, having in mind the attending conditions and circumstances of the occasion or the omission to do a thing which the same prudence and foresight would say ought to be done, considering again the attending conditions and circumstances. San Francisco P. S. S. Co. v. Carlson, 161 Fed. 851, 852, C. C. A. 45.

Same—Reasonable person

"Negligence" is the doing of something which under the circumstances a reasonable person would not do, or the omission to do something, in the discharge of a legal duty, which under the circumstances a reasonable person would do, and which act of commission or omission, as a natural consequence directly following, produces damages to another. Williams v. Belmont Coal & Coke Co. 46 S. E. 802, 804, 55 W. Va. 84 (quoting Washington v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 17 Va. 190).

Same—Reasonably prudent person

"Negligence" is the omitting to do something that a reasonably prudent person would do, or the doing of something that such person would not do. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. O'Neill, 177 Fed. 328, 333, 100 C. C. A. 658.

"Negligence" is the omission to do what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person under the existing circumstances would not have done. The duty thus imposed is dictated and measured by the particular exigencies of the occasion, and the essence of the fault is whether in omission or commission; negligence being either active or passive. Negligence is also defined as the juridical cause of the liability, and therefore actionable or followed by liability to another when it consists of such an act or omission on the part of a responsible person as in ordinary sequence immediately results in such injury; but it should be added that the party complained of must be the exercise of ordinary care have been able to foresee that harm or injury would result. Fuller v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 53 E. 297, 298, 140 N. C. 480 (citing Baltimore P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506; Carter v. Cape Fear Lumber Co., 3 S. E. 828, 129 N. C. 203; Basnight v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 16 S. E. 323, 111 N. C. 592; Wharton's Neg. § 73).

Same—Reasonably prudent and careful person

"Negligence" is the failure to observe for the protection of the interests of another that degree of care, prudence, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand whereby such other person suffers injury. It is the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would exercise under similar circumstances. Gatta v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 83 Atl. 788, 792 Boyce, 551.

"Negligence" is the omission to do something which a reasonably prudent and careful al person would, or the doing something which such a person would not, do under like circumstances. Arkansas & Louisiana Ry. Co. v. Sanders, 99 S. W. 1109, 1110, 81 Ark. 104 (adopting definition in 1 Thompson, Neg. § 1, 2; citing Hot Springs R. Co. v. Newman, 38 Ark. 607).

As the breach or omission of a legal duty

"Negligence" consists in doing or permitting an act by which a legal duty or obligation has been violated. Glaser v. Rothschild, 10 S. W. 332, 334, 106 Mo. App. 418 (citing Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co., 92 Mass. 10 Allen] 372, 87 Am. Dec. 644).

"Negligence," to be actionable, must occur in breach of a legal duty arising out of contract or otherwise, owing to the person sustaining the loss." Minneapolis General Electric Co. v. Cronon, 166 Fed. 651, 662, 92 C. C. A. 345, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816 (quoting and adopting definition in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ballentine, 84 Fed. 935, 28 C. C. A. 572; citing National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. Ed. 621; Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. Law, 5).

A necessary element of actionable negligence is the existence of a duty on the part of defendant to protect plaintiff from the injury complained of. "Negligence" is the breach or omission of a legal duty; it includes two subordinate ideas—duty and the performance of that duty. Todd v. Pacific Ry. & Nav. Co., 117 Pac. 300, 59 Or. 249 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4743-4746).

"Negligence" is a breach of legal duty. It must be shown. It will not be presumed. The burden of proof rests with the party asserting or charging 'negligence.'" Meyers v. Ruddock Orleans Cypress Co., 43 South. 448, 150, 118 La. 905 (quoting and adopting statement in Black, Law & Prac. Acc. Cas.).

An essential ingredient to any conception of "negligence" is that it involves the violation of some legal duty which one person owes another—a duty to take care for the safety of the person or property of the other. This duty may be assumed by contract, or it may be imposed by implication of law. Phoenix Light & Fuel Co. v. Bennett, 74 Pac. 48, 50, 8 Ariz. 314, 63 L. R. A. 219.

An essential ingredient of any conception of the law of "negligence" is that it involves the violation of a legal duty which one person owes another, the duty to take care for the safety or property of the other; and the converse proposition is that, where there is no legal duty to exercise care, there can be no actionable negligence. Saylor v. Parsons, 98 N. W. 500, 502, 122 Iowa, 679, 64 L. R. A. 542, 101 Am. St. Rep. 233 (quoting Thomp. Neg. § 3).

"Negligence" is a shortage of legal duty that causes injury. The fact that an act is in violation of law does not dispense with an inquiry as to the relation which that act sustains to the injury complained of, and if it is not an efficient cause of injury there is no liability. Where a train was obstructing a highway crossing in violation of law, and plaintiff, mistaking a signal for an invitation to cross, attempted to cross between two cars and was injured, the proximate cause of the accident was not the obstruction, and the railroad company was not liable. Corbin v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 63 Atl. 138, 139, 78 Vt. 458.

"Negligence" which is actionable is the infringement of the legal right of another, or in other words the violation of a duty imposed by law in respect to another. The mere neglect of a railroad company to cut down trees on its right of way in the vicinity of a grade crossing is not in itself such "negligence," in the absence of any statute requiring it to keep its right of way free from unnecessary obstruction to a view of the tracks by persons using an adjacent highway, although it may be considered with other circumstances in determining whether the company exercised care in the operation of its cars at a particular time. Cowles v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 66 Atl. 1020, 1021, 80 Conn. 48, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067, 10 Ann. Cas. 481.

"Negligence" is the breach or omission of a legal duty. Defendant, an electric light company, furnished its linemen with several pike poles (long poles having an iron ferule and an iron pike in the end) of the character and construction customarily used in bracing electric light poles while removing the same. One of these pike poles had become dull at the point and unfit to be used with safety. While plaintiff was on an electric light pole, stripping the wires, one of his fellow servants picked up and used the blunt pike pole, which did not fix the electric light pole so as to properly hold the same, and it in consequence fell, whereby plaintiff was injured. Held, that defendant had properly fulfilled its duty of furnishing suitable tools and appliances, and the injury was in no way the result of its negligence. Towne v. United Electric Gas & Power Co., 81 Pac. 124, 125, 146 Cal. 766, 70 L. R. A. 214, 2 Ann. Cas. 905.

"Negligence" is the breach of legal duty. It is immaterial whether the duty is one imposed by the rule of common law requiring exercise of ordinary care not to injure another, or is imposed by statute designed for the protection of others. The only difference is that in the one case the measure of legal duty is to be determined upon common-law principles, while in the other the statute fixes it, so that the violation of the statute constitutes conclusive evidence of negligence, or, in other words, negligence per se. The sale of kerosene in violation of Laws 1908, p. 103, § 2, requiring the names and grades of distillates of petroleum to be marked on the receptacles in which they are sold, and making it a misdemeanor not to do so, is

"negligence" per se. Peterson v. Standard Oil Co., 106 Pac. 337, 340, 55 Or. 511, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 625 (quoting and adopting definition in Osborne v. McMasters, 41 N. W. 543, 40 Minn. 103, 12 Am. St. Rep. 698).

Carelessness distinguished

"Negligence" implies an omission to do a thing which a person ought to do, while "carelessness" implies heedlessness or inattention. Larkin v. Taylor, 5 Kan. 433, 445.

Degrees of negligence

There are three degrees of "negligence": First, slight negligence involving an absence of that degree of care and vigilance which persons of extraordinary prudence and foresight are accustomed to use; second, ordinary negligence, involving failure to exercise in any given situation such care as the great mass of mankind ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances; and, third, gross negligence involving a failure to exercise any care to avoid inflicting injury to the person or property of others, recklessly or wantonly acting or failing to act to avoid such injury, evincing such utter disregard of consequences as to suggest a willingness, substantially equivalent to intent, to injure and denominated such constructively, and classable with actual intent as regards duty to compensate for the injury. Astrin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 128 N. W. 265, 268, 143 Wis. 477, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158.

A classification of "negligence" as "slight," "ordinary," and "gross" has been quite generally abandoned, and the more rational view adopted that any want of ordinary care constituted actionable negligence. Sherwood v. Home Savings Bank, 109 N. W. 9, 12, 131 Iowa, 528.

In Iowa actionable "negligence" does not depend on its degree, and the differentiation into gross, ordinary, and slight negligence means little more than a matter of comparative emphasis in the discussion of testimony. Denny v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 130 N. W. 363, 364, 150 Iowa, 460.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 6, giving a cause of action for a death caused by another's "negligence," gross negligence need not be shown. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Evans' Adm'r, 110 S. W. 844, 848, 129 Ky. 152.

An instruction as to the division of "negligence" into slight, ordinary, or gross cannot be usefully applied in trials of cases; their signification varying according to the circumstances, until there are so many real exceptions that the words can scarcely be said to have any real application. Oregon Co. v. Roe, 176 Fed. 715, 718, 100 C. C. A. 269.

Degrees of negligence are not recognized; for, though the terms "wanton, willful, and reckless" are sometimes used in characterizing conduct, yet the law applies only the word "negligence," which is a failure to perform a duty, and, though the law recognizes degrees in care, very high care, and ordinary care, the failure to exercise the highest degree of care required is only negligence, though failure to exercise ordinary care is also negligence. Young v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 127 S. W. 19, 26, 227 Mo. 307.

As want of diligence

Negligence is not a thing, but a relation. "The word 'negligence' implies a duty to use due diligence, and such a duty may be owed to one person, and not to another." Boes v. M. R. R. v. Sargent, 57 Atl. 688, 691, 72 H. 455 (quoting Mowbray v. Merryweather [1895] 2 Q. B. Div. 640, 647).

"Negligence," relatively to the safety of any particular person, is the breach of some diligence due to that person. Where no duty of diligence appears relatively to the person injured, there can be no presumption of breach. "Negligence" causing an injury does not give a right of action to the person injured, unless there is some diligence due to such person at the time with reference to the particular conduct in question. Southern Co. v. Cash, 62 S. E. 823, 825, 131 Ga. 537.

As doing what a prudent man would not do

If one does what the great body of other prudent men do, under a like situation, he is not "negligent." Tallman v. Nelson, 125 W. 1181, 1183, 141 Mo. App. 478.

As a fact

"Negligence" in one sense is a quality attaching to acts dependent on and arising out of the duties and relations of the party concerned, and is as much a fact to be found by the jury as the alleged acts to which it attaches by virtue of such duties and relations. Patton-Worsham Drug Co. v. Drennon (Tex.) 123 S. W. 705, 708.

"Negligence," in one sense, is a quality attaching to acts dependent upon and arising out of the duties and relations of the party concerned, and is as much a fact to be found by the jury as the alleged acts to which it attaches by virtue of such duties and relations. * * * It is not a conclusion to be testified to by witnesses, but an inference to be deduced from the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence." Tiborsky v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 102 N. W. 549, 551, 124 Wis. 243 (citing Townley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 11 N. W. 55, 53 Wis. 6); Kaples v. Orth, 21 N. W. 633, 61 Wis. 53; Hart v. West Side R. Co., 57 N. W. 91, 1 Wis. 489, 490, 21 L. R. A. 743, 39 Am. St. R. 877).

As an inference of fact

"Negligence" is something invisible, intangible, and, for the most part, incapable of direct proof, like sensible facts or physical events. It is, in general, a matter of inference from other facts and circumstances which admit of direct proof, and which may raise a presumption of the truth of the main fact to be proved. These facts and circumstances must be such as would warrant a jury in inferring from them the fact of negligence by reasoning in the ordinary way, according to the natural and proper relation of things and consistently with the common sense and experience of mankind." Beebe v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 S. W. 1019, 1026, 106 Mo. 419, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 760 (quoting and adopting the definition in Callahan v. Varne, 40 Mo. 130).

As failure of duty

"Negligence" is a failure of duty. Shawnee Light & Power Co. v. Sears, 95 Pac. 449, 155, 21 Okl. 13 (citing Haynes v. Gas Co., 19 S. E. 344, 114 N. C. 203, 28 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786).

Failure to do a duty is "negligence." Beyer v. Hamburg-American S. S. Co., 171 Fed. 582, 583.

"Negligence" must depend on a duty owed by one person to another which is negligently performed. Southern Ry. Co. v. Smith, 90 South. 390, 392, 163 Ala. 174; Cole v. John H. Talge Lounge Co., 121 S. W. 1, 6, 222 Mo. 188, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179, 17 Ann. Cas. 888; Huff v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 121 S. W. 120, 222 Mo. 286; Cohen v. Koster, 118 N. Y. Supp. 142, 144, 133 App. Div. 570; Kennedy v. Hawkins, 102 Pac. 733, 734, 54 Or. 164, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606.

Every action of "negligence" depends upon a duty owing by defendant to protect plaintiff, failure to perform such duty, and a resulting injury to plaintiff. City of Laporte v. Osborn, 86 N. E. 995, 996, 43 Ind. App. 100.

In the absence of a duty violated, there can be no "negligence." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Byrd (Tex.) 124 S. W. 738, 739.

"Negligence" may result from omission respecting duty. Randle v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 53 South. 918, 921, 169 Ala. 314.

"Negligence" is the antithesis of duty. Where there is no duty, there cannot be negligence. Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 105 S. W. 379, 380, 127 Ky. 159.

There can be no "negligence" where there is no breach of duty. It must appear that defendant owed a duty and also that he did not perform it. Roanoke Ry. & Electric Co. v. Sterret, 62 S. E. 385, 387, 106 Va. 533, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 316, 128 Am. St. Rep. 871.

Broadly speaking, "negligence" is a breach of duty. Harrington v. Butte, A. & P. Ry. Co., 95 Pac. 8, 10, 37 Mont. 169, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395.

"Negligence" implies a failure to do something which duty or prudence requires should have been done. Gill v. Fugate, 78 S. W. 188, 191, 117 Ky. 257.

"The word 'negligence' implies a duty as well as its breach, and the fact of negligence can never be found in the absence of a duty." Robbins v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 59 S. E. 512, 513, 62 W. Va. 535; Huchingson v. Texas Cent. R. Co., 118 S. W. 1123, 1126, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 229 (quoting Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Lawton, 18 S. W. 543, 55 Ark. 428, 15 L. R. A. 434, 29 Am. St. Rep. 48).

"Negligence" presupposes the existence of a duty to protect from injury, and failure to perform that duty, from which an injury results. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Rhoden, 123 S. W. 798, 800, 93 Ark. 29, 187 Am. St. Rep. 73, 20 Ann. Cas. 915.

The first element of "negligence" is a duty. If there is no duty, there can be no negligence. If the defendant owed a duty, but did not owe it to the plaintiff, the action will not lie. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Harbison, 85 S. W. 1188, 1139, 98 Tex. 499.

"Negligence" is the failure to discharge a duty, and may consist of the omission of a duty, or the doing of that which is contrary to a duty. Where there is not a duty, there is no negligence. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r, 115 S. W. 699, 701, 132 Ky. 445.

"Negligence" is a breach of that duty which one person owes to another by reason of the relation existing between them, the duty in each particular case being tested by what an ordinarily prudent person would do in a like situation. Chilberg v. Standard Furniture Co., 115 Pac. 837, 838, 63 Wash. 414, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1079.

"Negligence" is negative in its character. It is the omission to perform some duty. It implies nonfeasance, and is contradistinguished from misfeasance. Davenport v. Southern R. Co., 124 Fed. 983, 984.

"Negligence" is the violation of duty by omission or commission, which creates a menace, and when it becomes effective by causing injury to a blameless person liability follows. Birch v. City of New York, 106 N. Y. Supp. 104, 105, 121 App. Div. 395.

"Negligence" consists in the violation of a duty owed by one person to another, whether the duty arises from relations of the parties, or is created by statute under the police power of the state. Wells v. Joslin Mfg. Co., 82 Atl. 258, 260, 33 R. I. 498.

The burden is on plaintiff, in an action for negligent injuries, to show that defendant owed him a duty and failed to perform it. Mehler v. Fisch, 120 N. Y. Supp. 807, 809, 65 Misc. Rep. 549.

Where there is a breach of a duty due to all persons, the liability of the wrongdoer does not depend on privity between himself and the person injured. Hasbrouck v. Armour & Co., 121 N. W. 157, 160, 139 Wis. 357, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876.

"Negligence" is the breach of some duty which a person owes to another, and where, by such breach of duty, injury is caused as a proximate result thereof, then such negligence is actionable, and the injured person may recover damages therefor, provided he himself did not contribute thereto materially by negligence on his part. Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Edwards, 74 N. E. 533, 534, 36 Ind. App. 202.

To constitute a good cause of action for injuries through "negligence," there should be stated a right on plaintiff's part, a duty on defendant's part, respecting such right, and a breach of such duty resulting in plaintiff's injury. City of Havre De Grace v. Fletcher, 77 Atl. 114, 116, 112 Md. 562.

"Negligence" is a breach of duty. Where there is no duty, or no breach, there is no negligence. An injury that is a natural and probable consequence of an act of negligence is actionable. But an injury which could not have been foreseen nor reasonably anticipated as the probable result of an act or omission is not actionable, and such an act or omission is either the remote cause, or no cause whatever, of the injury. Kreigh v. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co., 152 Fed. 120, 122, 81 C. C. A. 338, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684 (citing Cole v. German Savings & Loan Soc., 124 Fed. 113, 115, 59 C. C. A. 593, 595, 63 L. R. A. 416).

"Negligence," among workmen, is a breach of the duty which each owes to the others, and not a breach of the master's duty, if he has exercised the care that is required of him." Atchison & Eastern Bridge Co. v. Miller, 80 Pac. 18, 29, 71 Kan. 13, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682.

"Negligence" has been defined to be a failure of duty." On proof that a live wire, carrying a deadly current, fell into a public street, it might well be said that some one has failed in his public duty. Booker v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 128 S. W. 1012, 1016, 144 Mo. App. 273.

The elements involved in a cause of action for "negligence" are the existence of a duty to protect plaintiff from injury, failure to perform such duty, and resulting injury. J. M. Pace Mule Co. v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. (N. C.) 76 S. E. 513, 515.

"Negligence" is a breach of duty. In order for it to exist, there must be both a duty and a breach of it. It is the duty of the court in its instructions to advise the jury of the duties which the law imposes upon the parties, and, where there is conflict in the evidence, it is the function of the jury to determine whether these duties imposed by law have been violated. The jury is the judge of the fact, and not of the law. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Bailey, 124 Pac. 987, 988, 34 Okl. 193.

"Negligence" is a failure to perform a duty which one owes to another, as where a railway company fails to make due inspection of a public sidewalk maintained by it across its right of way and to make it reasonably safe for pedestrians, as the need thereof might be discoverable by means of such inspection." Wabash R. Co. v. De Hart, 65 N. E. 192, 194, 32 Ind. App. 62.

"Negligence" constitutes no cause of action, unless it expresses or establishes some breach of duty." There can be no recovery from a railroad company for personal injuries from the negligent collision of its cars, which overturned, crashing into plaintiff's house, causing her great fright, on the allegations of mere fright alone, as the company owed plaintiff no duty to protect her from fright. Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 23 Atl. 340, 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709.

"The law of 'negligence' is based on the relative duties of one person to another. To establish negligence, a breach of some duty of this kind must be shown." Where a telegraph agent delivered a telegram to a person other than the addressee, but having a similar name, and the discrepancy was noticed by the person to whom it was delivered, the telegraph company was not chargeable with negligence. Bowyer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 106 N. W. 748, 130 Iowa, 324, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 984.

Same—Legal duty

"Negligence" consists in doing, or omitting to do, an act by which a legal duty or obligation is violated. Monroe v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 66 S. E. 315, 316, 151 N. C. 374, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193.

"Negligence" in its technical sense embraces failure to discharge a legal duty to an injured person. Goodwin v. Columbia Telephone Co., 138 S. W. 940, 943, 157 Mo. App. 596.

There can be no "negligence" where there is no legal duty. Cumberland Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 77 S. W. 718, 116 Ky. 554, 63 L. R. A. 469, 105 Am. St. Rep. 229.

"Negligence," as used in the law, may be defined as the failure to discharge a legal duty, whereby injury occurs. There can be no negligence where there is no duty imposed. Franklin v. Tracy, 77 S. W. 1113, 1115, 117 Ky. 267, 63 L. R. A. 649.

Failure to perform a duty imposed by statute or ordinance is "negligence." Fenn v. Clark, 103 Pac. 944, 945, 11 Cal. App. 79.

"Negligence," as distinguished from the common-law definition, may arise from the failure to discharge a duty imposed by a statute or municipal ordinance. Strottman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 109 S. W. 769, 788, 211 Mo. 227 (dissenting opinion).

The measure of legal duty is usually expressed positively, by stating what constitutes due care, rather than negatively, by stating what constitutes "negligence," which is the unintentional failure to perform the duty imposed by law. Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 605, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

"Negligence" is defined as "the unintentional failure to perform a duty implied by law, whereby damage naturally and proximately results to another." Southern Ry. Co. v. Chatman, 53 S. E. 692, 697, 124 Ga. 1026, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 4 Ann. Cas. 675.

"Negligence" is the failure to perform a duty imposed by law, or to exercise that care which a man of ordinary prudence would have exercised under existing circumstances, and, where conditions change, the degree of care required changes with them. Pritchett v. Southern Ry. Co., 72 S. E. 828, 834, 157 N. C. 88.

"Negligence" in its civil relations is such an inadvertent imperfection, by a responsible human agent, in the discharge of a legal duty, as immediately produces, in an ordinary and natural sequence, a damage to another. The inadvertency, or want of due consideration of duty, is the injuria, on which, when naturally followed by the damnum, the suit is based." Wharton, Neg. § 3. In Hoepper v. Southern Hotel Co., 44 S. W. 257, 142 Mo. loc. cit. 389, the following language of Cuannell, B., in Smith v. Railroad, L. R. 6 C. P. 20, is approvingly quoted, to wit: "I quite agree that where there is no direct evidence of negligence the question what a reasonable man might foresee is of importance in considering the question whether there is evidence of negligence for the jury or not; but when it has been determined that there is evidence of negligence, the person guilty of it is equally liable for its consequences, whether he could have foreseen them or not." Foley v. McMahon, 90 S. W. 113, 114, 114 Mo. App. 442.

In an action for injuries to a servant, the burden is on plaintiff to establish defendant's "negligence," viz., failure to discharge its legal duties toward him. Smith v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co., 73 Atl. 818, 819, 111 Md. 274.

A railroad company must give the statutory signals when approaching a highway crossing, and a failure to do so is "negligence," within Kirby's Dig. § 6595, providing that railroad companies are liable for damages caused by the omission to give statutory signals. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Drew, 147 S. W. 50, 53, 103 Ark. 374.

Same—Knowledge of duty

"Negligence" is ordinarily predicated in terms of knowledge, and liability attaches only in case the defendant knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care could know. In an action for injuries received in a street by being struck by a bottle that was thrown by W. from the roof garden of a hotel, there was no evidence to show that W. was boisterous, or that he threatened any one, and no evidence from which it could be inferred that he would throw the bottle in question. An instruction as to the liability of the hotel company that if the jury believed that W. threw the bottle from the roof garden, and plaintiff was injured thereby, and if at the time he was intoxicated, and his behavior was such as would indicate to a man of average prudence that he might throw a bottle to the street below, and that these facts were known, or by ordinary care could have been known, to the defendant or its agents, then it became the duty of the defendant and its agents to remove W. from the roof garden or otherwise control him, and that the law in that event is for the plaintiff, is not erroneous, as basing the liability of defendant on knowledge rather than on belief, or reasonable grounds for belief. Bruner v. Seelbach Hotel Co., 117 S. W. 373, 376, 133 Ky. 41, 19 Ann. Cas. 217.

As failure to exercise care justly demanded by circumstances

"Negligence" is the failure to observe for the protection of another that degree of care which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. Fisher v. City of New Bern, 53 S. E. 342, 345, 140 N. C. 506, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 111 Am. St. Rep. 857; McCartney v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 78 Atl. 771, 772, 2 Boyce, 191; Walls v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 355, 358; Morgan v. Oronogo Circle Min. Co., 141 S. W. 735, 740, 160 Mo. App. 99; Valente v. American Bridge Co., 73 Atl. 395, 400, 6 Pennewill, 556; Florida R. Co. v. Sturkey, 48 South. 34, 35, 56 Fla. 196 (quoting and adopting definition in Jacksonville St. Ry. Co. v. Chappell, 21 Fla. 175); Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 119 N. W. 640, 644, 155 Mich. 466; Linthicum v. Truitt (Del.) 80 Atl. 245, 248, 2 Boyce, 338; Columbia Box & Lumber Co. v. Drown, 156 Fed. 459, 462, 84 C. C. A. 269 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Torts, p. 630); Buchanan v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co., 75 Atl. 872, 876, 1 Boyce, 83; Weldon v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 65 Atl. 589, 590; Black's Adm'r v. Va. Portland Cement Co., 51 S. E. 831, 104 Va. 450 (quoting and adopting definition Cooley, Torts, p. 630); Queen Anne's R. Co. v. Reed (Del.) 59 Atl. 860, 862, 5 Pennewill, 226, 119 Am. St. Rep. 301 (quoting Cooley Torts.)

"Negligence" in a legal sense is a failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. While the obligation to exercise care in the conduct of one's business varies under different circumstances, there always remains the duty to exercise such reasonable care as should be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. Szymanski v. Blumenthal, 56 Atl. 674, 675, 4 Pennewill, 511, 103 Am. St. Rep. 132 (citing Tully v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 47 Atl. 1019, 2 Pennewill, 537, 82 Am. St. Rep. 425).

"Negligence," in a legal sense, has been defined to be the failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. In an action for injuries to a servant while riding on a private railroad by derailment of the cars and the fall of a car frame, caused by a defective bolt used to fasten the same, defendant was not guilty of negligence, in failing to promulgate rules for the government of its servants in the operation of cars on the railroad in question. Jemnienski v. Lobdell Car Wheel Co., 63 Atl. 935, 937, 5 Pennewill, 385.

"Negligence," in a legal sense, is 'failure to observe for the protection of the interests of another person that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury.' Any failure upon the part of the master to observe for the protection of his servant that reasonable degree of care which the circumstances of the particular case justly demand is actionable 'negligence,' and is not within the influence of the doctrine of assumed risks." Black v. Virginia Portland Cement Co., 51 S. E. 831, 832, 104 Va. 450 (quoting and adopting Cooley, Torts, p. 630).

Under Code 1906, § 1985, providing that, in all actions against railroad companies for injury to persons or property, proof of injury inflicted by the running of locomotives or cars shall be prima facie evidence of a lack of reasonable skill and care on the part of the servants of the company, proof of an injury raises a presumption of negligence, casting the burden of proof on the railroad company; and as "negligence" is a failure to observe, for the protection of another person, that degree of care which the circumstances justly demand, proof that the equipment of a train was proper and that the servants of the company kept a vigilant lookout is, in the absence of any proof as to the condition of the person injured, insufficient to rebut the statutory presumption. New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Cole, 57 South. 556, 558, 101 Miss. 173.

As failure to use greatest care

In an action for injuries to a passenger, alleged to be due to the negligence of defendant's employes, the court properly instructed that "negligence" meant the failure to use the utmost care that would be used by a very prudent person under like circumstances.

Contreras v. San Antonio Traction Co. (Tex. 83 S. W. 870).

Foreseeing effect

Failure to guard against that which has never occurred and which is very unlikely to occur, and which does not naturally suggest itself to prudent men as something which should be guarded against, is not "negligence." Ryan v. Cortland Carriage Co., 118 N. Y. Supp. 56, 57, 133 App. Div. 46.

"Negligence" in law is careless conduct under such circumstances that an ordinarily prudent person would anticipate some injury to another as a reasonably probable result thereof. Johanson v. Webster Mfg. Co., 1 N. W. 832, 833, 139 Wis. 181.

"Negligence" cannot exist unless there is a duty to the person injured, and it ought not be deemed negligence to do or to fail to do an act when it was not anticipated and should not have been anticipated, that would result in injury to any one. Murphy v. Galveston, H. & N. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 96 W. 940, 945 (citing St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Texas v. Pope, 86 S. W. 5, 98 Tex. 535; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Bigham, 38 S. W. 162, 90 Tex. 226, 227; Brush Electric Light & Power Co. v. Le Fevre, 57 S. W. 640, 93 Tex. 607, 49 R. A. 771, 77 Am. St. Rep. 898).

"Negligence" involves not only knowledge of a defect, but an appreciation of the danger to be apprehended therefrom. Hence it is that, if the danger attending the use of a sidewalk is not so open and obvious as to suggest itself in an appreciative way to the mind of an ordinarily prudent person, a entry upon such walk cannot be said to amount to 'negligence' as matter of law. Arnold v. City of Waterloo, 104 N. W. 443, 128 Iowa, 410.

An act cannot be held to be negligent when there was no reasonable ground for supposing that it would cause injury to another. "Negligence" cannot be imputed because of the failure to perform a duty so sudden and unexpectedly arising that there is no opportunity to comprehend the situation and act according to the exigency. McKee v. Harrisburg Traction Co., 60 Atl. 498, 499, 211 Pa. 47.

"Negligence" consists of conduct which common experience or the special knowledge of the actor shows to be so likely to produce the result complained of, under the circumstances known to the actor, that he is held answerable for that result, although it was not certain, intended, or foreseen. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 409, 205 U. S. 1, 12, 51 L. Ed. 681.

"Negligence" is the proximate cause of an injury when one of ordinary sense ought to have foreseen that the act would probably result in such injury or some like injurious consequence, and whether one of ordinary capacity ought to have foreseen the probable consequences of the act is to be inferred from consideration of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case, and is a question for the court, and not a proper subject of an interrogatory addressed to a jury; and hence, in an action against a street railway company for injury to a passenger while alighting, a question whether it was reasonably probable in the circumstances that she would, after the conductor gave the signal to stop the car leave her seat and take a position that would be rendered perilous by the stopping of the car in the manner in which it was stopped, could not properly be decided by an answer to an interrogatory. Richmond Street & Interurban Ry. Co. v. Beverley, 84 N. E. 558, 559, 85 N. E. 721, 43 Ind. App. 35.

"Negligence" consists in conduct which common experience or the special knowledge of the action shows to be so likely to produce the result complained of, under the circumstances known to the actor, that he is held answerable for that result, although it was not certain, intended or foreseen. "Railroad companies, like natural persons, must so use their property and privileges as not to injure the rights of others, and in running and operating their cars must exercise care proportionate to the danger of injury to others. When, in the exercise of such care, ordinary caution and prudence requiring the giving of signals or warning, the failure to do so is negligence." Where trainmen, in charge of a train obstructed a crossing, in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have anticipated that persons in the act of crossing might be on or between or about the cars, and that not to give warning before moving the train would result in injury, their failure to give such warning was "negligence." Geas v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 93 Pac. 274, 78, 33 Utah, 156, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074 (quoting and adopting definition in Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R., 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 105 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681).

Fraud distinguished

"Negligence" is to be carefully distinguished from 'fraud'; the distinction arising in the element of inadvertence. 'Fraud' is invariably intentional, either actually or constructively; 'negligence' is never so." Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, of Liverpool, Eng. v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 636, 648, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

Intent distinguished

"Negligence" is not a matter of intention, and it is proper to refuse to permit a witness to state why a particular act was not done; the not doing of such act being the basis of the charge of negligence. Walker v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 149 Ill. App. 406, 411.

Purpose or design is foreign to "negligence." Pittsburgh, O., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ferrell, 78 N. E. 988, 989, 39 Ind. App. 515 (citing Parker v. Pennsylvania Company, 34 N. E. 504, 134 Ind. 673, 23 L. R. A. 552).

"Negligence" excludes the idea of intention. A count in a complaint alleging that defendant was a common carrier, and that it so negligently conducted its business that by reason of such negligence plaintiff's intestate, who was a passenger on one of its trains, received personal injuries which caused his death, states a cause of action for simple negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perkins, 44 South. 602, 604, 152 Ala. 183.

Intentional wrong distinguished

The distinction between "negligence" and intentional wrong, as relating to the liability for the sale of dangerous or harmful articles, is important as bearing on the civil liability for consequences for injuries. If a vendor sell a machine, knowing it defective and dangerous, he is liable; but, if he sell without knowledge of the defect or danger, he is not liable, though he be careless or negligent. Kuelling v. Roderick Lean Mfg. Co., 75 N. E. 1008, 1101, 183 N. Y. 78, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303, 111 Am. St. Rep. 691, 5 Ann. Cas. 124.

"Negligence," generally speaking, whether it be ordinary or gross, is merely an omission to perform a duty, and is not an affirmative wrongful act, though there may be instances where gross negligence is of an affirmative character, and amounts to an intentional wrong, or a reckless disregard of the rights of others. Schulte v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 108 S. W. 941, 943, 128 Ky. 627.

Malice distinguished

The doing of an act without that ordinary prudence and discretion which persons of mature mind and sound judgment are presumed to have constitutes "negligence," but will not alone warrant an inference of "malice." Malice is distinguishable from mere negligence, in that it arises from some purpose, while negligence arises from absence of purpose. The characteristic of negligence is inadvertence, or an absence of an intent to injure. This does not imply that the act was done involuntarily or unconsciously, but merely that the person doing it was not conscious that the act constituted a want of reasonable care. Jenkins v. Gilligan, 108 N. W. 237, 238, 131 Iowa, 176, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1087 (citing Pickens v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 32 S. E. 567, 54 S. C. 498).

Misfeasance distinguished

"Negligence" is negative in its character. It is the omission to perform some duty. It implies nonfeasance, and is contradistinguished from misfeasance. Davenport v. Southern R. Co., 135 Fed. 960, 967, 68 C. C. A. 444.

Mismanagement distinguished

Gen. St. 1901, § 5858, providing that railroad companies shall be liable for damage to any employé of said companies in consequence of any negligence of their agents, or of any mismanagement of their engineers or other employés to any person sustaining such damage, does not make a distinction between agents on the one hand, and engineers and other employés on the other, nor between "negligence" and mismanagement, but by the act a company is made responsible for any mismanagement of its engineers or other employés to any person sustaining damage thereby. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Kellerman, 87 S. W. 401, 404, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 274.

Nuisance distinguished

See Nuisance.

As ordinary negligence

"The term 'negligence,' without any qualification, means ordinary negligence." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Lacy, 97 Pac. 1025, 1027, 78 Kan. 622 (citing Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Pointer, 14 Kan. 37).

As question of fact or law

"Negligence," as well as contributory negligence, in the great majority of cases, is a mixed question of law and fact. Ewing v. Lanark Fuel Co., 65 S. E. 200, 205, 65 W. Va. 726, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487.

The burden is on plaintiff of proving actionable negligence, notwithstanding the rule making "negligence" for the jury where reasonable men might differ on the question. Baughter v. Harman, 66 S. E. 86, 87, 110 Va. 316.

The rule of res ipsa loquitur not being invoked, it is error to authorize a jury in an action for personal injuries to render a verdict for the plaintiff without proof of "negligence." White v. Illinois Collieries Co., 145 Ill. App. 417, 419.

In absence of proof of negligence by defendant in permitting the stairway in its store to be in a faulty or dangerous condition, "negligence" cannot be imputed as a matter of law from the happening of an accident on the stairway. Belsky v. Fourteenth Street Store, 121 N. Y. Supp. 321, 322.

"Negligence" is in the main a question of fact, or rather whether it exists or not in a special case is a question of fact for the jury. All that the law has ever determined on the subject is that it consists in failing to bestow due care to the matter in hand—failing to do that which due care requires to be done, or doing that which such care forbids. Whether a trolley car conductor was negligent in failing to assist a passenger onto the car is a question of fact, depending upon all the circumstances as they appeared to the conductor at the time, or as they should have appeared to a person in the exercise of that degree of care which the law requires him to exercise. Richardson v. Augusta & A. R. Co., 61 S. E. 83, 84, 79 S. C. 535 (citing Simms v. South Carolina Ry. Co., 3 S. E. 301, 27 S. C. 268).

As relative term

"Negligence" is a relative term, to be determined on the facts of each case. Quinn v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 74 Atl. 456, 78 N. J. Law, 539.

"Negligence" is a relative term, and what would be negligence in one situation might not be in another. Gallagher v. City of Tipton, 113 S. W. 674, 675, 676, 133 Mo. App. 557.

"Negligence" is a relative term, and where there is no duty there can be no actionable negligence. Coin v. J. H. Talge Lounge Co., 121 S. W. 1, 6, 222 Mo. 488, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179, 17 Ann. Cas. 888.

"Negligence" is a relative term, and implies the neglect of some duty. Cole v. Jones, 141 S. W. 689, 690, 159 Mo. App. 472.

"Negligence" is not absolute or intrinsic, but is always relevant to some circumstance of time, place, or person. Connell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 666, 669, 144 App. Div. 664.

There can be no "negligence" where there is no duty to use care, for negligence is the breach of some duty that one person owes to another, and consequently it is a relative term, and varies with the circumstances of each particular case. West Virginia Cent. & P. Ry. Co. v. State, 54 Atl. 669, 671, 96 Md. 652, 61 L. R. A. 574.

"Negligence" can neither be affirmed nor denied until the conditions under which the act was performed are known. Negligence primary and contributory is essentially relative and comparative and not absolute. State, to Use of Hall, v. Trimble, 64 Atl. 1026, 1028, 104 Md. 317 (citing United Railways & Electric Co. of Baltimore v. Watkins, 62 Atl. 234, 102 Md. 267).

"Negligence" is a relative term, and depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. What might be negligence under some circumstances, at some time or place, may not be negligence under other circumstances, at another time and place. Johnson v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 47 South. 785, 786, 94 Miss. 447, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 312 (citing 29 Cyc. p. 417).

"Negligence" is a relative term, and its existence must be determined in view of the surrounding circumstances; the test being whether the person charged acted as an ordinarily prudent man would have done in the same or similar circumstances. Lyman v. Dale, 136 S. W. 760, 761, 156 Mo. App. 427.

"Negligence" is a comparative and not a positive term, and its use is relative, whether applied to the negligence of the defendant or that of the plaintiff. For this reason in most cases it becomes a question of fact for the jury to determine who was negligent under the circumstances of the case. The degree of care which in one case is insufficient to relieve from a charge of negligence in another might constitute more than ordinary prudence and caution." King v. Green, 94 Pac. 777, 778, 7 Cal. App. 473.

"Negligence" is essentially relative and comparative, not absolute. It is not even an object of simple apprehension, apart from the circumstances out of which it grows. As these circumstances necessarily vary in their relations to each other, under different surroundings, they inevitably change their original signification and import. Hence it is intrinsically true that those things which would not, under one condition, constitute negligence would, on the other hand, under a different, though not necessarily an opposite, condition, most unequivocally indicate its existence. Mattingly v. Montgomery, 68 Atl. 205, 206, 106 Md. 461 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooke v. Baltimore Traction Co., 31 Atl. 328, 80 Md. 554).

"Negligence" cannot be defined and measured by any precise standard. It is always relative to particular facts and circumstances upon which it is sought to be predicated. As a general rule, it is a question for the jury to determine, from the facts and the logical inferences therefrom. It is only in cases where the facts are without dispute, or the deduction inevitably that of no negligence, that the court can say, as a matter of law, that no negligence was proven. Wikberg v. Olson Co., 71 Pac. 511, 512, 138 Cal. 479.

"Negligence" is a relative term. What would be negligence under one set of circumstances might be due care under another. The degree of care varies with the circumstances. The greater the danger, or the greater the importance of the matter in hand, the greater the degree of care required to constitute due care; that is, such as a person of ordinary care and prudence would exercise." Bolton v. Western Union Tel. Co., 65 S. E. 937, 938, 84 S. C. 67.

"Negligence" is essentially relative. In the abstract it is nullity. It does not, and it cannot in the nature of things, exist. It is metaphysically impossible to evolve a concept of negligence apart from the facts which give rise to it, and independently of some imposed or implied correlative duty. The duty must be essentially related to the particular circumstances, and a variance in the circumstances necessarily begets either a modification of the duty or else extinguishes it altogether. Thus the duty which a railroad company owes to a passenger whom it is carrying on its train is widely different from the duty it owes to a trespasser on its tracks; not only because the rights of the two are different, but because the attendant circumstances and facts creating the reciprocal rights in each instance are dissimilar. This difference in rights and in duties springs from a divergence in the circumstances out of which they respectively grow. Consequently a condition which would in one case give rise to an inference of negligence would be wholly insufficient to justify its deduction in the other. United States Exp. Co. v. Everest, 83 Pac. 817, 820, 72 Kan. 517 (quoting and adopting definition in City Pass. Ry. Co. v. Nugent, 38 Atl. 779, 781, 86 Md. 349, 356).

"Negligence" is essentially relative and comparative, not absolute. It is not even an object of simple apprehension, apart from the circumstances out of which it grows. As these circumstances necessarily vary in their relations to each other, under different surroundings, they inevitably change their original signification and import. * * * The existence of 'negligence' is therefore to be sought in the facts and surroundings of each particular case. * * * Where the nature and attributes of the act relied on to show negligence contributing to the injury can only be correctly determined by considering all the attending and surrounding circumstances of the transaction, it falls within the province of the jury to pass upon and characterize it, and it is not for the court to determine its quality as matter of law." Sheridan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 60 Atl. 280, 282, 101 Md. 50 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooke v. Traction Co., 31 Atl. 327, 80 Md. 551; citing Fitzpatrick v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 35 Md. 32; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, to Use of Dougherty, 36 Md. 366; Same v. State, to Use of Miller, 29 Md. 252, 96 Am. Dec. 528).

The degree of caution, both by a carrier and a passenger, is to be estimated in a measure by the hazard to life and limb. "Care" and "negligence" are relative terms, and mean such care and vigilance as a prudent, rational person would exercise under like circumstances. Dougherty v. Missouri R. Co., 81 Mo. 325, 331, 51 Am. Rep. 239 (citing Flynn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 78 Mo. 195, 47 Am. Rep. 99).

Recklessness distinguished

See Reckless—Recklessly—Recklessness.

As want of care

"Negligence" is the want of care under the circumstances. But there can be no recovery of damages, unless there has been a breach of legal duty. Welch v. Carlucci Stone Co., 64 Atl. 392, 393, 215 Pa. 34, 7 Ann. Cas. 299.

"Want of care is 'negligence,' not assumption of risk." Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 87 S. W. 12, 21, 112 Mo. App. 372.

"Carefulness" is an antonym for "negligence." Negligence is a conclusion of law, and so also are statements in the findings by the jury that work was done carefully. Avery v. Nordyke & Marmon Co., 70 N. E. 888, 893, 34 Ind. App. 541.

Where a child employed in a factory was injured, "negligence" on his part meant his failure to exercise such care as a boy of his intelligence, capacity, and experience, as shown by the evidence, would have usually exercised in the same situation and circumstances. Morgan v. C. Hager & Sons Hinge Mfg. Co., 97 S. W. 638, 642, 120 Mo. App. 590.

Same—Careful and prudent person

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise such care as is ordinarily exercised by careful and prudent persons under the same or similar circumstances in the same or similar business." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carter (Ky.) 112 S. W. 904, 906.

"Negligence" in respect to the duties of a youthful employé in the operation of a machine means a want of that degree of care which the majority of careful and prudent persons of his age, intelligence, and discretion are accustomed to exercise for their own protection under like or similar circumstances. Cohankus Mfg. Co. v. Rogers' Guardian (Ky.) 96 S. W. 437, 439.

Same—Person of common sense and prudence

"Negligence" is defined as a want of that care which a man of common prudence and of common sense ordinarily exercises in like employment. To constitute it, there must be a disregard of some duty or rule of conduct prescribed beforehand, or arising so manifestly from the facts as to leave no doubt of its existence, and it is of the essence of actionable negligence that the party charged should have knowledge that the act complained of was such an act of omission or commission as might, within the domain of probability, cause some such an injury as that complained of. Lincoln Gas & Electric Light Co. v. Thomas, 104 N. W. 153, 154, 74 Neb. 257 (citing Whart. Neg. § 8; Deering, Neg. § 2).

Same—Man of ordinary care and prudence

"Negligence," in reference to the maintenance of a track in a mine, means the absence of that care to keep and maintain it in a reasonably safe condition for service that a man of ordinary care and prudence, under the circumstances of the business, considering its perils, dangers, and necessities, would have used. Western Coal & Mining Co. v. Honaker, 96 S. W. 361, 364, 79 Ark. 629.

Same—Man of ordinary prudence

By "negligence" is meant a failure to use such care and precaution as a person of ordinary prudence would use under like circumstances. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wood (Tex.) 81 S. W. 1187, 1188.

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise that degree of care under given circumstances which one of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances, and the circumstances considered are those which are known to the actor, but he will be charged with knowledge of what he could have known by exercising ordinary care. Sted- man v. O'Neil, 72 Atl. 923, 926, 82 Conn. 199, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1229.

"Negligence," such as to preclude a recovery for injuries, is merely the absence of such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances. Meyers v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 77 S. W. 149, 151, 103 Mo. App. 268.

An instruction that "by 'negligence' is meant the failure to exercise that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence usually exercises under like or similar circumstances," given in an action for death by coming in contact with a live wire, was erroneous; the duty of those manufacturing and using electricity being to use the utmost care to protect others from danger. Mangan's Adm'r v. Louisville Electric Light Co., 91 S. W. 703, 704, 122 Ky. 476, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 459 (citing and adopting Schweitzer's Adm'r v. Citizens' General Electric Co. [Ky.] 52 S. W. 830; Thomas v. Maysville Gas Co., 56 S. W. 153, 108 Ky. 244, 53 L. R. A. 147; Macon v. Paducah St. Ry. Co., 62 S. W. 496, 110 Ky. 680).

Same—Person of ordinary reason and prudence

When, in order to determine whether one has been guilty of "negligence," his conduct is compared with that of reasonable persons under similar circumstances, the comparison must be directed to a person of ordinary reason and prudence. The standard of duty is not the foresight and caution which some particular man is capable of exercising, but the foresight and caution of the average prudent man, or of a reasonable man standing in the shoes of the person charged with negligence. Hoard v. State, 95 S. W. 1002, 1003, 80 Ark. 87 (citing Webb's Pollock, Torts [Am. Ed.] 540).

Same—Ordinarily careful and prudent person

"Negligence" is the failure to use such care as ordinarily careful and prudent persons ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Cornelius v. South Covington & O. St. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 93 S. W. 643, 644; Felver v. Central Electric Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 980, 983, 216 Mo. 195; City of Covington v. Whitney (Ky.) 99 S. W. 337, 338.

Same—Ordinarily prudent man in his own affairs

"The terms 'neglect,' 'negligence,' 'negligent,' and 'negligently,' when so employed, import a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent person ordinarily displays in acting in his own concerns." Ladow v. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., 119 Pac. 250, 257, 28 Okl. 15 (quoting and applying Comp. Laws Okl. 1909, § 2830).

"Negligence," for which a tug is liable, "consists in the want of ordinary skill in navigation and of the exercise of such care-and diligence in handling the tow as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in the preservation of his own property." The duty imposed upon a tug is to use the caution and skill which belong to prudent navigators. The Samuel E. Bouker, 141 Fed. 480 (citing The Niagara, 20 Fed. 152; The Florence, 88 Fed. 302).

An instruction defining "negligence" as the failure to exercise that degree of care and diligence that an ordinarily prudent person would exercise in his own affairs under like or similar circumstances, was not objectionable as eliminating acts of commission. German Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 104 N. W. 361, 363, 128 Iowa, 386.

An instruction that the terms "negligence," "negligent," and "negligently" import a want of such attention to the natural or probable consequence of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns, being in the exact language of Rev. Codes 1905, § 9522, is sufficient, especially where no more specific instruction was asked. Zilke v. Johnson, 132 N. W. 640, 644, 22 N. D. 75, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1005.

Same—Ordinarily prudent person

"Negligence" is the omission of the care that ordinarily prudent men will exercise under similar circumstances. Heinz v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 77 Atl. 980, 983, 113 Md. 582; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Schubert (Tex.) 130 S. W. 708, 709.

"Negligence" in a particular case is the failure to exercise such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Boyles v. Texas & P. R. Co. (Tex.) 86 S. W. 936, 937.

"Negligence," as applied to a passenger suing for injuries, means the failure to use that degree of care that would be exercised by an ordinarily prudent person under the same circumstances. Williams v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co., 78 S. W. 45, 47, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 145.

"Negligence" is the want of that care which ordinarily prudent men use in the same circumstances, and as even ordinarily prudent men, when caught in a trap where they must act instantly, miscalculate and misjudge, that one caught in a passage near a railroad with a frightened team mistakenly concluded that the safest course would be to try to cross the track, and so came nearer to the track than he otherwise would, would not necessarily be negligence. Moore v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 76 Atl. 871, 875, 106 Me. 297.

"Negligence" is the omission to exercise such care as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise in the same or like circumstances. To choose, under all circumstances, the safer of two courses of action, is not expected or required of any one. If two alternative courses requiring prompt choice and action are put before a man, and either appears to be reasonably safe, if he chooses the one that turns out to be less safe than the other, he is not to be convicted of negligence for choosing the course which proved, by subsequent events, to be less safe than the other." Shroeder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 85 S. W. 968, 971, 111 Mo. App. 67.

A railroad track in active use is per se a warning of danger, admonishing every one that a train is liable to pass over it at any time, and no one, whether passenger, licensee, or trespasser, can approach such a track so near as to be hit by a passing train without first both looking and listening to ascertain whether a train is approaching which might injure him, nor can he frequent or walk over a private railroad yard covered by many tracks, employed constantly for through travel, switching, etc., without looking and listening and exercising the utmost degree of vigilance; the term "negligence" under such circumstances meaning the want of such care as ordinarily prudent persons usually exercise under similar circumstances. Hart v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 196 Fed. 180, 185, 116 C. C. A. 12.

"Negligence" is the want of such care and caution as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under the same circumstances. An instruction defining negligence to be the want of such care and caution as an "ordinary" prudent man would exercise under the circumstances was not erroneous because of the use of the word "ordinary," instead of the "ordinarily." Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Partin, 76 S. W. 236, 237, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 173.

The test of "negligence" is: Did the human agent in charge of the instrumentality causing the injury complained of act with the care that an ordinarily prudent person under the same circumstances would have exercised, and, if he did, there is no actionable negligence. Wilkerson v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 124 S. W. 543, 546, 140 Mo. App. 306.

An instruction that by the term "negligence" is meant the want of that degree of care that an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the same or similar circumstances is correct. Meng v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 213, 215, 108 Mo. App. 553.

Where an instruction defining "negligence" as the want of such care "as a prudent person would exercise," instead of "an ordinarily" prudent person was the only instruction in the case defining negligence, and was referred to by defendant in its instructions as giving the definition of negligence, defendant thereby adopted it, and could not complain on appeal that it was erroneous. Spaulding v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 107 S. W. 1049, 1051, 129 Mo. App. 607.

Same—Person of ordinary intelligence and prudence

"Negligence" is failure to use that degree of care which one of ordinary intelligence and prudence might reasonably be expected to use in the particular circumstances. Lundy v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 72 S. E. 558, 564, 90 S. C. 25.

Same—Prudent and just man

"Negligence" is the absence of such care and regard for the rights of others as a prudent and just man would and should have in the same situation." Long v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 107 S. W. 203, 205, 128 Ky. 26, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 673.

Same—Reasonably prudent person

"Negligence" is the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent man would or should use under similar circumstances. Heidelbaugh v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 65 Atl. 587, 6 Pennewill, 209.

"Negligence" is the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent person would exercise under similar circumstances. Riccio v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 82 Atl. 604, 606.

"Negligence" is a failure or the neglect by one to exercise that same care and caution that a reasonably prudent person would exercise at the same place and under the same circumstances. Jennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 162 Fed. 392, 393.

Same—Reasonably prudent and careful person

"Negligence" is the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would exercise under similar circumstances. Baldwin v. People's R. Co., 76 Atl. 1088, 1093, 7 Pennewill, 81; Welch v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 76 Atl. 50, 7 Pennewill, 140; Louft v. C. & J. Pyle Co., 75 Atl. 619, 622, 1 Boyce, 192; Benson v. Wilmington City R. Co., 75 Atl. 793, 794, 1 Boyce, 202; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lynch, 126 S. W. 362, 365, 137 Ky. 696; Dungan v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 58 Atl. 868, 869, 4 Pennewill, 458; Eaton v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 75 Atl. 369, 370, 1 Boyce, 435; Garrett v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 64 Atl. 254, 256, 6 Pennewill, 29.

"Negligence" is the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would use under similar circumstances. Freeman v. Wilmington & P. Traction Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 1001, 1002; Braunstein v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 78 Atl. 609, 611, 2 Boyce, 55.

"Negligence" is the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person should exercise under similar circumstances. Robinson v. Huber (Del.) 63 Atl. 873, 874, 6 Pennewill, 21.

"Negligence" is the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would exercise under similar circumstances. Certain things are negligence in law, whether active or positive negligence is proved or not. A violation of a statute providing that no person shall operate a motor vehicle on the public highways unless he has obtained a license is negligence per se, and renders the wrongdoer liable for an injury resulting from such misconduct. Cecchi v. Linds (Del.) 75 Atl. 376, 377, 1 Boyce, 185.

Same—Very cautious, prudent, and competent person

"Negligence," as applied to a defendant railroad company, sued for injuries to a passenger, only means a failure to use that high degree of care that would be exercised by a very cautious, competent, and prudent person under similar circumstances. Williamson v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co., 78 S. W. 447, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 145.

"Negligence," when applied to a railroad company and its employes and servants while receiving and transporting passengers, means the failure to use that degree of care which very cautious, prudent, and competent persons usually exercise. St. John v. Gulf C. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 235, 236.

Same—Very prudent person

"Negligence" of a motorman toward an alighting passenger is a failure to use the high degree of care that a very prudent person would have used under like circumstances. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Warren (Tex.) 85 S. W. 26, 27.

Same—Required by circumstances

"Negligence" is the absence of care, according to the circumstances. Martin v. City of Williamsport, 57 Atl. 1063, 206 Pa. 590; Drinkwater v. Quaker City Coopers Co., 57 Atl. 1107, 208 Pa. 649; Anderson v. Hays Mfg. Co., 56 Atl. 345, 348, 207 Pa. 1063 L. R. A. 540; James McNeil & Bro. Co. v. Crucible Steel Co. of America, 56 Atl. 1069, 207 Pa. 493 (citing Anderson v. Hays Mfg. Co., 56 Atl. 345, 207 Pa. 106, 63 L. R. A. 540).

"Negligence" is absence of care according to the circumstances. There was negligence on the part of a contractor in placing a mortar bed on the side of a street near which he was erecting a building where the city, under its powers, had granted him such privilege. White v. Roydhouse 60 Atl. 316, 211 Pa. 13.

"Negligence" is a failure to observe, for the protection of another, that care which the circumstances demand. Culbert v. Wilmington & P. Traction Co. (Del.) 82 Atl. 1063, 1063.

"Negligence" is failure to exercise the degree of care which prudence requires under the circumstances of each particular case. Campbell v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis 147 S. W. 788, 791, 243 Mo. 141.

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise the care appropriate to the circumstances of the particular case. George N. Pierce Co. v. Wells Fargo & Co., 189 Fed. 561, 562, 110 C. A. 645.

"Negligence" is a failure to use in the performance of a duty owing to the individual that degree of care, skill, and diligence which the circumstances of the case reasonably demand." State, to Use of Cardin v. McClellan, 85 S. W. 267, 268, 113 Tenn. 616, Ann. Cas. 992.

The test of "negligence" is not what an ordinarily prudent person would do or omit to do generally, but what an ordinarily prudent person would do or omit to do under circumstances like and similar to those surrounding the person whose conduct is under test. In other words, "negligence" is the want of care required by the circumstances. Olmstead v. City of Olympia, 109 Pac. 602, 604, 59 Wash. 147.

"Negligence" is merely a failure to bestow the care and skill the situation demands, and hence it is more accurate to call it simply negligence. The classification of negligence into three degrees is no longer recognized in this state." Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Walters, 90 Pac. 346, 347, 78 Kan. 39 quoting and adopting definition in 21 A. & E. Enc. of Law [2d Ed.] 459).

"In each case the 'negligence,' whatever epithet we give it, is failure to bestow the care and skill which the situation demands, and hence it is more strictly accurate, perhaps, to call it simply 'negligence.' And this seems to be the tendency of modern authorities. * * * In the case before us, the law, in the absence of special contract, fixes the degree of care and diligence due from the railroad company to the persons carried on its trains. A failure to exercise such care and diligence is 'negligence.' It needs no epithet properly and legally to describe it." Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler, 74 N. E. 705, 710, 215 Ill. 525, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 3 Ann. Cas. 42 (quoting and adopting definition in New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. Ed. 327).

Same—Required by duty

Many definitions have been given of "negligence," among others, that it is a violation of the duty to exercise care. "Negligence" implies a voluntary act or omission. Weeks v. Auburn & Syracuse Electric Ry. Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 636, 638, 60 Misc. Rep. 400 (citing Dowd v. New York, O. & W. R. Co., 63 N. E. 541, 170 N. Y. 169).

"Negligence" is a breach of duty to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances. Vaughn v. Wm. J. Lemp Brewing Co., 132 S. W. 293, 296, 152 Mo. App. 48.

"Negligence" involves the violation of a legal duty which one owes to another in respect to care for the safety of the person or property of that other. Sharkey v. Skilton, 77 Atl. 950, 952, 83 Conn. 503.

"Negligence" is the violation of an obligation to exercise care. That obligation may inhere in the relations into which parties have been brought by contract, but it is not an incident to the making of the contract. Shinkle, Willson & Krels Co. v. Birney & Seymour, 67 N. E. 715, 717, 68 Ohio St. 328.

"Negligence" consists in a legal duty to use care, and its breach, without intention to produce the precise damage which follows, and, in order to be "actionable negligence," must be followed by damage to plaintiff, resulting in a natural and continuous sequence. Interstate R. Co. v. Tyree, 65 S. E. 500, 501, 110 Va. 38.

"Negligence" is the violation of the duty enjoining care and caution in what one does, but the duty is a relative one, and where it has no existence toward a particular party, there can be no such thing as negligence in the legal sense of the term. Hickey v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 148 Ill. App. 197, 207.

An instruction in a personal injury action that "negligence" means the failure to use "that degree of care which the law requires; that is, ordinary care, or the doing of that which ordinary care * * * would dictate should not be done," is not open to the objection that matters of omission are excluded from consideration. Struble v. Burlington, O. R. & N. Ry. Co., 103 N. W. 142, 144, 128 Iowa, 158.

"Negligence," constituting a cause of action, is such an omission by a responsible person to use that degree of care, diligence, and skill, which it was his legal duty to use for the protection of another person from injury, as in a natural and continuous sequence causes unintended damages to the latter. Pullman Co. v. Caviness, 116 S. W. 410, 411, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 540; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'r, 55 S. E. 569, 570, 106 Va. 137, 10 Ann. Cas. 12.

The words "negligence" and "wrongful act" are sufficiently broad to embrace every degree of tort that can be committed against the person. Negligence, constituting a cause of civil action, has been defined as such an omission by a responsible person to use that degree of care, diligence, and skill, which it was his legal duty to use for the protection of another person from injury, as in a natural and continuous sequence causes unintended damage to the latter. The word implies a breach of duty, and a person cannot be legally negligent, so as to subject him to damages, except in respect to others to whom he owes a duty. Howard's Adm'r v. Hunter, 104 S. W. 723, 724, 126 Ky. 685.

"Negligence," constituting a cause of civil action, is such an omission by a responsible person to use that degree of care, diligence, and skill, which it was his legal duty to use for the protection of another person from injury, as in a natural and continuous sequence, causes unintended damage to the latter. An essential element of negligence, as is shown from this definition, is, as in all other species of tort, a legal duty. Without such legal duty, and a breach of it, there can be no negligence or any other species of tort." Where an employer fails to furnish an employé medical attendance, as he has agreed to do, the employé's cause of action is not in tort for negligence, but is for breach of contract. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hennegan, 76 S. W. 452, 454, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 314.

"There can be no 'negligence' in a legal sense unless there is a violation of a legal duty to exercise care." Therefore a railroad company, owning real property abutting on a street, is not required to construct a fence sufficiently strong to provide against the contingency of a crowd of trespassers going on the inclosed property and pushing the fence over on a person walking in the street; such injury not being the reasonable and proximate result of the defective fence. Grogan v. Pennsylvania R., 62 Atl. 924, 925, 213 Pa. 340.

"'Negligence' can in law only be predicated upon a failure to use the degree of care required by law in the discharge of a duty imposed thereby." Where a car cleaner, attempting to climb over a string of cars likely to be moved at any minute, was knocked off and killed through the cars being pushed in the ordinary way in switching operations under the charge of other employées, who had no reason to expect that he was on the cars or intended to try to cross over between them, and could not see him, they were not negligent. Hall v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. (Tex.) 125 S. W. 946, 949.

"Negligence" on the part of a railroad company is the omission on its part to do something which persons conducting a railroad with reasonable care and caution should do. McCormick v. Detroit, Grand Haven & M. R. Co., 104 N. W. 390, 391, 141 Mich. 17 (citing Flagg v. Chicago, D. & C. G. T. J. Ry. Co., 55 N. W. 444, 96 Mich. 30, 24 L. R. A. 835).

It is the duty of a carrier of passengers to exercise the highest degree of care that would be used by every prudent person under the same or similar circumstances to avoid and prevent injury to passengers upon its cars, and a failure to exercise such high degree of care constitutes "negligence." Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Norton, 119 S. W. 702, 706, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 478.

"Negligence," when applied to carriers of passengers, means the failure of a performance of duty, imposed by law for the protection of others, to exercise that high degree of care in acting and refraining from acting which very competent and prudent persons would usually exercise under same or other similar circumstances. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Harrison, S. W. 38, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 368.

The degree of care required by a carrier of passengers and the precise duty which owes to them is clearly defined in the law. The carrier owes to the passenger the exercise of the utmost care and diligence which human foresight can use, though not an insurer of the safety of the passenger. A breach of that duty is "negligence," and any injury results therefrom, and is the consequence thereof, an action will lie at suit of the person thus injured. It is a breach of the duty which is owed that constitutes the cause of action. Philadelphia, & W. R. Co. v. Allen, 62 Atl. 245, 246, 1 Md. 110 (citing Baltimore City Pass. Ry. v. Nugent, 38 Atl. 779, 86 Md. 349, 39 L. R. 161).

As want of due, proper, and ordinary care

Due care defined, see Due Care.

Ordinary care defined, see Ordinary Care.

"Negligence" is the want of due care. Wofford v. Clinton Cotton Mills, 51 S. E. 919, 72 S. C. 346 (quoting and adopting definition in Carter v. Columbia & G. R. Co., S. C. 24, 45 Am. Rep. 754).

"'Negligence' is but the absence of due care." Cornovski v. St. Louis Transit Co. 106 S. W. 51, 56, 207 Mo. 263.

The simplest definition of "negligence" is absence of due care under the circumstances. Nord v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper Silver Min. Co., 75 Pac. 681, 684, 30 Mont.

"Negligence" is the want of due care that is, of such care as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Seininski v. Wilmington Leather Co. (Del.) 83 Atl. 20, 24.

"'Negligence' is the opposite of due care where due care is found there is no negligence. If there is a want of due care, there is negligence." Raymond v. Portland Co., 62 Atl. 602, 605, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. (N. S.) 94.

"Negligence" rests in tort. It is the absence of due care which is a duty lying at the root of the social compact. Charlton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 98 S. W. 529, 520 Mo. 413.

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise proper degree of care in the performance of some legal duty which one owes another causing unintended damages. Foot v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 54 S. E. 843, 844, 142 C. 52.

There are no degrees of "negligence." There are degrees of care, and a failure to exercise that proper degree of care as the law requires is "negligence." Rattan v. O ral Electric Ry. Co., 96 S. W. 735, 737, 120 Mo. App. 270 (quoting and adopting definition in Magrane v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 81 S. W. 158, 183 Mo. 119).

Where an accident proceeds from an act of such a character that when due care is taken in its performance no injury ordinarily ensues from it in similar cases, it will be presumed to be "negligent." Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 122 S. W. 1125, 1127, 139 Mo. App. 502.

While the term "negligence" is popularly used to mean an act or omission which is wrongful under the circumstances, as resulting from the failure to exercise the proper care for the protection of others, without regard to resulting injury to any particular person, the legal conception of "actionable negligence," for which recovery may be had, is such an omission to use the degree of care for the protection of another from injury as should have been used under the circumstances and which in a natural and continuous sequence causes damage to the latter. Cresswell v. Wainwright, 134 N. W. 594, 599, 154 Iowa, 167.

One lawfully using electricity to operate a street railroad system in a city must exercise such constant care as a man of reasonable prudence would exercise, considering the obligation to protect persons from danger, and the care must be commensurate with the danger; "negligence" consisting in the want of proper care, in view of the circumstances. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Murphy, 58 South. 817, 819, 2 Ala. App. 588.

"Negligence" has been defined to be the "absence of care, according to the circumstances." Also in "its civil relations is such an inadvertent imperfection by a responsible human agent in the discharge of a legal duty, as immediately produces, in an ordinary and natural sequence, a damage to another. The inadvertency, or want of due consideration of duty, is the injuria on which, when naturally followed by the damnum, the suit is based." According to another work, "negligence" consists of "an omission by a responsible party to use that degree of care, diligence, and skill which it was his legal duty to use for the protection of another person from injury, as, in a natural and continuous sequence, causes unintended damage to the latter." Again, "negligence consists in doing something which a reasonably prudent man would not have done under the circumstances, or in failing to do something which a reasonably prudent man, under the circumstances, would have done." All these definitions mean the same thing, viz., that "negligence" is the absence of due care, and due care is a care adjusting itself to the circumstances of the case. Dean v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co., 97 S. W. 910, 917, 199 Mo. 386 (quoting in order Wharton, Neg. § 3; Shearman & Red- field, Neg. § 3; and McMahon v. Pacific Exp. Co., 34 S. W. 478, 132 Mo. 641).

As want of ordinary care

Ordinary care defined, see Ordinary Care.

"Negligence" is the lack or want of ordinary care. Tobias v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 358, 360; Murray v. St. Louis Transit Co., 75 S. W. 611, 612, 176 Mo. 183.

"Negligence" is the failure to use or exercise ordinary care. Adkisson's Adm'r v. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. (Ky.) 110 S. W. 284, 286; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Joshlin (Ky.) 110 S. W. 382, 385; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Logsdon, 71 S. W. 905, 906, 114 Ky. 746; Cross v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 110 S. W. 290, 292; Louisville Ry. Co. v. Bouterlier (Ky.) 110 S. W. 357, 360; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Evans' Adm'r, 110 S. W. 844, 848, 129 Ky. 152; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth, 114 S. W. 264, 268, 130 Ky. 759; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Russell, 110 S. W. 317, 319, 129 Ky. 14; Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hubbard, 76 S. W. 764, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 343; Reyburn v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 86 S. W. 174, 176, 187 Mo. 535.

"Negligence" consists of the failure to use ordinary care under the circumstances. Smith's Adm'r v. Norfolk & P. Traction Co., 63 S. E. 1005, 1006, 109 Va. 453.

"Negligence" is the failure to do something that the doer in the exercise of ordinary care should have done. Shemwell v. Owensboro & N. R. Co., 78 S. W. 448, 449, 117 Ky. 556.

"Negligence" is the absence of ordinary care, and ordinary care is that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under circumstances like or similar to those shown. Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Stillwell, 124 S. W. 202, 204, 142 Ky. 330.

"Negligence" is a want of the care ordinarily exercised by the great mass of persons under like circumstances. Bandekow v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 117 N. W. 812, 813, 136 Wis. 341.

"Negligence" is the want of the ordinary care which a reasonably prudent man would exercise under like circumstances. Butler v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 78 Atl. 871, 872, 2 Boyce, 262.

"Negligence" is a want of "ordinary care"; that is, such care as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise under similar circumstances. Dorris v. Warford, 100 S. W. 312, 313, 124 Ky. 768, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090, 14 Ann. Cas. 602.

"Negligence" is the want of ordinary care; want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under the circumstances. Short v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co., 76 Atl. 363, 364, 7 Pennewill, 108.

"Negligence" has been defined to be the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances. Boudwin v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 60 Atl. 865, 4 Pennewill, 381; MacFeat v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 62 Atl. 898, 905, 5 Pennewill, 52; Campbell v. Walker (Del.) 78 Atl. 601, 603, 2 Boyce, 41.

"Negligence" is the want of ordinary care, or such care as persons of average prudence would exercise under the same circumstances. A mere error in judgment is not necessarily negligence. Carney v. Concord St. Ry., 57 Atl. 218, 222, 72 N. H. 364.

"Negligence" is defined to be 'injury occasioned to another by want of ordinary care,' etc." Bacon v. Kearney Vineyard Syndicate, 82 Pac. 84, 85, 1 Cal. App. 275.

"Negligence" was properly defined as a want of ordinary care and failure to exercise that care which a man of ordinary prudence would have exercised under the circumstances, or a failure to perform some duty imposed by law. Jones v. American Warehouse Co., 51 S. E. 106, 108, 138 N. C. 546.

Want of ordinary care is "negligence," but want of extraordinary care, or that care which is customarily exercised by extraordinarily careful people, is "slight negligence," and the latter does not affect the rights of parties injured. Hackett v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 124 N. W. 1018, 1022, 141 Wis. 464.

"By the term 'negligence' is meant the failure to observe ordinary care." Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Terrell, 100 S. W. 292, 293, 124 Ky. 822, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927.

Statement in a charge that "'negligence,' as that term is used in this charge, means the failure to exercise ordinary care," is sufficient, in connection with the preceding paragraph, defining "ordinary care" to be "the exercise of that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under like or similar circumstances." Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. Miller (Tex.) 85 S. W. 439.

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise the ordinary care of prudent men under all the attending circumstances. Stephenson v. Corder, 80 Pac. 938, 939, 71 Kan. 475, 69 L. R. A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500 (quoting Thompson v. Neg. § 50).

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise ordinary care, such care as a reasonable man under like circumstances would exercise. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Smith, 145 Fed. 891, 893, 76 C. C. A. 423.

"Negligence" is the failure to use ordinary care, which is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would usually exercise under circumstances similar to those proven in the case under investigation. Henderson City Ry. Co. v. Lockett (Ky.) 98 S. W. 303.

"Negligence" is the failure to exercise ordinary care. And "ordinary care" is that degree of care which an ordinary, prudent and careful person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Gulf, C. S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hays, 89 S. W. 29, 32, Tex. Civ. App. 162.

"Negligence" is properly defined in an instruction as a failure to use ordinary care and ordinary care which ordinarily prudent persons are accustomed to exercise under like or similar circumstances. Louisville & N. Co. v. Lynch, 126 S. W. 362, 363, 365, 137 Ky. 696.

"Negligence" is a failure to exercise ordinary care, or a degree of care that would be used by a person of ordinary prudence under the same or similar circumstances. Moore v. Lindell Ry. Co., 75 S. W. 672, 674, 176 Mo. 528.

"Negligence" has been termed the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances. It has been termed the failure to observe, for protection of the interest of another, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. Goldstein v. People's R. Co. (Del.) Atl. 975, 976, 5 Pennewill, 306.

"Ordinary care" means such care as a person of ordinary prudence as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the circumstances detailed in evidence, and "negligence" means the failure to exercise ordinary care. Heberling v. City of Warrensburg, 108 S. W. 36, 37, 204 Mo. 604 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cohn v. Kansas City, 18 S. W. 97, 108 Mo. 392).

The word "negligence," as used in an instruction for the wrongful death of an employee, means the failure to use ordinary care. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cane's Adm'r (Ky.) 90 S. W. 1061, 1064.

Defining "negligence" as a failure to exercise ordinary care was held to state the proper test of "negligence," though the case involved the life of an infant four years old. Hanley v. Ft. Dodge Light & Power Co., 101 N. W. 593, 594, 133 Iowa, 326.

"Negligence" has been termed the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances. It has been termed the failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. Di Prisco v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 57 Atl. 906, 909, 4 Pennewill, 527; Bowring v. Wilmington Malleable Iron Co. (Del.) Atl. 369, 371, 5 Pennewill, 594.

Where the charge of negligence is a general one, and plaintiff shows that the injury complained of occurred under such circumstances that it may be reasonably inferred that, if ordinary care had been used by defendant, the injury would not have resulted, and thereby makes a prima facie case, and shifts on defendant the burden of proving due care. Freeman v. Freeman, 125 S. W. 524, 26, 141 Mo. App. 359.

"Negligence" is the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under like circumstances. What constitutes "negligence" is a question of law for the court, but whether "negligence" existed in the particular case is a question of fact for the jury. Neal v. Wilmington & N. E. Electric R. Co. (Del.) 53 Atl. 338, 339, 8 Pennewill, 467.

"Negligence" is the want of ordinary care according to the circumstances, and the circumstances are everything in considering his question. The ordinary care of a business man in his own affairs is one thing, and the ordinary care of a gratuitous mandatory is quite another matter. The one implies an oversight and knowledge of every detail of his business; the other suggests such care only as a man can give in a short space of time to the business of other persons from whom he receives any compensation." Mason v. Moore, 76 N. E. 932, 937, 73 Ohio St. 275, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 40 (quoting and adopting definition in Swentzel v. Penn Bank, 23 Atl. 405, 414, 147 Pa. 40, 15 L. R. A. 305, 30 Am. St. Rep. 718).

Where strict accuracy of expression required an instruction that an employer must exercise ordinary care to furnish his employes with reasonably safe places in which to work, the omission of the words "exercise ordinary care" is not ground for reversal, where the jury were told that the employer is liable only for his negligence, and that negligence is the failure to use ordinary care. Kamera v. Missouri Boiler Works, 108 Pac. 806, 807, 82 Kan. 432.

An instruction that "ordinary care," as used in instructions given in an action against a railroad for the death of a traveler in a collision with a train at a crossing, meant such care as ordinarily prudent persons would exercise under circumstances similar to those proven in the case, and that "negligence" was the failure to exercise ordinary care, was correct. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r (Ky.) 98 S. W. 308, 313.

"Negligence" on the part of a railroad company is the failure on its part to use ordinary care; "that is, such degree of care as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would have used under the circumstances." Where the court defined "negligence" of a railroad company to be the failure to use such care as an ordinarily prudent person would use under similar circumstances, the refusal of a charge containing substantially the same definition, and the qualification that, in determining whether an act is negligence, the jury will take into consideration all the circumstances and will not view the situation from a retrospective point of view, was not erroneous. Galveston H. & N. Ry. Co. v. Olds (Tex.) 112 S. W. 789, 792.

Since the term "negligence" has been construed to mean "want of ordinary care," it would have been the better practice had the trial court used the latter term instead of the former word in his submission of questions to the jury, under Laws 1907, c. 254, providing that in an action for injuries against a railroad company the judge should submit to the jury the questions, first, as to whether the company, or any officer, other than the person injured, was guilty of negligence, and, second, if that question is answered in the affirmative, whether the person injured was guilty of negligence, etc. Jensen v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 982, 985, 986, 145 Wis. 326.

"Negligence" is the want of "ordinary care." As applied to a street car motorman in the case of a collision with a vehicle, it means the neglect to use "ordinary care" in observing it or to check the car so as to avoid hitting it. Petersen v. St. Louis Transit Co., 97 S. W. 860, 863, 199 Mo. 331.

A charge that "negligence" as applied to a passenger is a failure to exercise ordinary care for his own safety—that is, such care as an "ordinarily prudent person" would exercise under the same or similar circumstances—was not erroneous in failing to require the passenger to use such care as a "person of ordinary prudence" would exercise. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Parks, 90 S. W. 343, 345, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 480.

Defining "negligence" as the want or failure to use ordinary care—that is, that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would use under like circumstances to avoid injury or accident—does not define the degree of care required of a carrier in respect to a passenger getting on a car, which is, in substance, "such a high degree of foresight as to possible dangers, and such a high degree of prudence in guarding against them, as would be used by very cautious, prudent, and competent persons under similar circumstances." Green v. Houston Electric Co., 89 S. W. 442, 443, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 260 (citing International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Hailoren, 53 Tex. 53, 37 Am. Rep. 744; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Welch, 24 S. W. 390, 86 Tex. 203, 40 Am. St. Rep. 820).

"Negligence" has often been defined by the court to be the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would use under similar circumstances. Recovery on the ground of negligence may be had for suddenly starting a street car while a passenger is in the act of alighting therefrom, if it is shown to be the fault of the company, and that injuries to the passenger were caused thereby. Benson v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 75 Atl. 793, 794, 1 Boyce, 202.

In an action against a railroad for injuries to an employé through a defective car step, an instruction that if defendant, through its inspectors and repairers, exercised ordinary care to see that the equipment of the car was in reasonably safe condition, "and were not guilty of negligence," the verdict must be for defendant, was not misleading as adding, by the use of the words "and were not guilty of negligence," something to defendant's duty beyond the exercise of ordinary care; the court having clearly defined "negligence" as the failure to use ordinary care. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. O'Keefe, 110 S. W. 1002, 1003, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 579.

In an action for delay in delivering a telegram, an instruction defining "negligence" as the failure to use ordinary care to deliver the message, and instructing that if, because of such failure, plaintiff was unable to be with his father before his death, he could recover such damages, if any, as he suffered on account of defendant's negligence, was not objectionable as asserting as a fact that plaintiff was unable to be with his father before his death in consequence of defendant's failure to deliver the telegram promptly. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Mack (Tex.) 128 S. W. 921, 923.

In conducting the affairs of a hospital, its officers and agents are as liable to commit acts of negligence as are the officers and agents of a railroad or other business corporation. Men in general are not uniformly careful. Experience shows that "negligence"—the failure to exercise ordinary care—is to be expected when men engage in industrial pursuits. It may, not inappropriately, be said to be necessarily incidental in the accomplishment of most practical results through the agency of man. Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Ass'n, 64 Atl. 190, 193, 73 N. H. 556, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496.

As want of reasonable care

"Negligence" is a failure to exercise reasonable care. Jarrell v. Blackbird Block Coal Co., 136 S. W. 754, 756, 154 Mo. App. 552.

"Negligence" is the want of reasonable care, or a failure to use such care as an ordinarily careful man would use in like circumstances. Klair v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 78 Atl. 1085, 1086, 1098, 2 Boyce, 274.

"Negligence" is the absence of reasonable care. What is reasonable care depends on the conditions of danger or lack of danger. In some cases very little care suffices to fulfill the rule of reasonable care, while in others the highest degree of care is required to do so. Warth v. Kastriner, 100 N. Y. Supp. 278, 279, 114 App. Div. 766.

As want of reasonable care and diligence

An instruction defining "negligence" as "the want or omission of reasonable care and diligence, the failure to do something which a reasonable person guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, under the circumstances would do, or the doing of something which such person under such circumstances, would not do," was proper. Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co., 106 N. W. 359, 361, 131 Iowa, 724.

As want of care and prudence

The degree of negligence necessary to fasten liability upon a person is that degree which is equivalent to lack of such care and prudence as ordinary men habitually exercise for their own personal safety. The General De Sonis, 179 Fed. 123, 125.

Same—Man of ordinary intelligence

An instruction that the term "negligence" means the want of that care and prudence which a man of ordinary intelligence would exercise under all the circumstances of the situation is erroneous, where the case is bot-tomed on negligence, and defended on the ground of contributory negligence, since it does not correctly define the term, and since the word "intelligence" is not a synonym for either "caution," "prudence," or "care," for a very intelligent man may be a very imprudent one, or an unusually or unnecessarily cautious one, and he is not the man who exercises ordinary care about his own concerns; and therefore the use of the word "intelligence" instead of the term "prudence" furnished the jury no definition of negligence. Van Cleve v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 101 S. W. 632, 634, 124 Mo. App. 224.

As want of ordinary care and prudence

"Negligence" consists of the failure to use ordinary care and prudence under the circumstances. One who has a reasonable basis for belief that another is aware of a source of danger may act on the assumption that the latter is aware of it, and will make reasonable efforts to save himself; but a motorman having a reasonable basis for the belief that an adult person on the track is aware of the approach of the car may presume that he will get out of danger as the car approaches; but a motorman sounding his bell cannot assume that all within hearing will take notice that a car is approaching, and he can make no such assumption in justification of his failure to take reasonable precautions until at least he has reasonable grounds for believing that his warning is heeded or the presence of the car recognized, and that the person threatened is competent to protect himself by the exercise of ordinary care. Riley v. Consolidated R. Co., 72 Atl. 562, 563, 82 Conn. 105, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880.

As want of foresight and prudence

A charge that "negligence," as applied to railroads engaged in the transportation of passengers, is a failure to exercise such a high degree of foresight as to possible dangers and such a high degree of prudence in guarding against them as would be used by very cautious, prudent, and competent persons under the same or similar circumstances, correctly defines "negligence" as applied to the duty owed by a carrier to its passengers, and is sufficient when taken in connection with a further charge that the railroad does not, by accepting a passenger, become an insurer of his safety, but is only bound to use a high degree of care, etc. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Parks, 90 Mo. W. 343, 345, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 480.

As want of reasonable diligence, caution, and foresight

Failure of a master to exercise such reasonable diligence, caution, and foresight as a prudent man would exercise under similar circumstances to guard employes against injuries is "negligence." Sandridge v. Atchison, M. & S. F. Ry. Co., 193 Fed. 867, 872, 113 C. L. A. 653.

Willfulness distinguished

Mere "negligence" and "willfulness" are not synonymous terms. Southern Ry. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812.

An act done willingly and on full information is not done negligently. Negligence is the result of inattention or oversight. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works, 80 Mo. W. 292, 296, 106 Mo. App. 167.

Negligence cannot be of such degree as to become willfulness. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Starks, 92 N. E. 54, 56, 174 Ind. 345.

There are no degrees of negligence, and negligence, no matter how reprehensible, can never approximate willfulness. Vandalla R. Co. v. Clem, 96 N. E. 789, 790, 49 Ind. App. 94.

The term "negligence" suggests only inadvertence or want of ordinary care, and, however great may be the degree of such want of care, so long as inadvertence remains, willfulness is excluded. Rideout v. Winnebago Tractor Co., 101 N. W. 672, 674, 123 Wis. 297, 69 L. R. A. 601.

The term "willful negligence" is a misleading and contradictory expression. Conduct cannot be both "willful" and "negligent," as "negligence" involves inattention, and "willfulness," intention. Anderson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 114 N. W. 1123, 1126, 103 Minn. 224, dissenting opinion (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7468, 7835; Bolin v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 84 N. W. 446, 106 Wis. 333, 81 Am. St. Rep. 911; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perkins, 44 South. 602, 152 Ala. 133; Lake Shore

& M. S. Ry. Co. v. Bodemer, 29 N. E. 692, 139 Ill. 596, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218).

"Willfulness" implies design. It involves conduct which is quasi criminal. "Willfulness" and "negligence" are held inconsistent. Purpose or design is foreign to negligence. Willfulness cannot be inferred from a mere knowledge on the part of operatives of the presence of the injured party. Before it will be inferred, such operatives must have knowledge also of the inability of the injured party to avoid the injury. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ferrell, 78 N. E. 988, 989, 39 Ind. App. 515.

"An inadvertent failure to observe due care indicates mere 'negligence,' but an advertent or conscious failure to observe due care passes beyond mere negligence into 'want-onness' or 'willfulness.'" Tinaley v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 51 S. E. 913, 914, 72 S. C. 350.

In order to constitute willfulness or want-onness or reckless indifference to probable consequences, the act done or omitted must be done or omitted with a knowledge or a present consciousness that injury will probably result; and this consciousness is not to be implied from mere knowledge of the elements of the dangerous situation a person may be in and negligent and inadvertent acts in respect of the peril. Duncan v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 44 South. 418, 422, 152 Ala. 118.

Where defendant's conduct resulting in an injury is willful, it is no longer negligence, and hence the defense of contributory negligence cannot arise; such defense being only applicable where negligence is charged against defendant. Hawks v. Slusher, 104 Pac. 883, 884, 55 Or. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 491.

"Negligence" may result from omission respecting duty. An "act" or "wrongful act" denotes affirmative action or performance, and an expression of will or purpose as distinguished from "omission" or "wrongful omission," which denotes a negative and inaction. Randle v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 53 South. 918, 921, 169 Ala. 314.

Negligence and carelessness are generally esteemed as not only not willfulness, but rather the opposite. Schooler v. Harrington, 81 S. W. 468, 469, 106 Mo. App. 607 (following Gibeline v. Smith, 80 S. W. 961, 106 Mo. App. 545).

"Willfulness" and "negligence" are diametrically opposed; negligence importing inattention, inadvertence, and indifference, while willfulness imports intention, purpose, and design; and there being no negligence with, and no willfulness without, intent. Barrett v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 96 N. E. 490, 492, 48 Ind. App. 668.

A conscious act or neglect is willful, though there is no evil intent, but willfulness implies something more than mere failure to use ordinary care; there being a clear distinction between a "negligent omission" and a "willful failure" to act. Cook v. Big Muddy-Carterville Mining Co., 94 N. E. 90, 94, 249 Ill. 41.

"Willfulness" means something more than mere oversight, carelessness, neglect, or even shiftlessness. True, in the legal sense of the word, an intentional act is ordinarily willful; but the intentional act in opening a gate or leaving it open does not necessarily imply an intention that cattle shall pass through such gate on a railroad track. Claus v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 111 N. W. 15, 16, 136 Iowa, 7.

"Willfulness" or "wantonness," as applied in cases of injury to a person by a breach of duty, where the peril of the person injured is known, means a direct intent to inflict injury, or an act done or omitted, with the consciousness that the act or omission will probably eventuate in injury. Anniston Electric & Gas Co. v. Rosen, 48 South. 798, 799, 802, 159 Ala. 195, 133 Am. St. Rep. 32.

"Willfulness" is the intentional doing of some act or the failure to do some act, according to one's own will, regardless of the right of others, when the party knows, "or is under legal obligation to know," that the doing or the failing to do such act might cause injury to other persons. Geddings v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 75 S. E. 284, 91 S. C. 477.

"Negligence" and 'willfulness' are the opposites of each other. They indicate radically different mental states. * * * Negligence is also to be carefully distinguished from fraud; the distinction arising in this case, as before, upon the element of inadvertence. Fraud is invariably intentional, either actually or constructively; negligence is never so." Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, of Liverpool, Eng., v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 636, 647, 648, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

"Willfulness" and 'negligence' are the opposites of each other; the former signifying the presence of intention, and the latter its absence." Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co., 101 N. W. 672, 675, 123 Wis. 297, 69 L. R. A. 601 (quoting and adopting definition in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 49 N. E. 445, 449, 149 Ind. 490-501).

"Willfulness" and 'negligence' are the opposites of each other; the one signifying the presence of intention or purpose, the other its absence. This distinction has not always been observed. Consequently there are cases that use the terms 'gross' or 'willful' negligence to designate willful injuries. Late cases have made the distinction clear. And the principle of the responsibility of the willful wrongdoer for all the consequences of his misconduct is really an old one." Morrison

v. Lee, 113 N. W. 1025, 1029, 16 N. D. 377, L. R. A. (N. S.) 560.

"Willfulness" and 'negligence' are the opposites of each other; the former signifying the presence of intention, and the latter its absence. Negligence arises from inattention, thoughtlessness, while willfulness cannot exist without purpose or design, * * * and when willfulness is the essential in the act or conduct charged to the party with wrong, the case ceases to be one of negligence." Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Roe, 102 W. 343, 346, 118 Tenn. 601 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 49 N. E. 445, 149 Ind. 490).

The conflict in instructions submitted on the issue of negligence of defendant and the issue of a willful wrongful act cannot be harmonized on the theory that the term "negligence," as used in the first instruction, covers willful acts, since "negligence" signifies the absence of care and implies a failure of duty and excludes an idea of intention or wrong, while "willful negligence" implies intentional failure to perform a manifest duty. Tognazzini v. Freeman, 123 Pac. 554, 18 Cal. App. 468.

An instruction that "willful" is what the word implies, it means an act proceeding from a will, done of a purpose, an intention to do it, and that "willfulness" is an act which proceeds from the will so as to make the act a purpose act, was not error, where the court in connection therewith illustrated the difference between "negligence" and "willfulness." Talbert v. Charleston & Western C. Ry., 51 S. E. 564, 72 S. C. 137.

A complaint for willful injury must show that the injurious act was purposely done, with an intent to inflict willfully and purposely the particular injury complained of; "willfulness" being a desire or intent to produce a certain result, and inconsistent with negligence. Southern Ry. Co. v. Neeley, 88 N. E. 714, 715, 44 Ind. App. 126.

NEGLIGENCE PER SE

The words "per se," when used as descriptive of negligence, merely refer to the method by which its existence is to be ascertained from the facts. Platt v. Southern Photo Material Co., 60 S. E. 1068, 1071, 4 Cal. App. 159.

It is well settled that, in order that an act shall be "negligence per se," it must have been done contrary to a statutory duty or it must appear so opposed to the dictates of common prudence that it can be so without hesitation or doubt that no care person would have committed it. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Hawkins, 108 S. W. 736, 740, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 5 (quoting Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Gasscan, 7 S. W. 227, 69 Tex. 545).

It is not negligence per se to rise from seat and step to the side of a slowly moving open car which is coming to a stop, for the purpose of getting upon the runboard to alight when the car does stop. Davis v. Camden, G. & W. R. Co., 63 Atl. 843, 844, 73 N. J. Law, 415 (citing Scott v. Bergen County Traction Co., 43 Atl. 1060, 63 N. J. Law, 18; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Thalheim, 37 Atl. 132, 59 N. J. Law, 474).

As omission of acts required by statute or ordinance

It has been declared that "the omission specified acts of diligence prescribed by statute or by a valid municipal ordinance is negligence per se." Generally a court cannot instruct a jury that certain acts constitute "negligence per se," but there is an exception where a statute or municipal ordinance requires the performance of the act. Southern R. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 12 Ga. 812 (citing Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Smith, 3 S. E. 397, 78 Ga. 699; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4764).

"There are certain things which amount to 'negligence in law,' whether any positive or active negligence be proved or not. The violation of an ordinance of this city is of itself (per se, as we may say) an act of negligence, which only requires to be proved to render a wrongdoer liable for any injury resulting from such misconduct. In such case, however, the defendant would not be liable unless the violation of the ordinance—that is, the excessive speed of the train—caused the accident complained of; nor would the defendant be liable if the injury was caused by the negligence of the deceased. The law does not permit any one to recover damages from another for an injury if his own negligence has contributed thereto, or where by the exercise of reasonable care he could have avoided it." MacFeat v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 62 Atl. 898, 905, 906, 5 Pennewill, 52.

A violation of Acts 1905, c. 169, making it an offense for an engineer to run his locomotive across the tracks of any other railroad without first coming to a stop and ascertaining that there is no train approaching, is negligence per se. Louisville & N. Ry. & Lighting Co. v. Hynes, 91 N. E. 962, 964, 47 Ind. App. 507.

NEGLIGENT

See, also, Negligence.

"A 'negligent act' is an inadvertent act." Brown v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 Atl. 194, 201, 73 N. H. 568.

The phrase "act of negligence," as applied to the conduct of servants, includes any conduct whether evinced by movement of the organs of speech or some other physical movement, and hence where a conductor told a passenger to jump from a train as it was in motion, when in fact it was not in motion, and the passenger became excited and jumped and was injured, the statement of the conductor amounted to an "act of negligence." Staines v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 61 Atl. 385, 72 N. J. Law, 268.

The terms "negligent delay" and "unreasonable delay" are used interchangeably and are of the same meaning. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Gillett (Tex.) 99 S. W. 712, 713.

If acts are such as an ordinarily prudent person would have committed under the same circumstances, they are not "negligent." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Massie's Adm'r, 128 S. W. 330, 332, 138 Ky. 449.

An instruction that the terms "negligence," "negligent," and "negligently" import a want of such attention to the natural or probable consequence of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns, being in the exact language of Rev. Codes, 1905, § 9522, is sufficient, especially where no more specific instruction was asked. Zillke v. Johnson, 132 N. W. 640, 644, 22 N. D. 75, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1005.

NEGLIGENT HOMICIDE

In a prosecution for "negligent homicide," the court should instruct that, in the act of defendant of handling the pistol with which he shot deceased, there must be an apparent danger of causing the latter's death. Saye v. State, 99 S. W. 551, 552, 554, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 569.

Broadly speaking, in the case of homicide by shooting, in order to entitle the state to a conviction for "negligent homicide" the jury should be required to find first that the shooting was accidental or unintentional and that it was under circumstances from which the law would raise the imputation of negligence. Joy v. State, 123 S. W. 584, 589, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 93.

Under the express provisions of Pen. Code 1895, art. 686, there must be an apparent danger of causing the death of a person killed or another, in order to constitute the offense of "negligent homicide" denounced by article 684, providing that, if a person in the performance of a lawful act shall by negligence and carelessness cause the death of another, he shall be guilty of "negligent homicide in the first degree." Gorden v. State (Tex.) 90 S. W. 636, 637.

In view of Pen. Code 1895, arts. 683-689, 693, 694, to constitute "negligent homicide," the act must be unlawful and a misdemeanor, and must be accompanied by want of proper care and caution, and there must be apparent danger of causing the death of the person killed, and no apparent intention to kill. Talbot v. State, 125 S. W. 906, 907, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 324.

Defendant, keeper of a baguio, had trouble with a man therein, and he went out, being immediately followed by deceased and his party. The testimony for the state was that the defendant then called for a pistol, aimed it towards the party, and fired, saying, "Run you, * * * run," and that on her going inside, being asked if they ran, she said, "Yes." She and her witnesses testified that no shot was fired from the house. Held, that "negligent homicide" was not in the case, but manslaughter, of which she was convicted, was the lowest grade of homicide of which she could be found guilty. Clifton v. State, 84 S. W. 237, 239, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 472.

NEGLIGENT OPERATION

"Negligent" operation is the failure to use the proper means at hand in a proper and careful way as persons of ordinary prudence do under like conditions for their own safety. Central Coal & Iron Co. v. Pearce (Ky.) 80 S. W. 449, 450.

NEGLIGENT OR UNLAWFUL FIRE

Where a fire insurance policy contained an exception that the company would not be liable for loss caused by explosion of any kind unless fire ensued, and in that event for the damages by fire only, a loss occurring solely from an explosion, not by a preceding fire, or an explosion which occurred from the contact of escaping natural gas with a lighted match, are within the exceptions of the policy; the rule being that the ignition of the explosive substance must be caused by an actual combustion involuntarily or illegally started, which is called a negligent or unlawful fire, and not a harmless combustion such as a lighted match, burning gas jets, or a lighted cigar, which are called innocent fires. Stephens v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 123 S. W. 63, 66, 139 Mo. App. 369.

NEGLIGENTLY

The words "carelessly" and "negligently" are synonymous. Southern Ry. Co. v. Horine, 49 S. E. 285, 121 Ga. 386; Mascot Coal Co. v. Garrett, 47 South. 149, 151, 156 Ala. 290 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 974).

An interrogatory as to whether defendant's locomotive was operated properly, the complaint alleging that it was carelessly operated, is improper as calling for a conclusion; the word "properly," as used, being the antonym of "negligently." Southern Ry. Co. v. De Pauw (Ind.) 90 N. E. 27, 29.

The word "negligently" means the failure to exercise ordinary care. Toebbe v. City of Covington, 141 S. W. 421, 423, 145 Ky. 763.

The term "negligently," when applied to the failure of a carrier of passengers to perform its duty to safely carry its passengers, means the failure to use the highest degree of care; and the "highest degree of care" means the utmost care exercised by prudent and skillful persons in the management and operation of trains. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemp's Adm'r, 149 S. W. 835, 836, 149 Ky. 344.

Under an allegation in a petition against a railroad company for negligent treatment of plaintiff employé at the company's hospital stating that the surgeon furnished "carelessly and negligently and unnecessarily" performed a specified operation, the words "carelessly and negligently" are not synonymous with "unnecessarily"; the latter term negating necessity for the operation, while the other terms refer to the manner of performing the operation. Williams v. Union Pacific Co. (Wyo.) 124 Pac. 505, 508.

An instruction that the terms "negligence," "negligent," and "negligently" imply a want of such attention to the natural probable consequence of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in dealing in his own concerns, being in the language of Rev. Codes 1905, § 9522, is sufficient, especially where no more specific instruction was asked. Zilke v. Johnson, 19 N. W. 640, 644, 22 N. D. 75, Ann. Cas. 1905, 1005.

The clause of an instruction declaring plaintiff entitled to recover if defendant "negligently failed to stop said automobile" is enough to prevent frightening said horse, and does not charge defendant with liability for the mere finding that the horses were frightened by the automobile, the word "negligently" referring to the duty to stop as defined by the instructions, requiring defendant to maintain a vigilant watch and to stop at the appearance of danger, and the instructions requiring, as a condition to recovery, that defendant's failure should have been the proximate cause of the injury. Sapp v. Hurst, 115 S. W. 463, 466, 134 Mo. App. 685.

NEGOTIABLE

See Not Negotiable.

The term "negotiable" means that an endorsee for value without notice becomes owner of the paper unaffected by equities or defenses existing between the original parties. Bank of Sampson v. Hatcher, 66 S. E. 308, 810, 151 N. C. 359, 134 Am. St. Rep. 308.

NEGOTIABLE BILL OF EXCHANGE

An instrument directing the drawer to pay to the order of the payee named a specified sum to be deducted from money due the drawer on loans, and accepted by the drawee is not a negotiable bill of exchange within the Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. I. C. 1909, c. 38) § 210, defining a bill of exchange as an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand at a fixed or determinable future time a certain sum in money to order or to bearer, is only an equitable assignment of money.

due or to become due from the drawee to the drawer, and liability arises either if the proceeds of the moneys to be advanced on the loans come into the drawee's hands, or if through some act on his part performance of the contract out of which such funds might have otherwise arisen was prevented, and the payee may not recover on the instrument in the absence of evidence establishing either of such facts or an estoppel. Tisdale Lumber Co. v. Piquet, 137 N. Y. Supp. 1021, 1022, 153 App. Div. 266.

NEGOTIABLE IN FORM

The term "negotiable in form," as applied to a participation receipt issued by the agent of a corporation to holders of its bonds, would not imply that the receipts would be negotiable in the sense of the law merchant so as to pass to an innocent holder for value. It would imply that such receipt would be transferable by the holder to a third party, who would acquire the rights of the original holder, no more and no less. Cella v. Brown, 144 Fed. 742, 757, 75 C. C. A. 608.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT

Bona fide holder of, see Bona Fide Holder.

Fictitious name in, see Fictitious Name.

Issue of negotiable instruments, see Issuance—Issue.

A "negotiable instrument" is a written promise or request for the payment of a sum certain in money to order or bearer. Cornish v. Woolverton, 81 Pac. 4, 7, 32 Mont. 456, 108 Am. St. Rep. 598 (citing Civ. Code, § 3991).

A provision for payment to order or bearer is in general necessary to create "negotiable paper." Wettlaufer v. Baxter, 125 S. W. 741, 743, 137 Ky. 362, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

A "negotiable instrument" is one that is simple, certain, and unconditional, and is so defined by the law merchant. It has always been held, both at the common law and by the decisions of most states, that any instrument which does not come within this definition should not be construed to be a negotiable instrument. Randolph v. Hudson, 74 Pac. 946, 948, 12 Okl. 516.

An instrument in writing, signed by the drawer and containing an unconditional order to pay a sum certain in money at a fixed future date to the order of a specified person, and addressed to a drawee named therein, was a "negotiable instrument." Bothwell v. Corum, 123 S. W. 291, 292, 135 Ky. 766.

As defined by sections 4626 and 4627, Comp. Laws 1909, a "negotiable instrument" is a written promise or request for the payment of a certain sum of money to order or bearer, and must be made payable in money only, and without any condition not certain of fulfillment. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. McCoy & Spivey Bros., 122 Pac. 125, 126, 32 Okl. 277, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 177.

A writing providing that for value received the signers jointly and severally promise to pay another or order a certain sum at a certain bank with interest and without any relief from valuation of appraisal law, being duly signed and dated, was a negotiable instrument within Revisal 1905, § 2151, and the following sections. Myers v. Petty, 69 S. E. 417, 158 N. C. 462.

To constitute a "negotiable instrument," the fact of the maturity of the instrument at some time must be morally certain, and a written agreement to pay money upon the confirmation by Congress of a land grant was not negotiable. Joseph v. Catron, 81 Pac. 439, 442, 13 N. M. 202, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1120.

A mere contract of employment specifying compensation for services is not a negotiable instrument within Act June 30, 1841 (Laws 1841, p. 527, c. 601, as extended by Gen. St. 1867, c. 230, § 21; Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, §§ 21, 22), specifying the negotiable paper subject to trustee process. Steer v. Dow, 71 Atl. 217, 218, 75 N. H. 95, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263.

Checks issued to employees payable only in merchandise at the employer's store are not negotiable instruments payable to bearer, and possession of them by a third person raises no presumption that he is entitled to the rights of the employees, and, in the absence of evidence that the third person has acquired such right, he cannot recover. Attoyac River Lumber Co. v. Payne, 122 S. W. 278, 280, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 327.

An instrument acknowledging receipt of an automobile chassis to be delivered only on return of the receipt properly indorsed was not negotiable, a "negotiable instrument" being a written promise or request for the payment of money to order or to bearer, the word "indorsed" as there used not being as if used with reference to commercial paper. Manny v. Wilson, 122 N. Y. Supp. 16, 18, 137 App. Div. 140.

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 38) §§ 20, 27, providing that an instrument to be negotiable must be in writing, and signed by the maker and payable to order or to bearer, and providing that an instrument is payable to order when it is drawn to the order of a specified person, or to him or his order, an instrument whereby a person agrees to pay a specified sum at a designated place without mentioning any person to whom the payment shall be made, or without making the payment to bearer, is not a negotiable instrument. Hilborn v. Pennsylvania Cement Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 957, 960, 145 App. Div. 442.

Civ. Code 1895, § 3901, provides that a "negotiable instrument" is a written promise or request for the payment of a certain sum of money to order or bearer. Section 3992 provides that a negotiable instrument must be made payable in money only, and without any condition not certain of fulfillment. Section 3996, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 124, provides that a negotiable instrument may contain a pledge of collateral security, with the authority to dispose thereof, also a provision for reasonable attorney fee, or both. Section 3997 provides that a negotiable instrument must not contain any other contract than such as is specified in this article. Laws 1903, p. 238, § 3, subd. 2, provides that an unqualified order or promise to pay is "unconditional" within the meaning of this act, though coupled with a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument. Held, that a paper containing an order or contract for goods, and a note promising to pay for them, is not a negotiable instrument, where, if the note be detached, the order for goods would be destroyed. State v. Mitton, 96 Pac. 926, 927, 928, 37 Mont. 366, 127 Am. St. Rep. 732.

An instrument in the form of a letter, addressed to the general agent of an insurance company, acknowledging receipt of a life insurance policy, and requesting him "to place the said policy in force from this date, and I promise to pay to you or to your order the first annual premium amounting to $256.55, as follows: Check inclosed, $125.00. On Dec. 1, 1904, $131.55. Thomas R. Were"—is a "negotiable instrument." Equitable Trust Co. v. Were, 132 N. Y. Supp. 351, 352, 74 Misc. Rep. 469.

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, c. 612, § 20), which provides that an instrument, to be negotiable, must be in writing and signed by the maker or drawer, must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money, must be payable on demand at a fixed or determinable future time, and must be payable to order or to bearer, and section 22, which declares that "an unqualified order or promise to pay is unconditional within the meaning of this act, though coupled with . . . a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instruments," an instrument in the form of a letter, addressed to the general agent of an insurance company, dated April 19, 1905, which, after acknowledging receipt of a life insurance policy requested him "to place the said policy in force from this date, and I promise to pay you or your order the first annual premium, amounting to $53.10, as follows:

Cash paid W. E. Watts.....	$21.24
On July 10th, 1905.....	10.00
On Sept. 10th, 1905.....	10.00
On Nov. 10th, 1905.....	11.86

$53.10

"Arthur N. Taylor,"

—is a "negotiable instrument"; the mere fact that its language shows that the consideration for the promise was an indebtedness for an unpaid balance of a premium upon a policy of insurance upon defendant's life which had been delivered to him, operating to make it nonnegotiable, under the statute or the customs and usages of merchants. Equitable Trust Co. of New York v. Taylor, 131 N. Y. Supp. 475, 476, 146 A. Div. 424; Same v. Newman, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1113, 146 App. Div. 953.

A claim against a county for services not a "negotiable instrument," and a purchaser thereof takes it subject to the defense of payment, or any other defense the county might have had against the assignor. Perry County v. Eversole (Ky.) 98 S. W. 1012, 1020.

Checks

Checks are "negotiable instruments" both at common law and under the express provisions of Ky. St. 1903, § 478. Boswell v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 96 S. W. 797, 799, 123 Ky. 485.

A postdated check is a "negotiable instrument," subject to the laws relative to negotiable paper. Symonds v. Riley, 74 N. 926, 188 Mass. 470.

See Chose in Action.

County bonds

A statute creating a county sanitary commission for Jefferson county, authorizing the issuing of "negotiable bonds of Jefferson county," due at the time designated thereon, and requiring the levy of a special annual tax, the proceeds to be held exclusively as a sanitary fund and applied exclusively to the payment of interest on the bonds and to keeping in repair this county sanitary system; any surplus to be used for payment of the principal of the bond. Held, that a negotiable bond of Jefferson county was merely the general obligation of the county to pay at all events and out of any funds. Birmingham Trust & Savings Co. v. Jefferson County, 34 South. 398, 400, 137 Ala. 375.

Municipal bonds

Municipal bonds payable to bearer are negotiable instruments, and the rights and liabilities of the makers and holders of such of them as have come into existence since the passage of the Negotiable Instruments Act (3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 8732) are determined by the provisions of that act. Linbar v. Board of Education of West New York, 131 Atl. 235, 237, 83 N. J. Law, 446.

Postal money order

In the establishment and operation of the postal money order system, the government is not engaging in commercial transactions, but exercises a governmental power for the public benefit; and it follows that money orders are not negotiable instruments, subject to the defenses permitted to bona fide holders for value by the law merchant. The statute also imposes limitations and restrictions inconsistent with negotiability. Bolognesi v. United States, 189 Fed. 335, 337, 111 C. C. A. 67, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143.

Promissory note

See Promissory Note.

Warrants

Village warrants are not "negotiable instruments" in such a sense that defenses available against the original payee are cut off by transfer to a bona fide holder. Field v. Village of Highland Park, 104 N. W. 393, 394, 141 Mich. 69 (citing Wall v. Monroe Co., 103 U. S. 77, 26 L. Ed. 430).

Under the Negotiable Instrument Act of Iowa (Acts 1902, c. 130, § 2; Code Supp. Iowa 1907, § 3060a2), which provides that the sum payable by an instrument shall be a sum certain within the meaning of the act, "although it is to be paid . . . with exchange, whether at a fixed rate or at the current rate," an obligation of a county, negotiable in form and issued under a statute permitting it to be made negotiable, is not nonnegotiable because it is made payable "in New York or Chicago exchange." Security Trust Co. of Rochester, N. Y., v. Des Moines County, Iowa, 198 Fed. 331, 334.

NEGOTIABLE NOTE

A "negotiable promissory note" is an unconditional promise in writing to pay a sum certain in money to order or to bearer. Wettlauffer v. Baxter, 125 S. W. 741, 743, 137 Ky. 362, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804 (citing Negotiable Instrument Law [Ky. St. § 3720b; Russell St. § 1897] §§ 1, 184).

Revisal N. C. 1905, § 2334, provides that a "negotiable promissory note," within the meaning of the chapter, is an unconditional promise in writing, made by one person to another signed by the maker engaging to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable time a certain sum in money to order or to bearer. J. W. Perry Co. v. Taylor Bros., 62 S. E. 423, 148 N. C. 362.

Any uncertainty in any of the essential elements of a note to make it negotiable destroys its negotiability as an inland bill of exchange. A note is not negotiable as an inland bill of exchange, unless on its face its date is certain, and contains an unconditional promise to pay a certain sum of money at a fixed time in a bank of the state. A note dated "Mount Ayr, Indiana," payable on a designated future date to a person named "at the Bank of Mount Ayr," is a negotiable note within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 9076, declaring a note payable to order of bearer in a bank in the state is negotiable, since it will be presumed that the bank named in the note is a bank in the town named. Halstead v. Woods, 95 N. E. 429, 431, 48 Ind. App. 127.

A note payable to a corporation is a "negotiable instrument," capable, when indorsed in blank, of being transferred from hand to hand, and against which the maker's trustee in bankruptcy can avail himself of only such defenses as were available to the maker, not including collateral issues between the indorsers subsequent to delivery. In re Schwarz, 200 Fed. 309, 310.

A "negotiable promissory note" generally is made payable to a person or order and is for a comparatively short period of time, while a bond generally is made payable to bearer, and has a long time to run. Owing to the distinction between bonds and notes, county commissioners authorized to issue new bonds and exchange them for outstanding ones are not authorized to exchange them for promissory notes. Commissioners of Muskingum County v. State, 85 N. E. 562, 567, 76 Ohio St. 287.

By the law merchant, in order to be "negotiable" a note must be payable to the order of some person or to bearer. Under Comp. St. Neb. 1901, § 3380, which provides that "all bonds, promissory notes, bills of exchange, foreign and inland, drawn for any sum or sums of money certain, and made payable to any person or order, or to any person or assigns, shall be negotiable by indorsement thereon so as absolutely to transfer and vest the property thereof in each and every indorsee successively," as construed by the Supreme Court of the state, a written guaranty, signed by the payee on the back of a note payable to his order, constitutes an indorsement with an enlarged liability, and transfers the legal title free from equities between the maker and payee. Leahy v. Haworth, 141 Fed. 850, 856, 73 C. C. A. 84, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657.

The essential requisites of a "negotiable note" by the law merchant "are a date and an unconditional promise to pay money in a certain sum, at a certain time, and at a certain place." The negotiability of a note is not destroyed by a recital of the consideration and that the title of the property for which it is given shall remain in the payee until it is paid, and, if not paid at maturity, then the property shall be sold and the proceeds applied to the debt, but a further stipulation that partial payments to any amount less than the principal shall be considered as rental for the property renders the amount payable uncertain and destroys its negotiability. Gilpin v. People's Bank, 90 N. E. 91, 92, 45 Ind. App. 52.

Under Negotiable Instrument Law, Laws 1897, p. 755, c. 612, § 320, providing that a "negotiable note" is an unconditional written promise by one to another, signed by the maker, to pay to order or bearer, and that where a note is drawn to the maker's order it is not complete till indorsed by him, the complaint in an action on a note payable to the maker must allege its indorsement by him. Edelman v. Rams, 109 N. Y. Supp. 816, 817, 58 Misc. Rep. 561.

A writing signed by a party, and stating that a certain amount is due a person mentioned therein without reciting that it was executed "for value received," is not a "negotiable note," for under Rev. St. 1899, § 457, an instrument to be a negotiable instrument must contain the quoted words. Locher v. Kuechenmeister, 98 S. W. 92, 97, 120 Mo. App. 701.

Under Negotiable Instrument Law, St. 1898, § 1675, subd. 2, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 684, c. 356, making a note negotiable if "the sum payable is a sum certain, * * * although it is to be paid * * * with costs of collection or an attorney's fee in case payment shall not be made at maturity," a note is negotiable which provides for an attorney's fee only on collection by attorney after dishonor. First Nat. Bank of Shawano v. Miller, 120 N. W. 820, 821, 139 Wis. 126, 181 Am. St. Rep. 1040.

A note, properly signed by the maker, containing an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money at a specified future time, to the order of a specified person, is a "negotiable instrument." Mechanics' & Farmers' Sav. Bank v. Katterjohn, 125 S. W. 1071, 1072, 137 Ky. 427, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 439.

A provision in an interest-bearing note that if the interest be not paid semiannually it shall become as principal and bear the same rate of interest does not make the amount of the note uncertain, so as to render it nonnegotiable, and such note is a "negotiable instrument." Brown v. Vossen, 87 S. W. 577, 578, 112 Mo. App. 676.

Under a statute defining a "negotiable instrument" and providing that it must be made payable in money only, without conditions not certain of fulfillment, and must not contain any other contract than that specified, a note providing that, if not paid when due, both principal and interest shall bear an increased rate of interest, is not negotiable. Cornish v. Woolverton, 81 Pac. 4, 6, 8, 32 Mont. 456, 108 Am. St. Rep. 598.

Under Acts 1899, c. 94, relating to "negotiable instruments" and providing that an instrument to be negotiable must be in writing, and must be payable to order or bearer, etc., a note not payable to either order or bearer is not a "negotiable instrument." Gilley v. Harrell, 101 S. W. 424, 425, 118 Tenn. 115.

A note given December 16, 1908, payable in installments three months apart, which contains a stipulation that, if it is paid within 15 days from date, a discount of 5 per cent. will be allowed, being uncertain as to the amount necessary to satisfy it at the time of its execution, is nonnegotiable. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. McCoy & Spivey Bros., 122 Pac. 125, 126, 32 Okl. 277, 177 L. R. A. (N. S.) 177.

A note containing a stipulation where the sureties, guarantors, indorsers, and makers waive notice of the granting of any extension of time for payment, and waive the right of defense on the ground that extension has been made without notice to them, either of them, is not a "negotiable promissory note," within the meaning and intent of the negotiable instrument law of this state. Union Stockyards Nat. Bank of South Omaha v. Bolan, 93 Pac. 508, 510, 14 Idaho 87, 125 Am. St. Rep. 146 (citing Sess. Laws 1903, p. 380).

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3392, declares that an instrument, to be negotiable, must contain an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money, must be payable on demand, at a fixed or determinable future time, and must be payable to order or to bearer. Section 3394 declares that an unqualified order to pay is unconditional, though coupled with an indication of a particular fund out of which reimbursement is to be made or a particular account to be debited with the amount, or a statement of a particular transaction which gives rise to the instrument, but that an order or promise to pay only out of a particular fund is not unconditional. Hence, that, where a note was payable on demand, it was not rendered nonnegotiable because it contained a statement that it was given to take up the freight and rehandling of a certain car, the proceeds from resale of such car to apply on the note, there being nothing therein making payment dependent on the sufficiency of the proceeds of the resale of the material on the car or preventing a demand for full payment independent of such proceeds at any time; the test being whether the general credit of the maker accompanied the instrument. First Nat. Bank of Snodgrass v. Sullivan, 119 Pac. 820, 821, 66 Wash. 375, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 930.

Under the statute providing that a "negotiable instrument" must be made payable in money only, and without any condition not certain of fulfillment, one of the essential qualities of a "negotiable promissory note" is absolute certainty as to the sum of money to be paid, a certainty which must appear on the face of the note. Therefore, if a part of the amount is dependent on any contingency, or where it is necessary to offer proof other than the instrument itself, to establish the negotiable character of the instrument, it is not negotiable. Cotton v. John Deere Flow Co., 78 Pac. 321, 14 Okl. 605.

Under Negotiable Instruments Act 1897 Acts 1897, p. 783, c. 74, § 1; Gen. St. c. 234, §§ 4171, 4176), an instrument, signed by the maker, and dated, promising to pay a stated amount at a certain bank one year after date, was a "negotiable promissory note." St. Paul's Episcopal Church v. Fields, 72 Atl. 145, 149, 81 Conn. 670.

A "negotiable promissory note" is an unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another, signed by the maker, and engaging to pay, on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to order or to bearer. Baumeister v. Kuntz, 42 South. 886, 887, 53 Fla. 340.

B. & C. Comp. §§ 299-302, provide in effect that all property not exempt from execution shall be subject to attachment, and that personal property capable of manual delivery, and not in possession of a third person, shall be attached by the sheriff taking it into his possession, and garnishment proceedings are provided to reach personal property not capable of manual delivery and in possession of a third person. Section 4586 defines a negotiable promissory note as an unconditional promise in writing engaging to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable time, a certain sum in money. Held, that a negotiable promissory note belonging to defendant, in his possession, and bearing no indorsements, was subject to attachment and sale under execution. Fishburn v. Londershausen, 92 Pac. 1060, 1061, 50 Or. 363, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1284, 15 Ann. Cas. 975.

Court and Practice Act 1905, § 601, subd. 11, provides that debts secured by bills of exchange or negotiable promissory notes shall be exempt from attachment on any warrant of distress or any other writ, original, mesne, or judicial. Held, that an overdue promissory note is still negotiable within the statute, and hence the amount due thereon is exempt from process of foreign attachment. Oakdale Mfg. Co. v. Clarke, 69 Atl. 681, 29 R. I. 192.

A note reciting that the principal and interest are payable at a designated place, but if any part of the principal or interest is not paid at maturity it shall bear interest, and if the note is placed in the hands of an attorney for collection or suit is brought thereon an attorney's fee of 10 per cent., including interest, shall be taxed as costs or included in the judgment, is a "nonnegotiable instrument." Dickerson v. Higgins, 82 Pac. 649, 650, 15 Okl. 588.

NEGOTIABLE PAPER

See Current Negotiable Paper.

NEGOTIABILITY

The first requisite to the "negotiability" of a paper is that it should be a "note," and, as a "note" must be an obligation for the payment of a certain sum of money, a provision that if collection is made through an attorney, or by legal process, the maker will pay all costs and expenses including 10 per cent. of the amount collected as attorney's fees, renders the note nonnegotiable. Green v. Spires, 50 S. E. 554, 555, 71 S. C. 107, 4 Ann. Cas. 281.

NEGOTIATE

To "negotiate" means to treat with another or others; to arrange for or procure by negotiation; to put into circulation by transference and assignment; to conclude by bargain, treaty, or agreement; to transfer, to pass, to sell; or to procure by mutual intercourse and agreement with another. Aurora State Bank v. Hayes-Eames Elevator Co., 129 N. W. 279, 280, 88 Neb. 187 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4771, 4772).

The word "negotiate," as used in a petition, which alleges that defendant authorized plaintiff to negotiate a sale of a lease for defendant, should be construed to mean conversation in arranging the terms of a contract. Northrup v. Diggs, 106 S. W. 1123, 1125, 128 Mo. App. 217.

"An instrument is 'negotiated' when it is transferred from one person to another in such manner as to constitute the transferee the holder thereof." Wettlauffer v. Baxter, 125 S. W. 741, 743, 137 Ky. 362, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

"Negotiated," in the usual technical and legal sense used by law-writers in speaking of commercial paper, means to transfer for a valuable consideration under rules of commercial law. The term is sometimes used as meaning to discuss or arrange for a sale or bargain, or the preliminaries of a business transaction; also, to sell or discount negotiable paper, or assign or transfer it by indorsement or delivery. The term as used in Rev. St. 1909, § 1275, which provides that before a school bond shall be negotiated it shall first be presented to the State Auditor for registry, means the selling and putting in circulation by delivery in consummation of the sale. State ex rel. Carrollton School Dist. v. Gordon, 133 S. W. 44, 47, 231 Mo. 547 (quoting and adopting definitions in Webster's New Unabridged Dict. and Black's Law Dict.).

Where an order authorized a city finance committee to "negotiate" notes for the city's benefit, the term "negotiate" was sufficient to include the entire transaction of asking for bids, or ascertaining the discount by private inquiry, and deciding upon the amounts, the rate, and the time on which the notes should be given. Brown v. City of Newburyport, 95 N. E. 504, 508, 209 Mass. 259, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 495.

Under the provisions of the negotiable instruments law (Comp. St. 1909, c. 41) that every person negotiating an instrument by delivery warrants that it is genuine, and that he has good title, and article 3, § 30, of such law, providing that an instrument is negotiated when it is transferred to another so as to make the transferee the holder, the word "negotiating" means putting into circulation by assignment of a claim, by indorsement, to dispose of by sale, and in 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4771, it is said: "To 'negotiate' means to conclude by a bargain, treaty, or agreement, to transfer, to sell; and the power to negotiate a bill or note is said to be the power to indorse and deliver it to another, so that the right of action shall also pass, and negotiation means the act by which a bill of exchange or note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person." National Bank of Commerce of Lincoln v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 128 N. W. 522, 523, 87 Neb. 341.

Where a broker's contract of authority authorized him to negotiate for the sale of the lands in question at $5 an acre for 30 days, and the owners bound themselves to execute good conveyances to such purchaser as the brokers might produce on payment of the price, the term "negotiate" imported authority on the part of the brokers to make a binding sale agreement, and the contract did not therefore limit their authority to finding a purchaser ready and able to pay the price. Combes v. Adams, 63 S. E. 186, 188, 150 N. C. 64.

Rev. St. 1909, § 1275, provides that before any school bond "shall obtain validity or be negotiated, such bond shall first be presented to the State Auditor, who shall register the same," etc. Held, that the term "obtain validity" meant to become clothed with validity as a present and subsisting obligation, and the term "negotiated" meant that the bonds should have been sold and put in circulation by delivery in consummation of the sale; and officers of a school district, after bonds have been voted, may advertise for bids and accept a bid for bonds before they have been registered by the State Auditor; and hence such acts of the officers furnish no reason for refusing registration. State ex rel. Carrollton School Dist. No. 1, Tp. 53, R. 23, v. Gordon, 133 S. W. 44, 47, 231 Mo. 547.

According to the express terms of Negotiable Instruments Law, § 60 (Laws 1897, p. 728, c. 612), "an instrument is 'negotiated' when it is transferred from one person to another in such manner as to constitute the transferee the holder thereof. If payable to bearer, it is negotiated by delivery; if payable to order, it is negotiated by the indorsement of the holder completed by delivery." "The popular meaning of 'negotiate' is the same." Rogers v. Morton, 95 N. Y. Supp. 49, 50, 46 Misc. Rep. 494.

Voting trust certificates of a corporation were turned over to a committee, which was authorized "to negotiate in behalf of the owners for the sale of the pooled stock. Further authority was given to sell not less than two-thirds of such stock at such price as might be approved in writing by the owners. The committee made an agreement of sale, the terms of which were not onerous, and the price was adequate. The agreement for sale may have been optional; but, if the purchasers proposed to execute it fully when the agreement was questioned by the stockholder. It was made by the committee in good faith. The sale was within the express authority of the committee. Weitzel Burrage, 76 N. E. 508, 190 Mass. 267.

Acts Mo. 1905, pp. 247, 248, § 30, provides that an instrument is negotiated when it is transferred from one person to another in such manner as to constitute the transferee holder thereof: if payable to bearer, it is negotiated by delivery; if payable to order, it is negotiated by the indorsement of the holder completed by delivery. Section 31: "The indorsement must be written on the instrument itself or upon a paper attached thereto." Under this statute a negotiable note payable to order will not pass by mere delivery. Sublette v. Brevington, 13 S. W. 1150, 139 Mo. App. 410.

NEGOTIATION

"Negotiation" means traffic or conclusion by bargain or agreement. Everson v. General Accident Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Ltd., of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. E. 658, 660, 202 Mass. 169.

"Negotiations" is a very broad term. It embraces everything from the first approach of the one who desires to purchase to the one from whom the purchase is to be made to the final consummation of the contract of purchase. No interest either legal or equitable, in the subject-matter of the negotiation is acquired by merely beginning them, and no right is vested in the negotiator until the negotiations reach a stage where the person desiring to purchase could compel a conveyance of the property from the owner, and until such state is reached the purchaser has no right which can be the subject of bargain. Allen & Holmes v. Powell, 54 S. E. 138, 125 Ga. 438.

"Negotiation" means the act by which a bill or note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another; and presentation of the check for payment is not a negotiation of the check within the meaning of the negotiable instruments law. Aurora State Bank v. Hay Eames Elevator Co., 129 N. W. 279, 280, 190 Neb. 187.

"Negotiation" means the act by which a bill of exchange or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person." Payment by a bank of a check drawn upon does not constitute the bank a holder within the meaning of Negotiable Instruments Law, providing that an instrument is negotiated when it is transferred, so as to constitute the transferee a holder thereof. National Bank of Commerce of Lincoln v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 128 N. W. 522, 23, 87 Neb. 841 (quoting and adopting the definition in 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4771).

To make one a holder in due course of a negotiable note payable to order, it must have been indorsed to him; Revisal, 1905, § 1178, defining negotiation of such a note as being by the indorsement of the holder and completed by delivery, and, without proof of indorsement, the note is held subject to any valid defense which the maker has, including that of fraud. Woods v. Finley, 69 S. E. 502, 503, 153 N. C. 497.

In an admission that a note sued on was indorsed by the several defendants "on or before negotiation," the words "on or before" excluded "after," and the word "negotiation" signified delivery; that term being generally descriptive of all those acts by which a note or bill is put into circulation or passed in its circulation, including delivery in issue, transfer by delivery, or transfer by indorsement. Edward Knapp & Co. v. Tidewater Coal Co., 81 Atl. 1063, 1066, 85 Conn. 147.

In an affidavit for continuance because of inability to obtain counsel to prepare the case and to represent him on the trial, reciting that the negotiations for the employment of counsel had been commenced but never consummated, the word "negotiations" has a well-defined professional meaning. Carpenter v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 92 S. W. 552.

NEGRO

As citizen, see Citizen.
See, also, Colored Person.

A "negro" is defined as a "black man, especially one of the race who inhabit tropical Africa, and who are distinguished by crisped or curly hair, flat noses and protruding lips," and the word also includes their descendants in America and elsewhere, but the word is also loosely applied to other dark and black-skinned races and to mixed breeds. The word "negro" of itself, unqualified, does not necessarily include within its meaning persons possessed of only an admixture of negro blood, notably those whose admixture is so slight that even an expert cannot be positive. An octoroon is not a "person of the negro or black race" within Act No. 87 of 1908, § 1, making concubinage between a person of the Caucasian or white race and a person of the negro or black race a felony. State v. Treadaway, 52 South. 500, 511, 126 La. 300, 139 Am. St. Rep. 514, 20 Ann. Cas. 1297.

NEGRO CHILD

Child as including, see Child—Children
(In Statutes).

NEIGHBORHOOD

See Same General Neighborhood.

The phrase "general locality" and the word "neighborhood" imply a considerable territory, and cannot be used in a legal sense as describing a circle on a street of a diameter of about six feet. Moriarty v. City of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 323, 324, 132 App. Div. 10.

Etymologically and by common understanding "in the vicinity" means in the neighborhood, and "neighborhood," as applied to place, signifies nearness. "In the vicinity" does not even mean adjoining to or abutting on, but merely close by, or neighboring country." Jones v. Rogers, 38 South. 742, 745, 85 Miss. 802.

Where the value of land is of necessity to be deduced from a consideration of the price of properties in the neighborhood, with reference to comparative locations, improvements, and other incidents, the court cannot say that a "neighborhood" has reference only to adjacent property, or attempt to fix a standard of measurement, and say as a matter of law that the similar property concerning which inquiry may be made is such only as may be found within a given number of feet, yards, or blocks of the property condemned; that being a matter as to which the trial court is vested with discretion to draw the line in each case as shall seem just under all the circumstances developed by the testimony, and that, unless abuse of such discretion is shown, its ruling will not be held reversible error. Youtzy v. City of Cedar Rapids, 129 N. W. 351, 150 Iowa, 53.

The market value of a particular piece of realty sought to be condemned is to be measured by the price usually given for such property in that neighborhood, making due allowance for differences of positions, soil, and improvements, and in large cities the word "neighborhood" is a relative one, so that the field which a witness may take into consideration in forming an opinion of the selling price of land in the vicinity of certain property sought to be taken should be reasonably adjacent thereto and of the same general character as the immediate locality in which the property sought to be taken is situated. Rea v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co., 78 Atl. 73, 79, 229 Pa. 106, 140 Am. St. Rep. 721.

Act approved February 23, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 16, c. 25), provides that whenever 50 or a majority of the owners, who are also the owners of a majority of the lands of any farming or other community or neighborhood within this state, which lands lie in one body, and are liable to overflow or damage from the waters of any unnavigable stream, and may be protected by the same system of works, desire to provide for the protection of such lands, they may petition the board of supervisors in the county in which the lands of the community or neighborhood and within the proposed district or the greater portion thereof are situated for the organization of such protection district. Held, that these provisions do not limit the area of any district to a territory which might afterwards be determined by a court to be a single community or neighborhood, or give the court power to declare the district organization invalid if it should find that the boundaries included two or more such communities or neighborhoods, as the term "community" refers rather to the people who reside in a given locality, in more or less proximity, than to the territory which includes them, and the term "neighborhood" describes a territory of indefinite size and without fixed limits, and therefore a district may be organized which embraces two or more communities or neighborhoods, provided the lands lie in one body, and are liable to damage from the same stream and may be protected therefrom by the same system of works. Keech v. Joplin, 106 Pac. 222, 227, 157 Cal. 1.

As range of acquaintanceship or business

The term "neighborhood," in the rule that a person called to impeach the reputation of a witness must reside in the neighborhood of the residence of the witness, comprises the natural radius of repute, and includes the territory wherein one resides, moves, circulates, does business, and has intercourse with his fellows; and it is not confined to the same village, town, or city, and a person residing in a town less than 14 miles distant from a town in the same county in which a witness resides may testify as to the reputation of the witness, especially where he does business in the latter town. People v. Loris, 115 N. Y. Supp. 236, 237, 238, 131 App. Div. 127 (citing Greenl. on Ev. [15th Ed.] 451; State v. Henderson, 1 S. E. 225, 29 W. Va. 147; Peters v. Bourneau, 22 Ill. App. 177; Chess v. Chess [Pa.] 1 Pen. & W. 32, 21 Am. Dec. 450; Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 718; Dupree v. State, 33 Ala. 380, 73 Am. Dec. 422; State v. McLaughlin, 50 S. W. 315, 149 Mo. 19; Wallis v. White, 15 N. W. 767, 58 Wis. 26; Burr-Jones, Ev. [2d Ed.] 1097; Best, Ev. [International Ed.] p. 255).

The general rule is that, to impeach a witness by proof of bad character, the predicate is a knowledge of his character in the community or neighborhood in which he resides, the terms "community" and "neighborhood" meaning in a general way where the witness is well known and has established a reputation, and the inquiry is not necessarily confined to his domicile; and hence, where it appeared that, though a witness resided in Baltimore, he had an established business in Mobile, and spent much of his time there, evidence as to a knowledge of his character in Mobile was admissible as a predicate for impeaching testimony. Richard P. Baer & Co. v. Mobile Coöperage Box Mfg. Co., 49 South. 92, 93, 96, 159 Ala. 491.

NEIGHBORHOOD ROAD

As highway, see Highway.

NEIGHBORING

The word "neighboring," in Act March 14, 1879 (P. L. p. 316), is sufficiently extensive in its meaning to make the act applicable to municipalities in the same county to which gas may conveniently be conveyed from a central plant. The word "neighboring" is of indefinite meaning, and it has been construed in some cases as possessing a narrow signification, while in others it is given a broad construction. Its meaning must depend upon the circumstances and the subject-matter with which we have to deal. With the improvement in means of communication municipalities which were remote became in a fair sense "neighboring" municipalities. When used in respect to a commodity which may be distributed as readily and as advantageously as gas, the term cannot be limited to adjoining municipalities. It may at least be held to be broad enough to include municipalities within the same county to which gas may conveniently be conveyed from a central plant. Millville Imp. Co. v. Pitman, Glassboro & Clayton Gas Co., 67 Atl. 1005, 1006, 75 N. J. Law, 410 (distinguishing Madison v. Morristown Gaslight Co., 5 Atl. 439, 65 N. J. Eq. 356).

NEIGHBORS

Louisiana Rev. Civ. Code, art. 670, provides that every one is bound to keep his buildings in repair so that neither all nor any part of the material composing them may injure the "neighbors or passengers" under penalty of all losses and damages that may result from the owner's negligence in such respect. Held applicable only to persons "outside" the building, such as neighbors or passers-by injured by the fall of the building or some part thereof, and does not apply to persons lawfully in the building as guests, tenants, etc. Frank v. Suthon, 15 Fed. 174, 176.

NEITHER PARTY, ETC.

The entry of "Neither party, no further action, same cause," means that by agreement neither party further appears in court in that suit, and it also involves a stipulation that the plaintiff shall maintain no further action for the same cause. The plaintiff's cause of action is extinguished. Gerardron v. Hovey, 66 Atl. 583, 98 Me. 139.

NEPHEW

The word "nephew" is defined as "the son of a brother, or sister; or of the brother-in-law or a sister-in-law"; "the son of a brother or sister. But in a bequest would not include, without special mention, nephews and nieces by marriage"; "in English law the son and niece, the daughter, of a brother or sister; and great-nephews or great-nieces are not embraced by the terms, and, as a gift is naturally to blood relatives, a nephew or niece by marriage—that is, the nephew or niece of the testator's husband or wife—prima facie excluded, as also would be the wives or widows of a blood nephew." Boyd Perkins, 113 S. W. 95, 98, 130 Ky. 77 (citing Webster's Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.; Schouler, Wills [2d Ed.] § 536).

Grandnephew

Testator gave a legacy to his niece Kate, daughter of Dr. H. W., and to Dr. H. W. a specified sum for himself and his other children, and he gave legacies to any niece or nephew whom he had omitted, excepting the children of Dr. H. W., for whom he had made provision. Testator was a widower, who had never had any children, and left surviving him a number of nieces and nephews, and grandnieces and grandnephews, descendants of sisters who died before the execution of the will. There were two Drs. H. W., father and son; the father being the father of the niece Kate. Testator had a niece Mrs. P., who was omitted from the will, and the legacy to her was on her death paid to her children. Held, that the words "niece or nephew" did not embrace grandnieces and grandnephews. White v. Old, 75 E. 182, 184, 113 Va. 709.

The testator was a widower, and left no children or descendants. He left surviving 1 brother, and 16 nephews and nieces, and several grandnephews and grandnieces. Many of the nephews and nieces had married and had children, and some had died leaving children. The will contained bequests in favor of all his nephews and nieces with one exception. It also contained legacies to a number of grandnephews and grandnieces, children of deceased nephews and nieces, and, after making provisions for the surviving brother and various other persons, provided that all the rest of the property not hereinbefore disposed of should be given to his "nephews and nieces," to be divided among them in the proportion which the previous gifts made to them bore to each other. Held, that the words "nephews and nieces" contained in the residuary clause included grandnephews and grandnieces. Leask v. Richards, 101 N. Y. Supp. 662, 116 App. Div. 274; Leask v. Hoagland, 80 N. E. 919, 20, 188 N. Y. 291.

NERVE FOOD

On motion for a preliminary injunction in a suit by the manufacturer of a secret preparation alleged in the bill to be a beverage and "nerve food," or compound for the nervous system, and a restorative agent of value in restoring lost nervous energy, and also of value as a stomachic, to restrain infringement and unfair competition, on which affidavits were presented by defendants to the effect that the expression "nerve food" as applied to a compound of such character was a misrepresentation, not only being scientifically a meaningless phrase, but as importing the possession of nerve nourishing or stimulating properties which it could not possess, and complainants in reply produced affidavits that its actual formula had been submitted to physicians who testified that it was properly described as a nerve food, the weight of the evidence showed that complainants had a reasonable basis for believing their representations made to the public that it was a "nerve food." Moxie Nerve Food Co. of New England v. Modox Co., 153 Fed. 487, 488.

NERVOUS

The word "nervous" is a generic term having many different meanings, and evidence that ever since the accident plaintiff had been "nervous," without any particular indication as to what was meant by that term, where counsel disclaimed an intention to show injury to the nervous system as an item of damage, simply means that the plaintiff was excitable and easily agitated or annoyed as the result of her physical injury, not that she was suffering from a nervous disease caused by the accident. Adcock v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 77 Pac. 78, 79, 45 Or. 173.

NET

See Gill Net; Trammel Net; Wing Nets.

Use of the word "net" indicates that something is being deducted. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 132 Fed. 912, 914.

Where furs were sold "net," that expression means that the seller was required to defray the cost of delivery. Fleet v. Hirtz, 66 N. E. 858, 861, 201 Ill. 594, 94 Am. St. Rep. 192.

"Net" means free from charges or deductions obtained after deducting all expenses; the words "net to us," in a telegram sent by plaintiff offering to sell butter to defendant for 17 cents per pound "net to us," means that the price is to be 17 cents, free from all charges and deductions. Floral Creamery Co. v. Dillon, 75 Atl. 82, 85, 83 Conn. 65.

Where one states to a broker that he will sell land for a certain sum "net" to him, the broker on procuring a purchaser is entitled to no commission unless the sum received exceeds the specified net price; the word "net" meaning that which remains after deducting all charges and outlay. Wolverton v. Tuttle, 94 Pac. 961, 963, 51 Or. 501.

Testator gave personal property in trust, the income of which was to be paid to certain legatees during their lives, and devised the remaining four-fifths of the estate in trust to pay a certain part of the "net rents, interest, or income" to each of his three nieces, and upon their death payment of the "rents, interests, or income" of their respective shares was to be paid over to their respective children during their lives. Two of the three nieces, to whom the bulk of the estate was given, were made executrices and trustees, with a provision for their successors, but without any express provision for their compensation. Held, that the word "net," used to qualify the "rents, interest, or income" payable to the residuary legatees, if not inadvertent, did not show any intention of the testator to impose upon their interests the burden of bearing all the expenses of the trust. Leach v. Cowan, 140 S. W. 1070, 1075, 125 Tenn. 182, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 188.

Where a contract employing plaintiffs to sell defendants' property provided that it must be sold at a price to net the owners not less than $125 per acre, and that the commission must be added to that amount, the contract did not authorize the brokers to retain as their commission all of the price above $125 per acre obtained, but only entitled them to a reasonable compensation. Allen v. J. A. Clopton Realty Co. (Tex.) 135 S. W. 242, 243.

NET ASSETS

Under a statute providing that "net assets" means the funds of an insurance company available for the payment of its obligations in the commonwealth after deducting therefrom losses and "claims for losses," an insurance company whose assets exceed by about $30,000 its liabilities, not including claims against it aggregating $300,000, based on policy holders disputing the validity of settlements for losses, is insolvent, and the insurance commissioner may apply for a receiver and enjoin the company from carrying on further business as authorized by the statute; the phrase "claims for losses" including all pending claims, whether finally adjudged valid or invalid. Cutting v. American Ins. Co., 83 N. E. 396, 397, 197 Mass. 131.

NET CASH

"Net cash" as between buyer and seller means that the buyer shall pay the "net price" to seller. Plaintiff procured a contract authorizing him to sell defendant's timber land on a 5 per cent. commission; and, having found a purchaser, presented to defendant for his signature an option giving the grantee the right to purchase within 60 days. Defendant, before signing the option, but without any conversation with plaintiff, changed the same so as to read that the price was "net cash" to him. Held, that such alteration meant that the price was net cash to defendant as between himself and the purchaser and had no reference to defendant's contract with plaintiff for commissions. Leach v. Scatcherd, 146 Fed. 1, 8, 77 O. C. A. 1.

NET CREDITS

As credits, see Credits.

NET EARNINGS

The "net earnings rule" is a method of determining the value of a special franchise by ascertaining its earning capacity; franchises being assumed to be worth the sum which, if placed at interest at a determined rate, will produce the amount which the franchise earns. In determining the taxable value of a waterworks franchise, loss due to functional as well as physical depreciation should be charged as an expense of operation. Earnings in an adjoining borough from the sale of about one-half of the company's output are properly included. A gross sum, covering uncollectible accounts, less than 1 per cent. of the gross earnings, was properly deducted. An item for farming expenses should not be deducted as a cost of operation. The amount of land necessary for proper operation and for preservation of the water supply is largely a question of determination by the directors; but land purchased to prevent its acquisition by some other party should not be included. One of the factors of the net earnings rule governing the taxable value of a waterworks franchise is the amount of capital invested in land. The net earnings rule for determining the value of a special franchise requires an ascertainment of the gross earnings, the gross operating expenses deductible therefrom, as well as a fair and reasonable return on the portion of the capital invested in tangible property, and the balance, if any, capitalized at a fixed rate, represents the value of the special franchise. People ex rel. Queens County Water Co. v. Woodbury, 128 N. Y. Supp. 522, 523, 143 App. Div. 618.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 8496-8499, 8538, 8555, requiring railroads to make statements giving the amount of the capital stock, annual gross and net earnings, etc., when considered in the light of the history of legislation on the subject of railroad taxation and the construction placed on such legislation, require the ascertainment of the value of railroad property for taxation, which valuation includes all the property of the railroad, except that specifically exempt, and the state board of tax commissioners in assessing the property of a railroad must take into consideration its money on hand or deposit, and the money on hand cannot be retaxed as money; the word "earnings" signifies money, and "net earnings" the sum received in excess of operating expenses.

Clark v. Vandalia R. Co., 86 N. E. 851, 854, 72 Ind. 409.

Dividends can lawfully be declared and distributed only out of the actual, legitimate net earnings of the corporation; and the difference between the present value of all the corporate assets and the amount of all losses, expenses, and liabilities, including the capital stock, constitutes "net earnings" for the purpose of dividends. It follows that an insolvent corporation cannot have net earnings out of which dividends can be lawfully declared and paid. Mangham v. State, 75 S. E. 508, 510, 11 Ga. App. 440.

NET INCOME

Of estate

An executrix, under the authority of a will and the contract constituting a partnership, carried on the business of the decedent and earned a profit. The will directed the executors to sell the residuum of the estate and receive the profits, and also the profits of the partnership business when wound up, and the "net income" thereof, and also provided for its distribution among certain trusts. Held, that the profits of the partnership made by the executrix were a part of the fund to be distributed. In re Marx's Estate, 99 N. Y. Supp. 334, 336, 49 Misc. Rep. 80.

Testator devised to his executors in trust for the benefit of his widow for life $200,000, the "dividends, rents and profits" thereof to go to and belong to the widow, to her sole and separate use during her natural life, with reversion after her death to the uses and appointments recited in the will. Held, that the words "dividends, rents, and profits," as so used, were synonymous with "net income," and hence the accretions to the fund during the widow's life, determined on the basis of the market value of the securities in which the fund was invested, passed to the remaindermen on the termination of the life estate, and not to the estate of the widow. Boardman v. Mansfield, 66 Atl. 169, 170, 79 Conn. 34, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793, 118 Am. St. Rep. 78.

Where a will created a trust, giving the trustee authority "to manage, invest, alter the investments, and reinvest the assets * * * in trust as he may deem best, and the 'net income' of said estate" to be applied to the use and benefit of the trustee for life, with remainder over, and the trustee invested funds of the estate in real estate which was nonproductive, the trustee was entitled to any increase in the value of the real estate after the investment. Billings v. Warren, 74 N. E. 1050-1053, 216 Ill. 281.

Where a testator gave his wife and unmarried daughters the use of his residence, together with the total income of his estate after deducting taxes, the total income in view of the deduction of taxes meant the "gross income," which is the entire amount that the use of the principal yields, as contradistinguished from "net income," which means what is left of gross income after all expenses on behalf of up-keep are deducted. Schmidt v. Schmidt, 84 Atl. 629, 631, 80 N. J. Eq. 364.

Of railroad

The net income of a railroad for purposes of taxation is the difference between the gross receipts and expenses as they would have been under reasonably economical and prudent management. State v. Nevada Cent. R. Co., 81 Pac. 99, 102, 28 Nev. 186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 884.

Laws 1867, p. 1275, c. 489, authorized a corporation to construct an elevated railroad in New York City, and section 9 provided the corporation should pay 5 per cent. of its "net income" from passenger traffic upon Manhattan Island to the city in such manner as the Legislature might thereafter direct as compensation for use of the streets. Laws 1868, p. 2034, c. 855, § 2, provided that the company pay quarterly to the city comptroller 5 per cent. of its net income for the improvement of the streets through which the road was constructed. Sections 2 and 3 also provided that such payments should be the legal compensation in full for the use and occupancy of the streets, and the claims of the city should constitute a prior lien on the railway. Held, that it was the legislative intention that the compensation to the city be actual and substantial, and by "net income" was meant the gross passenger traffic receipts, less the general expenses of operating the road, and the amounts paid for general taxes, the rental damages to abutting owners for trespass upon their interests in the streets, and interest on the corporation's mortgage bonds are not to be deducted in determining the "net income"; they being general charges against the corporation, and not against the passenger traffic. City of New York v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 609, 119 App. Div. 240; Id., 84 N. E. 745, 746, 192 N. Y. 90.

NET PERSONAL ESTATE

Under Sanb. & B. Ann. St. § 2172, declaring that the widow, on filing her election to take the provisions made for her by law, instead of the provisions made by her husband's will, is entitled to the same share of his personal estate as if he had died intestate, provided that such share shall not exceed a third of his "net personal estate," there is deducted from the personal estate, before her share is taken out, not only the expenses of administering an intestate estate, but the additional ones of probating and carrying out the provisions of the will. Ford v. Ford, 59 N. W. 464, 466, 88 Wis. 122.

NET PROCEEDS

As proceeds, see Proceeds.
Earnings as, see Earnings.

Where the owner of a mining property gave an option to purchase, with privilege of prospecting and mining ore, and it was agreed that all ore found which might be susceptible of milling should be sold by such owner, and the net proceeds applied on the purchase price, the "net proceeds" in such case is synonymous with "net profits." Hall v. Abraham, 75 Pac. 882, 884, 44 Or. 477.

Where defendant gave D. a permit to cut logs upon his land for an agreed price per thousand to be holden to pay stumpage, and all supplies furnished by the former, and D. employed plaintiff to cut under the permit, and, after the latter had labored two months, the defendant gave him a memorandum in writing, agreeing to pay him his wages out of the net proceeds of the lumber when sold, and, where the logs sold for more than enough to pay the stumpage and not enough to pay for both stumpage and supplies, the term "net proceeds" in the memorandum meant the proceeds of the lumber after deducting pay for the stumpage, but without any deduction having been made for the supplies. Warren v. Thatcher, 12 Me. 351, 352.

Where a will providing that, "after the payment of debts and legacies above named, I direct that a division of the 'net proceeds' into parts, one for each of my children, as follows," etc., and the question was whether the will manifested an intention to have the real estate sold and the proceeds divided, it was held that the term "net proceeds," as used therein, referred to the money which would come from a sale of the property. May v. Brewster, 73 N. E. 546, 547, 187 Mass. 524.

A contract between an inventor and a manufacturer, which recites that the inventor has invented an improvement in kilns for drying lumber, for which an application for a patent has been filed, that the manufacturer is desirous of acquiring an undivided half interest in the invention and patent to be obtained therefor, to be issued to the parties as owners, and which declares that the inventor sells to the manufacturer an undivided half interest in the invention, and gives to the manufacturer the right, free of royalty, to manufacture and use kilns at plants controlled by him, that the manufacturer may license others to build for their own use kilns, or may himself build and sell to others, in either case charging "such royalty, license fee, or other consideration" as to him may seem best, and shall, immediately on the receipt thereof, pay to the inventor one-half of the net proceeds, and that the manufacturer shall use his best endeavors to introduce the kilns into the market and sell licenses to others to use the same, and to keep accounts of licenses granted and the proceeds thereof, creates a joint adventure, and the inventor is entitled to an accounting with the manufacturer to determine the amount of net profits, after deducting losses on sales and expenses incurred, including attorney's fees and costs in making collections; the term "net proceeds" being equivalent to "net profits." Williams v. Walsh Mfg. Co., 135 N. E. 954, 957, 169 Mich. 676. (Per Moore, C. J., and McAlvay, Steere, and Brooke, JJ.; contra, Ostrander, Blair, Stone, and Bird, JJ.)

NET PROFITS

See First Net Profits.

"Net profits" have been defined as gain that accrues on the investment, after deducting the losses and expenses of the business. City of Erie v. Erie Gas & Mineral Co., 97 Pac. 468, 469, 78 Kan. 348.

"Net profits" are the clear gain of a venture, after deducting from the net value all assets on hand the capital invested and outstanding liabilities. Thurston v. Hamblin, 85 N. E. 82, 83, 199 Mass. 151.

The "net profits" of a business, a percentage of which an employé shall receive for his services, is what remains after all legitimate expenses thereof have been paid. Thur Jordan Co. v. Caylor, 76 N. E. 419, 36 Ind. App. 640.

Net profits may be construed to mean what is left after deducting from the selling price the actual cost price, together with expenses incidental to the procurement of the property. Cooke v. Cain, 77 Pac. 682-684, 10 Wash. 353.

Under exceptional circumstances showing an intended distinction there may be a difference in the meaning of the term "net profits" and "profits," but usually they mean the same thing. Thomas v. Columbia Phonograph Co., 129 N. W. 522, 523, 144 Wis. 470.

"Net profits" is defined as what remains as the clear gain in a business after deducting the capital invested, the expenses incurred, and the losses sustained. Crawford v. Calkins, 136 N. W. 369, 370, 170 Mich. 5. Di Palma v. Weinman, 121 Pac. 38, 40, 16 M. 302.

"Net profits" of a corporation are the gains which have been actually realized which could be quickly distributed without loss by sale of assets. Stevens v. United States Steel Corp., 59 Atl. 905, 906, 912, N. J. Eq. 373 (citing and adopting definition in Park v. Grant Locomotive Works, 3 162, 40 N. J. Eq. 114).

In determining whether the books of a malting company showed a "net profit," so as to justify the declaring of a dividend, an increase of 15 per cent. in the bulk of barley which takes place when it is manufactured into malt was properly inventoried as having the value of barley, it appearing that this was the trade custom. Estimated profits to be made by a manufacturing company on orders for the future delivery of goods to be made from raw material not yet purchased are not "net profits" within Stock Corporation Law, § 23 (Laws 1892, p. 1829, c. 638), and New Jersey General Corporation Law, § 30 (P. L. p. 2286), both declaring that dividends shall be made only from net profits. Hutchinson v. Curtiss, 92 N. Y. Supp. 70, 72, 45 Misc. Rep. 484.

In ascertaining the "net profit" derived from carrying on any ordinary manufacturing business, the gross profit to be derived therefrom is to be divided, first, into a fair rental for the factory, based on the cost of its reproduction; second, interest on the working capital; third, cost of operating and administration; and the balance, if any, is "net profit." See v. Heppenheimer, 61 Atl. 843, 847, 69 N. J. Eq. 38.

The term "net profits," as used in P. L. 1904, p. 275, providing that a corporation shall not pay dividends except from its surplus or from the net profits arising from its business, is not synonymous with "surplus," nor used in the sense of an excess of the value of its present assets over the par value of its outstanding capital stock, and "it does not necessarily follow that net profits mean the difference between net earnings and what may be called operating expenses. Such profits may be called annual profits, and it may be that by net profits the Legislature meant the net profits upon the whole of the company's business from its organization. If either of these meanings is adopted, the declaration of the present dividend is justified. There was an excess of gross earnings over the operating expenses of the current year, and the value of the present assets exceeded the value of the actual assets with which the company began business." Goodnow v. American Writing Paper Co., 69 Atl. 1014-1016, 73 N. J. Eq. 692.

A contract between a corporation engaged in the manufacture of wire cloth, and another for the establishment of the new business of manufacturing and selling wire rope, provided that the corporation should furnish capital to the extent of $50,000, if the sales did not exceed $100,000 a year, represented by proper buildings with power and machinery, and by the amount of capital necessary to purchase or provide the wire necessary for the production of rope to the amount named per annum. The contract further provided that the parties were each to receive one-half of the net profits, and, in ascertaining net profits, taxes on the capital employed and other charges as usual were to be made. Held, that charges for the depreciation of buildings and machinery, for power furnished by the corporation to the wire department, for repairs, for insurance, and for loss of finished product destroyed while in a warehouse hired, maintained, and managed by the wire rope department, were proper charges against the gross earnings for the purpose of determining the net profits.

3 Wds. & P. 2d Ser.—38

Stone v. Wright Wire Co., 85 N. E. 471, 472, 473, 199 Mass. 308.

Where the owner of a mining lease sold two-thirds interest therein to be paid for out of the first "net profits" out of the mine, such profits comprised the first excess of current receipts for ore taken out of the ground over and above the current expenses for producing the ore and the necessary charges for repairs and betterments, and the purchasers were not to be reimbursed for moneys expended in the development of the mine, sinking of shaft, erection of mill, purchase of machinery, etc., which constituted capital before an account of the first "net profits" was estimated. Crocker v. Barteau, 110 S. W. 1062, 1066, 212 Mo. 359.

"Net profits," participation in which constitutes a person a partner, contemplates a sharing of the loss as well as the profits, while gross profits mean the aggregate sales made after deducting cost, import duties, and carriage, and participation therein would not raise a presumption of partnership. Fechteler v. Palm Bros. & Co., 133 Fed. 462, 469, 470, 66 C. C. A. 336.

The term "net profits," in a contract employing one to take charge of departments in a mercantile establishment for an annual salary and a per cent. of the net profits of the departments in his charge, means the profits realized in the departments, without deduction for interest on the capital invested therein. Daintrey v. Evans, 132 N. Y. Supp. 126, 128, 148 App. Div. 275.

The term "net profits" in a contract, applied to a course of dealing involving successive transactions, implies an element of time, and, unqualified by custom, usage, or other words, refers to termination of the particular venture, or it may refer to expiration of a fiscal period at the end of which profits are to be computed, less than the period of adventure, but if the business covers several fiscal periods provided for computing compensation, losses, and gains arising from matters covered by an earlier fiscal period, but occurring after ascertainment of the profits for that period, are carried into and increase or diminish the net profits for the next or some succeeding fiscal period, though the parties may at the end of any fiscal period draw profits thus computed. Thomas v. Columbia Phonograph Co., 129 N. W. 522, 523, 144 Wis. 470.

In an action for failure to deliver a purchased machine, where it appeared that the purchase price was to be paid partly on shipment, partly on installment, and the remainder in 12 months from shipment, with interest, in arriving at the "net profits" which plaintiff was prevented from making by failure of defendant to deliver the machine, the interest on the investment, at least on the deferred payment, together with all necessary expenses (including insurance provided for in the contract), should be taken into account. Fred W. Wolf Co. v. Galbraith, 87 S. W. 390, 391, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 351.

An accident insurance contract provided for commissions to the agent consisting of all policy fees collected and 33½ per cent. of the "net profits" on the monthly premium business of the agency to be ascertained by crediting the gross premiums received from the collectors in the territory on monthly premium business, to the account, and charging the same with the sums paid in losses and claims on monthly premium business in such territory and taxes and, after deducting the total debits from credits, the balance remaining shall constitute the "net profits." Held, that losses for disability beginning before the date the contract was terminated and continuing to a later date were properly chargeable against the business of the agency in ascertaining the "net profits." C. B. Perry & Sons v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co., 63 Atl. 489, 490, 73 N. H. 608.

A hotel lessee's measure of damage for wrongful dispossession is such amount as will compensate him for the injury, not exceeding the net profits of the business for the unexpired portion of the term, and in arriving at such profits it is proper to deduct the gross expenses from the gross receipts for the period in which the business was run, and from the average profits thus ascertained estimate the lessee's loss for the remainder of the term, but it is improper to credit uncollectible accounts as profits. Orange Hotel Co. v. Townsend (Tex.) 130 S. W. 701, 702.

As income

See Income.

NET RECEIPTS

The phrase "net receipts," as used in Laws 1869, p. 228, as amended by Laws 1879, p. 179, providing that agents of foreign insurance companies shall return to the county, town, etc., where the agency is situated, the amount of the "net receipts" of such agency for the preceding year, which amount shall be subject to taxation as is other personal property, means the amount remaining after the operating expenses of the company have been deducted from the gross receipts; and the company is not entitled to have fire losses paid in the county, etc., deducted from gross receipts. National Fire Ins. Co. v. Hanberg, 74 N. E. 877, 378, 215 Ill. 378.

NET SUCCESSION

While the inheritance tax prescribed by St. 1905, c. 314, is not a tax on property as such, but upon the privilege of succession, the amount of the tax as to any beneficiary is to be determined according to the value of the "net succession"; that is, the value of such property as remains to him after satisfying lawful charges. In re Hite's Estate, 113 Pac. 1072, 1073, 159 Cal. 392, 32 L. R. (N. S.) 1167, Ann. Cas. 1812C, 1014.

NET TO US

The words "net to us," in a telegram sent by plaintiffs offering to sell butter to defendants for 17 cents per pound "net to us," meant that the price was to be 17 cents from all charges and deductions. Florida Creamery Co. v. Dillon & Douglass, 75 Atl. 82, 84, 83 Conn. 65.

NET VALUE

There is a distinction between "net value" and the "cash surrender value" of a life insurance policy. Penn's Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Barnett's Adm'r, 99 S. W. 228, 232, 12 Ky. 266.

In construing Rev. St. 1899, § 7897 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3752), which provides that policies shall not be forfeited by reason of non-payment of premiums where three-fourths of the net value of the policy is sufficient to secure temporary insurance, etc., "net value" is a technical term, and is to be taken in its technical sense. The "net value" of an insurance policy, as computed under Rev. St. 1899, § 7897 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3752), is the excess of the total premiums paid, plus per cent. compound interest, over the actuarial cost of insurance. Rose v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., 132 S. W. 613, 614, 153 Mo. App. 90.

"Net value" of a policy within the meaning of the statute is a sum which, with compound interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum and with the addition of future net premiums, will provide for the payment of the policy when it matures according to the combined experience of actuaries' table of mortality. Westerman v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 94 S. W. 470, 480, 188 Mo. 670, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114.

The term "net value," as used in Rev. St. 1899, §§ 7897, 7898, 7899, 7900, relating to insured's rights in life policies after default in payment of premium, is to be determined by construing such sections together. The term does not mean the provision for the amount of paid-up insurance that insured would be entitled to if demanded, but is an arbitrary apportionment arrived at in the method prescribed by section 7897, which "net value" is the same referred to in section 7900, so that where insured, after having paid more than three annual premiums on an endowment policy, payable on a specified date or at death, made default in the payment of premiums, and at the date of default three-fourths of the net value, computed as directed by section 7897, amounted to $47.86, while the net value of the paid-up insurance provided in the policy was only $42.79, and the sum of $47.86 would purchase extended insurance under section 7897 for a term extending beyond the date of insured's death, the amount of paid-up insurance so stipulated in the policy was not sufficient under section 7900 to make section 7897 inapplicable, and hence insured's beneficiary was entitled to recover the full amount of the policy. Fahle v. Connecticut Met. Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 124 S. W. 60, 63, 155 Mo. App. 15.

NET WEIGHT

The "net weight" of a cargo of lumber means the weight of the lumber only, exclusive of standards, supports, etc., used in piling the lumber on the car. State ex rel. Washington Mill Co. v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 86 Pac. 1056, 1057, 43 Wash. 658, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1084.

NEURALGIA

NEURASTHENIA

See Traumatic Neurasthenia.

"'Neurasthenia' is a somewhat indefinite term, applied to certain nervous conditions, while 'myelitis' is a diseased condition, or degeneration of the spinal cord, and is regarded as a much more serious ailment than that of 'neurasthenia.'" In a personal injury action, the weight of the evidence showing that the injured had produced a condition of neurasthenia rather than myelitis, as claimed by plaintiff, a verdict for $8,000 was excessive by at least $3,000; plaintiff being 23 years old and earning $70 to $85 per month. Robinson v. Spokane Traction Co., 91 Pac. 972, 973, 47 Wash. 303.

NEURITIS

NEUROSIS.

See Traumatic Neurosis.

NEUTRAL SPIRITS

"Neutral spirits," as the term suggests, is a colorless liquid which has neither flavor nor character, and is not a beverage at all. It may be produced from any fermented substance, such as corn, potatoes, and sugar beets. It was formerly used exclusively in the arts, but with the advent of cheaper methods of production it has been palmed off on the public as a beverage with something to give it flavor and character. Levy v. Uri, 31 App. D. C. 441, 445.

"Neutral spirits" are made at very high temperature for the purpose of carrying off so far as possible every property except alcohol and water, and, while whisky is aged and matured for not less than four years in charred oak barrels, neutral spirits require no aging, but may be immediately consumed, and, as the name signifies, they contain neither taste, smell, nor color, and no amount of aging such spirits will change it without the aid of foreign matter. "Whisky," within the Food & Drugs Act June 30, 1906, 34 Stat. 768, c. 3915, is the product of sound grain, distilled at a low temperature so as to retain in the distillate the congeneric properties of the grain, which give to the liquor, when matured by aging in charred casks, its desirable potable character. "Neutral spirits," which are distilled at a high temperature, may be made from different materials and do not contain such properties, and which are not rendered potable by aging, although reduced by water to potable strength and from which most of the fusel oil has been removed, are not whisky nor a like substance with whisky. Woolner & Co. v. Renick, 170 Fed. 662-664.

The words "New B/L" mean a certain form of a bill of lading known as the "new bill of lading," containing a special clause as to the time to be given for unloading a vessel after arrival in port, and as to the amount of demurrage for its detention beyond the day specified in the bill of lading. Kenyon v. Tucker, 23 Atl. 61, 17 R. I. 529.

NEW ACQUISITION

Land is to be considered an ancestral estate where it has come from or by or on the part of the father or mother of the owner by gift, devise, or descent either mediately or immediately from them or from any person in their respective lines, and will be a "new acquisition" if derived from any source other than by descent, devise, or gift from any relative in the paternal or maternal line, as by a son from father or mother for a valuable consideration. Martin v. Martin, 135 S. W. 348, 349, 98 Ark. 93.

An allotment acquired by a Creek citizen by selection and certificate of allotment or by patent is a new acquisition within Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 2531 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 1839), providing that where intestate shall die without descendants, if the estate be a new acquisition, it shall descend to the father for his lifetime, with remainder to the collateral kindred of intestate in the manner provided by that act. Shulthis v. MacDougal, 162 Fed. 831, 337.

The heirs who take under such provision and their estate are determined by Mansf. Dig. Ark. c. 49, which provides that, on the death of a person intestate, unmarried, and leaving no children, the estate, if it came from the father, shall go to the father, and if from the mother shall go to the mother, "but if the estate be a new acquisition it shall ascend to the father for his lifetime and then descend in remainder to the collateral kindred of the intestate." A child whose father was a member of the Creek Tribe, but whose mother was not, was born May 6, 1901, and died in November of the same year. He thus became entitled to enrollment in the tribe, but had not received his allotment at the time of his death. Held that, technically, the Arkansas statute did not apply to the situation, since the land to which the decedent was entitled and which was the common property of the tribe did not, strictly speaking, come to him by grant, inheritance, or purchase, but by a division of lands held in effect by a tenancy in common, to an interest in which he was born as a member of the tribe entitled to enrollment therein; but that, applying the statute by analogy, such land was not a "new acquisition," but came to him by the blood of his tribal parent, or, within the meaning of the statute, "from his father," and that therefore, on his death and the subsequent allotment his father took the full title, and not merely a life estate. Shulthis v. MacDougal, 170 Fed. 529, 533, 95 C. A. 615.

NEW ACTION

See Commencement of New Action.

The words "new action," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4221, providing that where any action is commenced within due time and a judgment for plaintiff is reversed, etc., plaintiff may commence a "new action" within one year after the reversal, means an action for the same cause as that of the former action; the statute only intending to save to plaintiff the right to commence a new action for the same causes as in his original action. Hatchell v. Hebeisen, 82 Pac. 826, 827, 16 Okl. 223.

NEW AND ADDITIONAL SOURCES

Laws 1906, p. 2023, c. 723, § 2, requires the submission of maps and profiles and approval of the State Water Commission before taking or condemning lands for new or additional sources of water supply. Held, that the word "source" may refer to a lake, etc., as a source of supply, or to any well-defined watershed from which percolating water might be taken, and the statute did not exclude a whole territory in which a city has incidentally procured some part of its supply, the limitation on "new and additional sources" meaning sources which had not been appropriated at the time of the statute. Queens County Water Co. v. O'Brien, 115 N. Y. Supp. 495, 498, 131 App. Div. 91.

NEW AND USEFUL ART

A system of transacting business disconnected from the means for carrying out the system is not within the most liberal interpretation of the term "art," and, unless the means used are novel and disclose invention, the system is not patentable as a "new and useful art," within the provisions of Rev. St. § 4886. Hotel Security Checking Co. v. Lorraine Co., 160 Fed. 467, 469, 87 C. A. 451, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665.

NEW ASSESSMENT

The term "new assessment" and the term "reassessment," in St. Paul City Charter, § 57, refers to a new apportionment of the benefits, and in making a "new assessment" or "reassessment" the board of public works has authority to establish an entirely new district and to include therein all property benefited by the improvement, whether embraced within the original district or not. State ex rel. Eaton v. District Court of Ramsey County, 104 N. W. 553, 556, 95 Minn. 506.

NEW ASSETS

Where land conveyed by testatrix under a deed absolute on its face, but held under a court decree for the executrix to be a mortgage, was redeemed by her, it was "new assets," within Rev. Laws, c. 141, § 11, providing that, if new assets come to an executor after two years from the time of his giving bond, he shall be held to account therefor in an action of a creditor, the same as if the assets had been received within two years. If the creditor's action is commenced within one year after notice of the receipt of the assets and within two years after they are actually received; and a creditors' suit, commenced within one year after reconveyance of the redeemed property to the executrix, was not barred. Horton v. Robinson, 98 N. E. 681, 682, 212 Mass. 248.

Where a debtor conveyed property to trustees, reserving the right to any surplus remaining after payment of creditors named, and at his death this possible right was supposed to be of no value, and was not inventoried, but 12 years thereafter the beneficiaries accepted certain stock in a real estate trust then formed, in satisfaction of their claims, and it was then found that there was a surplus, it was held that this surplus was "new assets" within Pub. St. c. 136, § 11, making an administrator liable to suit by a creditor on account of assets received after two years from the time of giving bond, provided the suit be commenced within two years after the assets are actually received and within one year after plaintiff has notice of their receipt. Quincy v. Quincy, 46 N. E. 108, 109, 167 Mass. 536.

Rev. Laws, c. 142, § 10, relating to insolvent estates, provides that a creditor who does not present his claim for allowance to the commissioners, or to the court where no commissioners are appointed, within the time prescribed by that court, shall be barred, but that, if "further assets" come into the hands of executor or administrator after the decree of distribution, the claim may be proved and paid. Held, that the term "further assets" is substantially the same as "new assets," which belated creditors are permitted to reach under chapter 141, § 11, relating to insolvent estates, and in general does not include property for which the administrator has been charged, or the property into which such property, or any part thereof, has been changed, or the natural increment of such property; and where an administrator did not include in the inventory, nor in his first nor second and final account, certain land, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, if he knew that the land belonged to his intestate long before the decree of distribution, and had it in his control well within the two-year period from his appointment, neither the land nor the proceeds of its sale would be "further assets," but, if his knowledge of intestate's interest in such tract did not come to him until after two years from his appointment, the proceeds of their sale would be "further assets." Fay v. Haskell, 93 N. E. 641, 643, 207 Mass. 207.

NEW BILL

If the amendment or substituted bill presents a measure that has no relation to the bill as originally introduced, it cannot stand, for it is in substance a new measure or bill. If the substitute has a clear relation to the subject of the original bill, it can be said to be germane, and will not be treated as a new bill. A bill to provide for a board of county auditors for a designated county was introduced and referred to a committee. The committee reported the bill, with a substitute identically like the original bill, except that another county was substituted for that of the county mentioned in the original bill. Under the definition this change made the substitute a new bill. People ex rel. Board of Sup'rs of Kent County v. Loomis, 98 N. W. 262, 265, 135 Mich. 556, 3 Ann. Cas. 751.

NEW BOOK

Under the copyright statutes as they stood prior to Act March 4, 1909, c. 320, 35 Stat. 1075, as well as by the express provision of section 6 of such act, the addition of new matter to a copyrighted book in a second or subsequent edition makes it a "new book" subject to copyright as an original work. West Pub. Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 176 Fed. 833, 837, 100 C. C. A. 303.

NEW BUILDING

Building a one-story kitchen in the rear of another building is the erection of a "new building" within the meaning of an ordinance prohibiting the erection of wooden buildings. If a building be so changed in plan, structure, dimensions and general appearance that it might in common parlance be called a "new building," it is a violation of the ordinance. State v. Long Branch Com'rs, 25 Atl. 274, 275, 55 N. J. Law, 108.

Within a city ordinance making it unlawful to construct any wooden building within the fire limits, no fixed rule can be laid down stating what is to be deemed a "new building" and what a "repairing." Where a building, 42 feet long, 24 feet 8 inches in width, and about 10 feet in height at the highest part outside of a raised part at one end with a skylight which was about 17 feet high at its highest point, had the roof with the skylight removed and the building raised in height except in the front, and on the rear 16 feet of the upper part was an addition with a peaked roof 16 feet long and about 17 feet to the peak and about 12 feet to the base of the roof, thus making the building all of the same height without any change in its height or appearance in front and with no change in appearance at the sides, except by reason of the increased height, it was not a "new building" and was not within the ordinance. Mayville v. Rosing, 123 N. W. 393, 394, 19 N. D. 98, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120.

NEW BUSINESS

Kirby's Dig. § 6960, makes it the county assessor's duty whenever any person shall commence any new business after the regular assessment to assess the value of such business and make an extra assessment and file it with the clerk who shall extend the taxes thereon. On May 1, 1909, plaintiffs owned a stock of merchandise at a building on M. street consisting of dry goods, etc., purchased for $18,000. In June, 1909, they were assessed for personalty in the sum of $10,000, and in October they leased the F. building and carried into it some shopworn goods from their store on M. street which were sold at a sacrifice by the plaintiffs' regular employes, and no separate books were kept, the money received each day being taken over to the M. street store, and no new goods were purchased for the F. building. Held, that the business at the F. building was not a "new business" within the statute. Froug-Smullon & Co. v. Pulaski County, 147 S. W. 72, 73, 103 Ark. 397.

NEW CAUSE OF ACTION

The expression "new cause of action" can be taken, when used on the subject of amendment, as intending nothing more than a new right or claim arising out of the same transaction. If it were not so—that is, if the new cause of action was one arising out of a wholly different transaction from that laid in the complaint—then it would constitute what we have sometimes designated as an entirely new cause of action, and one which could not be introduced into the complaint by amendment, if objected to. Identity of transaction is therefore the basis for the introduction by way of amendment of counts on new claims or rights arising out of the same. Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 38 South. 707, 709, 139 Ala. 578, 101 Am. St. Rep. 52.

Within the statute of limitations, an amended complaint sets up a "new cause of action" composed of the right of plaintiff and the obligation, duty, or wrong of defendant, where the new allegation deprives defendant of any defense he had to the original action, where the evidence that would have proved the original complaint will not prove the new, where the new allegations, if in reply, would have amounted to a departure, where the amended complaint sets up a title not before asserted, or where a judgment on the first complaint would be no bar to a judgment on the amended complaint. Where the original complaint in an action for injuries to a lineman of an electric light and power company alleged a negligent failure to properly insulate live wires, an amended complaint, alleging the negligent failure to turn off the electric current passing through the wires, sets forth an additional charge of negligence, but did not set up a new cause of action so as to make the statute of limitations applicable, since the facts alleged in either the original or amended complaint would bar another action for the same cause. Raley v. Evansville Gas & Electric Light Co., 90 N. E. 783, 784, 45 Ind. App. 649.

NEW CONSTRUCTION

Under Rev. Codes, § 2419, authorizing directors of irrigation districts to fix rates of tolls and charges for water against persons using its canals, or to levy assessments to defray expenses of the operation, repair and improvement of such portion of its works as are in use, the laying of a pipe line caused by the lawful removal of a ditch by municipal authorities is a repair or improvement, the funds for defraying which may be included in a maintenance assessment or in increased toll rates, and is not a new construction which must be defrayed by a special assessment under section 2391, or a bond issued under section 2396. City of Nampa v. Nampa & Meridian Irr. Dist., 115 Pac. 979, 982, 19 Idaho, 779.

NEW COUNTY

When a county is changed in its territory by the addition of territory, it becomes a "new county," although the name be unchanged, and although it be accomplished by a law which in terms attaches the territory to the old county. Taking territory from one county and adding to another is within the provision of Const. art. 10, § 2, that no organized county shall ever be reduced by the organization of "new counties" to less than 16 townships, except on the decision of a majority of electors residing in each county to be affected thereby. Board of Sup'rs of Bay County v. Edmunds, 102 N. W. 998, 999, 139 Mich. 466.

Authority granted by the Constitution to grant new counties does not mean to reorganize an old county under a new name. It must mean a new county, an additional county, and not a reorganization, rebounding, renaming of an old county. McDonald v. Doust, 81 Pac. 60-63, 11 Idaho, 14, 69 R. A. 220.

NEW DEBT

See Creation of New Debt.

NEW FUNCTION

A claim under the patent laws for "new function" cannot be sustained in the absence of an element of novelty or unexpectedness. General Electric Co. v. Y. Electric Mfg. Co., 139 Fed. 568, 570, 71 C. A. 552.

NEW INN

P. L. 1891, p. 311, providing that after a license has once been granted to keep an inn or tavern, or to sell spirituous liquors, the filing of a petition for a renewal signed by applicant shall confer power upon the licensing board to renew the license for one year in cities of the fourth class, and that the former holders who may have recommended the former application shall not be eligible as signers for a new application for one year from the granting of such renewal, and that the act shall not affect applications for new inns and taverns, saloons or victualling houses in such cities, applies only to the licensing of places which had been already licensed when the act was approved. Lee v. Atlantic City, 79 Atl. 312, 313, 80 N. J. Law, 567.

NEW MATTER

In pleading

A defense can consist only of "new matter," that is, matter which, taking all of the allegations in the complaint to be true, nevertheless a defense to the action, such as payment, a general release, fraud, the truth of a libelous publication, etc. Leonorowitz v. Ott, 82 N. Y. Supp. 880, 40 Misc. Rep. 551.

"New matter" in a pleading is matter for defense not provable under a general denial. Schultz v. Greenwood Cemetery, 115 N. Y. Supp. 180, 182, 46 Misc. Rep. 299.

The term "new matter," in Rev. Code N. D. 1899, § 5273, subd. 2, requiring the answer of defendant to contain a statement of any "new matter" constituting a defense to the counterclaim, means matter extrinsic to the matters set up in the complaint as a basis of the cause of action; a defense which comports with the cause of action once established but has been determined by some subsequent transaction. The distinction between defenses admissible under a denial and those which are new matter depends primarily upon the structure of the complaint and the materiality averments of fact which it contains. All facts which directly tend to disprove any one or more of these averments may be offered under the general denial. All facts which do not thus directly tend to disprove some one or more of these averments, but tend to establish a defense independently of them, cannot be offered under the denial. They are new matter, and must be specially pleaded. Hogen v. Klabo, 100 N. W. 847, 849, 13 N. D. 319 (citing Manning v. Winter [N. Y.] 7 Hun, 482; Greenway v. James, 84 Mo. 328; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 22, 70 Am. Dec. 692; Churchill v. Baumann, 30 Pac. 770, 95 Cal. 541; Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 673).

"New matter constituting a defense," within the rule requiring such matter to be pleaded, is matter not embraced within the statement of facts made by the plaintiff, but existing outside of the narrative which he has given and such that proving it to be true does not disprove a single averment of fact in the complaint or petition, but merely prevents or destroys the legal conclusion as to the plaintiff's right and the defendant's duties which would otherwise have resulted from all those averments admitted or proved to be true. Montgomery v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 53 S. E. 987, 989, 73 S. C. 503.

Where the complaint was so drawn that it could be claimed that the action was brought for damages under a common-law liability as well as under the Employer's Liability Act (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31, §§ 200-204), the defendant, under a general denial, could prove failure to serve the 120-day notice, under the Employer's Liability Act, and failure to bring the action within one year after date of accident; and hence these were not "new matters" proper to be set up as a defense under authority of Code Civ. Proc. § 500. Kelliher v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 136 N. Y. Supp. 256, 259, 77 Misc. Rep. 330.

NEW OR ADDITIONAL

If a change simply adds to a mail contractor's service it is "new or additional service," being of the same kind within a provision in his contract providing for performance of such service without additional compensation. Profit v. United States, 42 Ct. Cl. 248, 259.

The phrase "new or additional service," in a contract for the carrying of mails requiring the contractor to perform new or additional services that the Postmaster General may order, etc., is not one of exact meaning, and the court must give to it a reasonable construction with a view of doing justice between the parties. An increase in the service required on a mail route, as the result of the establishment of a new distributing station in the city of New York, amounting to more than 300,000 miles of additional transfer service, and involving an additional expenditure of nearly $10,000 for ferry tolls, cannot be required by the Postmaster General without extra compensation, under the authority reserved to him in the contract to call for new, additional, mail messenger, or transfer service without additional compensation. United States v. Utah, N. & C. Stage Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 69, 72, 199 U. S. 414, 50 L. Ed. 251.

A statute providing that no municipal corporation shall have power to condemn lands "for any new or additional sources of water supply, until it has first submitted the maps and profiles therefor" to the state water supply commission, does not apply to a proceeding by a municipal corporation to condemn an established and fully equipped plant of a water company; such plant not being a "new and additional" source of supply. Village of Waverly v. Waverly Water Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 1070, 1071, 117 App. Div. 336.

NEW PLACE

The words any "new place," as used in an act regulating the sale of liquors (P. L. 1905, p. 42), means a place for which a license has not previously been granted upon a direct application. The mere transfer of a license to a place leaves it still a "new place" for the purposes of this act. Wright v. Board of Excise of City of Elizabeth, 66 Atl. 1061, 75 N. J. Law, 28.

In order to constitute a place for which a license to sell intoxicating liquors is applied for a "new place," within the meaning of the act of 1906 (C. S. 2908, pl. 84), it must appear, in cases where the premises had for some years previously been used continuously for such purpose, that there has been a substantial abandonment of the business. Parnes v. Board of Excise Com'rs of City of Elizabeth, 82 Atl. 313, 314, 82 N. J. Law, 285 (quoting and adopting definition in Eckersly v. Abbott, 74 Atl. 313, 79 N. J. Law, 157).

An inn or tavern in which the occupants have for many years retailed liquor under a license granted annually did not become a "new place" within P. L. 1906, p. 199, forbidding the granting of a license to a "new place" within 200 feet of a church merely because an occupant was refused a license, where he again applied, at the first opportunity, for a license, and it was granted. Eckersly v. Abbott, 74 Atl. 313, 314, 79 N. J. Law, 157.

NEW PROMISE

See, also, Acknowledge—Acknowledgment.

A direct admission by a debtor within six years prior to the commencement of the action of a subsisting debt which he is liable and willing to pay is sufficient evidence of a "new promise" to bar limitations. Barker v. Heath, 67 Atl. 222, 224, 74 N. H. 270.

A writing acknowledging the receipt of $500 as belonging to a person named, but which contains no statement of any fact from which the law implies an obligation or promise, is not an agreement, contract, or "promise" in writing within the saving clause of the statute of limitations. Lewis v. Norria, 103 Pac. 134, 135, 80 Kan. 620.

A "new promise" to remove the bar of the statute of limitations should be in its terms unequivocal and determinate, and, when a promise is to be implied from an acknowledgment, the acknowledgment ought to contain an unqualified admission of a previous subsisting debt, which the party is liable and willing to pay. Reed v. Interstate Oil Co., 92 Pac. 911, 912, 41 Colo. 463 (citing Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351, 7 L. Ed. 174, and other cases).

An oral promise made by the decedent to compensate one for past services by giving him a legacy was an independent and substituted contract, and not a new promise within St. 1898, § 4243, providing that no promise shall be sufficient evidence of a new contract so as to take the cause out of the operation of the statute of limitation, unless in writing and signed by the party to be charged. Murtha v. Donohoo, 136 N. W. 158, 160, 149 Wis. 481, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 246.

That an inventory filed with a bill brought by testator's brother and others to construe the will listed a debt as due the estate from the brother did not constitute a "new promise in writing," removing the bar of limitations, under Code 1904, § 2922, where the inventory was not signed by him or his agent, and the bill was not signed by him, but by counsel. Walter v. Whitacre, 73 S. E. 984, 986, 113 Va. 150.

NEW ROAD

That the original line of a street railway company was but about 3 miles long, while a proposed additional line is about 15 miles long, is insufficient of itself to constitute such addition a "new road," and not an "extension," within Railroad Law, Laws 1890, p. 1108, c. 565, § 90, permitting a street surface railway company to "extend" its lines without obtaining a certificate of the board of railroad commissioners that public convenience and necessity require the same. Roberts v. Huntington R. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 1031, 1032, 56 Misc. Rep. 62.

NEW ROUTE

Rev. St. Ohio, §§ 2501, 2502, provide for the granting of original street railway franchises, after advertisement on public bids, to the corporation which will agree to carry passengers at the lowest possible rates of fare, and shall have previously obtained the written consent of a majority of the property holders on the several streets along the proposed route, provided that no street railway grant, or renewal of a grant, shall be valid for a longer period than 25 years. Section 2505 authorizes the city council to grant any street railway corporation power "to extend its track," subject to the provisions of sections 3437-3443, none of which, however, relates to the establishment of a route or a renewal of a grant, and did not require such extensions to be on competitive bidding, etc. Held, that an extension granted under such sections is not a "new route," having an independent life, but depends for its existence on the original line, and expires with the franchise thereof. Cleveland Electric R. Co. v. City of Cleveland, 137 Fed. 111, 180.

NEW SEWER

Under Act Mass. 1899, c. 450, § 3, providing that the board of street commissioners at any time within two years after any "new sewer" is completed shall assess on the several estates especially benefited a proportional part of the cost thereof, where a sewer was completed in April, 1898, in a street where there was an old sewer on the opposite side, which was broken down and useless and which was in no way connected with the new sewer, the sewer constructed constituted a "new sewer" within the meaning of the statute. Hall v. Street Commissioners of Boston, 59 N. E. 68, 69, 177 Mass. 434.

NEW STRUCTURE

Where the owner of a building remodelled and reconstructed internally, and also reconstructed with new material some or all of its walls, so as to substantially enhance the value of the premises, such new parts and the remodeling and improvements of the old may be returned by the assessor as "new structures," within Rev. St. 1892, § 2753, requiring the assessor to make and return a list of all new structures of any kind. Lewis v. State, 69 N. E. 980, 982, 69 Ohio St. 473.

NEW TRIAL

See Motion for New Trial; Rule Absolute For New Trial.

Application for new trial, see Application.

A "new trial" is a trial anew, with as little prejudice to either party as if the cause had never been heard before. Star Bottling Co. v. Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co., 144 S. W. 776, 777, 240 Mo. 634.

A "new trial" in a criminal prosecution is the re-examination of the facts under the same plea of not guilty on the same information or indictment. State v. Keerl, 85 Pac. 862, 865, 33 Mont. 501.

According to Code Civ. Proc., a "new trial" is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referee. Hamilton v. Murray, 74 Pac. 75, 76, 29 Mont. 80; State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court of Lewis & Clark County, 82 Pac. 789, 793, 33 Mont. 138, 8 Ann. Cas. 752.

A "new trial" is a re-examination of an issue of fact, and the sufficiency of the pleadings to support a plaintiff's cause of action or maintain any particular defense relied on by defendant is not involved, and cannot be considered on an appeal from an order granting a new trial. Clark v. Van Torchiana, 127 Pac. 831, 833, 19 Cal. App. 786.

A "new trial" as defined by statute is a re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact after a verdict or report of referee or master, or a decision of the court. Todd v. Peterson, 81 Pac. 878, 881, 13 Wyo. 513.

A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision. Caldwell v. Wells, 101 Pac. 812, 813, 16 Idaho, 459.

A "new trial" is defined by Kirby's Dig. § 6215, to be a re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact after verdict by a jury or decision by the court. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 121 S. W. 282, 284, 91 Ark. 362.

"A 'new trial' is a re-examination of an issue of fact after verdict of a jury, report of a referee or master, or decision by the court." A new trial as thus defined refers to a re-examination of an issue of fact on the pleading where a fact or conclusion of law is maintained by one party and controverted by the other. Anderson v. Englehart, 105 Pac. 571, 18 Wyo. 196, Ann. Cas. 1912c, 894 (citing Rev. St. 1899, § 3746; First Nat. Bank of Cheyenne v. Swan, 23 Pac. 743, 3 Wyo. 356).

A "new trial" recognizes a completed trial which for some sufficient reason has been set aside so that the issues may be litigated de novo, as distinguished from a "mistrial," which is a nugatory trial. A "new trial" results from the exercise of discretion, while a mistrial is a matter of law. Stern v. Wabash R. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 181, 182, 52 Misc. Rep. 12.

A "new trial," defined by the Code as a re-examination of the issue of fact or some part or portion thereof, differs from the examination of all the issues involved in an action. And a mere trial of fact or of law is included within the latter. Bevering v. Smith, 98 N. W. 1110, 1111, 121 Iowa, 607.

Primarily, the office of a motion for a "new trial" is to afford the court an opportunity to correct errors in its own proceedings without subjecting parties to the expense and inconvenience of appeal or petition in error. Chadron Loan & Bldg. Ass'n v. Scott, 96 N. W. 220, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 694 (citing Weber v. Kirkendall, 63 N. W. 35, 44 Neb. 766).

A "new trial" is a re-examination of an issue of fact. Hence there can be no new trial of the cause in the superior court on appeal from justice court unless there has been a trial of issues of fact in the justice's court. Smith v. Clyne, 97 Pac. 40, 42, 15 Idaho, 254 (citing Maxson v. Superior Court of Madera County, 57 Pac. 379, 124 Cal. 468; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Superior Court of Kern County, 59 Cal. 471; People ex rel. Jones v. El Dorado County Court, 10 Cal. 19; Funkenstein v. Elgutter, 11 Cal. 328; Rickey v. Superior Court of Nevada County, 59 Cal. 661; Myrick v. Superior Court, 8 Pac. 648, 68 Cal. 98).

Civ. Code Prac. § 340, provides that a "new trial" is a re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact after a verdict by a jury or a decision by a court. The question of granting a new trial, where plaintiff was ill, and neither she nor her counsel appeared, and the action was dismissed, is not governed by Civ. Code Prac. § 344, providing for a "new trial" if grounds are discovered after the term at which the decision is rendered, or the term at which the decision is rendered, or by section 240, providing for a new trial after a verdict or a decision by the court, or by section 342, providing for the time for making the application, but comes under section 518, subsec. 7, authorizing the granting of a new trial for unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the party from appearing. Ray v. Arnett (Ky.) 106 S. W. 828, 829.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 656, defining a "new trial" as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial, and section 657, subd. 6, authorizing a new trial to be granted for insufficiency of evidence to justify the decision, or on the ground that it is against the law, an objection that a judgment entered was not the correct legal conclusion from the facts found, which sections 663 and 663½ authorize to be urged in the trial court on motion or by an appeal from the judgment, cannot be reviewed on appeal from an order denying a new trial. Kaiser v. Dalto, 73 Pac. 828, 829, 140 Cal. 167.

Under Comp. Laws, § 7503, providing that the state may sue out a writ of error from a judgment for defendant on demurrer to the indictment, from an order arresting judgment, and from an order granting "new trial," the "new trial" refers to the new trial defined in section 5087 as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by jury, court, or referees; and hence the state cannot bring error upon the county court's mere reversal of a conviction had before a justice of the peace. State v. Finstad, 93 N. W. 640, 16 S. D. 422.

B. & C. Comp. § 1485, defines a "new trial" as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision or verdict by a court or jury. Where a judgment of conviction is reversed on the ground of error, overruling a demurrer to the indictment, a new trial will be ordered, subject to the discretion of the trial court as to resubmitting the cause to the grand jury. State v. Eddy, 82 Pac. 707, 46 Or. 625.

The term "issue of fact" in Rev. Codes, § 6793, defining a new trial as a re-examination of an issue of fact after a trial, when considered in connection with section 6723, refers only to an issue arising on formal pleadings, and though, under section 7712, the provisions as to new trials apply to probate proceedings, a motion for new trial in such proceedings does not lie in the absence of formal pleadings raising an issue of fact. Where two ex parte applications for letters of administration are heard together as authorized by Rev. Codes, § 7441, and no issue is joined as to the competency of either of the persons seeking to act as administrator, a motion for new trial, after granting one of the petitions and denying the other, does not lie. In re Antoniolli's Estate, 111 Pac. 1083, 1084, 42 Mont. 219.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 656, defining a "new trial" as a re-examination of an issue of fact, and section 657, providing that a verdict or other decision of fact may be reviewed on an appeal from an order denying a new trial, the question whether the judgment is authorized by the pleadings cannot be raised or reviewed on an appeal from an order denying a new trial, irrespective of the issues presented by the pleadings, and notwithstanding the findings may be at variance with such issues. Schroeder v. Mauzy, 118 Pac. 459, 461, 16 Cal. App. 443.

Under a statutory definition that a "new trial" is the re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact, after a verdict, report of a referee, or decision by the court, a motion for a new trial is not proper unless an issue of fact has been fully determined by a jury verdict or its equivalent, and there can be no "new trial" on issues of law, as such issues can be investigated on appeal without previous re-examination by the trial court. On motion for a new trial, only those errors of law which vitiate the conclusions of fact need be called to the trial court's attention, and, if the facts have been agreed to or have been eliminated so that the controversy depends upon a question of law, a motion for a "new trial" is not necessary. Wagner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 85 Pac. 299, 73 Kan. 283.

Rev. St. 1892, § 6436, provides that a new trial shall be granted for cause only, and when it is granted it shall take place in same court as the first trial was had and shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of this chapter for the first trial, so far as the same are applicable. Held, that the words "new trial" mean the rehearing of the case from the beginning. Dayton U. R. Co. v. Dayton & M. Traction Co., N. E. 195, 196, 72 Ohio St. 429, following State v. Judges of Court of Common Pleas of Hamilton County, 69 N. E. 659, 69 Ohio St. 372.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 159, providing that the findings of the court shall be deemed a verdict, and may be set aside in the same manner and for the same reasons, and section 173, defining a new trial as a re-examination of an issue of fact after a trial and decision, and section 174, specifying the manner in which a verdict or other decision may be set aside and a new trial granted, and providing that a new trial may be granted "on the motion of the party aggrieved," the court cannot on its own motion set aside its filed findings after the filing by a party of a motion for judgment; the court not having been imposed on by fraud or collusion of the parties or otherwise. Scott v. Ford, 99 Pac. 99, 101, 52 Or. 283.

A judgment for one of the defendants, a corporation, was reversed on appeal on the ground that the findings were not justified by the evidence, without any specific directions as to the further proceedings in the case. After remand plaintiff, having recovered against the other defendants, moved for judgment against the corporation defendant, which the court granted, the order reciting that the cause came on to be heard on plaintiff's motion for judgment against the defendant corporation on remittitur from the Court of Appeals, and it appearing to the court that all questions of fact were finally adjudicated by the judgment against the other defendants, and, good cause being shown therefor without objection, it was ordered that judgment be rendered against the corporation. Held, that such proceedings do not constitute a new trial, to which the corporation defendant was entitled, as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 656, and that the judgment was therefore erroneous. Riley v. Irma Vista Ranch Co., 89 Pac. 849, 850, 16 Cal. App. 25.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 656, defining a new trial as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court, where the case was tried on an agreed statement of facts which the parties stipulated was to be considered as the court's findings in the case, a motion for new trial would not lie on the ground that the decision was contrary to law, at that point could only be raised on appeal. Quist v. Hill, 99 Pac. 204, 207, 154 Cal. 74.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1012, provides that in a case specified in the section where the parties consent to a reference, and a new trial of the action tried by the referee designated is granted, the court must upon application of either party appoint another referee. Held, that where the court refuses to confirm the referee's report, and refer the matter to be again heard and determined, it in effect grants a new trial within the meaning of the section, and the re-reference should be to a new referee. White v. White, 122 N. Y. Supp. 885, 886, 138 App. Div. 272.

As defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 265 (Gen. St. 1905, § 5180), a "trial" is a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or fact, in an action; and a "new trial" (Code Civ. Proc. § 306 [Gen. St. 1905, § 5202]) is a re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact after a verdict by a jury, report of a referee, or a decision of a court. The same section provides that the former verdict, report, or decision shall be vacated, and a new trial granted on the application of the party aggrieved (which section 309 [section 5205] provides must be by motion on written grounds) for certain causes specified affecting materially the substantial rights of such party. Some of the causes specified are any order of the court by which the party is prevented from having a fair trial; that the decision is not sustained by sufficient evidence, or is contrary to law; error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time. Code Civ. Proc. § 306 (Gen. St. 1905, § 5202). Strictly construed, then, as defined by the Code, a "trial" involves the judicial examination of all the issues of law and fact in an action, while a "new trial" involves only the re-examination of an issue of fact. That this strict construction is not applicable to new trials of ordinary actions in which the law applicable varies to the varying facts pleaded or proven is apparent, when we consider the grounds for which new trial "shall be granted" as prescribed, some of which involve only a question of law. These must be re-examined both on the hearing of the motion for the new trial and upon the new trial, if granted. Issues of law are not ordinarily framed in an action by the petition and answer or by the answer and reply in the sense that a proposition of law is asserted in one pleading and denied in another; but such issues may arise in many ways at almost every stage of the action, and are sometimes determinative of the action and sometimes not. Sometimes they arise in the course of the trial, and sometimes before the trial is commenced. It goes without saying that there can be no new trial until there has been a trial; and, by a fair construction of the Code, it must be such a trial as results or should result in a verdict, a report of a referee, or a decision by the court which involves and determines the facts in issue. Otherwise there could be no new trial "of the issue of fact." It follows therefore that whenever a trial has been had upon issues of fact, which trial results in a verdict, report of a referee, or a decision which determines such facts, either party who feels himself aggrieved may file his motion for a new trial on the grounds and within the time prescribed, and, until such motion is disposed of, the action is still pending, and the statutory time for preparing a case-made for an appeal does not begin to run. Darling v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 612, 613, 76 Kan. 893.

Default judgment

An order vacating a default decree of divorce and allowing defendant to answer in accordance with L. O. L. § 59, is not an appealable order within section 548, providing that appeals will lie from final judgment and decrees, in effect determining the action and orders setting aside the judgment and granting a new trial, for the order is not a final one determining the suit, and neither is it an order granting a new trial which is defined by section 173 as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after judgment, for this order only vacates a default, and there has been no trial which is defined by section 113 as the judicial examination of the issues between the parties. Taylor v. Taylor, 121 Pac. 431, 432, 61 Or. 257.

Degree of offense

A "new trial" is defined by St. 1893, art. 14, c. 68, as a re-examination of the issue in the same court before another jury after verdict has been given, and the granting of a new trial places the parties in the same position as if no trial had been had, and therefore one who has been convicted of manslaughter under an indictment charging murder may, on being granted a new trial, be tried for murder. Turner v. Territory, 82 Pac. 650, 651, 15 Okl. 537.

Under Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 8 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5705), providing that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, save on his own motion for a new trial, a person indicted for murder and convicted of manslaughter obtaining a new trial may be again tried for murder, and cannot successfully interpose a plea of former acquittal of murder. Brantley v. State, 64 S. E. 676, 678, 132 Ga. 573, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 959, 131 Am. St. Rep. 218, 16 Ann. Cas. 1203.

Directed verdict

Under Code, § 3755, defining a "new trial" as a re-examination in the same court of an issue after a "verdict of a jury," or a decision of the court, the court may grant a new trial after a directed verdict for error in directing the verdict. Bottineau Land & Loan Co. v. Hintze, 125 N. W. 842, 843, 150 Iowa, 646.

NEW WATER

Benefits of an irrigation system were classified under two heads; one of "old water," and the other of "new water." The term "old water" referred to existing water rights at the time of the purchase of the canal, and "new water" referred to rights yet to be acquired by the enlargement of the canal. No benefits under the head of "old water" were apportioned to plaintiff's land, and the canal had not been enlarged so as to acquire any "new water." Held, that until such enlargement occurred, or it was made to appear that the canal company had sufficient water to supply plaintiff's demand without interfering with prior users, he could not acquire a perpetual water right by the temporary use of water from the canal when prior users were not demanding their full rights. Gerber v. Nampa & Meridian Irr. Dist., 100 Pac. 80, 87, 16 Idaho, 1.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE

"Newly discovered evidence" is evidence in existence at the time of the trial but which could not by reasonable diligence have been procured. Cassidy v. Johnson, 84 N. E. 835, 837, 41 Ind. App. 696.

Evidence is not newly discovered which at the time of the trial is known to the plaintiff in interest, who had taken upon herself the prosecution of the case, and which any inquiry of her would have made known to the nominal plaintiff. Emmet v. Perry, 60 Atl. 872, 873, 100 Me. 139.

Where, on the issue of payment, plaintiff testified that receipts offered in evidence were forgeries, he was not entitled to a new trial on the affidavit of a handwriting expert that the signatures to the receipts were forgeries, since the proffered testimony was not "newly discovered evidence" but was merely newly made evidence which could easily have been produced on the original trial. Heintze v. Graham, 116 N. Y. Supp. 548, 550.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 568, subd. 7, providing that a new trial may be granted for newly discovered material evidence which could not with reasonable diligence have been produced at the trial, where evidence was discovered by a party some time before the court made its finding, but no attempt was made to have the court consider the evidence before the finding was announced, it was not "newly discovered evidence" so as to constitute a ground for a new trial. Burk v. Matthews Glass Co., 81 N. E. 88, 89, 40 Ind. App. 81.

By "newly discovered evidence" warranting a new trial is meant testimony that comes to a party's knowledge after trial, and hence, where during the trial defendant obtained knowledge of the importance of an absent witness and did not ask leave to withdraw its announcement of ready for trial, and ask a continuance to secure his attendance, but proceeded with the trial, it could not claim a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. El Paso

Publication of newspaper, see Publication.

See, also, General Circulation.

A "newspaper," in the popular sense, publication issued at regular stated intervals containing, among other things, the current news, or the news of the day. Times Printing Co. v. Star Pub. Co., 99 Pac. 1040, 1041, 51 Wash. 667, 16 Ann. Cas. 414.

A "newspaper" is defined as a publication issued at regular stated intervals, containing, among other things, the current news or news of the day. A publication printed daily, except Sundays, and legal holidays, and devoted to the dissemination of news on a great variety of topics of interest to the general reader, but giving special prominence to legal news, including the proceedings in the Supreme Court of the state and of the local courts sitting in the state, is a newspaper. Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Printing Co., 74 Pac. 802, 804, 33 Wash. 533. (citing 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] 533).

A weekly publication, printed and circulated in a city, containing the current news and matters of general interest, as well as the local happenings, is a "newspaper," within the meaning of the statute requiring publication of city ordinances, although circulation may be very limited. Kansas City v. Overton, 75 Pac. 549, 550, 68 Kan. 560.

A paper regularly published in a city for 20 years, and in general circulation having among its subscribers, bankers, real estate agents, rental agents, architects, building companies, public and private contractors, public service corporations, and attorneys, and containing a large and varied advertising list covering many lines of business, and publishing news concerning city ordinances, resolutions of the city council, building improvements, transfers of real estate, personal property, building permits, court proceedings, and probate matters, public sales, together with brief items of local and foreign news of general interest and miscellaneous items of interest to the general reading public on political, social, moral, religious and other subjects, is a newspaper. Merrill v. Conroy, 109 N. W. 175, 77 N. D. 228.

A "newspaper," in the popular acceptance of the word, is a publication issued at stated intervals, containing, among other things, the current news (citing 21 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, p. 533). A 4-page, 6-column, publication containing local and general news and correspondence, and also legal, professional, and business advertising, and apparently intended for general circulation, and entered in the United States mails as second-class matter, was a "newspaper," where the evidence showed that it had been published for ten years, and had a circulation in four counties of the state and in a majority of the states of the Union. The general circulation of a newspaper is necessarily comparative. No fixed number of subscribers is required to constitute general circulation. A newspaper's circulation does not necessarily mean that it is read by all of the people of the county or township. Ruth v. Ruth, 79 N. E. 523, 524, 39 Ind. App. 290 (citing Lynn v. Allen, 44 N. E. 646, 145 Ind. 584, 33 L. R. A. 779, 57 Am. St. Rep. 223).

"Finance and Commerce," a daily paper published in Minneapolis, is a newspaper qualified as a medium of official and legal publications, under R. L. 1905, § 5515. Olsen v. Bibb Co., 135 N. W. 385, 117 Minn. 214, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 877.

Under Code, § 3535, providing that publication of an original notice required for commencing an action must be in some "newspaper" printed in the county where the petition is filed, publication in a daily paper published regularly in the city where suit is brought for four years, with an actual paid subscription of more than 200 copies per day, not made up of subscribers of one class, containing advertising covering many lines of business, publishing the latest news, and reporting items of local and foreign news and others of interest, including transfers of property, and all news relating to court proceedings, and that has for more than three years been admitted to the mails under rules governing admission of all other newspapers, and is the official paper of the district court of the county, is sufficient, as such paper is a "newspaper." Brice v. Graves, 121 N. W. 504, 505, 142 Iowa, 722.

Under St. 1888, c. 390, § 35, requiring tax sale advertisements to be published in "a" newspaper, and under section 43, requiring tax deeds to state "the newspaper" in which the advertisement was published, a tax sale based on cost of advertising in two newspapers is void, the word "newspapers" in St. 1889, c. 334, § 3, authorizing a charge for advertising in "newspapers," meaning copies of the newspaper in which the advertisement was published. Shurtleff v. Potter, 92 N. E. 331, 206 Mass. 286.

Printers' affidavits as to the publication of notices of tax sales declaring that the paper had been published in the county for the legal period, one stating its publication for a period of more than three years, and the other for more than two years, sufficiently showed that the newspaper was a legal newspaper within the description specified by St. 1818, § 1130. Bouchier v. Hammer, 123 N. W. 132, 134, 135, 140 Wis. 648.

As paper in English

Where a notice is required to be published by printing in a newspaper, the notice must be published in English in a newspaper printed in English. A publication in English of a notice in a French newspaper is insufficient. Connors v. City of Lowell, 95 N. E. 412, 415, 209 Mass. 111, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 627.

Considering the object designed and the practical means of accomplishing the object, the manifest legislative intent in the requirement of section 788 of the General Statutes of 1906 that the notice "shall be published in the several newspapers printed in the county" was to include only such "news papers" as are devoted to the publication of current news in general and are circulated among all classes of the people, and not to include publications designed chiefly or wholly for the purposes of only a portion of the entire public. The English language is the means recognized by our law for communication and information; and, while a paper printed in a foreign language may be a "newspaper," it may not be within the purview of a statute requiring the publication of legal notices designed for the information of all the people, where the statute contains nothing to indicate an intention to include such publication. Tylee v. Hyde, 52 South. 968, 969, 60 Fla. 389.

NEWSPAPER OF GENERAL CIRCULATION

Pol. Code, § 4459, defines "newspaper of general circulation" as a newspaper published for the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, having a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers, and which shall have been established, printed, and published, in the state, county, city, and county, or town, where such publication, notice of publication, or official advertising is given or made, for at least one year. A newspaper devoted to the interests, or published for the entertainment, of a particular class, profession, trade, calling, race, or denomination, or any number thereof, is not a newspaper of general circulation. In re Malone, 74 Pac. 991, 992, 141 Cal. 331.

Evidence held to show that a certain newspaper was a "newspaper of the county having general circulation therein" within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1908, § 4006, so that a certificate of partnership required to be published by Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1908, § 3901, was properly published therein. Hessler v. Coldron, 116 Pac. 787, 29 Okl. 216.

A daily noon publication was an 8-page paper, 18 by 23 inches in size, with 8 columns to the page, and contained telegraphic, sporting, political, and theatrical news and advertisements with an editorial column. The company also published an evening paper by another name, and the noon publication in question had formerly been known as the noon edition of the evening paper, and was principally devoted to sporting news. The publishers of the noon paper bid for the city printing to be published therein. The paper at that time had no regular subscription list, but about 1,000 copies were sold daily by newsboys. Subsequently the paper had a subscription list of 360 and an average daily circulation of 1,083. Held, that the paper, at the time the bid was submitted, was a "newspaper" within Seattle City Charter, art. 4, § 31, requiring that the city official newspaper be a daily newspaper of general circulation, etc., though it sometimes contained news published the day before in the evening paper. Times Printing Co. v. Star Pub. Co., 99 Pac. 1040, 1041, 51 Wash. 667, 16 Ann. Cas. 414.

Under Pol. Code, § 4460, defining a "newspaper of general circulation" as one which shall have been established, printed, and published at regular intervals for at least one year preceding the date of publication, where a newspaper had been published weekly for part of a year, and daily for the balance of the year preceding the filing of a petition to have it declared a newspaper of general circulation, it was published at "regular intervals" for one year within the statute, which does not require the interval between the dates of publication to be equal from beginning to end, but only to be regular and not spasmodic or occasional. In re Tribune Pub. Co., 108 Pac. 667, 12 Cal. App. 754.

NEWSPAPER OF OPPOSITE POLITICAL FAITH

Under Laws 1903, p. 435, c. 182, § 1, subsec. 29, amending Laws 1898, p. 371, c. 182 (Second-Class Cities Law), providing for the designation by the common council of two daily newspapers having the largest circulation and of opposite political faith as official newspapers of the city, a newspaper which supports no party, and advocates the principles or candidates of no party, but which is the personal organ of its publishers and proprietors, at times supporting the candidates and principles of either the Republican or Democratic parties, as its officials may determine, is not a "paper of opposite political faith" to any regular party paper. People ex rel. Troy Press Co. v. Common Council of City of Troy, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1045, 1047, 114 App. Div. 354.

NEXT

As nearest

There is a shade of difference between the words "next" and "nearest." The word "next" in a certificate of membership in a mutual benefit society, providing for payment of a benefit on the death of a member to the beneficiary named, who under the laws must be either the wife, children, adopted children, parents, etc., and, if the member outlived the beneficiary named and died without naming another beneficiary, the beneficiary was to go to the member's "next" relation in the order named, is used as a synonym of "nearest" and refers to the member and not to the beneficiary. Therefore when a member named his wife as beneficiary she died and he married again, leaving a second wife without having changed the beneficiary, the second wife and not his child took the benefit. Speegle v. Sovereign Co. of Woodman of the World, 58 S. E. 435, 77 S. C. 517.

Gen. St. 1902, § 788, provides that, when a final judgment is rendered in any cause in which a party may be entitled to a writ of error to the Supreme Court, he may appeal from such judgment to the next term of court which would have cognizance of the writ of error. Accused was convicted on November 11, 1911, and the next term of the Supreme Court was January 16th. Section 563 provides that the writ of error, which is an independent action begun by the filing of a complaint in the Supreme Court, and the running out of the writ as civil process must be returned at least 30 days before the sitting of the court. Held that, as the word "next" means nearest in order and immediately following, the writ of error in this case was returnable to a term beginning January 16th and an appeal cannot be filed to a later term. State v. Caplan, 84 Atl. 280, 283, 85 O. 618.

As referring to same month

The word "next," in a writ of venire issued June 12, 1908, commanding the sheriff to serve the writ upon the jury commissioners, and requiring them to summon the jurors to appear before the common pleas court held on the 22d of June next, at 10 o'clock, etc., meant the next 22d day of June in that year, especially in view of the fact that the next term of the court after June 12th was June 22d. State v. Washington, 64 S. E. 387, 82 S. C. 341. (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4795).

NEXT CAUSE

As proximate cause, see Proximate Cause.

NEXT ELECTION

Const. art. 10, § 5, providing that in case of vacancy in the Supreme Court the election may be filled by the grand committee the next annual election, refers to the next annual election of public officers. In re Opinion of Judges, 51 Atl. 221, 222, 23 R. I. 635.

The words "next election," as used in P. L. 1901, p. 333, § 18, providing that acceptance or rejection of the act should be submitted to a popular vote at the "next election" whether general, municipal, or special, etc., did not refer to the "next election" held after the passage of the act. Had such been the intention of the Legislature, it was comparatively easy to specify a date for a special election, or to designate a general election. Therefore, in support of the constitutionality of the act, it is fair to take the words "next election" as applying to the first general election that shall be held in any county, not at the time possessing the distinctive features, after it shall thereafter acquire those features. Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Commission, 53 Atl. 612, 616, 68 N. J. Law, 523.

NEXT EVENTUAL ESTATE

See Eventual Estate.

NEXT FRIEND

As party, see Party.

Guardian ad litem distinguished, see Guardian Ad Litem.

"A 'next friend' is one who, though not regularly appointed, represents in a suit a party thereto who is not sui jura." Jackson v. Counts, 54 S. E. 870, 871, 106 Va. 7.

The office of next friend is to represent a person under disability in the litigation, being authorized to appear only when there is no legal and statutory representative discharging that duty. Upton's Committee v. Bush, 121 S. W. 1005, 1008, 135 Ky. 102.

The guardian and next friend, in conducting a civil action, are a "species of attorney, whose duty it is to bring the rights of the infant to the notice of the court," and the authority of each is limited to the proceeding in which he is appointed. Williams v. Cleaveland, 56 Atl. 850, 853, 78 Conn. 426.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3498u, provides that any minor having a sufficient cause of action and who has no legal guardian can bring suit in any of the courts by "next friend," and such next friend shall have the same rights concerning such suit as if he were guardian, etc. The "next friend" is merely a trustee who voluntarily assumes the task of representing the minor in the litigation and in the suit stands as the representative of the minor. Biggins v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (Tex.) 110 S. W. 561, 563.

The relation of "proche in ami" to the action is that of an officer of the court specially appointed to enforce and preserve the rights of the infant in whose behalf he acts. He may employ an attorney, carry the suit on to judgment, and may, if there is no regularly constituted guardian of the infant, receive the money recovered of the defendant, and thereupon may enter a valid satisfaction of the judgment. State ex rel. Lane v. Ballinger, 82 Pac. 1018, 1020, 41 Wash. 23, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 72.

NEXT GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Laws 1878-79, p. 125), authorizing the Governor to suspend a railroad commissioner, and providing that the Governor shall report the fact of suspension and the reason therefor to the "next" General Assembly, means the General Assembly nearest in point of time, and, if the General Assembly is in session when the suspension is made by the Governor, it is his duty to make his report to that General Assembly. Gray v. McLendon, 67 S. E. 859, 873, 134 Ga. 224.

NEXT GENERAL ELECTION

The phrase "next general election," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 3750, which provides that a person appointed to fill a vacancy shall serve until the next general election, means the next regular election at which that particular class of officers is to be chosen. Wainwright v. Fore, 97 Pac. 831, 833, 22 Okl. 387.

The term "next general election," as used in Laws 1905, p. 18, § 10, providing that all officers appointed by the act should hold their respective offices until after the "next general election," so far as the office of clerk of the district court is concerned, means the "next general election" held to fill that office in the judicial district, and a person holding such office is not ousted by the election of a successor at a general election called by the Governor for the election of other officers than clerk of the district court. State ex rel. Livesay v. Smith, 90 Pac. 750, 751, 35 Mont. 523, 10 Ann. Cas. 1138.

NEXT HIGHEST BIDDER

The phrase "next highest bidder," as used in Act Cal. March 11, 1901, relating to the granting of a street railway franchise by a municipality to the next highest bidder on the failure of a successful bidder to make the requisite deposit within a specified time, refers to bids already made, and not to a bid or bids to be made. It expresses the relation between bids in existence—those already made and pending before the council. It is only in comparison with the next highest of those that the words have significance. Pacific Electric R. Co. v. Los Angeles, 24 Sup. Ct. 586, 589, 194 U. S. 112, 48 L. Ed. 896.

NEXT MUNICIPAL ELECTION

The words "next municipal election," as used in an act concerning the government of cities, and requiring that the act be submitted to the voters at the municipal election after its approval, means the next election after the municipality comes into the class.

affected by the legislation. Seymour v. City of Orange, 65 Atl. 1033, 1034, 74 N. J. Law, 549 (citing Ross v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 55 Atl. 310, 69 N. J. Law, 291; Fagan v. Payen, 59 Atl. 568, 75 N. J. Law, 851).

The phrase "next municipal or charter election," in P. L. 1894, relative to cities of the first class and providing that members of certain municipal bodies shall be elected at the "next municipal or charter election," would as to existing cities be the first election after the passage of the act and as to any future cities the first election held in the same. Fagan v. Payen, 59 Atl. 568, 569, 75 N. J. Law, 851.

NEXT OF KIN

"The term 'next of kin' is used to signify the relatives of a person, sometimes in the sense of nearest blood relatives and at other times in the sense of relatives entitled to take under the statute of distribution." Graham v. Whitridge, 57 Atl. 609, 617, 58 Atl. 36, 99 Md. 248, 66 L. R. A. 408.

The words "next of kin," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2643, relating to letters of administration with will annexed, where there is no executor qualified to act, and providing in subdivision 3 that where the residuary, principal, or specified legatee, or the guardian of a minor, entitled to letters, either do not exist or will not accept administration, letters shall issue to one or more of the next of kin, must be limited to such of the next of kin as are entitled to share in the unbequeathed assets of the estate, and who are therefore persons interested therein; and a person having no such right is to be excluded. In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 559, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

In Rev. St. c. 70, § 2, giving a right of recovery for wrongful death to the wife and "next of kin," the quoted words mean those standing in that relation in a technical sense. Dukeman v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 86 N. E. 712, 714, 237 Ill. 104 (quoting and adopting definition in Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. v. Woolridge, 51 N. E. 701, 702, 174 Ill. 330, 334).

The words "next of kin" as used in the statute relating to wrongful death mean those who inherit from the deceased under the statutes of descent and distribution. Bolinger v. Beacham, 106 Pac. 1094, 1096, 81 Kan. 746.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 285, giving a right of action to the personal representative for death by wrongful act, provided that the damages must inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and children, if any, or next of kin, recognizes two classes of beneficiaries, the widow and children and next of kin; and, if there are persons of the first class entitled to damages, they will take exclusively, and grandchildren are not "children" within the statute, but come within the second class and may take as beneficiaries if there are none of the first class, nor are minor children "next of kin" within the statute, though they are in fact decedent's next of kin. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Reed, 88 N. E. 1010, 1082, 44 Ind. App. 635.

Under a statute providing that "whenever the title to any real estate of inheritance to which the person having such title shall die intestate, came by descent, gift or devise from the parent or other kindred of the testator and such intestate die without children, such estate shall go to the kin next of blood of the blood of the person from whom such estate came or descended if there be," property devised by testatrix to her grandchildren who are children of her daughter, with the provision that at the death of one of the grandchildren, a grandchild, the property should vest in her heirs, the property vested in equal parts between her death in her mother, and her brother, the "next of kin" to the exclusion of her sister. Pierce v. Pierce, 14 R. I. 514, 517.

In the absence of a contrary intent, a gift to "next of kin" is a gift to the nearest of kin in the strictest sense, excluding persons who might take by representation under the statute of distribution; e. g., a brother or sister takes to the exclusion of children of a deceased brother or sister. Clark v. Mack, 126 Mich. 632, 634, 161 Mich. 545.

As kin living at time

A devise to "heirs" or "next of kin" construed as referring to those who answer that description at the time of the testator's death or who would have taken, by descent, had he died intestate, unless a different intention is plainly manifested by the will. Suman v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 201, 114 Mich. 241.

"Next of kin," in the statute fixing the order of preference in which letters of administration shall be granted, means persons who are next of kin at the death of the intestate, and who inherit the estate left by the decedent, and the addition of the words "having an inheritable interest in the estate" adds nothing. In re Ellis' Estate, 88 N. E. 3342, 43 Ind. App. 620.

Under a will giving the residuary estate to the executors, in trust to pay the income to B. for life, and providing, "From and after the death of B., I direct my executors and trustees to convey my entire residuary estate with all accumulations of interest then in my hand, to my heirs at law and next of kin whomsoever they may be," the gift over after the death of the life tenant is to testator's next of kin living at the death of the life tenant. In re Cooper's Will, 96 N. Y. Supp. 564, 109 App. Div. 566.

As nearest blood relations

Primarily a decedent's "next of kin" are the persons nearest in degree of blood surviving him. If a decedent leaves neither parent nor lineal descendant surviving, brothers and sisters are "next of kin." In practical use in public statutes, "next of kin" ordinarily means those who take personal estate under the statute of distributions. In re Weaver's Estate, 119 N. W. 69, 70, 140 Iowa, 615, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161, 17 Ann. Cas. 947.

Adopted child

Under a statute providing that an action for death shall be for the exclusive benefit of the widow and "next of kin" of the deceased person, the "next of kin" of a child adopted under the statute concerning infants (2 Gen. St. p. 1714) are the "next of kin" by blood. Heidecamp v. Jersey City H. & P. St. R. Co., 55 Atl. 239, 69 N. J. Law, 284, 101 Am. St. Rep. 707.

It is only as to the adopting parent that the adopted child is made heir or next of kin by the statute Comp. Laws 1897, § 8780, providing that an adopted child shall become the heir at law of the person adopting it; and the adopted child, therefore, is not heir by right of representation of the kindred of the person who adopted it. Van Derlyn v. Mack, 100 N. W. 278, 280, 137 Mich. 146, 66 L. R. A. 437, 109 Am. St. Rep. 669, 4 Ann. Cas. 879 (quoting Helms v. Elliott, 14 S. W. 930, 89 Tenn. 446, 10 L. R. A. 535).

As descendant

See Descendant.

Father

Where decedent leaves no widow or child, but is survived by a father, mother, and younger sister, the father is the sole "next of kin." Swift & Co. v. Johnson, 138 Fed. 867, 870, 71 C. C. A. 619, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161 (citing Gen. St. 1894, § 4477 [cl. 6] § 4471 [cl. 3]).

As heirs

See Heirs.

Heirs at law

The common-law distinction between "next of kin" and "heirs at law" does not exist in our statutes of descent, but heirs at law are also the next of kin. L. T. Dickason Coal Co. v. Diddil, 94 N. E. 411, 413, 49 Ind. App. 40.

"Those who take personalty by inheritance are technically 'next of kin' and not heirs." Kalbach v. Clark (Iowa) 110 N. W. 599, 602, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801 (citing and adopting Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 1).

The term "next of kin" at least includes those entitled to take the personal estate in case of intestacy. While it is doubtless used sometimes as synonymous with the broad signification of "heirs at law," the term "heirs at law" is often used in its popular sense of including heirs in the legal sense, those on whom the law casts title to realty possessed by the intestate at the time of his death, and next of kin as well. Treating the latter term and the former only in their legal sense, the one refers to those who take the personalty of an intestate and the other to those in whom the title to the realty possessed by the intestate vests immediately on his death. In re Scaife's Will, 105 N. W. 920, 921, 126 Wis. 405.

Where a will directed that, on the death of testator's widow, all his estate then remaining should be divided into three equal parts, one to go to his son W. or to his heirs should he have died, the word "heirs" should be construed to mean "next of kin," or those related by blood, entitled to take the personal estate of one dying intestate, and did not include W.'s widow. Hess v. Zahn, 107 N. Y. Supp. 951, 953, 954, 57 Misc. Rep. 515.

Since the courts of Kansas have construed the words "next of kin" in Gen. St. Kan. 1897, c. 95, §§ 418, 419, authorizing an action for negligent death for the benefit of decedent's next of kin, to mean those who inherit from decedent under chapter 100, § 19, providing that, where an intestate leaves no issue nor wife, his estate shall go to his parents, a father and mother may sue for the death of their son, dying intestate, without wife or issue, in consequence of an injury received in Kansas. Charlton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 98 S. W. 529, 535, 200 Mo. 413.

Testatrix, by the fifth clause of her will, bequeathed money to be invested and the interest paid to testatrix's sister for life, and on her death, to testatrix's daughter, and, on the death of the daughter, the principal to be divided between the issue of the daughter, and, if no issue, then to testatrix's next of kin. The sixth clause devised the homestead to the executors, the rent thereof to be paid to the daughter during her life, and at her death the homestead to be conveyed to the child of such daughter, or the issue of such child, and, in the event of the failure of issue, then to testatrix's heirs at law. The seventh clause bequeathed the residue of the estate in trust, to be divided into two parts, and the income of one part paid to the daughter during her life, and, on the death of such daughter, the principal to be paid to her issue, and, if she leave no issue, to testatrix's next of kin. Held, that testatrix did not intend that her daughter should, in any event, take a vested remainder in the corpus of the trusts, subject only to her own life estate; the words "heirs at law" and "next of kin" not being used in their strict and primary meaning, viz., the persons who, in case of intestacy, would at the moment of testatrix's death succeed to her property.

Salter v. Drowne, 98 N. E. 401, 402, 205 N. Y. 204.

Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 46, providing by sections 6, 14, and 21 for the descent of real estate, declares by section 27 that if, in the descending or collateral line, any parent shall be dead, a child or children shall, by representation, be considered in the same degree as the parent would have been if living, and shall have the same share of the estate as the parent would have been entitled to if living, "provided that there is no representation admitted among collaterals after brother's and sister's children"; and article 93, § 129, provides: "After children, descendants, father, mother, brothers and sisters of the deceased, and their descendants, all collateral relations in equal degree shall take, and no representation among such collaterals shall be allowed." Testatrix directed her estate to be converted into cash and distributed among her "heirs at law and next of kin, who should be entitled thereto under the laws of Maryland." Held, in a contest between the first cousins of the deceased and the children of a deceased first cousin, that the children of the deceased first cousin were not within the class described by the will and took nothing thereunder. Suman v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 201, 114 Md. 241.

Illegitimate children

The term "blood relatives" or "heirs" or "next of kin" may include illegitimate offspring, and where testator left his property to his nearest blood relatives, and it appears with reasonable certainty that when he made the will he knew or ought to have known that he had no blood relatives other than illegitimates, he used the terms to refer to such persons. In re Sander's Estate, 105 N. W. 1064, 1066, 126 Wis. 660, 5 Ann. Cas. 508.

The administrator of an illegitimate child brought action for his wrongful death under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 285, for the benefit of his "next of kin," consisting of his mother, his half-brothers, and his half-sister by his mother's subsequent marriage. Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2998, provides that illegitimate children may inherit from the mother as if legitimate, and through the mother, if dead, any property or estate which she would, if living, have taken by gift, devise, or descent, and by section 3002 the mother of an illegitimate child dying intestate without issue or other descendants inherits his estate; and, if such mother be dead, her descendants or kindred shall inherit. Held, that the "next of kin" included such persons as were entitled to inherit the personal property of the decedent, and that, under sections 2998 and 3002, the mother and the half-brothers and the half-sister were the next of kin, and that the administrator's action could be maintained for their benefit.

L. T. Dickason Coal Co. v. Liddil, 94 N. 411-413, 49 Ind. App. 40.

Marriage connections

The phrase "next of kin," whether used in a statute, will, or contract, includes only relations by blood, and not connected by marriage, not even a husband and wife. Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 624, 635, 20 Okl. 687 (citing Supreme Council of Order of Chosen Friends v. Bennett, 19 Atl. 785, 47 N. J. Eq. 39).

The phrase "next of kin," whether used in a statute, will, or contract, has by a perfectly uniform course of decisions been held to include only relations by blood, and not connections by marriage, not even a husband and wife. Boyd v. Perkins, 113 S. W. 96, 130 Ky. 77 (citing Huting v. Fenner, 1 R. I. 411; 2 Jarm., Wills, 661; Schoups v. Wills, § 537).

The term "next of kin" does not include the widow of testator, in the absence of evidence of an intent to include her in the class which the term is employed to designate. United States Trust Co. v. Miller, N. Y. Supp. 938, 940, 57 Misc. Rep. 500.

The surviving husband is, within the meaning of Code, § 422, next of kin to his wife, and is entitled to recover damages for her wrongful death. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Townsend, 81 Pac. 205, 206, 71 Kan. 524, 6 A. Cas. 191.

The words "next of kin" do not include a widow or husband. Hess v. Zahn, 107 N. Y. Supp. 951, 953, 57 Misc. Rep. 515.

Neither husband nor wife of a nephew or niece of a testator were his "next of kin" or of blood relationship, and hence must be excluded in seeking those indicated by "heirs and representatives" of nephew or niece surviving him. In re Nelson's Estate, 74 Atl. 851, 857, 9 Del. Ch. 1.

A husband is his wife's "next of kin" where she dies intestate and without children or direct descendants, within Code of Proc. Kan. § 422a, providing that certain actions for wrongful death may be brought by deceased's "next of kin." Joplin & Ry. Co. v. Payne, 194 Fed. 387, 389, 114 C. A. 305.

Rev. St. Ohio 1892, § 4176, provides that when a person dies intestate and leaves no children or their legal representatives, the widow or widower shall be entitled as "next of kin" to all the personal property, except but, if the intestate leaves any children, the widow or widower shall be entitled to the first $400 and one-third of the remainder of the personal property subject to distribution. A policy of insurance payable to the insured's heirs was by its terms to be governed and construed according to the laws of Ohio. Held that, though in New York "heirs" would be applied to successors to personal estate.

means "next of kin," and "next of kin" does not include a widow, under the policy and laws of Ohio, the widow is entitled to personal property as "next of kin," and should share in the insurance with the insured's children. Burns v. Burns, 82 N. E. 1107, 1108, 190 N. Y. 211.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1903, provides that damages recovered in an action for wrongful death are exclusively for the benefit of the decedent's husband or wife and next of kin, to be distributed as unbequeathed assets; section 1904 declares that the damages may be such as the jury deems just compensation for the pecuniary injuries resulting from the decedent's death to the person for whose benefit the action was brought; and sections 1905 and 1870 define "next of kin" to include all persons entitled under the statutes of distribution of personal property to share in unbequeathed assets of the decedent other than a surviving husband or wife. Held, that in an action for wrongful death of a married woman living apart from her husband, leaving no descendants, the damages recoverable were only such as resulted from the pecuniary injury caused by her death to her husband. Austin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 740, 741, 108 App. Div. 249.

Nonresident alien

A statute giving the "next of kin" of one wrongfully killed a cause of action does not apply to nonresident aliens. Zeiger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 151 Fed. 348, 352.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1902, providing that an executor or administrator of decedent, who has left surviving a husband, wife, or "next of kin," may maintain an action to recover damages for wrongful death, section 1905, providing that the term "next of kin," as used in the foregoing sections has the meaning specified in section 1870, and section 1870, providing that the term "next of kin" includes all those entitled, under the provisions of law relating to the distribution of personal property, to share in the unbequeathed assets of a decedent, after payment of debts and expenses, other than a surviving husband or wife, the administrator of a decedent whose "next of kin" are aliens may bring such an action. Alfson v. Bush Co., 75 N. E. 230, 231, 182 N. Y. 393, 108 Am. St. Rep. 815.

NEXT OF KIN IN EQUAL DEGREE

Testatrix devised half of the residue of her estate to the heirs of her late husband. There were living 11 nieces and nephews and 8 grandnieces and grandnephews of the said husband at the death of testatrix. Held, that his "next of kin in equal degree" within Rev. St. 1903, c. 77, § 1, rule 6, are his 11 nieces and nephews living at the death of testatrix, taking the residue so devised per capita and not per stirpes. In re Ruggles' Estate, 71 Atl. 933, 935, 104 Me. 333.

The statute of distributions having been amended by the repeal of the proviso limiting representation among collaterals to the children of deceased brothers and sisters, held, that the words, "and in case there be no child, then to the next kindred of equal degree of or unto the intestate and their legal representatives," are to be read in connection with a prior clause directing distribution to the next of kindred "in equal degrees or legally representing their stocks," and in the distribution of personal property among collaterals representation is limited to the descendants of the stock represented by the surviving "next of kin," as the words "next of kin" must mean living persons. Smith v. McDonald, 61 Atl. 453, 455, 69 N. J. Eq. 765.

NEXT OF KINDRED

The words "next of kindred," as used in a will limiting a remainder on a trust estate after the beneficiary's death to her next of kindred, include the beneficiary's nephew and niece in preference to her grandnephews and grandnieces. Graham v. Whitridge, 57 Atl. 609, 617, 58 Atl. 36, 99 Md. 248, 66 L. R. A. 408.

The words "next of kindred," in Orphans' Court Act 1898, § 168 (P. L. p. 715), directing disposition to the next of kindred of equal degrees or legally representing their stocks, mean representatives of those dead, who if living would answer the same description as the actually living next of kindred. Smith v. McDonald, 65 Atl. 840, 842, 71 N. J. Eq. 261.

NEXT PRECEDING

The words "during the year next preceding," as used in Gen. St. 1905, c. 54, § 3, providing that in making a selection of persons to serve as jurors "each person who shall have served as a juror in any capacity at any term of court during the year next preceding such selection shall be excluded from the list of jurors for the then ensuing year," clearly means the preceding year, counting back from the time of the making of the list. State v. Hamilton, 87 Pac. 363, 365, 74 Kan. 461.

Code 1906, § 333, requiring notice of a proposal to issue county bonds for three weeks "next preceding," does not mean that, if the board fails to issue the bonds at the meeting next after the publication of the notice, it may not do so at a future time, but jurisdiction is acquired, and may be exercised in the discretion of the board. Weston v. Hancock County, 54 South. 307, 309, 98 Miss. 800.

NEXT REGULAR TERM

See, also, Next Term.

Defendant was given until the last day of the next term of court to file a bill of exceptions. The next term should have been held in February, and the following term in May. Owing to the absence of the judge, the February term was not held. Held, that she had until the last day of the May term within which to file her bill of exceptions, since the order extending her time did not give her to any particular day of the year, but to a certain day in the "next regular term," which meant a term at which the court was legally open for the transaction of business, and not the time at which it could and should have been open, but was not because of the absence of the judge. Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187, 188, 167 Mo. App. 183.

NEXT SESSION

The words "at its next session," in Const. art. 5, § 14, authorizing the Legislature to pass bills over the Governor's veto, and providing that, when the Governor within five days after the adjournment of the Legislature vetoes a bill and files it in the office of the Secretary of State, the latter shall lay the same before the Legislature "at its next session" as if it had been returned by the Governor, mean the first session following, whether regular or special, and a bill vetoed by the Governor after the adjournment of the Legislature must be acted on at the following special session, and the action of the Legislature in acting on it at the regular session following the special session and passing it over the Governor's veto is ineffectual. Woessner v. Bullock, 93 N. E. 1057, 1058, 176 Ind. 166.

NEXT SUCCEEDING

Where a demand for trial was made in the superior court at the term at which the indictment was found, and subsequently during the term the indictment was transferred to a city court for trial, the demand being made and the indictment transferred during a concurrent term of the city court, the next term of the city court, and not the concurrent term, was the "next succeeding term" after the demand, within the meaning of section 983 of the Penal Code. Castleberry v. State, 76 S. E. 74, 75, 11 Ga. App. 757.

In Act May 23, 1889 (P. L. 277, art. 1), § 3, as amended by Act June 21, 1911 (P. L. 1102), providing that officers of a borough shall hold their respective offices until the first Monday in December of the first odd-numbered year next succeeding the issuing of letters patent to the borough as a city of the third class, the words "next succeeding" qualify the words "the first odd-numbered year," and not the word "December." Commonwealth v. Langley, 82 Atl. 56, 58, 233 Pa. 222.

NEXT TERM

See, also, Next Regular Term.

An order that the action abate if the heirs are not made parties by the "next term" refers to the next civil term, and not to the intervening criminal term; and where process is served on them within that time, and within two years from defendant's death, the refusal to abate the action is not an abuse of discretion. Moore v. Moore, 66 S. E. 598, 599, 151 N. C. 555.

Const. art. 1, § 10, declares that justice shall be administered without delay; B. & Comp. § 1559, provides that if a defendant whose trial has not been postponed on application, or by his consent, be not brought to trial at the next term of the court at which the indictment is triable, after it is found, the court must order the indictment dismissed, except for cause; and B. & Comp. § 1379, gives the court authority to postpone a criminal case to another term of the statement of the district attorney. Hence the words "next term," as used in section 1559, excluded the current term at which the indictment was found, and hence the defendant was not entitled either to a trial or dismissal at that term. State v. Breaw, Pac. 896, 45 Or. 586.

Va. Code 1904, p. 1633, § 3060, provides in section 3062, that there may be tried at a special term any civil case not tried at the last preceding term, any motion cognizable by the court, any criminal case which could be tried at a regular term, and any controversy ready for hearing at law or in chancery, though it could not have been heard at the preceding term; and section 3024, p. 163, provides that, where the reasons stated in a petition for quo warranto are legally sufficient, the writ shall be returnable to the next term of the court. Held, that a writ of quo warranto may not be returned to a special term. The phrase "next term" in section 3024 referring to a regular term, and the matter not being within section 3062. Stull v. Pratt, 49 S. E. 654, 103 Va. 536.

Under section 27 of the act creating the city court of Camilla (Acts 1906, p. 18) providing that if a defendant stands mute, etc., then the judge shall commit him for trial at the next regular term, or special term, a contention that the word "next" means nearest, and that the nearest term the one already in session, is too strained to be tenable. Heywood v. State, 54 S. E. 18, 125 Ga. 262.

The phrase "next term," in a bail bond containing incorrect recitals as to the date, month, or year in which the court will convene or accused appear, coupled with a condition for accused to appear at the "next term," operates to render the bond valid. Territory ex rel. Thacker v. Conner, 87 Pa. 591, 592, 17 Okl. 135 (citing State ex rel. Gibson v. Lay, 29 S. W. 999, 128 Mo. 60).

State v. McElhane, 20 Mo. App. 584; Gay v. State, 7 Kan. 394; 5 Cyc. p. 96; Mooney v. People, 81 Ill. 184; Hunter v. State, 21 Ind. 351; Curry v. State, 39 Miss. 511; People v. Welsh [N. Y.] 47 How. Prac. 420; People v. O'Brien, 41 Ill. 303; Proseck v. State, 38 Ohio St. 606).

The word "subsequent," in the act requiring commissioners appointed by the Orphans' Court to set off dower to make their report at the next or subsequent term after their appointment, has the same meaning as "next," and, if either word had been used alone, it would have expressed the same idea. Osborn v. Rogers, 19 N. J. Eq. 429, 431.

Accused was indicted at the October, 1909, term of the district court, which ended February 4, 1910. On February 8th a special term of the court was convened at the request of accused to hear his motion to quash the indictment. Another special term was convened on February 28th, and on March 7th the next regular term convened which was to continue until May 31st, but the Legislature by Act March 25, 1910, provided that the regular term of such district court should commence on the first Monday in January, May, and October each year. Held, that accused was not entitled to a dismissal because he had not been brought to trial at either of such terms, since the "next term of court" within Comp. Laws 1909, § 7047, providing that, if an accused prosecuted for a public offense whose trial has not been postponed upon his application is not brought to trial at the next term of court in which the indictment is triable, the court must order the prosecution dismissed, etc., refers to the next regular term of the court as distinguished from a special term held for a special purpose, and the law becoming effective while the March term was being held, operating to terminate such term on April 30th, was sufficient cause for not trying him during such term, so that accused's right to a speedy trial guaranteed by Bill of Rights, § 20, was not violated, as his constitutional right to a speedy trial was not contravened by delay necessitated by the law itself. State ex rel. Eubanks v. Cole, 109 Pac. 736, 744, 4 Okl. Cr. 25.

NEXT THING TO AN IMPOSSIBILITY

"Next thing to an impossibility," as used in the testimony of an engineer with reference to the construction of a bridge so as to prevent debris from being swept therefrom either by the city's employes or by air currents onto the houses below, meant that any further or additional construction to remedy the alleged defect was almost impossible or impracticable. Sadlier v. New York, 93 N. Y. Supp. 579, 583, 104 App. Div. 82.

NFY.

Where a bill of lading read "consignee J. B. S. Nfy. W. H. J. & Co." the legend

"Nfy." is equivalent to "notify" and imposes on the railroad company the duty to notify W. H. J. & Co., and evidence to show such meaning is admissible. Stoner v. Zacharay, 97 N. W. 1098, 1100, 122 Iowa, 287.

NICE

The word "nice" is defined as "characterized by discrimination and judgment, acute, discerning, exactly fitted or adjusted, accurate, apt, delicately constructed, hence easily disarranged or injured; fragile, tender, agreeable or pleasant in any way, pleasing to the senses." Brophy v. Idaho Produce & Provision Co., 78 Pac. 493, 495, 81 Mont. 279 (quoting Standard Dict.).

NICKEL

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

A "nickel" means 5 cents. Sims v. State, 57 S. E. 1029, 1 Ga. App. 776.

NICKNAME

"Mike" is not a universally recognized abbreviation of "Michael," but is, strictly speaking, a mere diminutive or nickname. Ohlmann v. Clarkson Sawmill Co., 120 S. W. 1155, 222 Mo. 62, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 432, 133 Am. St. Rep. 506.

NIECE

To constitute incest under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2352, punishing sexual intercourse between uncle and niece when construed in connection with section 8357, making males and females not nearer of kin than second cousins competent to marry, the uncle and niece must be related by blood; the word "niece" in its primary sense including relationship by consanguinity. State v. Tucker, 93 N. E. 3, 4, 174 Ind. 715, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 100.

As brother

See Brother

Grandnieces

The words "nephews and nieces," as contained in the residuary clause of a will giving to testator's "nephews and nieces" the residue of his estate, included grandnephews and grandnieces, and this, whether the previous bequests in the will to them had been absolute or in trust. Leask v. Richards, 101 N. Y. Supp. 652, 656, 116 App. Div. 274.

Testator gave a legacy to his niece Kate, daughter of Dr. H. W., and to Dr. H. W. a specified sum for himself and his other children, and he gave legacies to any niece or nephew whom he had omitted, excepting the children of Dr. H. W., for whom he had made provision. Testator was a widower, who had never had any children, and left surviving him a number of nieces and nephews, and grandnieces and grandnephews, descendants of sisters who died before the execution of the will. There were two Drs. H. W., father and son; the father being the father of the niece Kate. Testator had a niece Mrs. P., who was omitted from the will, and the legacy to her was on her death paid to her children. Held, that the words "niece or nephew" did not embrace grandnieces and grandnephews. White v. Old, 75 S. E. 182, 184, 113 Va. 709.

NIGGER

A "nigger" is a part of the machinery of a sawmill, and consists of a piece of timber with iron spikes along the upper side, and is used in striking and pushing heavy logs onto the carriage and for turning them thereon when desired. O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 114, 39 Wash. 537.

NIGGERHEAD

The falling of a "niggerhead," which is a large, hard substance found in coal, or partly in the coal, and partly in the walls, is such a caving in as the statute requires mine-owners or operators to furnish timbers to guard against. Pachko v. Wilkeson Coal & Coke Co., 90 Pac. 436, 437, 46 Wash. 422.

NIGHT—NIGHTTIME

As after sundown

An instruction defining "nighttime burglary" should give a definition of "nighttime" as 30 minutes after sundown, and not before, as provided by statute. Moray v. State, 135 S. W. 569, 570, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 547.

As between darkness and dawn

"Nighttime" is that period of time between the termination of daylight on the evening of one day and the earliest dawn of the next morning. United States v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 Fed. 459, 461.

As between sunset and sunrise

Pen. Code, § 824, in relation to burglary, defines "nighttime" as meaning the period between sunset and sunrise. State v. Copenhaver, 89 Pac. 61, 62, 35 Mont. 342.

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4334, defining "burglary" as entering "in the nighttime," etc., and section 4338, defining "nighttime" as the period between sunset and sunrise, a larceny, to constitute burglary, must be committed in the nighttime, and affirmative proof that it was so committed must be adduced; but such proof need not be direct, but may be circumstantial, in character. State v. Richards, 81 Pac. 142, 29 Utah, 310.

On a prosecution for burglary, an instruction that if defendant made the entry charged "in the nighttime, between sunset and sunrise," he should be convicted, was not erroneous on the ground that it took from the jury the question whether the burglary was effected in the nighttime, but the instruction was proper as declaring as a matter of law the meaning of "nighttime" as defined by Pen. Code, § 463. People v. Higgins, 98 Pac. 683, 684, 9 Cal. App. 267.

Evidence that a building was entered by an accused "in the evening some time after dark" was sufficient to establish burglary in the "nighttime" within Pen. Code, § 463, making burglary in the "nighttime" burglary in the first degree and defining "nighttime" as the period between sunset and sunrise. People v. Mendoza, 118 Pac. 964, 965, 17 Cal. App. 157.

Discernment of features as test

Under Rev. Code 1893, p. 737, c. 97, 29, providing that search warrants shall not authorize the searching of any dwelling house in the nighttime, the term "nighttime" means that space of time during which the sun is below the horizon, except that space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which, by its light, the countenance of a man may be discerned. Petit v. Colmary (Del.) 55 Atl. 344, 345, 4 Pennwilt 266.

NITROCELLULOSE

"Nitrocellulose," as referred to in the Von Freeden patent, No. 429,516, for a process for making smokeless gunpowder from "nitrocellulose," is an explosive nitrate of cellulose, commonly known as gun cotton. It is made by digesting clean cotton in a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acid. There are other nitrates of cellulose made with weak acids and a short period of digestion, which are not gun cotton. Nitrocellulose, or gun cotton, is soluble in certain liquids, such as ethyl-ether, methyl-ether, a solution of camphor in ether, etc. Wolff v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 122 Fed. 944, 945.

NITROGEN PEROXIDE

"Nitrogen peroxide" is a dark brown gas, deepening in color as the temperature is increased. It has a peculiarly repulsive odor, and is poisonous when inhaled. While it sometimes bleaches, it more frequently imparts color, especially as to proteids, which are an important constituent of flour. It will turn cornmeal and other corn products and rice products yellow, while tobacco is made darker by it. Naylor v. Alsop Process Co., 168 Fed. 911, 917, 94 C. C. A. 315.

NITROGLYCERIN

An information for the malicious placing of an explosive near a dwelling house, describing the explosive as "nitroglycerin," commonly known as "dynamite" or "giant powder," was not objectionable for indefiniteness as to the explosion charged, the substances all being nitroglycerin explosives. People v. Swalle, 107 Pac. 134, 136, 12 Cal. App. 192.

NO

The single answer, "No," to the issue, was it a sale of goods for the purpose of defrauding creditors? or was it to secure the payment of a valid debt? leaves it uncertain as to the answer intended. Riske v. Rotan Grocery Co., 84 S. W. 243, 244, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 494.

In an application for employers' liability insurance, the question and answer: "Q. No explosives or chemicals used except as herein stated? A. No"—do not constitute a double negative, amounting to an affirmative. Columbian Exposition Salvage Co. v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 77 N. E. 128, 220 Ill. 172.

NO CAUSE OF ACTION

The direction of a verdict of "no cause of action" at the close of plaintiff's proof, on motion for nonsuit on the ground of failure to prove absence of contributory negligence, is equivalent to a nonsuit because of insufficiency of the evidence, and not because of the insufficiency of the complaint. Romaine v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 248, 249, 91 App. Div. 1.

NO INTEREST TO MISREPRESENT

The term "no interest to misrepresent," as used with reference to conditions requisite to the admission of declarations of a deceased person respecting a boundary, means freedom from selfish motive or self-interest or personal advantage; disinterested, not merely in the sense of having no pecuniary interest, but in the broader sense of being absolutely impartial and indifferent to the controversy on trial. Turgeon v. Woodward, 78 Atl. 577, 579, 83 Conn. 537.

NO LABORER NOT A CITIZEN OF THE UNITED STATES

The phrase "no mechanic or unskilled laborer not a citizen of the United States," as used in a city charter, providing that no such laborer who has not declared his intention to become such, and who has not resided within the city for one year next before entering thereon, shall be employed by the city, applies only to laborers not citizens of the United States. Landswick v. Lane, 90 Pac. 490, 491, 49 Or. 408.

NO-LICENSE TERRITORY

The term "no-license territory" is defined by statute as all parts of the state except the premises actually occupied by licensees. This definition makes clear the legislative understanding that the prohibitory law is in force generally in license towns, except in so far as it is rendered inapplicable by the special license legislation. State v. Langdon, 64 Atl. 1099, 1101, 74 N. H. 50.

Under Acts 1910, c. 190, § 30, requiring shipments of ardent spirits into local option or no-license territory to be plainly marked, showing the kind and quantity of spirits and the consignee of the package, and section 19c, defining "local option territory" as territory which, by vote under the local option law, has declared against the issuance of licenses for the sale of ardent spirits, and "no-license territory" as territory in which, under the provisions of that or some other act, no license for the sale of such spirits can be granted, a conviction cannot be sustained for failure to mark as specified a shipment into a magisterial district, where licenses may be issued under certain conditions, and which voted against local option at the last local option election, although no licenses are actually in effect. Armstead v. Commonwealth, 74 S. E. 399, 400, 113 Va. 765.

NO OTHER

A provision in an election statute that "no other names shall be placed upon the ballot" than the names of those who have filed a statement of their candidacy was not intended to forbid voting for persons other than those named on the ballot by inserting their names in writing. Eckerson v. City of Des Moines, 115 N. W. 177, 190, 137 Iowa, 452.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2476, provides that the Surrogate's Court of each county has exclusive jurisdiction to grant letters testamentary where a nonresident decedent dies without the state leaving personal property in that county and "no other." Subdivision 4 gives such exclusive jurisdiction where decedent was not a resident of the state, and a petition for probate of his will or for a grant of letters of administration has not been filed in any Surrogate's Court, but real property of the decedent, to which the will relates, or which is subject to sale for his debts, is situated within that county and "no other." Section 2477 provides that, where personal property of a decedent is within two or more counties, under the circumstances specified in section 2476, subd. 3, or real estate of the decedent is situated in two or more counties under the circumstances specified in subdivision 4, § 2476, the Surrogates' Courts of such counties have concurrent jurisdiction to issue letters testamentary. Held that, where a nonresident decedent left personal property in several counties and left real estate in another county, and no letters of administration had been issued in the state, the Surrogates' Courts of the counties in which there was personal property had concurrent jurisdiction to issue letters. The words "no other," as used in section 2476, relate to exclusive jurisdiction, and do not affect the concurrent jurisdiction which section 2477 confers upon Surrogate Courts, where personal property is in two or more counties. In re Arnold's Estate, 99 N. Y. Supp. 740, 742, 114 App. Div. 244.

NO PERSON

The words "no person" in a criminal statute are to be given their literal meaning, and, when a statute provided that no person should practice dentistry without having complied with its provisions, there was no implied exception of persons holding certificates entitling them to practice as a physician or surgeon. State v. Taylor, 118 N. W. 1012, 1013, 106 Minn. 218, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877, 16 Ann. Cas. 487.

NO PERSON BID

The words, "No person bid," in a tax deed, imply that the land "could not be sold" to a private bidder. They express the precise idea to be conveyed by the statutory recital, and are therefore 'equally good.' The deed is not void on its face because it substitutes the words "no person bid" for the words "said property could not be sold" in stating the necessity of a sale to the county. Baughman v. Harvey, 93 Pac. 146, 150, 76 Kan. 767 (citing and adopting Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. 311).

NO PROPERTY

The words "no property," in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5248, providing that "no property" shall be exempt from execution issued on a judgment against an attorney or agent on account of any liability incurred for failure to account for money or other property coming into his hands belonging to his principal, are applicable only to personal property, and the section does not apply to homestead exemptions. Ervay v. Hill, 90 Pac. 590, 592, 46 Wash. 457.

NO PROPERTY FOUND

A return of "no property found" means that defendant has no goods or chattels whereof to levy the execution within Rev. St. 1899, § 4019, declaring that the circuit clerk may not issue execution on a transcript judgment until after the justice has issued an execution and the constable has made return that the defendant had no goods or chattels whereof to levy the same. Bick v. Parla, 101 S. W. 716, 717, 124 Mo. App. 341.

NO UNDUE INFLUENCE WAS HAD

Where the validity of assignments from testatrix to defendant is questioned, a finding that "no undue influence was had or exercised" is equivalent to a finding that the transaction was not the result of undue influence, and does not negative merely the direct employment of undue influence, without taking into consideration the effect of the influence naturally arising from testatrix's reliance on defendant's protection and her appreciation of his kindness. Hobart's Adm'r v. Vail, 66 Atl. 820, 823, 80 Vt. 152.

NOBILITY

See Confer Title of Nobility.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE

"The French have a maxim, 'Noblesse oblige,' which means that those in comfortable circumstances and possessed of means should set the example of obedience to the laws." State v. Colonial Club, 69 S. E. 771, 777, 154 N. O. 177, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 357, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1079.

NOLLE PROSEQUI

A "nolle prosequi" amounts to neither an acquittal nor a pardon. It is simply a discharge of the particular indictment as to which it is entered, and is no bar to a future indictment for the same offense. State v. Bracklin, 37 South. 863, 113 La. 879.

A "nolle prosequi" is not a demurrer, general or special, nor is it an amendment in the broadest sense of the term. It embraces only the withdrawal or abandonment of a count. Hudson v. McNear, 59 Atl. 546, 547, 99 Me. 406.

A nolle prosequi in criminal proceedings is merely a declaration on the part of the solicitor that he will not then prosecute the suit farther, and is not an acquittal, although its effect is to discharge the defendant without day. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 74 S. E. 740, 741, 159 N. C. 265, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1215.

A "nolle prosequi" in criminal proceedings does not amount to an acquittal of the defendant, but he may again be prosecuted for the same offense, or fresh process may be issued to try him on the same indictment at the discretion of the prosecuting officer. Under a statute providing that a "nolle prosequi" with leave shall be entered in all criminal actions in which the action has been pending for two terms of court, and the defendant has not been apprehended, the prosecution of an indictment for maintaining a nuisance at April term, 1906, was not ended by the entering of a nolle prosequi with leave to issue a capias, entered at November term, 1906, for which defendant was arrested in January, 1909, so that the prosecution was upon the original indictment, and was barred by the statute. State v. Williams, 65 S. C. 906, 909, 151 N. C. 660 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Thornton, 35 N. C. 57).

NOLO CONTENDERE

"The 'plea of nolo contendere' is an implied confession of the offense charged. The judgment of conviction follows that plea as well as the plea of guilty." State v. Herlihy, 68 Atl. 643, 646, 102 Me. 310.

Under the common-law rule, which governs in the federal courts, to authorize the court to entertain a plea of nolo contendere the case must be within the class of misdemeanors for which punishment may be imposed by fine alone, although the offense may as well be punishable by imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, either as an alternative of fine or in addition thereto, or to enforce payment of the fine; and such plea cannot be accepted either in cases of felony requiring infamous punishment to be imposed on conviction, or in cases of misdemeanor for which the punishment must be imprisonment for any time, with or without fine. The so-called plea of "nolo contendere" is not a plea in the strict sense of that term in the criminal law. It is not one of the pleas general or special, open to the accused in all criminal prosecutions and is allowable only under leave and acceptance by the court. When accepted by the court, it becomes an implied confession of guilt, and for the purposes of the case only equivalent to a plea of guilty, but distinguishable from such plea in that it cannot be used against the defendant as an admission in any civil suit for the same act. Where a plea of nolo contendere was tendered to an indictment containing counts some of which charged offenses which required punishment by both fine and imprisonment, while on others a fine alone might be imposed, the action of the court in hearing evidence, making a finding of guilty as charged and sentencing defendant to both fine and imprisonment, was inconsistent with the acceptance of such plea, and the judgment of conviction without a jury trial was without jurisdiction and void. When an indictment contains counts charging offenses for which the statute requires the imposition of punishment by both fine and imprisonment and others for offenses which may be punished by fine alone, the court has authority to allow a tendered plea of nolo contendere; but in such case the further proceedings and punishment must be confined to the latter class of counts to which alone the plea is applicable. Tucker v. United States, 196 Fed. 260, 262, 266, 267, 116 C. C. A. 62, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 70.

As conviction

The plea of "nolo contendere" is an implied confession of the offense charged, and the judgment of conviction follows that plea as well as the plea of guilty, and it is not necessary that the court should adjudge that the party was guilty, for that follows by necessary legal inference from the implied confession. State v. Herlihy, 68 Atl. 643, 646, 102 Me. 310.

"Plea of 'nolo contendere,' when accepted by the court, is, in its effect on the case, equivalent to the plea of guilty. * * * The judgment of conviction follows upon such a plea, as well as upon a plea of guilty, and such a plea, if accepted, cannot be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty entered, except by leave of court." State v. Siddall, 68 Atl. 634, 635, 103 Me. 144 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Ingersoll, 14 N. E. 449, 145 Mass. 381).

NOMINAL

NOMINAL DAMAGES

"Nominal damages" is defined as some small amount, sufficient to cover and carry the costs. Batson v. Higginbotham, 68 S. E. 455, 457, 7 Ga. App. 835.

"Nominal damages" is some very small sum, as a farthing, a penny, or a sixpence. Hasselbusch v. Mohmking, 73 Atl. 961, 962, 76 N. J. Law, 691 (citing Sedg. Dam. p. 44).

A new trial will not, as a general rule, be granted to enable the defeated party to recover "nominal damages," which are such as are to be awarded in a case where there has been a breach of contract, and no actual damages can be shown. Beattie v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 80 Atl. 709, 710, 84 Conn. 555.

The term "nominal damages," like "exemplary damages," is purely relative, and carries with it no suggestion of certainty as to amount, though it generally refers to a trivial sum awarded. Where a mere breach of duty or infraction of right is shown with no serious loss sustained, the amount may, according to the circumstances of each particular case, vary almost indefinitely, depending largely on the amount involved, a recovery being properly classified as nominal damages where the violation of a right issue is shown, substantial damages claimed, and some actual loss proved, and yet the damages are not susceptible of reasonable certainty of proof as to their extent. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Glenn, 68 S. E. 881, 8 Ga. App. 168.

"Nominal damages are a small and trivial sum, awarded for a technical injury, due to a violation or invasion of some legal right, and as a consequence of which some damages must be awarded to determine the right. They are not given as an equivalent for the wrong, but in recognition of a technical injury. There need be no actual damage, however small. They are called nominal damages, in contradistinction to actual, substantial, or compensatory damages. They are damages in name only, not in fact. They have been described as a peg on which to hang costs; but they are still recognized as the subject of a substantial legal claim, and the party is entitled to them if he can show any injury to his right. If he establishes a cause of action—that is, an injury in its technical sense—and fails to show any damage, or damage, he can recover nominal damages." Chaffin v. Fries Mfg. & Power Co., 47 S. E. 226, 228, 135 N. C. 95.

Where a legal right has been invaded and real injury done, the damages, though small, are actual, and not nominal, nominal damages being those so small in amount as to show that they were not intended as any equivalent or satisfaction to the party recovering them; the term being a relative one, and carries no suggestion of certainty as to amount. Moore v. Duke, 80 Atl. 194, 197, 84 Vt. 401.

NOMINAL PARTNER

The term "nominal partner," as commonly understood, means "a person who is not a partner at all, but allows the use of his name in the firm, generally to give it additional credit or to attract custom, thus incurring all the liabilities while deriving none of the benefits of the association." Lasher v. Colton, 80 N. E. 122, 123, 225 Ill. 234, 8 Ann. Cas. 367 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bates, Partn. § 11.

NOMINATE

See, also, Appoint—Appointment; Primary Election.

The term "nominate" means to designate by name, and not merely to refer to some place where the name can be found. In re Hopper, 132 N. Y. Supp. 730, 731, 73 Misc. Rep. 369.

The terms "nominate" and "appoint" are not synonymous, though there are some instances where the terms may be used to mean the same thing, and under St. Cal. 1887, p. 67, c. 57, providing for the appointment of certain trustees by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate, an appointment is not completed by the transmission of the nomination by the Governor to the Senate and the confirmation of the nomination by the Senate. The appointment is not made until the commission is issued, and issuing the same is the last act, and in issuing the commission the Governor is performing an executive and not a ministerial act, and is therefore acting under his discretionary powers, and may or may not issue the commission, although the Senate may have advised it and consented that he should make the appointment. Harrington v. Par- dee, 82 Pac. 83, 84, 1 Cal. App. 278 (citing Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch [5 U. S.] 132 L. Ed. 60).

NOMINATION

See Certificate of Nomination; Party Nomination.

The provision in Laws 1911, c. 64, amending Election Law, § 331, that the name of candidates chosen by more than one political party or independent body shall not appear more than once on the printed official ballot, discriminates against the political parties nominating a candidate also nominated by another party in whose column alone his name appears, and violates the Constitution notwithstanding the definition in such amending law of the term "nomination," which limits the right of all parties to nominate candidates to a selection in accordance with the act, and so does not include the right to have the candidates' names appear on the official ballot in the column of a particular party. In re Hopper, 132 N. Y. Supp. 730, 731, 73 Misc. Rep. 369.

The act incorporating the city of Cranston, providing for caucuses for the selection of candidates to be voted for at the first election, and that all "certificates of nomination of candidates shall be filed at least nine days before the first election, merely provides for the filing of certificates of nomination at caucuses; and Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 18, providing for the filing of "certificates of nomination" and "nomination papers," governs as to the filing of nomination papers, since the statutes by long usage make certificates of nomination refer to nominations by caucuses while nomination papers relate to nominations by individual voters. Greenough v. Wadsworth, 75 Atl. 865, 866, 30 R. I. 447.

NOMINEE

As officer, see Officer.

A candidate becomes a "nominee" for public office only upon filing the certificate of nomination with the proper officers, within the meaning of Election Law (Consol. Laws c. 17) § 136. In re O'Brien, 125 N. Y. Supp. 269, 140 App. Div. 467.

In St. 1898, § 34, pertaining to general elections, and providing that if the nominee die after the ballots are printed and no nomination shall be made as herein provided the votes cast for him shall be counted and returned, the "nominee" is the person who has received the party nomination for an office. State ex rel. Bancroft v. Frear, 128 N. W. 1068, 1075, 144 Wis. 79, 140 Am. St. Rep. 992.

Comp. St. 1903, c. 26, § 32, provides that in no case shall the candidate of any political party be entitled to be designated on the official election ballot as the candidate of more than one political party, and shall be designated on the "official ballot" as the nom-nee of the party in whose nomination his name appears as the political party with which he affiliates. Held, that the words "candidate of any political party" and the "nominee of the party" mean a person who has been selected by a party as its candidate for public office, and do not refer to one who is desirous of becoming a candidate and whose name is submitted to the choice of the voters at a primary election. A party's candidate and its nominee cannot be determined until after a choice has been made at a primary. State ex rel. Adair v. Drexel, 105 N. W. 174, 177, 74 Neb. 778.

NON

NON COMPOS MENTIS

See Mind of a Non Compos.

The words "non compos mentis" mean a total deprivation of reason. Slaughter v. Heath, 57 S. E. 69, 71, 73, 127 Ga. 747, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

One is "non compos mentis" as to his contracts when he does not possess understanding sufficient to comprehend the nature, extent, and consequences of them. Nichols v. Nichols, 66 Atl. 161, 165, 79 Conn. 644.

"The term 'non compos mentis,' used by the Code, embraces not only lunatics and idiots, but also all persons of unsound mind." Under the rule that, for the assumption of continued maintenance of control, by a court of chancery over the person and estate of one alleged to be of unsound mind, it is not necessary to prove the entire absence of reason, understanding, or memory, but only to show incapacity to contract, evidence held sufficient to sustain an order dismissing a petition for the discharge of the committee of the person and estate of a person of unsound mind." Johnson v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 65 Atl. 333, 334, 104 Md. 460 (quoting and adopting definition in Greenwade v. Greenwade, 43 Md. 315).

NON DETINET

A plea of the "general issue" in detinue is the equivalent of a plea of "non detinet" at common law, and puts in issue the plaintiff's right of recover. Ryall v. Pearson Bros., 41 South. 673, 148 Ala. 668 (citing Carlisle's Case, 26 South. 115, 122 Ala. 446).

NON EST FACTUM

"A plea of 'non est factum' properly tenders the issue whether the specialty was lawfully sealed by the commissioners and, if so, whether it is the deed of the defendants." English v. Mayor, etc., of City of Jersey City, 42 N. J. Law, 275, 278.

In an action on a policy of life insurance, a plea that "the defendant did not enter into the alleged contract sued on" was not a plea of "non est factum," within Code 1896, § 3353, form 33. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Verneuille, 47 South. 72, 73, 156 Ala. 592.

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO

A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is not proper, where no motion for a directed verdict was made at the close of plaintiff's case. Landis Mach. Co. v. Konantz Saddlery Co., 116 N. W. 333, 334, 17 N. D. 310.

A "judgment non obstante" is usually a judgment entered by order of the court for the plaintiff in an action at law notwithstanding a verdict for the defendant. At common law a judgment non obstante veredicto could be entered only when the plea confessed the cause of action and set up matters in avoidance which were insufficient, although found true, to constitute either a defense or a bar to the action. In such case the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment in his favor notwithstanding a verdict for the defendant. The practice was adopted, says Judge Pearson, to discourage sham pleas by the defendant. Hence it follows that at common law a judgment non obstante could only be granted upon motion of the plaintiff, never for a defendant, and that its use was consequently very restricted. This rule, however, has been relaxed in many jurisdictions, especially where counterclaims are pleaded, and where the code system prevails, and it is held that such judgment may be rendered on the pleadings for either party entitled to it irrespective of the verdict. In no case, however, can such a judgment be rendered for any party, except when the pleadings entitle the party against whom the verdict was rendered to a judgment. Where the court in an action for personal injuries refused a motion of nonsuit, and a motion to render judgment on the issues, whether plaintiff contributed to his injury by negligence, and the amount of damages, judgment could not be appropriately rendered for defendant notwithstanding the jury's negative answer to the first issue and its finding of $3,000 damage on the second issue. Shives v. Eno Cotton Mills, 66 S. E. 141, 142, 151 N. C. 290 (citing and adopting 2 Tidd, Pr. 922; Rap. & L. Law Dict.; Black Law Dict.; Cotton Mills v. Abernathy, 20 S. E. 522, 115 N. C. 403; Walker v. Scott, 11 S. E. 364, 106 N. C. 57; Riddle v. Town of Germanton, 23 S. E. 332, 117 N. C. 387; Moye v. Petway, 76 N. C. 329).

"A motion for a judgment 'non obstante veredicto'—that is, that judgment be given in the mover's favor, without regard to the verdict obtained by his adversary—is made in cases where, after a pleading by the adversary in confession and avoidance, and issue joined thereon, and verdict for the adversary, the unsuccessful party, in retrospective examination of the record, conceives that such pleading was bad in substance, and might have been made the subject of demurrer on that ground. * * * In such a case, therefore, the court will give judgment for such opposite party without regard to the verdict." N. Frank & Sons v. Gump, 51 S. E. 358, 104 Va. 306 (quoting and adopting definition in 4 Min. Inst. [3d Ed.] pt. 1, p. 946).

NON SUI JURIS

The words "non sui juris," as applied to a child, means that the child has not yet arrived at what is called the age of adult discretion, so that the burden of proof is on the party claiming that the child was, as a matter of fact, sui juris. Grealish v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 582, 583, 130 App. Div. 238 (citing Gerber v. Boorstein, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1091, 113 App. Div. 808).

The phrase "non sui juris," as used in an instruction in a personal injury suit submitting it to the jury to determine whether or not the person injured, who was under six years of age, was non sui juris, means that the child was not of sufficient age and discretion to care for his own safety, so that it would be imprudent to go about alone. Kostenbaum v. New York City R. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 65, 67, 120 App. Div. 160.

NONCONTINUOUS EASEMENT

A right of way is "noncontinuous" because to its use the act of man is essential at each time of enjoyment. Dee v. King, 59 Atl. 889, 841, 77 Vt. 230, 68 L. R. A. 860.

NONEXPLOSION

A "constant pressure engine" is one in which the cylinder pressure remains the same during the outward travel of the piston while the volume of flame increases. The pressure is applied continuously. This mode of operation is also called "slow combustion" and "nonexplosion." Columbia Motor Car Co. v. C. A. Duerr & Co., 184 Fed. 893, 898, 107 C. C. A. 215.

NONFEASANCE

"Nonfeasance" is the omission of an act which a person ought to do." It is the neglect or refusal without sufficient excuse to perform an act which it is an officer's legal duty to the individual to perform. State, to Use of Cardin, v. McClellan, 85 S. W. 267, 268, 113 Tenn. 616, 3 Ann. Cas. 992.

"Nonfeasance" is the nonperformance of some act which ought to be performed." The directors of a county fair association are not liable for the admission fee, for mere nonfeasance in failing to more securely protect patrons in the grand stand from injuries from a wild ball pitched or batted in the game, which resulted in injury to one admitted to the grand stand. Williams v. Dean, 111 N. W. 931, 933, 134 Iowa, 216, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410 (citing and adopting Ill. Cent. Ry. v. Foulkes, 60 N. E. 890, 191 Ill. 57).

Under Civ. Code Cal. § 2629, providing that "an insurer is not liable for a loss caused by the willful act of the insured, but he is not exonerated by the negligence of the insured, or of his agents or others," expressly made a part of a marine policy on cargo, there can be no recovery for loss or damage resulting directly from the act of the master in designedly undertaking to force the vessel through floating ice on a voyage to Alaska, with knowledge of the dangers to be encountered and with ample time to have avoided them, in order to arrive more quickly at his destination and secure a better market for his cargo. Such conduct is not mere negligence, but is a willful omission to perform his legal duty and an intentional commission of a wrongful act. The court, speaking through Chief Justice Shaw, in Chandler v. Worcester Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 3 Cush. (57 Mass.) 328 (an action on a fire policy) said: "By an intent to burn the building we understand a purpose manifested and followed by some act done tending to carry that purpose into effect, but not including a mere 'nonfeasance.' Suppose the assured, in his own house, sees the burning coals in the fireplace roll down onto the wooden floor, and does not brush them away. This would be mere 'nonfeasance.' It would not prove an intent to burn the building; but it would show a 'culpable recklessness' and indifference to the rights of others. * * * To what extent such negligence must go, in order to amount to 'gross misconduct,' it is difficult by any definitive or abstract rule of law, independently of circumstances, to designate. The doctrine of the civil law, that 'crassa negligentia' was of itself proof of fraud, or equivalent to fraudulent purpose or design, was no doubt founded in the consideration that, although such negligence consists in doing nothing, and is therefore a nonfeasance, yet the doing of nothing, when the slightest care or attention would prevent a great injury, manifests a willingness, differing little in character from a fraudulent and criminal purpose, to commit such injury." Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, of Liverpool, Eng., v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 636, 648, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

Misfeasance distinguished

"Nonfeasance" is doing nothing, while "misfeasance" is doing improperly. Stiwell v. Borman, 37 S. W. 404, 105, 63 Ark. 30.

"Nonfeasance" is the omission of an act which a person ought to do, as distinguished from "misfeasance," which is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do. Southern Ry. Co. v. Rowe, 59 S. E. 462, 466, 2 Ga. App. 557.

"Nonfeasance" is the total omission or failure of the agent to enter upon the performance of a distinct duty or undertaking which he has agreed with his principal to do. "Misfeasance" means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully ly do." Southern Ry. Co. v. Miller, 57 S. E. 1090, 1092, 1 Ga. App. 616 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Southern Ry. Co. v. Grizzle, 53 S. E. 244, 124 Ga. 735, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191).

"Misfeasance" is the performance of an act, which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, resulting in injury to another, while "nonfeasance" is the nonperformance of an act which should be performed. Haynes' Adm'rs v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 140 S. W. 176, 179, 145 Ky. 209, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 719.

"Misfeasance" and "nonfeasance," as used in connection with the acts of agents, is often difficult of determination. "Misfeasance" means a positive wrong. It may involve also, to some extent, the idea of not doing, as where the agent while engaged in the performance of his undertaking does not do something which it was his duty to do under the circumstances. The distinction to be observed between mere nonfeasance and misfeasance was considered in Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 103 (39 Am. Rep. 437), where the court said: "It is often said in the books that an agent is responsible to third persons for misfeasance only, and not for nonfeasance. And it is doubtless true that if an agent never does anything towards carrying out his contract with his principal, but wholly omits and neglects to do so, the principal is the only person who can maintain any action against him for the nonfeasance. But if the agent once actually undertakes and enters upon the execution of a particular work, it is his duty to use reasonable care in the manner of executing it, so as not to cause any injury to third persons which may be the natural consequence of his acts; and he cannot, by abandoning its execution midway and leaving things in a dangerous condition, exempt himself from liability to any person who suffers injury by reason of his having so left them without proper safeguards. This is not nonfeasance, or doing nothing, but it is misfeasance, doing improperly." Where an agent has complete control of a tenement house, and constructs a new walk in the court, leaving a large hole in the walk, and plaintiff, a new tenant, without previous knowledge of the existence of the hole, stepped into it after dark and was severely injured, it is misfeasance of the agent rendering him liable, and not a mere nonfeasance. Carson v. Quinn, 105 S. W. 1088, 1091, 127 Mo. App. 525.

"A distinction ordinarily is taken between acts of 'misfeasance,' or positive wrongs, and 'nonfeasance,' or mere omissions of duty. The master is always liable to third persons for the misfeasances of his servants in all cases within the scope of his employment. The principal is also liable to third persons for like misfeasances of his agent. The agent is also liable to third persons for his own misfeasances and positive wrongs, but he is not liable to third persons for his own nonfeasances or omissions of duty in the course of his employment. His liability in such cases is to his principal. The distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance, between acts of direct positive wrongs and mere neglects of agents as to their personal liability, seems to be founded on this ground. No authority whatever from a superior to an inferior can furnish the latter a just defense for his own positive wrongs or trespasses, for no man can authorize another to do a positive wrong. But in respect to nonfeasance, or mere neglects in the performance of duty, the responsibility therefor must arise from some express or implied obligation between particular parties standing in privity of law or contract with each other, and no man is bound to answer for any such violations of duty or obligation except to those to whom he has become directly bound or amenable for his conduct." Bryce v. Southern R. Co., 125 Fed. 958, 962 (quoting and adopting definitions in Story, Ag. [9th Ed.] §§ 308, 309).

"There is a distinction between 'nonfeasance' and 'misfeasance' or 'malfeasance'; and this distinction is often of great importance in determining an agent's liability to third persons. In this connection, 'nonfeasance' means the total omission or failure of an agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking, which he has agreed with his principal to do. 'Misfeasance' means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do, or, in other words, it is the performing of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons; and 'malfeasance' is the doing of an act which he ought not to do at all. It is not every omission or failure to perform a duty that will constitute a nonfeasance, but only an omission to perform such distinct duties as he owes to his principal, as distinguished from those which he owes to third persons, or the public in general as a member of society. Nonfeasance does not extend to the omission or failure to do some act, whereby a third person is injured after he has once entered upon the performance of his contractual obligations. For example, if an agent undertakes to perform certain acts for another, and he refuses or fails to enter upon such performance, it is nonfeasance; but if he once begins the performance of such acts, and, in doing so, fails or omits to do certain acts which he should have done, whereby a third person is injured, it is not a nonfeasance, but a misfeasance. Misfeasance may involve the omission to do something which ought to be done; as where an agent, engaged in the performance of his undertaking, omits to do something which it is his duty to do under the circumstances, as when he does not exercise that degree of care which due regard for the rights of others requires." Where the owner of a building executed a deed of trust thereon to secure bonds issued by the owner, and the trustee was made an attorney in fact, irrevocable, to rent the building, collect rents, pay taxes, and all expenses connected with the management of the building, and the trustee was to retain a certain per cent. of the moneys collected in payment of such services, and the trustee also assumed management of the building, employed all servants connected with the building, and paid them their wages, it was held that the trustee was liable, as for a "misfeasance," for injuries to one riding on an elevator in the building owing to negligence in the maintenance and repair of the elevator, or the negligence of the operator. Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co., 99 S. W. 1062, 1063, 1068, 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark & S. Law of Agency, § 596).

The failure of a gas company operating as an agent of a city under contract for the illumination of the city streets to perform its duty to keep service pipes from its mains to the city lamps in repair involves an affirmative element of negligence amounting to misfeasance, and it is liable to any one injured in consequence thereof, for an agent who undertakes and enters on the execution of a particular work, must use reasonable care in the manner of executing it, and he cannot by abandoning its execution, exempt himself from liability to any person suffering injury by reason of his act, because that act is not "nonfeasance," but is "misfeasance." Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore City v. Connor, 78 Atl. 725, 729, 114 Md. 140, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809.

The term "nonfeasance" refers to an agent's omission to perform a duty which he owes to his principal by virtue of the agency and for which he is responsible to his principal only; but, whenever the agent's omission consists of failure to perform a duty which he owes to third persons, then, as to such persons, his omission is "misfeasance" for which he is responsible. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 98 Pac. 643, 645, 38 Mont. 69, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 356.

The distinction between "nonfeasance" and "misfeasance" has been expressed by the courts of this state as follows: "If the duty omitted by the agent or servant devolved upon him purely from his agency or employment, his omission is only of a duty he owes his principal or master, and the master alone is liable. While, if the duty rests upon him in his individual character, and was one that the law imposed upon him independently of his agency or employment, then he is liable." Delay of the sole transfer agent in issuing new stock at the instance of an executor to certain designated persons in lieu of stock held by decedent on account of failure of the comptroller to give consent pending determination whether the stock was subject to the transfer tax law was not a "misfeasance," though it was not in fact taxable and the comptroller's consent was unnecessary. Dunham v. City Trust Co. of New York, 101 N. Y. Supp. 87, 89, 91, 115 App. Div. 584 (quoting and adopting Van Antwerp v. Linton, 35 N. Y. Supp. 318, 8 Hun, 417, 419).

NONFINANCIAL

The term "nonfinancial," as used in fraternal insurance policy, means that the policy holder is not in good financial standing with the order. Morgan v. Independent Order of Sons & Daughters of Jacob of America, 44 South. 791, 792, 90 Miss. 864.

NONFORFEITABLE

Where a policy of insurance provides that if insured, after paying two full annual premiums, should fail to pay any semiannual premiums when due, its entire net reserve based on the American Experience Mortality, and interest at 4 per cent. yearly, less any indebtedness to the company on the policy, shall be applied by the company as a single premium at the company's rates to the purchase of nonparticipating insurance for the full amount insured by the policy, is called "nonforfeitable" policy. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., v. First Nat. Bank (Ky.) 69 S. W. 1.

NONINTERVENTION WILL

Under what is known in Washington as a "nonintervention will," by which full powers were conferred on the executors to take possession of and wind up the estate of the testator without any judicial proceedings whatever, except those necessary to establish the will, and which devised and bequeathed all of testator's property absolutely to his executors as trustees, with instructions to sell the same and use the proceeds as therein directed, the legal title to the testator's real estate was vested in such trustees regardless of the validity of the disposition made of the proceeds. Korsstrom v. Barnes, 156 Fed. 290, 283.

NONINTOXICATING LIQUORS

The words "nonintoxicating liquors and beverages," as used in Acts 31st Leg. c. 20, § 2, considered in connection with the evil intended to be corrected and with the history of the legislation upon the same subject, have reference to alcoholic or spirituous fluids, either distilled or fermented, and do not include liquids such as water, milk, etc. Ex parte Flake (Tex.) 149 S. W. 146, 151.

NONJOINDER OF PARTIES

"A nonjoinder, or, as expressed in the Code, 'a defect, of parties plaintiff or defend-nt,' means sufficient parties, and has no application to a case of too many parties, or the joining of a person having no interest in the litigation." Mader v. Plano Mfg. Co., 97 N. W. 843, 845, 17 S. D. 553.

NONMAILABLE MATTER

A newspaper without a wrapper, the address being written on the paper itself, though containing scurrilous and defamatory matter, marked with blue pencil and so folded as to expose the same to view, is not "non-mailable matter," within Cr. Code (Act March 1, 1909, c. 321) § 212, which provides that all matter otherwise mailable, on the "envelope or outside cover or wrapper" of which language of a libelous or scurrilous character may be written, is nonmailable, and which prohibits the sending thereof through the mails. United States v. Higgins, 194 Fed. 330, 541.

NONNAVIGABLE

To constitute a nonnavigable lake, no particular depth is essential, nor is it necessary that the water cover the entire bed at all seasons, and it is enough if the body of the water has well-defined banks, filled during portions of the year. State v. Jones, 122 N. W. 241, 242, 143 Iowa, 398.

In Kentucky, all rivers are nonnavigable within the meaning of that term as used in connection with riparian ownership. Robinson v. Wells, 135 S. W. 317, 318, 142 Ky. 800.

NONNEGOTIABLE

See Negotiable.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 3392, providing that for every loan made by a building and loan association a "nonnegotiable note" secured by a first mortgage on real estate shall be given, accompanied by a transfer of the stock of the member, notes executed by stockholders of a building and loan association are not, while the association is a going concern, assignable; the word "nonnegotiable" meaning "nonassignable." Layton v. Hough, 152 S. W. 410, 415, 169 Mo. App. 213.

NONOCCUPANCY

Vacancy synonymous

In an action on an insurance policy providing that it was to become void if the buildings became vacant or unoccupied, the answer alleged that the possession and occupancy of the buildings described and of the insured premises was changed, and said premises ceased to be occupied as provided in the policy. Held, that the answer was sufficient to raise the question of a vacancy, for the terms "vacancy" and "nonoccupancy" are used interchangeably and are equivalent in meaning. Cone v. Century Fire Ins. Co., 117 N. W. 307, 308, 139 Iowa, 205.

NONPECUNIARY DAMAGES

Nonpecuniary damages are those the amount of which cannot be determined by any known rule, but depend upon the enlightened judgment of an impartial court or jury. In this class are included damages for pain, suffering, loss of reputation, impairment of faculties, etc. L. W. Pomerene Co. v. White, 97 N. W. 232, 234, 70 Neb. 171.

NONRESIDENCE—NONRESIDENT

As person, see Person.

To be a "nonresident" within the meaning of the statute authorizing removal of causes, defendant must be a citizen of another state. Parker v. Vanderbilt, 136 Fed. 246, 249 (citing Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 534, 151 U. S. 676, 38 L. Ed. 311).

A nonresident, within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 16, § 123, providing that where it is unknown whether a nonresident is living a bill may be filed against him as if living, etc., is one who does not reside in the state as defined in the law relating to attachment. Hollander v. Central Metal & Supply Co. of Baltimore City, 71 Atl. 442, 448, 109 Md. 131, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

A "nonresident" is one who is not a resident of a particular place, and the term may be used indiscriminately to describe one who does not reside in a particular country, or state, or county, or any of the smaller subdivisions of territory made for governmental purposes, and the word may as well refer to one not residing in a county as to one residing outside of the state. Watson v. Coon, 93 N. E. 289, 290, 247 Ill. 414.

The term "nonresident," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 616, requiring a nonresident, before commencing an action, to give a bond for costs, and section 617, providing that if the bond is not given the action shall be dismissed, means a person whose legal residence is not in this state but another state; and does not include a person whose legal residence is in this state, though he is temporarily an actual resident of another state. Erwin v. Allen, 99 S. W. 322, 323, 124 Ky. 458.

A citizen of another state is not necessarily a "nonresident," as a person may reside in one state and be a citizen in another. An allegation in a petition for removal that defendant is a citizen of a state other than that in which the suit is pending is not equivalent to an allegation that he is a "nonresident of that state" and does not show his right to a removal. Irving v. Smith, 132 Fed. 207.

The words "nonresidents of that state," as used in Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, and Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, providing that any suit of a civil nature at law or in equity, of which the Circuit Courts of the United States are given jurisdiction, may be removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district, by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state, are equivalent to the words "not being citizens of that state." Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., 190 Fed. 789, 791 (citing Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 151 U. S. 676, 677, 38 L. Ed. 311).

The words "nonresident defendant," as used in Ann. St. Mo. 1906, § 384, providing that no property or wages declared by statute to be exempt shall be attached except in the case of a "nonresident defendant" or a defendant who is about to move out of the state with intent to change his domicile, has reference to one whose domicile is out of the state, and classed nonresident defendants with defendants about to move out of the state with intent to change their domiciles. McDowell v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 115 S. W. 1023, 1032, 135 Mo. App. 276.

In an action to quiet title, certain defendants, by their cross-complaints, sought to recover possession of the property, and to redeem from a mortgage. These defendants never resided in this state. Held, that these causes of action were not saved from the bar of the statute of limitations by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 299, providing that the time during which a defendant is a nonresident shall not be computed in any period of limitation, since this does not apply to persons who at all times have been nonresidents, and only applies where the person against whom, and not in favor of whom, the cause of action exists, is a nonresident. Sinclair v. Gunzenhauser (Ind.) 98 N. E. 37, 54.

Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 575, 577, providing that if the plaintiff shall allege in his petition, or at any time thereafter shall file an affidavit stating, that part or all of the defendants are nonresidents, or have absconded or absented themselves from their usual place of abode in this state, and that where the return on any summons issued is that defendant cannot be found, service may be had by publication, an affidavit in a tax action, where the petition was silent as to that matter, and where summons issued as against a resident defendant, which only alleged that defendant had absconded and absented himself from his usual place of abode in this state, did not authorize service by publication on the ground that defendant was a "nonresident," since it appeared, both affirmatively and negatively, that defendant was a resident and not a nonresident. Parker v. Burton, 72 S. W. 663, 664, 172 Mo. 85.

Ky. St. § 3014, provides that the agent or agents of nonresident proprietors shall be civilly responsible for the license tax and criminally responsible for carrying on business in like manner as if they were proprietors. Held, that the word "nonresident," as used in a city ordinance reproducing such section and requiring every person, etc., engaged in posting bills as a business to pay a license fee, means one living without the corporate limits of the city, though within the state. Loges v. City of Louisville, 132 S. W. 565, 567, 141 Ky. 387.

A person traveling about the country wandering from place to place and from state to state, who took employment with a railroad company in Texas as a member of a gang taking up old and laying down new steel, which employment he intended to keep only until he had raised $50, when he intended to leave the state, who slept in a boarding car and had his washing done there, and who was injured while in the railroad employ, was not a resident of the county in which he received his injury or of the state of Texas, but was a nonresident within the meaning of the venue law (Acts 27th Leg. [Laws 1901, p. 31, c. 27]), providing that, in case plaintiff in a personal injury suit against a railroad is a nonresident of the state, his suit may be brought in any county in which the railroad may operate its road or have an agent. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Monell, 110 S. W. 504, 507, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 287.

Evidence that a husband left his wife in another state, went to Nebraska, and concealed his residence from her for nine years, represented himself to be an unmarried man, and conveyed land as such, that he subsequently moved to another state, where he died, his wife never living in Nebraska thereafter his death, is sufficient to sustain a finding that she was a nonresident, within Comp. St. 1903, c. 23, § 20, limiting dower right of a nonresident to lands of which her husband died seised. Miner v. Morgan, 119 N. W. 781, 782, 83 Neb. 400.

Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, c. 580) § 25, subd. 3, provides that no person having a place in the city for the regular transaction of business is deemed a "nonresident" under the provisions of the act, and section 32 permits the order for service of summons upon a defendant residing within the city after an alias summons has been issued, upon satisfactory proof that diligent effort has been made to serve the summons and that the place of his sojourn cannot be found, or, if he is within the city, that he evades service so that personal service cannot be made. Defendant had an office in the city at a certain address, and plaintiff's attorney made affidavit that defendant called upon him at his office before the action was begun. Five alias summonses were secured, and numerous efforts were made to serve defendant, and plaintiff wrote him several letters at his New Jersey residence, stating that suit would be brought, and plaintiff was informed by attorneys, who appeared specially, but did not accept service, that they were attorneys for defendant, though plaintiff had requested defendant's attorney to enter an appearance and defendant's son stated to the process server that his father came to the office sometimes once a week, and sometimes not so often. Held, that an order for substituted service was properly issued under the circumstances; the facts justifying the belief that defendant was seeking to evade personal service. Tricoli v. McKenzie, 123 N. Y. Supp. 211, 212.

Absence distinguished

A mere casual or temporary absence of a debtor from the state on business or pleasure will not render him a "nonresident," within the meaning of the statute relating to attachments. Flemister Grocery Co. v. Wright Mercantile & Lumber Co., 73 S. E. 1077, 10 Ga. App. 702 (citing Stickney v. Chapman, 42 S. E. 68, 115 Ga. 761).

Foreign corporation

In the absence of a statute making a foreign corporation, for purposes of litigation, a resident of every county in which it does business, a foreign corporation is a "nonresident," within Comp. Laws, § 719, requiring the service of a short summons, in an action in justice's court against a nonresident, and the service of a long summons does not give the court jurisdiction. Wells v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 125 N. W. 57, 59, 160 Mich. 213.

A corporation is "resident," irrespective of its domicile, when it does business in a state and its officers reside there, upon whom process may be served at their homes. Conversely, a corporation, no matter where incorporated, which does not do business in the state and does not have officers residing there upon whom process may be served, is "nonresident." Brand v. Auto Service Co., 67 Atl. 19, 20, 75 N. J. Law, 230.

A corporation organized under the laws of any one of the United States is in contemplation of law a "citizen" and "resident" of the state in which it is incorporated. Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, as corrected and amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, provides for the removal of causes in which there shall be controversy between citizens of the state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, and section 2 declares that all such suits may be removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein being "nonresidents" of that state. Held that, where defendant was an alien insurance corporation, it was a nonresident of California within such act, though it had a branch office within the state for the transaction of business. Baumgarten v. Alliance Assur Co., 153 Fed. 301, 302, 303, 304 (citing Shaw v. Quincy Mining Company, 12 Sup. Ct. 935, 145 U. S. 444, 38 L. Ed. 768; Miller v. Eastern Oregon Gold Min. Co., 45 Fed. 348; Gilbert v. New Zealand Ins. Co., 49 Fed. 884, 15 L. R. A. 125; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 18 Sup. Ct. 526, 170 U. S. 100, 42 L. Ed. 964; In re Keasbey & M. Co., 16 Sup. Ct. 273, 160 U. S. 221, 40 L. Ed. 402; Howard v. Gold Reefs of Georgia, 102 Fed. 657; Shat- tuck v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 58 Fed. 609, 7 C. C. A. 386).

Fugitive from justice

One may be a "nonresident of the state" and also a fugitive from justice or a fugitive from justice and still a resident of the state. State v. Miller, 87 S. W. 484, 486, 188 Mo. 370.

Intention

A person domiciled within the state, who temporarily leaves it for medical treatment for injuries, intending to return, is not a "nonresident." Taylor v. Norris, 93 N. Y. Supp. 356, 357, 104 App. Div. 21.

If petitioner has been out of the state for a year and a half with no intention of returning or with the intention of returning at some indefinite future time, he is a "nonresident" within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 16, § 123, providing that, where it is unknown whether a nonresident is living or dead, a bill may be filed against him as if living, etc., and he may be proceeded against as such, though he may not intend to abandon his domicile in the state. Hollander v. Central Metal & Supply Co. of Baltimore City, 71 Atl. 442, 448, 109 Md. 181, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

A person who has acquired under the provisions of Code 1899, c. 41, the right to have personal property exempted from forced sale, does not forfeit it on the ground of nonresidence until he begins to remove his personalty from his place of abode in the state to another state or country with intent to fix his residence in such other state or country, although he may intend to leave the state permanently and has made complete preparation so to do, and delivered his personal property and effects for shipment to a point outside the state. Brown v. Beckwith, 51 S. E. 977, 978, 53 W. Va. 140, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778, 112 Am. St. Rep. 955.

Defendant, after the judgment sued on, went to Idaho, where she lived with her daughter in a rented house, and taught school continuously, except during vacations, when she generally returned to Washington, always intending to return to Idaho before the next school year. Her visits to Washington were not to the place of her previous residence; the house there having been deserted, wrecked by the wind, and finally burned. Held, that defendant became a nonresident within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4808 (Pierce's Code, § 292), providing that the time that a person shall reside out of the state shall not be a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action. Dignam v. Shaff, 98 Pac. 1113, 1114, 51 Wash. 412, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996.

Nonresident domestic corporation

Code W. Va. 1906, c. 32, § 124, defines a nonresident domestic corporation as one whose principal place of business or chief works is located without the state, and chapter 124, § 8a, declares that the State Auditor shall be, and is constituted, the attorney in fact for and on behalf of every nonresident domestic corporation which by power of attorney shall appoint such Auditor and his successors in office attorney in fact to accept service of process. Held, that the State Auditor by virtue of the statute alone without act on the part of the corporation is authorized to accept service of process for it, and hence where the corporation was chartered in West Virginia, but none of its officers resided there, jurisdiction was properly obtained by service of process on the State Auditor. Wylie Permanent Camping Co. v. Lynch, 195 Fed. 386, 396, 115 C. C. A. 288.

NONRESIDENT ALIEN

A "nonresident alien," within Code, § 3368, providing that, as against a purchaser from a nonresident alien, the survivor shall not be entitled to a distributive share in the estate of deceased, if at the time of the purchase the survivor was also a nonresident alien, is a nonresident of the state, though a resident of a sister state. In re Kennedy's Estate, 135 N. W. 53, 55, 154 Iowa, 460.

NONSUIT

See Involuntary Nonsuit; Motion for Nonsuit; Voluntary Nonsuit.
Suffer nonsuit, see Suffer.

The term "nonsuit," as used in a court rule providing that if service of a bill of particulars is not effected on defendant by the succeeding term a nonsuit shall be awarded, is to be taken in the sense of the non pros. of the English practice or the dismissal of the practice in this state. Souders v. Carolina Portland Cement Co., 59 S. E. 467, 468, 3 Ga. App. 99.

A "nonsuit" is a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove his case or when he refuses to proceed to the trial of the cause after it has been put at issue, without determining the issue. A voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of his cause by the plaintiff, who suffers judgment for costs to be entered against him by absenting himself or failing to answer when called upon to hear the verdict. An involuntary nonsuit takes place when the plaintiff on being called when his case is before the court for trial neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict. Wise v. Cohen, 99 N. Y. Supp. 663, 665, 113 App. Div. 859 (citing Deeley v. Heintz, 62 N. E. 158, 169 N. Y. 129).

A judgment for want of prosecution is a nonsuit within the meaning of that term as understood in the Virginias. Henry Marcus & Son v. McClure, 59 S. E. 1055, 63 W. Va. 215.

The rule that a "judgment of nonsuit" is not a judgment on the merits is so well settled that discussion is unnecessary. Such a judgment is no bar to another suit. Guthell v. Gilmer, 76 Pac. 628, 631, 27 Utah, 496.

A "judgment of nonsuit" is a decision by the court that the plaintiff has produced no evidence upon which facts may be found. Hence the dismissal of an action against an insurance company on motion of defendant after plaintiff had established his application for a paid-up policy within six months after default in payment of the premium, that he had complied with all the other requirements of the policy authorizing such issue except the surrender of the policy itself, which he had failed to find after a diligent search, that he had tendered to the company a release of all liability under such policy, and that it refused to accept the release and issue a paid-up policy, is a "nonsuit." Lindenthal v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 66 N. E. 629, 630, 174 N. Y. 76.

A "judgment of nonsuit," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5085, authorizing the court to enter a nonsuit on motion of defendant when on the trial plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient cause for the jury, is the judgment rendered against plaintiff in a legal proceeding on his inability to maintain his cause in court or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to trial after issue joined, and without determination, of the issues. McGuire v. Bryant Lumber & Shingle Mill Co., 102 Pac. 237, 238, 53 Wash. 425.

A nonsuit is a judgment based on the process or pleading, but, when rendered, the person nonsuited remains a party to the process or pleading as before, and it is not available to cure a misjoinder of parties plaintiff. Gowan v. Stevens, 76 Atl. 147, 148, 83 Vt. 358.

Where defendant rested at the close of plaintiff's case and moved for a dismissal of the complaint, and plaintiff moved for judgment, a judgment for defendant was not one of "nonsuit," but one involving a determination that plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the facts as submitted to the court. M. Zimmerman Co. v. New York City R. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 598, 599.

Where both parties introduced their evidence, and plaintiff's evidence supported a judgment for him, and defendant made no motion for a judgment of dismissal, a judgment, though termed a dismissal, was a "final" decision, and deemed excepted to, within Code Civ. Proc. § 647, and not a judgment of "nonsuit," within section 581, authorizing a nonsuit, on motion of defendant, on plaintiff failing to prove a case. Saul v. Moscone, 118 Pac. 452, 454, 16 Cal. App. 506.

Where the county court disallowed a claim against the estate of a decedent, indorsing the disallowance on the back of the claim and entering an order disallowing the claim and taxing costs against the claimant, the Judgment was not one of nonsuit, obviously being intended as a final judgment, and not falling within Code Civ. Proc. § 183, defining nonsuit, and is appealable. Tucker v. Tucker, 121 Pac. 125, 126, 21 Colo. App. 94.

"It has been said that 'a nonsuit is but like the blowing out of a candle, which a man at his own pleasure may light again.' This is an apt illustration, but it does not mean that the plaintiff may re-enter the court when he has once abandoned the further prosecution of his case, and avail himself of what had already been done at a former trial. That he will be entitled to the full benefit of the legal principle settled by the appellate tribunal, if he has been driven to a nonsuit and appeals, and that his adversary will be concluded by it, so far as it is applicable to the facts as established at the next trial, is undeniable, but this is all he has accomplished. He cannot enjoy any greater advantage otherwise than if he had taken a voluntary nonsuit and brought a new suit for the same cause of action." City of Hickory v. Southern Ry. Co., 50 S. E. 683, 685, 138 N. C. 311.

"'Nonsuit' is a process of legal mechanics. The case is chopped off. Only in a clear, gross case is this mechanical treatment proper. Where there is any doubt, another method is to be used—a method involving a sort of mental chemistry; and the chemists of the law are the jury. They are supposed to be able to examine every molecule of the evidence, and to feel every shock and tremor of its probative force." Corcoran v. Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Co., 57 S. E. 962, 964, 1 Ga. App. 741 (quoting from Vickers v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co., 64 Ga. 307).

Retraxit distinguished
See Retraxit.

NONTENANT

The plea of "nontenant" and an avowry for rent in replevin puts in issue the demise and tenancy as stated in the avowry or cognizance and requires the defendant to prove them, while the plea of "nothing in arrear" admits the tenancy as stated in the avowry or cognizance and puts in issue the fact of the rent being in arrear. Middleton v. Quigley, 12 N. J. Law, 352, 356.

A denial in the answer in partition of the allegations of the petition that petitioner is a tenant in common with defendant, and is seized in fee, raised an issue of fact, being equivalent to a plea of non tenant insimul by which defendant denies that he and plaintiff are tenants in common. Gregory v. Pinnix, 73 S. E. 814, 815, 158 N. C. 147.

NONTRADING PARTNERSHIP

"In partnerships not commercial in their nature, such as those of lawyers, doctors, and others, called 'nontrading,' one partner cannot bind the other by the execution of promissory notes, unless authority is expressly given or recognized by all the parties, or implied from their general business habits. The issue of negotiable paper by such partnerships is generally neither customary nor necessary, and there is no implied authority from the existence of the partnership. The partners can only be bound upon proof of authority, and the burden of proof to establish such authority is upon the plaintiff." Teed v. Parsons, 66 N. E. 1044-1046, 202 Ill. 455 (citing Ulery v. Glnrich, 57 Ill. 531; Pars. Partn. 190, note).

Partnerships, when considered with reference to the business in which they are engaged, may generally be divided into two classes, one of which is known as "trading" or commercial partnerships, and the other as "nontrading" or noncommercial partnerships. Any member of an ordinary trading partnership can bind the firm by the signing of the firm name in the usual course of business as a part of the usual routine of their affairs, irrespective of restrictions in the articles of partnership not brought to the knowledge of the payee. In a "nontrading partnership," however—that is, a partnership engaged in some occupation which is not of a commercial character—a partner does not generally possess the power to bind the firm, and the extent of his powers is not fixed by the rules of law. The general rule is that the partners in such a firm have no implied power to bind the partnership, but each case is left to be decided upon its particular facts, and one who seeks to hold the firm bound upon a contract made by a single member must be able to show such acts as will warrant the conclusion that the partner had been invested by his copartner with the requisite authority to make the contract. Smallhouse v. Morris (Ky.) 107 S. W. 708, 709 (quoting and adopting definition in Alsop v. Central Trust Co., 38 S. W. 510, 100 Ky. 375).

NONUSER

Abandonment of an easement necessarily implies nonuser, but nonuser does not create abandonment, however long continued. Adams v. Hodgkins, 84 Atl. 530, 532, 109 Me. 361, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741.

NONE

See If None.

NONES

What is now known as noon, or 12 o'clock in the daytime, originally represented the ninth hour of the day after sunrise, or about 3 o'clock p. m., and was the canonical hour of "nones," at which was celebrated a religious rite. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaubert Co., 87 S. W. 1115, 1118, 120 Ky. 752, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364, 9 Ann. Cas. 324 (adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

NOON

In exact use "noon" means 12 o'clock, midday. Andrecsik v. New Jersey Tube Co., 63 Atl. 719, 720, 73 N. J. Law, 664, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 9 Ann. Cas. 1006 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

In the state of New York "noon" is 12 o'clock m. standard time, as fixed by Laws N. Y. 1892, p. 1491, c. 677, § 28. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. of New York v. David Moffat Co., 154 Fed. 13, 21, 83 C. C. A. 91.

The word "noon" in an insurance policy means noon by sun time. Meler v. Phoenix Ins. Co., decision of lower court or Ohio, affirmed in the Supreme Court on an equal division, 65 N. E. 1129, 66 Ohio St. 659. See 32 Ins. Law J. 192.

In construing a policy of insurance on a vessel, ending at "noon" of a certain date, it is held that the parties must be considered as regarding the meridian of the place where the contract is made, unless some other one is mentioned in it. Walker v. Protection Ins. Co., 29 Me. 317, 321.

"Noon" is midday, and is merely a shorter expression than "12 o'clock in the day time." Where a policy expired on a certain day at "noon," parol evidence was admissible to establish that by a well-known custom of the place where the contract was made the word "noon" was used to mean 12 o'clock midday standard time, and was so intended by the parties to the contract, instead of 12 o'clock sun time; and so an instruction that if, at the time the policy was issued, there existed at the place where the contract was made a custom or usage with reference to the meaning of the word "noon" so well settled and uniformly acted on, and of such continuance, as to raise a presumption that the parties knew thereof and entered into the contract with reference to it, such usage would govern in determining whether the policy had expired, was proper. The insurer is not liable for a loss which was inevitable at the time the policy expired, provided the fire had not then attacked the building. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co., 87 S. W. 1115, 1118, 120 Ky. 752, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364, 9 Ann. Cas. 324.

NOON HOUR

As used in a promise to repair machinery during the "noon hour," it meant the time from 12 o'clock noon to 1 o'clock p. m. Andrecsik v. New Jersey Tube Co., 63 Atl. 719, 720, 73 N. J. Law, 664, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 9 Ann. Cas. 1006.

NOR

The word "nor," in a will whereby testator empowered the trustee to sell real estate, with a proviso that no sale should be made during the lifetime of either of the daughters of testator without their consent, "nor" unless it is necessary to pay debts, is used in the sense of "or." Reed v. Longstreet (N. J.) 63 Atl. 500, 501.

NORMAL OUTAGE OR WANTAGE

See Outage.

NORMALLY

The word "normally" is defined "as a rule; regularly; according to a rule, general custom," etc. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co. 186 Fed. 496, 504.

NORTH

The term "north" has two meanings; one common, and the other technical. Unprofessional men generally mean, in stating courses, the lines indicated by the compass, without making any allowance for variation in the needle; and even professional surveyors, as appears from the evidence, would not consider the true meridian as intended, unless specially so informed. Jenny Lind Co. v. Bower, 11 Cal. 194, 197.

NORTH HALF

The words "the north half," used in the conveyance of a part of a platted block of land, mean the half of the block lying north of an east and west line drawn through the block, unless the surrounding facts require that these words be given a different meaning. Lavis v. Wilcox, 133 N. W. 563, 116 Minn. 187.

Under a conveyance of the "north half" of a tract of land, the east line of which is of such a shape that the north line is less than one-half the length of the south line, the grantee is entitled to one-half of the area of the tract, and not merely to one-half of the north and south length of the tract. Robinson v. Taylor, 123 Pac. 444, 445, 68 Wash. 351, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1011.

NORTH RIVER

The words "North river," as used in a marine policy on a scow, containing the following provision: "Warranted by the assured to be employed exclusively in the freighting business, and to navigate only the waters of the bay and harbor of New York, the North and East rivers, and inland waters of New Jersey"—cannot be extended by construction to include tributaries of the Hudson in the state of New York, and there can be no recovery under the policy for an injury to the scow received while she was lying in a dock in Rondout Creek, 2½ miles from the udson. Hastorf v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 182 Md. 122, 124.

NORTHERLY

Where a notice of the opening of a new road described it as running with a "northerly" course across the property of another, the fact that it ran 5 degrees 50 minutes west of north was immaterial. Riggs v. Winterle, 59 Atl. 762, 765, 100 Md. 439.

NORTHERNLY

"The term 'northernly' in a grant, where there is no object mentioned to direct the inclination of the course toward the east or west, means due north." State ex rel. Ohandler v. Huff, 79 S. W. 1010, 1012, 105 Mo. App. 54 (quoting and adopting definition in Brandt ex dem. Walton v. Ogden [N. Y.] 1 Johns. 156).

NOSCITUR A SOCIIS

"Noscitur a sociis"—It is known by its associates. Thus, in 92 Ohio Laws, p. 44 Act Feb. 27, 1896, forbidding the prescribing of any drug, medicine, or other agency for the treatment of disease by a person who has not obtained from the board of medical registration and examination a certificate of qualification, the word "agency" should be limited by the associated words "drug" and "medicine," and therefore did not include the system of healing known as "osteopathy," which consists of rubbing or kneading the body. State v. Liffing, 55 N. E. 168, 169, 61 Ohio St. 39, 50, 46 L. R. A. 334, 76 Am. St. Rep. 358.

Under Rev. St. Wis. § 1564, providing that any tavern keeper or other person selling liquor on Sunday or election day shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, the general words "other person" must, under the familiar rule "noscitur a sociis," be taken to mean a similar class of persons and not be extended so as to include all persons, and hence includes only persons whose business, at least in part, is to sell intoxicating liquors. Jensen v. State, 19 N. W. 374, 375, 60 Wis. 577.

The words "estate" and "alimony," in Rev. St. Wis. § 2364, authorizing the court in divorce actions to adjudge to the wife alimony out of the husband's estate, are not only associated within the rule "noscitur a sociis" and to be understood in a kindred sense, but are correlatives dependent one on the other for effect and should be understood in a corresponding sense. Blake v. Blake, 43 N. W. 144, 145, 75 Wis. 339 (citing Campbell v. Campbell, 37 Wis. 219).

The doctrine of "noscitur a sociis" applied to a mercantile instrument contemplates the ascertaining of the meaning of general words by reference to preceding special words therein. A fire policy covering a steamboat provided that "if gunpowder, camphene, spirit gas, naphtha, benzine, or benzole, chemical, crude or refined coal or earth oils, should be kept or used on the premises without written consent," the policy should be void. In an action on the policy it appeared that kerosene oil was used to light the cabin and saloon of the boat after such policy was issued. Held, that this will not prevent a recovery. Applying the maxim "noscitur a sociis," and other rules of construction, the provision above recited is held to refer to "crude or refined coal or earth oils," similar to the coal or earth oils and other substances specifically named, in respect to their dangerous and inflammable character. Morse v. Buffalo Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 30 Wis. 534, 537, 11 Am. Rep. 587 (quoting and adopting definition in Broom, Leg. Max. p. 451).

NOT

See Whether or Not.

NOT A NECESSARY PARTY

The term "not a necessary party" means that the suit can proceed just as well without him, and in that event, if his presence has the effect to hinder or burden the case, he may be dropped. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 893, 178 Mo. 528, 101 Am. St. Rep. 434.

NOT A RESPECTABLE WOMAN

An indictment alleging that accused imputed to a married woman that she "was not a respectable woman," without containing innuendo averments alleging what the language meant, and that as spoken and intended it meant that she was unchaste, does not state an offense under Pen. Code 1895, art. 750, making a person falsely imputing to a female a want of chastity guilty of slander. Woods v. State, 124 S. W. 918, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 103.

NOT BE PAYABLE

Where testator directs his executor to pay all the collateral inheritance taxes on the devises and legacies in the will as soon as the same can be conveniently done, and the executor pays the tax on the entire estate at the time of its valuation, the commonwealth cannot, on the death of the life tenant, impose any tax upon the remainderman under Act May 6, 1887 (P. L. 79), providing that the tax on estates in remainder shall not be payable until the person liable for the same shall come into actual possession; the words "not be payable" meaning only "shall not be demandable." In re De Borbon's Estate, 61 Atl. 244, 245, 211 Pa. 623.

NOT BEING

The term "without," as used in an averment that building material was suffered to remain in a street after night "without" being guarded, is a direct averment that no guards or lights were placed around the obstruction, and the pleading did not merely recite such facts; the word "without" being synonymous with "not being." City of LaPorte v. Osborn, 86 N. E. 995, 997, 43 Ind. App. 100.

NOT COMPLETED

A contract which has never been begun is a contract "not completed" within the time specified," within Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 5519, providing for re-estimating and reletting drainage contracts. Gutschow v. Washington County, 104 N. W. 602, 603, 74 Neb. 378.

NOT DOUBTING

The words "desire," "request," "recommend," "hope," "not doubting" used by testator in a will to express his desire that the executor will conduct a fund in a specified manner, testator having power to command, will not be construed as precatory only, but as commands clothed in the language of civility, and to impose on the executor an enforceable duty, sufficient to create a trust. Trustees of Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist., 75 Atl. 100, 101, 75 N. H. 408, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

NOT ENOUGH

Under a statute providing that no appeal shall be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking, if a good and sufficient undertaking be filed before the hearing on motion to dismiss, the term "insufficient," as applied to an undertaking on appeal, must be construed as meaning such a one as has some efficiency, but "not enough" to meet the necessary requirements, and bears the ordinary meaning of "not enough"; that is, importing degree in quantity or quality, and not total absence. Pirrie v. Moule, 81 Pac. 390, 392, 33 Mont. 1.

NOT EXEMPT

The words "not exempt from attachment by law," in the poor debtor's act, requiring an assignment of all the debtor's estate, both real and personal, not exempt from attachment by law, except only from the assignment only such property as is expressly exempted from attachment by statute relating to that subject, and an assignment by debtor in the language of the statute is sufficient to include every equitable as well as legal interest in the real or personal property of the assigning debtor. Tillinghast v. Bradford, 5 R. I. 205, 212.

The phrase "not exempt from execution," used in Rev. St. 1898, § 3035, authorizing application to the judgment of any property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution, is equivalent to the expression "not exempted by express statute from execution," and so the income from personal property held in trust may be reached; there being no statute exempting it. Williams v. Smith, 93 N. W. 464, 46 117 Wis. 142.

NOT GUILTY

A plea of "not guilty" puts in issue every fact which the commonwealth must establish to secure a conviction. Frazier Commonwealth (Ky.) 114 S. W. 268, 26

By a plea of "not guilty" defendant denied every fact essential to his guilt, including his identity with the person who committed the homicide. People v. Wong Sang Lung, 84 Pac. 844, 845, 3 Cal. App. 22 (adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Briggs, 5 Pick. [22 Mass.] 429).

Rev. St. 1898, § 4891, providing that a verdict on a plea of not guilty shall be either "guilty" or "not guilty," which imports a conviction or acquittal on the offense charged, and that on a plea of former conviction or acquittal it shall be either "for the state" or "for defendant," requires a verdict on the latter plea, and, where defendant pleaded not guilty and autrefois acquit, it was error to enter judgment on a verdict of guilty. State v. Creechley, 75 Pac. 384, 2 Utah, 142.

The plea of "not guilty," in a criminal action, puts in issue every material allegation of the indictment or information, and like a general denial in a civil action, casts the burden of establishing the facts necessary to convict upon the prosecution. In civil actions, under a general denial, the plaintiff will recover unless his evidence is met and overcome by evidence of equal or greater weight; and if the jury believes from a consideration of all of the evidence in the case that the preponderance, however slight, is in favor of the plaintiff, he will be entitled to a verdict. But in criminal cases, in order to convict, the prosecution is required to prove every material allegation of the indictment or information, every essential element of the crime charged, not only by a preponderance of the evidence, but to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. And if, upon consideration of all of the evidence in the case, there exists in the mind of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the existence of any one or more of these essential elements which must be proven to render the act criminal, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of that doubt, and should be acquitted. State v. Pressler, 92 Pac. 806, 809, 16 Wyo. 214, 15 Ann. Cas. 93.

A plea of "not guilty" by one accused of crime is an express contention on his part antagonistic to every fact necessary to be proved by the state in order to establish his guilt; and, unless the accused admits one or more of the facts which it devolves upon the state to prove, such fact must be established by evidence. To assume that an important fact in the case on trial has been admitted, and to so instruct the jury, when no such admission has been made, is reversible error. Cooper v. State, 59 S. E. 2, 2 Ga. App. 730.

Under B. & C. Comp. §§ 1336, 1356, a defendant accused of a misdemeanor can appear for arraignment and enter a plea of not guilty by counsel. Held, that a stipulation entered into by the district attorney and counsel for defendant that all the matters alleged in the indictment are true and admitted, and that judgment should be entered according to the facts and the law, was in effect a plea of "not guilty" as it in effect admitted the facts charged, but denied that they constituted a crime. State v. Sullivan, 98 Pac. 493, 52 Or. 614.

NOT HEREINBEFORE DISPOSED OF

Under a will bequeathing an equal sum to each of six charitable institutions, but providing that, if such bequests should exceed one-half of the personal estate of which he died possessed, such a proportionate amount should be taken from each as would reduce the sum thereof to one-half of his personal estate, but that, if the sum of the bequests should not equal one-half of the personal estate of which he died possessed, such an equal amount should be added to each bequest as would make the sum of the bequests equal to one-half of his personal estate, and directing the executors to divide the remainder of the estate "not hereinbefore disposed of" as therein provided, the words "not hereinbefore disposed of" mean the half of the estate in value at the time of the testator's death, which he had set aside to meet the requirements of the provisions of his will, and do not mean that the residuary legatees should share equally the interest and dividends and any other property which might come to the estate with the specific and general legatees. In re Barton's Estate, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 1090, 64 Misc. Rep. 242.

NOT HIS OWN

The words "not his own," which are essential to an allegation in a complaint for trespass on inclosed lands or premises, not the property of the person against whom the complaint is made, is an exclusive negative, denying any right, however small, and is intended to include any right of the usufruct, control, occupation, or of entry. A complaint failing to charge that the lands on which defendant was alleged to have trespassed were "not his own" is fatally defective. Binhoff v. State, 90 Pac. 586, 587, 49 Or. 419.

NOT HITCHED

In an action for injuries to a person on a street from collision with a runaway team, where the petition averred that the team was not hitched, a charge authorizing a recovery for plaintiff against the owner of the team, if the jury should find that the team was left without any person in charge and without exercising ordinary care to securely hitch it while the driver was absent, was not objectionable as authorizing a recovery for negligence not alleged in the pleading, as the law devolves upon the owner the obligation to exercise ordinary care in hitching the team in some reasonably secure manner, and the allegation that the team was not hitched should be viewed in the sense of the law under which, if the team was insecurely hitched, when considered with respect to the obligation to exercise ordinary care in that behalf, they would be "not hitched" in the eye of the law. Miller v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 134 S. W. 1045, 1047, 155 Mo. App. 528.

NOT KNOW

See Do Not Know.

NOT KNOWING

The words "not knowing," or "having no reasonable grounds to suspect," or "knew," or "know," or "had reasonable grounds to suspect," when used in an instruction in an action for injuries to a passenger while attempting to board a train in consequence of the starting of the train, relating to the knowledge or want of knowledge of the conductor in starting the train before the passenger had boarded it, are legal equivalents. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Hickey, 99 S. W. 839, 842, 81 Ark. 579.

NOT LESS THAN

"When so many 'clear days,' or so many days 'at least,' are given to do an act, or 'not less than' so many days must intervene, both the terminal days are excluded." In re Gregg's Estate, 62 Atl. 856, 857, 213 Pa. 260 (quoting and adopting the language of End. Interp. St. § 391).

Act April 4, 1870, provides that county commissioners, before contracting for the erection of any buildings, shall by advertisement invite sealed proposals according to specifications kept open for the inspection of all persons for at least four weeks before the time appointed for opening the proposals. Held, that the phrase "not less than four weeks" means at least four weeks and the four weeks during which the advertisement must be published or the same four weeks during which the specifications must be of record. The commissioners of a certain county fixed the time for opening the bids for a new courthouse at July 19, 1903. The specifications were deposited in the office of the county commissioners for a period longer than four weeks to such date, and the advertisements were published in two weekly newspapers in the county on June 16th, June 23d, June 30th, and July 7th. Held, that the advertisements complied with the requirements of the act that the advertisement shall be published for not less than four weeks before the contract is awarded. Commonwealth ex rel. Miller & Sons v. Brown, 59 Atl. 479, 480, 210 Pa. 29.

An ordinance of the town of Central prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors, except as is now provided by the dispensary law, and for a violation of such ordinance fixes the penalty at "not less than one hundred dollars, or not less than thirty days' imprisonment, or thirty days' labor on the chain gang, or thirty days' labor on the streets of the town, at the discretion of the mayor's court." Const. art. 5, § 21, provides that magistrates shall have exclusive jurisdiction in criminal cases where the punishment does not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment for 30 days. Cr. Code 1902, § 12, provides that magistrates shall have jurisdiction of all offenses where the punishment does not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment for 30 days, and may impose any sentence, within those limits, singly or within the alternative. The charter of the town of Central (Laws 1885, p. 405, § 4) provides that the intendant and wardens shall have the same jurisdiction in criminal matters as trial justices, so far as the same relates to the ordinances of the town. Held, that the words "not less than one hundred dollars," as used in the ordinance, mean "one hundred dollars," and therefore a prosecution for violation of the ordinance was within the jurisdiction of the intendant. Town of Central v. Madden, 61 S. E. 1028, 1029, 81 S. C. 7.

NOT NAVIGABLE

The phrase "streams not navigable," within a statute providing that the right of eminent domain may be exercised for storing and floating logs and lumber on streams "not navigable," means streams not navigable in fact. Potlatch Lumber Co. v. Peterson, 88 Pac. 426, 430, 12 Idaho, 769, 118 Am. St. Rep. 233.

NOT NEGOTIABLE

The words "not negotiable," stamped on the face of a bill of lading, do not prohibit transfer of the bill and of the contract represented thereby by indorsement and delivery, as, under Code Civ. Proc. § 449, any contract is transferable and enforceable by suit in the name of the assignee, but the transferor of such a bill has only his common-law rights, and cannot avail himself of Factors' Act (Laws 1830, p. 203, c. 179) § 3, providing that an agent intrusted with the possession of a bill of lading shall be deemed the true owner thereof so far as to give validity to any contract for the sale of goods thereunder. Gass v. Astoria Veneer Mills, 118 N. Y. Supp. 982, 986, 134 App. Div. 184.

The words "not negotiable," stamped on the face of the bill of lading, did not destroy its assignability, but the sole effect was to exempt the bill from the statutory provisions relative thereto, and a bill, though not negotiable, may be transferred by assignment; the assignee taking subject to the equities between the original parties. National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 59 Atl. 124, 138, 99 Md. 661, 105 Am. St. Rep. 321.

NOT OPEN FOR BUSINESS

See Open for Business.

NOT OTHERWISE

The words "not otherwise," in Pol. Code § 3366, providing that county boards of supervisors shall, in the exercise of their police powers, and for the purpose of regulation and "not otherwise," have power to license all and every kind of business not prohibited by law, transacted, and carried on within the limits of their respective jurisdiction, operate to curtail all power boards of supervisors previously had to issue licenses and charge therefor as a revenue measure. Pumas County v. Wheeler, 87 Pac. 909, 910, 14 Cal. 758.

NOT OTHERWISE EXCEPTED

Under Const. 1875, art. 5, § 6, conferring on the circuit courts jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal, not otherwise excepted, the words "not otherwise excepted" are not words of prohibition on the Legislature, but simply words of description as to what jurisdiction is conferred absolutely on the circuit courts, and hence, when construed with section 7, declaring that the General Assembly should have power to establish courts of chancery, and directed the state to be divided into chancery divisions and districts, and Const. 1901, § 148, declaring that the Legislature may confer upon the circuit court or the chancery court the jurisdiction of both of such courts, Acts 1894-95, p. 881, conferring chancery jurisdiction on the circuit court of Jefferson county, is not unconstitutional. Ensley Development Co. v. Powell, 40 South. 137, 139, 147 Ala. 300.

NOT OTHERWISE ORNAMENTED OR DECORATED

In the tariff act in a paragraph in relation to articles of glass, the use of the phrase "not otherwise ornamented or decorated," after an enumeration of several processes by which an article may be ornamented or decorated, not only implies, but indicates, a understanding that this result of the enumerated processes is to be an ornament or decoration, in order to bring the article within the terms of such paragraph. Utard v. United States, 128 Fed. 422, 63 C. C. A. 164 (citing Koscherak v. United States, 98 Fed. 509, 39 C. C. A. 166).

NOT OTHERWISE PROVIDED FOR

Code 1896, § 4561, provides for a solicitor's fee of $50 for securing the conviction of any corporation for violating any law, and another section authorizes a fee of $7.50 for each conviction of a misdemeanor not otherwise provided for. Held that, since section 3358 makes the willful obstruction of a public road a misdemeanor, but affixes no penalty, the offense is one "not otherwise provided for," for which the solicitor's fee is but $7.50. Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. State, 48 South. 658, 659, 159 Ala. 118.

The expression "not otherwise provided for," or "not specially provided for," in a tariff provision, does not deprive the general rule as to classification by specific designation of its ordinary application, so that a provision which specifically designates goods, but which is so qualified, shall not prevail over words of a general description in another provision containing no such qualification. United States v. Schwarz, 140 Fed. 802, 304.

NOT RESTRAINED BY LAW

The term "agreement," in Code Civ. Proc. § 66, providing that the compensation of an attorney for his services is governed by agreement, express or implied, which is "not restrained by law," means an agreement which is recognized by the law as a valid agreement. An agreement obtained for a consideration which is valid, or upon inducement which is expressly prohibited, would not be an agreement which was not restrained by law. O'Neill v. Campbell, 103 N. Y. Supp. 150, 152, 118 App. Div. 64.

NOT SAFE

The phrase "not safe" is a negation of every degree of safety, and hence an instruction, in an action against a railroad company for injury resulting from a defective track, merely relating to the condition of the track, and not to an imposed duty, which was otherwise covered, stating, "If you believe from the evidence that the track of the defendant at the place of the accident was not in a safe condition," etc., if erroneous in omitting to qualify the phrase "not in safe condition," was to the advantage of defendant, and it had no right to complain. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Roberts (Tex.) 91 S. W. 375, 184.

NOT SO DYING

By the third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of his will, testator devised in fee simple lands in severalty to his three sons. The seventh paragraph of the will provided that, if any or either of such children should die leaving no issue living at the time of his or her decease, the estate devised to the child so dying was to go to the other and remaining "children or child not so dying in equal proportions in fee simple in remainder forever." Held, that the words "not so dying" meant that the executory devisees should be children of the testator not dying in like manner or under the same circumstances as the deceased child—that is, leaving no child or children, or descendant or descendants living at the time of their decease—and such words could not be changed so as to read "not having so died," and since by this construction there will be no person who can take under the seventh paragraph, as no living person can fulfill the description, the seventh paragraph must be regarded as ineffective and insufficient to restrain or limit the previous paragraphs of the will, and hence the devisees in such paragraphs take a fee-simple estate. Mills v. Teel, 92 N. E. 810, 812, 245 Ill. 483.

NOT SPECIALLY PROVIDED FOR

See Not Otherwise Provided For.

NOT SUBJECT TO COUNTERMAND

A writing in the form of an order to ship trees, although stated to be a contract and not "subject to countermand," is not a contract, and may be countermanded, where there is nothing in the writing itself to show an agreement to deliver, and the order was not accepted by the person to whom it was directed or by his agent. Mayo v. Koller, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 91, 95.

NOT TO BE PERFORMED

The provision in a contract of sale of a machine that the seller would keep at a certain place a stock of all parts of the machine, so that, if any part of it broke, the buyer could get the part needed for repairs within 24 hours of giving an order, is not within the statute of frauds, as an undertaking "not to be performed within a year." Janney Mfg. Co. v. Banta (Ky.) 83 S. W. 130, 131.

NOT TO BE PREVENTED

Testatrix bequeathed to certain named persons both real and personal property to be divided among them equally, and then provided that such shares should not be paid until the respective donees should become of age, but in the meantime should be deposited in some bank or institution on interest, and that her executor should not be prevented from applying any share during minority of the donee to his maintenance. Held, that the term "not to be prevented" included an implied authorization to the executor to so apply any of such shares. Weber v. Waldeck (N. J.) 63 Atl. 495, 496.

NOT TO THE LETTER

Where, in response to an issue, the jury found that plaintiff substantially complied with his contract, and the question was submitted twice thereafter, to which the jury replied, "No, not to the letter," such phrase indicated an intent to find a substantial performance. Carnegie Public Library Ass'n of Brownwood v. Harris, 97 S. W. 520, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 165.

NOT WHOLLY WITHIN

Ordinarily the words "not wholly within" refer to a situation where a part is within.

"Not wholly" is synonymous with "partly." People ex rel. Donegan v. Dooling, 125 N. Y. Supp. 783, 785, 141 App. Div. 31.

NOTARY

See De Facto Notary.

A "notary" is a public officer whose duty it is to attest the genuineness of any deeds or writings in order to render them available as evidence of the facts therein contained. He is a public functionary, authorized to receive all acts and contracts to which parties wish to give the character of authenticity, attached to the act of public authority, to secure their date, their preservation, and the delivery of copies. The functions and authority of a notary are defined by law, and he cannot act as the mandatory of a vendor for whom he draws up and passes a deed of sale, since that is not one of the functions conferred upon him by law, and hence the purchaser cannot make a valid payment of the price to him. Nolan v. Labatut, 41 South. 713, 718, 117 La. 431 (citing 2 Abbott's Dig. p. 182; 5 Dict. Droit Civil, p. 27; Breen v. Schmidt, 6 La. Ann. 13; Brown v. Schmidt, 7 La. Ann. 349; Succession of O'Keefe, 12 La. Ann. 246; Lescouzeve & Abry v. Ducautel, 18 La. Ann. 470).

Section 1750, Rev. St. U. S., confers on consular officers the power "to perform any notarial act which any notary public is required or authorized by law to do within the United States." Held, that such consular officer is a "notary public," within the meaning of our statute, and authorized to take and certify affidavits of depositions for use in the courts of the state. Browne v. Palmer, 92 N. W. 315, 317, 66 Neb. 287.

The office of a notary is of great antiquity, deriving its origin from the early Roman jurisprudence, and has for many centuries been recognized by most, if not all, of the Christian nations. The office is known to international law, to the common law, being concerned more especially with the law merchant branch, and to the civil law. "Black's Law Dictionary defines a 'notary public' as 'a public officer whose function it is to attest and certify, by his hand and official seal, certain classes of documents in order to give them credit and authenticity in foreign jurisdictions.'" Gharst v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 453, 455, 115 Mo. App. 403 (quoting and adopting Black, Law Dict.).

The first requisite to the "negotiability" of a paper is that it should be a "note," and as a "note" must be an obligation for the payment of a certain sum of money, a provision that if collection is made through an attorney, or by legal process, the maker will pay all costs and expenses, including 10 per cent. of the amount collected as attorney's fees, renders the note nonnegotiable. Green v. Spiers, 50 S. E. 554, 555, 71 S. C. 107, Ann. Cas. 261.

"Bangor, Sept. 8, 1882. I, James Newcomb, of Carmel, Maine, bought of Lemuel Nichols, Bangor, Maine, one black horse named Nig, 7 years old, for ($80.00) eighty dollars and interest on same until paid for which I agree to pay out of my next quarter's mail pay, which becomes due Jan. 1, 1883, on route 184 from Carmel to Kenduskeag, which he is now carrying. The above horse is to remain said Nichols' until fully paid for. James Newcomb." Held, that the instrument contains a "note" given for personal property bargained and delivered, payable absolutely for a fixed sum in money, within Rev. St. c. 111, § 5, providing that "an agreement that personal property bargained and delivered to another, for which a note is given, shall remain the property of the payer until the note is paid is valid unless it is made and signed as a part of the note, nor when so made and signed in a note for more than $30, unless it is recorded like mortgages of personal property." Nichols v. Ruggles, 7 Me. 25-27.

Since the enactment of Acts 1908, No. 228, providing that makers of tokens, checks, or other devices redeemable in merchandise shall be liable on demand in current money, a trade check in the form of a note payable to bearer in merchandise is a note, within the purview of the statute against the forgery of notes, orders, etc. State v. White, 52 South. 238, 126 La. 119.

An instrument signed by E., reciting that on or before a certain day "I promise to pay to the order of H. $360 rent for 90 acres of land at $4 per acre of L. plantation, for the year 1901, value received," is not only a "note," but a contract embracing all the terms of the contract between the parties and as to exclude evidence of an agreement by E.

to put a fence around the place to keep cattle out. Hightower v. Henry, 37 South. 745, 85 Miss. 476.

A conditional sale contract required payment in 10 days either in cash or notes, declaring that all notes and open accounts shall be drawn payable at Oklahoma City, with 10 per cent. attorney's fees added, and that, on default in the payment of any installment, the seller might consider the entire indebtedness due; that the title to and the ownership of all the goods should be in the seller until the buyer's indebtedness had been paid in money. Held, that the word "money" was used in contradistinction to "notes," and did not include notes, so that the acceptance of notes did not constitute a payment sufficient to vest title to the goods in the buyer. The term "notes" has reference to an evidence of indebtedness. In re Gray, 170 Fed. 633, 643.

The term "notice," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 8023, requiring weekly publication of notice of local option elections for four consecutive weeks in one paper, and such other "notice" as the county court may think proper, is not restricted to a publication in a newspaper, but may include other legal forms of notice, such as posting hand bills, etc. State v. Morgan, 128 S. W. 839, 841, 144 Mo. App. 35.

One who knew of deceased's death, was present in the state during the first two publications of the notice to present claims, returned to the state, and had actual notice of the publication for more than one month prior to the expiration of the time for filing claims, but yet failed to do so until long after that time had expired, was not one who, "by reason of being out of the state," had no "notice," "as provided in this chapter," to present his claim, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1493, and his claim was therefore barred. MacGowan v. Jones, 76 Pac. 503, 142 Cal. 593.

Though the statute provides that all notices shall be served upon the attorney, and not upon the party, such provision has reference more particularly to notices of motions and other proceedings served during the pendency of the action, and does not exclude the right of plaintiff personally to serve a notice of the dismissal of his action upon defendant, instead of on defendant's attorney. Nelson v. Nelson, 126 N. W. 731, 735, 111 Minn. 183, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 523, 137 Am. St. Rep. 549.

A request to the chairman of the board of trustees of a graded common school, signed by three members of the board, requesting him to call a meeting at a specified time and place, was not a "notice" to him of a meeting of the board at such time and place. Saunders v. O'Bannon (Ky.) 87 S. W. 1105.

Under a statute providing that a materialman shall not be entitled to a lien unless, within 60 days, he shall give notice in writing to the owner or agent of his intention to claim such lien, a "notice" given that claimants claimed and should forthwith file their claim of a mechanic's lien in the office of the clerk of the circuit court was not fatally defective for failure to recite that they "intended" to claim such lien, as any phraseology which clearly and distinctly apprised the owner of the intention of the materialman to claim the lien will satisfy the terms of the section and effectuate its design, though the word "intention" be not used at all. The intention to claim a lien could not be more definitely expressed than by the statement that the lien is claimed and will be forthwith filed. The owner was just as fully informed by the notice given that the claimants intended to file a lien claim as she would have been had the notice specifically stated that it was the intention of the lienors to claim such a lien. Fulton v. Parlett & Parlett, 64 Atl. 58, 59, 104 Md. 62.

A notice by a landlord served on the tenant which demands possession within three days, without stating the ground therefor, and a notice served at the same time which recites that the tenant has forfeited the lease by underletting without the landlord's consent, must be construed as one notice within Rev. St. 1903, §§ 2603, 2605, defining unlawful detainer, and requiring notice in writing specifying the grounds of demandant's right to possession. Hepp Wall Paper & Mercantile Co. v. Deahl, 125 Pac. 491, 492, 53 Colo. 274.

Only such substantial compliance with Laws 1899, p. 74, requiring notice to be given to municipal corporations of claims for damages against them, stating the time, place, and extent of such injury as near as practicable, and the negligence which caused it, as will enable the municipality to fully investigate the claim, and determine whether it prefers to adjust it without suit, or to contest its validity, is necessary. The form of notice required to be given to a municipality of a claim for damages against it under Laws 1899, p. 74, requiring such notice to state the time, place, and extent of the injury as near as practicable, and the negligence which caused it, is not amenable to the strict rules of pleading; and a claimant is not required to do more than state definitely and specifically all the facts upon which he bases his claim, so as to enable the municipality to promptly investigate the merits thereof. Kennedy v. City of Savannah, 68 S. E. 652, 8 Ga. App. 98.

The phrase "without notice," used in relation to the taking of a note, usually refers to some defense of the maker or to some claim of title to it other than that of the seller, with or without notice of which a purchaser has taken it. Vansickle v. Watson, 123 S. W. 112, 116, 103 Tex. 37.

"Notice" to the purchaser of a note may be of two kinds: "Explicit notice" of the fraud or illegality, and "implicit" or "general notice." If the purchaser of notes at the time of buying them had notice or knowledge of some illegality or knowledge of some illegality or fraud which vitiated them, though he was not apprised of its nature, this would be such "general notice" as would affect title. Mere negligence, however gross, amounting to this willful and fraudulent blindness, will not of itself amount to notice, but the jury may and should consider the fact of such negligence as it may tend to prove such "general notice." Mack v. State, 61 Atl. 472, 473, 78 Conn. 184.

A letter, sent by defendant to plaintiff's attorney giving notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice, but not shown to have been received, nor served as required by statute, did not constitute a "notice of trial" within Rev. St. 1899, § 4074 (Ann. St. 1903, p. 2217), providing that, in order that such an appeal be triable at the first term, if made, it must be taken on the day the judgment was rendered, appellant, 10 days before such term, must give the opposite party notice of the appeal. Knowledge by appellee's attorney of the taking of an appeal from a justice's judgment is not the equivalent of notice under Rev. St. 1899, § 4074 (Ann. St. 1903, p. 2217), requiring the appealing party to give notice thereof, unless the appeal was taken on the day judgment was rendered. Lombard v. Ullman, 126 S. W. 221, 222, 142 Mo. App. 232.

Actual or constructive

"Notice" is defined by Wilson's Rev. Stat. Ann. St. 1903, § 10, as either actual or constructive notice; sections 11 and 12 defining actual notice as express information of fact, and constructive notice as that imputed by law to a person not having actual notice. Cooper v. Flesner, 103 Pac. 1016, 1020, 20 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189, 20 Ann. C. 29.

The word "notice" means actual notice. In Pub. St. 1882, c. 144, § 9, providing that when an account of a trustee is settled in the absence of a person adversely interested and without notice to him, such account may be opened on the application of such person. Parker v. Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 71 N. E. 806, 807, 186 Mass. 393.

Under Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) § 266, which provides that the title of a purchaser for a valuable consideration shall not be affected, unless he had notice of the fraudulent intent of his immediate grantor, the words "notice of the fraudulent intent" refer to actual, and not to constructive, notice. Cain v. Snyder, 135 N. E. Supp. 443, 446, 76 Misc. Rep. 636.

Negotiable Instruments Law Tenn. § 5 provides that, to constitute "notice" of infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating the same, the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his attention in taking the instrument amounted bad faith. Elgin City Banking Co. v. Hall, 108 S. W. 1068, 1071, 119 Tenn. 548.

Rev. St. c. 73, § 12, which declares that the title of one who purchases property for a valuable consideration cannot be defeated by a trust affecting the property, unless the purchaser has "notice" of the trust, while it may in peculiar instances mean constructive notice, in cases generally, including a case where the trust reduces an absolute deed to a mortgage, means actual notice; and actual notice as applicable to conveyances, does not necessarily mean actual knowledge; it may be express or implied; it may be proved by direct evidence, or implied from indirect or circumstantial evidence. The statutory actual notice is a conclusion of fact capable of being established by all grades of legitimate evidence. Knapp v. Bailey, 9 Atl. 122-124, 79 Me. 195, 1 Am. St. Rep. 295.

Under the statute imposing a liability on a county for damages sustained by reason of a defective bridge constructed by the county, where the chairman of the board of county commissioners has five days' "notice" of the defect, an actual notice is meant. Parr v. Board of Com'rs of Shawnee County, 78 Pac. 449, 450, 70 Kan. 111.

To constitute notice of an infirmity in a negotiable bill indorsed before maturity, the indorsee must have actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith, as provided by Ky. St. § 3720b, subsec. 56 (Russell's St. § 1925). Bothwell v. Corum, 123 S. W. 291, 292, 135 Ky. 766.

Notice under Laws 1905, c. 142, § 30, exempting a city from liability for injury caused by defective ways, unless notice of the unsafe condition has been given to the mayor or the city clerk a reasonable time previously, must be actual as distinguished from constructive notice. Gregorius v. City of Corning, 125 N. Y. Supp. 534, 535, 140 App. Div. 701.

A notice within a fire policy stipulating for its cancellation on notice and repayment of unearned premiums is a personal notice, and a notice by publication requiring the filing of claims against insurer, a foreign corporation, in the state of its origin in proceedings for its dissolution, is insufficient, and the policy holder in the state may sue the corporation in the courts of the state, and obtain a judgment to be satisfied out of the securities deposited by insurer, as required by Civ. Code 1902, § 1796. Frink v. National Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 74 S. E. 33, 35, 90 S. C. 544, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 221.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 3350, providing that a certified copy of a judgment of a court of record affecting title to realty or any interest therein may be recorded in any county where any of the lands lie, with the same effect as a conveyance, is a recording act, and does not make the record of such judgment notice of the entry thereof, within the meaning of section 4160, limiting the time within which applications for relief from a judgment may be made to one year from notice thereof. Foster v. Coughran, 129 N. W. 853, 854, 113 Minn. 433.

"Recitals in an unrecorded deed in one's chain of title, or with which one is in privity, are 'notice' to him of the facts therein set out. * * * Constructive notice of recitals in a prior unrecorded deed is as effective as knowledge of such recitals." Runge v. Gilbough (Tex.) 87 S. W. 832, 836.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 7205, provides that an appeal must be taken by serving a notice on the adverse party and by filing it with the clerk of the court. Section 7332 provides that service of any notice may be made by mail, where the person making the service and the person upon whom it is to be made reside in different places. Held, that a notice of appeal is a notice within section 7332, service of which may be made by mail, where the parties reside in different places. Gooler v. Eidness, 121 N. W. 88, 85, 18 N. D. 338.

A purchaser of real estate is chargeable with notice derived from the recitals of his deed, for anything which will put a prudent man on inquiry is notice. Adams v. Gossom, 129 S. W. 16, 20, 228 Mo. 566.

Revisal 1905, § 2205, provides that to constitute "notice" of an infirmity in a note or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith. Held, that when a note was transferred before maturity without recourse, it was no defense as against the indorsee that it was given under a contract for territory for the sale of a certain sash lock, and that the locks subsequently furnished pursuant to the contract were not in accordance with the representations of the payee, and that the note had been therefore obtained by fraud; there being nothing to show that the indorsee had any notice of the fraud at the time of the transfer. Bank of Sampson v. Hatcher, 66 S. E. 308, 309, 151 N. C. 859, 184 Am. St. Rep. 989.

Cobbey's Ann. St. 1907, § 9255, providing that, to constitute notice of an infirmity in an instrument, the person to whom negotiated must have actual knowledge thereof, or knowledge of such facts that his taking the instrument amounts to bad faith does not change the rule that to constitute bad faith by the purchaser of a negotiable instrument, for value, before maturity, he must have acquired it with knowledge of an infirmity, or with a belief based on the circumstances known to him that there was a defense, or he must have acted dishonestly. Benton v. Si-

Gen. St. Kan. 1909, § 6999, gives an action for death of or injury to a railroad employé by the negligence of a fellow servant, provided notice in writing shall have been given by or on behalf of the person injured to the railroad company within eight months after the injury, and section 7000 provides that such notice may be served by a written copy thereof by the person injured or any one on his behalf, or, if he dies, by the person or persons entitled to recover for the injury, on any person designated by the railroad in the county in which the action is brought, or, if no such person has been designated or appointed, then upon any local superintendent of affairs, freight agents, agent to sell tickets, or station keeper. Held that, while section 6999 makes the giving of notice a condition to a right of action for injuries to or death of a railroad employé occurring in Kansas, the mode of service prescribed by section 7000 is not a condition to such right, and has no extraterritorial force, so that, where an action is brought in Missouri for the wrongful death of a railroad employé in Kansas, the service of notice in any proper way, though not in compliance with section 7000, is sufficient. Plaintiff's decedent, a railroad employé, was killed in Kansas as the result of a railroad's alleged negligence, and within eight months the plaintiff filed a petition for decedent's wrongful death in the courts of Missouri, setting forth in full the negligent occurrence in Kansas resulting in decedent's death, with the time and place, etc. Summons was duly served within the eight-month period, and defendant appeared thereto. Thereafter the suit was dismissed, and another one begun. Held, that the first suit constituted a sufficient "notice" in writing to the railroad company to comply with the requirements of Gen. St. Kan. 1909, § 6999. Gen. St. Kan. 1909, § 6999, requiring notice of injuries to a railroad employé to be given by or on behalf of the person injured as a condition to his right to sue, does not require service of such notice by plaintiff personally. Husted v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 128 S. W. 282, 284, 143 Mo. App. 623.

A suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land is notice of the claim that plaintiff sets up from the time it is commenced and docketed, and, if duly prosecuted and not collusive, one purchasing the land pending the suit is affected by the decree therein, though the suit is in a county other than the county in which the land is located, under Civ. Code 1910, § 4533. Marshall v. Whatley, 72 S. E. 244, 245, 136 Ga. 305, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552.

Claim of right distinguished

The term "claim of right," as applied to adverse possession, is not synonymous with the word "notice." Swope v. Ward, 8 S. W. 895, 897, 185 Mo. 316 (citing Whitaker v. Whitaker, 58 S. W. 5, 157 Mo. 342).

Facts putting on inquiry

In law, that is "notice" of a fact which would provoke a reasonably prudent man to such inquiries as, pursued with reasonable diligence, would lead to full knowledge. Hingtgen v. Thackery, 121 N. W. 839, 840, 2 S. D. 329.

If a party has knowledge of such facts as would lead a fair and prudent man, using ordinary caution, to make further inquiries and he avoids inquiry, he is chargeable with "notice" of the facts which by ordinary diligence he would have ascertained. Knapp v. Bailey, 9 Atl. 122-124, 79 Me. 195, 1 Am. S. Rep. 295.

Whatever is sufficient to put a subsequent purchaser on inquiry must be considered "legal notice" to him of the facts inquiry would have disclosed by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Jennings v. Lentz, 93 Pa. 327, 329, 50 Or. 483, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 58.

"Notice" may be the existence of the facts which, if looked at or listened to, and the matter followed up by such inquiry as ordinary prudence would suggest, would result in obtaining the knowledge sought to be charged. Warden v. Addington, 115 S. W. 241, 245, 13 Ky. 296.

The word "trustee," following the name of the grantee in a deed, constitutes "notice" and puts one on inquiry. Flitcraft v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co., 60 Atl. 557, 559, 211 Pa. 114.

"Notice" to a purchaser of adverse interests need not be actual nor amount to full knowledge, but it should be information exciting apprehension in an ordinary mind, and prompt one of average prudence to make inquiry. Implied notice to a purchaser of adverse interests arises from knowledge of particular facts unless the law charges notice by registry or other token. Daly v. Rizzuto, 109 Pac. 276, 278, 59 Wash. 62, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 467.

"Whatever puts a party upon inquiry" "amounts in judgment of law to 'notice,' provided the inquiry becomes a duty, as in the case of purchasers and creditors, and could lead to the knowledge of the requisite fact by the exercise of ordinary diligence and understanding." Kellogg v. Randolph (N. J.) 63 Atl. 753, 754 (quoting and adopting definition in Smallwood v. Lewin, 15 N. J. Eq. 60).

"Actual possession of land is 'notice' equal to the record of a deed under which the party in possession claims. A purchaser is bound to inquire by what right or title the party in possession holds, and he will take subject to that title, whatever it may be." Merchants' & Farmers' State Bank v. Dawdy, 2 N. E. 606, 607, 230 Ill. 199 (citing Joiner v. Duncan, 51 N. E. 323, 174 Ill. 252; Coarl v. Olsen, 91 Ill. 273).

"Notice" does not mean positive information brought directly home to the parties sought to be charged. Anything that will put a prudent man upon inquiry is notice; and gross negligence in failing to make inquiry when the surrounding facts suggest the existence of others, and that inquiry is to be made, is tantamount in the courts of equity to notice." Scoggin v. Mason, 103 S. W. 831, 834, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 480 (quoting and adopting definition in Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 22 S. W. 629, 117 Mo. 261, 38 Am. St. Rep. 656).

Good faith distinguished

The terms "good faith" and "notice" are intimately related in jurisprudence, but are not of uniform meaning; the former retaining in some measure the popular sense of honest belief, but its technical significance depends largely on the doctrine of notice, as developed in the progress of the equity system. Considered with reference to and as influenced by "notice," the term "good faith" bears several legal meanings according to the subject-matter of the litigation in which it is used. As applied to the purchase of a parcel of land, the title to which passed from the grantor by a prior recorded deed or incumbrance, the constructive notice of the prior conveyance which the record imparts prevents one taking title subsequently from being a purchaser in good faith. Rev. St. 1899, § 3080 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1768), permitting one who claims land in another's possession to bar the occupant from compensation for betterments by notifying him in writing of the claim and its nature, does not make an exception in favor of an occupant who believes the hostile title to be bad and makes betterments regardless of such notice, since "notice" and "good faith" cannot so exist, for it is an equity doctrine of universal recognition that he who takes with notice takes subject to the claim, and the notice which will suffice for this purpose does not mean direct and positive information, but anything calculated to put a prudent man on the alert. Richmond v. Ashcraft, 117 S. W. 689, 692, 137 Mo. App. 191.

As information or knowledge

"Knowledge" is not the same as "notice," but to constitute "notice," the "knowledge" must be communicated in the prescribed way. Wade v. Wade's Adm'r, 69 Atl. 826, 827, 81 Vt. 275.

"Knowledge" and "notice" are not always synonymous. Field v. Campbell (Ind.)

67 N. E. 1040, 1041 (citing Kirkham v. Mopre, 65 N. E. 1042, 30 Ind. App. 549).

"Notice" is equivalent to 'information,' 'intelligence,' or 'knowledge.'" Bova v. Norlgian, 67 Atl. 326, 327, 28 R. I. 319, 125 Am. St. Rep. 741.

"Notice" means information by whatever means communicated; knowledge given or received. Metcalf v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 22, 24, 132 Wis. 67.

One's knowledge that he has been appointed to an office constitutes "notice" to him, within Code 1912, art. 70, § 11, which provides that an office is forfeited by failure to qualify within 30 days after receiving commission or notice of appointment. Little v. Schul, 84 Atl. 649, 655, 118 Md. 454.

"Knowledge" and "notice" are not synonymous, for that which does not amount to actual "knowledge" may constitute "notice." The notice may be of such a character that its effects amount to knowledge. On the other hand, the party may be charged with notice when in utter ignorance of that of which he is presumed to be advised. Rosenberger v. Hawker, 103 N. W. 781, 782, 127 Iowa, 521.

The word "notice," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3017, imposing a penalty for selling liquors to a drunkard after notice from his wife not to do so, is synonymous with information, intelligence, or knowledge, and oral notice to the managing agent of the dramshop keeper is sufficient. Jackson County ex rel. Farley v. Schmid, 124 S. W. 1074, 141 Mo. App. 229.

B. & C. Comp. § 103, provides that the court may at any time within one year after notice thereof relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Held, that "notice," as used in the statute, means "knowledge." Fildew v. Milner, 109 Pac. 1092, 1094, 57 Or. 16.

"A 'notice' to a purchaser of a note of fraud, defect in title, illegality of consideration, or other fact which impeaches its validity in the transferor's hands signifies the same as knowledge." Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Ohio Valley Furniture Co., 50 S. E. 880, 882, 57 W. Va. 625, 70 L. R. A. 312 (quoting and adopting definition in Daniel, Neg. Instr. § 789).

The word "notice," used in negotiable instrument law, must be understood as meaning actual knowledge as distinguished from implied or constructive notice which arises when a person is put on inquiry, and knowledge is presumed. Link v. Jackson, 139 S. W. 588, 593, 158 Mo. App. 63.

A complaint alleging that an act by which plaintiff, a passenger, was injured was done with "knowledge" or "notice" of defendant's agent does not state a cause of action for wantonness; "notice" not being the equivalent of "knowledge," and the averment in the disjunctive not affirming either. Birmingham Ry. & Electric Co. v. Butler, 33 South. 33, 35, 135 Ala. 388.

Where, in an action against a county to set aside a conveyance, a decree was taken by default, the court, under L. O. L. § 103, may, in its discretion, within one year after notice thereof, relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and has jurisdiction to entertain a motion to set aside such decree when filed within one year after knowledge of the decree was acquired by the agents or officers of the county, though not until more than one year after the decree was entered; "notice," as used in such statute, being a synonym of "knowledge." Chapman v. Multnomah County, 126 Pac. 996, 998, 63 Or. 180.

"Notice," in connection with the rule that purchasers of corporate stock in good faith without "notice" that it is unpaid are not liable for the balance due on it, must be given the ordinary signification of that term, and means knowledge that the stock was unpaid, or knowledge of such facts as would have put an ordinarily prudent man on inquiry, when the inquiry might reasonably be expected to lead him to knowledge that the stock was unpaid. Gillett v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 82 N. E. 891, 905, 230 Ill. 373.

A distinction is to be observed between knowledge of the pendency of a suit and "notice" thereof. Jurisdiction can be acquired, if one does not submit himself to it, in no other way than by actual notice or by constructive notice. Actual notice is given only by personal service of process; constructive notice by some form of substituted service. Where there is no service there is no notice, irrespective of any knowledge which the defendant may acquire informally. Notice is given only by a service of process. Informal knowledge will not supply it, and cannot be relied upon to put the one acquiring the knowledge on notice or to force him into court to defend himself. National Metal Co. v. Greene Consol. Copper Co., 89 Pac. 535, 537, 11 Ariz. 108, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062.

The word "notice," as used in L. O. L. § 103, permitting a court in its discretion, at any time within a year after notice thereof, to relieve a party from a judgment taken against him by mistake, etc., means "knowledge" by the moving party of the entry of a judgment. Evans v. Evans, 118 Pac. 177, 179, 60 Or. 195.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 6702, providing that constructive notice is notice imputed by law to a person not having actual notice, and section 6703 providing that every person who has actual notice of sufficient circumstances to put a prudent man upon inquiry, and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence is deemed to have constructive notice of the fact itself, since the enactment of the negotiable instruments law, have no application to actions upon negotiable instruments in the hands of indorsees before maturity, if they ever had such application, being superseded by section 6358, defining notice in such case as actual knowledge of fact, firmity or defects or knowledge of such facts as to amount to bad faith. American National Bank v. Lundy, 129 N. W. 99, 101, 21 N. D. 167.

As order

The word "notice," as used in Laws 1905, c. 380, p. 583, providing that, if the party desires more than the 10 days given by statute within which to make and serve his cause, made, the court or judge before whom the case was tried may on motion order an extension of that time, which notice of extension shall be filed with the clerk of the court, may well be held that the word "notice" should be read "order." Howard v. Carter, 80 Pac. 61, 62, 71 Kan. 85 (citing Clark v. Board of Com'rs of Mitchell County, 77 Pac. 284, 69 Kan. 542, 66 L. R. A. 965).

Reasonable notice

There is no difference in the meaning of "notice" and "reasonable notice," and when in an action against the town for damages resulting from a defect in a highway, counsel for defendant admitted "notice," the admission will have the same effect as though he had admitted "reasonable notice." Larrah v. Inhabitants of Searsport, 42 Me. 202, 204.

To officer, agent, or attorney

"Notice" communicated to, or knowledge acquired by, the officers or agents of corporations, when acting in their official capacity within the scope of their agency, becomes notice to or knowledge of the corporation for all judicial purposes." Maryland Trust Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 63 Atl. 70, 102 Md. 608 (citing 13 Cyc. pp. 399, 400).

"Notice" to a township trustee of the insolvency of his brother, a defaulting township treasurer, was notice to the township within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 6030 Stat. 562, relating to preferences. Painter v. Napoleon Tp., 190 Fed. 637, 639.

In an action by the receiver of a depositor to recover a deposit which the bank had paid out on forged checks, the court refused to admit in evidence the deposition of a deceased officer of the depositor to the effect that he had several interviews with one of the counsel for the bank, who was also a director and a member of its executive committee, within one year after the return the depositor of the forged checks, in which he told such counsel that the checks were forged. Held reversible error, since the deposition tended to show that the counsel was acting for the bank, that he had knowledge of facts which it was his duty to communicate to the bank, and which it must be presumed he did communicate, and hence that the bank had notice within the meaning of Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 38) § 326, requiring notice to a bank within one year after the return to the depositor of any forged voucher, in order to hold the bank liable. Shattuck v. Guardian Trust Co. of New York, 97 N. E. 517, 518, 204 N. Y. 200.

Where an attorney was charged with the duty of having a deed to his client executed and acknowledged, "notice" to him, while engaged in the transaction, that there was in fact a mortgage on the premises, though it did not appear of record, owing to a mistake in the description, was "notice" to the client. Allison v. Falconer, 87 S. W. 639, 75 Ark. 343.

Verbal or written

Rev. St. Ohio, § 3185, provides that, within 30 days after a principal contractor files an affidavit for a lien, he shall notify the owner, his agent or attorney, that he claims a lien, and, if he fails, the lien shall be null and void. Held, that "notice" as so used meant information by whatever means communicated, knowledge given or received; and, written notice not being expressly required, oral notice was sufficient. In re Farmers' Supply Co., 170 Fed. 502, 505.

NOTICE AFFECTING COUNTY AFFAIRS

The list of allowances made by the judges of the several courts, required by Acts 1899, p. 415, c. 188, to be published in one newspaper at a cost not exceeding a fixed sum for each allowance, are required to be published in two newspapers in Acts 1903, p. 360, § 1, providing that, where the law requires the publication of "notices affecting county affairs," the same shall be published in two newspapers. Cheney v. State ex rel. Risk, 74 N. E. 892, 893, 165 Ind. 121.

NOTICE OF APPEAL

As process, see Process.

As writ, see Writ.

If to appeal is not to institute a new proceeding, a "notice of appeal" cannot be an original process by which parties are brought into court, but is a notice merely by which the parties who are already in court are notified of subsequent and further proceedings in the cause therein pending, and hence, where such notice was served on defendant's attorney and purported to be a notice of appeal as against all of the defendants originally sued, it was not objectionable by reason of the fact that all of the defendants except one were referred to by the abbreviation "et al." instead of setting out their names in full. Philadelphia Mortgage & Trust Co. v. Palmer, 73 Pac. 501, 502, 32 Wash. 455.

The words "notice of the appeal," as used in Rev. Codes N. D. § 7221, refers to notice or knowledge of a perfected appeal as furnished by service of a copy of the undertaking and not merely to the notice in writing provided for by section 7205. Beddow v. Flage, 126 N. W. 97, 98, 20 N. D. 66.

NOTICE OF APPROPRIATION

A notice of appropriation of water within a United States forest reservation, which states all the matters required by Civ. Code, § 1415, relating to the notice of appropriation of water, and which states the points of diversion as located on a designated section and township which the court judicially knows is within a reservation, is sufficient within section 1422, providing that where the place of intended diversion is within a reservation, and is so shown in the notice of appropriation, the claimant shall have a specified time after the grant of authority to occupy and use the reservation for such intended purpose within which to commence the construction of the works, etc. The form of notice of appropriation of water of a stream is fixed by Civ. Code, § 1415, requiring a person desiring to appropriate water to post a notice stating enumerated facts, and section 1422, relating to diversion of water within any reservation, does not affect the form of notice. Wishon v. Globe Light & Power Co., 110 Pac. 290, 292, 158 Cal. 137.

NOTICE OF DISHONOR

Oral notice of dishonor of a check, given to a clerk of an indorsing commercial corporation, is not notice to the corporation, within Negotiable Instrument Law (Acts 1899, c. 94) § 97, authorizing the giving of "notice" to a party or to his agent. American Nat. Bank v. National Fertilizer Co., 143 S. W. 597, 599, 125 Tenn. 328.

If the holder of negotiable paper desires to charge antecedent parties with its payment, it is incumbent on him to give them "notice of dishonor." The notice may be either written or verbal, or it may be written and supplemented by verbal testimony. All that is necessary, says Byles, is to apprise the party liable of the dishonor of the bill in question and to intimate that he is expected to pay it. It is sufficient if, under all the circumstances, the language of the notice imports that the indorser is looked to for payment, and it would seem not unfair to imply such intention from the very fact of sending "notice of dishonor." The weight of authority is that a notice of dishonor is sufficient to charge an indorser, if it comes from the holder or his agent and notifies the indorser that the note was presented and payment was refused. Notice of nonpayment, however, is not sufficient; nor is mere knowledge of protest all that is required to charge the indorser. "Notice does not mean mere knowledge, but an actual notification. For a man who can be clearly shown to have known beforehand that the bill would be dishonored is, nevertheless, entitled to notice." "Notice means something more than knowledge, because it is competent to the holder to give credit to the maker. It is not enough to say that the maker does not intend to pay, but that the holder does not intend to give credit to such maker." Marshall v. Sonnemman, 64 Atl. 874, 875, 218 Pa. 65 (citing Byles, Bill, *276; 7 Cyc. p. 1109).

NOTICE OF INFIRMITY

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 350, c. 149) § 56, providing that, in order to constitute "notice of an infirmity" in an instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating the same, the person to whom it is negotiated must have actual knowledge of the infirmity, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith, one who has knowledge of a defect in his transferor's title, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith, is not a holder in due course. Keene v. Behan, 82 Pac. 884, 886, 40 Wash. 505.

Under a statute providing that, to constitute "notice of infirmity" in a negotiable instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith, evidence that the transfer of a check for $400 by S., the payee thereof, to plaintiff, his brother-in-law, took place near the bank on which the check was drawn, and of which plaintiff was vice president, that no inquiry was made at the bank before purchase, and that plaintiff, went to a hotel, got a blank check, and filled it out to the order of S. for $400, and gave it to another party for delivery to S., did not show actual knowledge on plaintiff's part of an infirmity in the check. Matlock v. Scheuerman, 93 Pac. 823, 824, 826, 51 Or. 49, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747 (citing and adopting Belmont Branch of State Bank of Ohio v. Hoge, 35 N. Y. 65-68; Bowman v. Metzger, 39 Pac. 3, 44 Pac. 1090, 27 Or. 23).

NOTICE OF NEGLIGENCE

There is a clear distinction between a "notice of negligence" and a claim for damages. A mere notice to a telegraph company that its employes have been negligent in the transmission of a message, together with the circumstances of the negligence, is not a presentment of a claim for damages, based on such negligence, within the contract for the transmission of the message providing that the company shall not be liable for damages where the claim is not presented within a specified time, etc. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Moxley, 98 S. W. 112, 113, Ark. 554.

NOTICE OF TRANSFER

Before notice of transfer, see Before.

NOTICE TO THE WORLD

The "notice to the world," required Civ. Code 1895, § 2684, which declares that the dissolution of a partnership by the retiring of an ostensible partner must be made known to creditors and to the world, may be given by publication in a public gazette circulated in the locality in which the business of the partnership has been conducted, if such publication is fair and reasonable as to terms and the number of times it is made. Such publication is not, however, necessary as any means of fairly publishing the fact of dissolution as widely as possible in order to put the public on its guard, as by advertisement, public notice in the manner usual in the community, the withdrawal of the partner, or other indications of partnership, etc., may be proper to be considered on the question of notice. Bush & Hattaway v. W. A. McCauley, 56 S. E. 430, 431, 127 Ga. 308, 9 A. Cas. 240 (quoting and adopting definitions in Askew v. Silman, 22 S. E. 573, 95 Ga. 61; Lovejoy v. Spafford, 93 U. S. 430, 23 L. 851).

NOTIFY

See Duly Notified.

To "notify" one of a fact is to "make him known to him," to "inform him by notice." Huntington v. City of Calais, 73 Atl. 829, 830, 105 Me. 144.

Under Rev. St. Ohio, § 3185, providing that a person filing an affidavit or a mechanic's lien shall within 30 days thereafter notify the owner of the property, his agent, or attorney that he claimed such lien, verbal notice is sufficient. The word "notify" as generally used does not imply the use of written notice, it meaning simply to convey information of knowledge, or notice in whatever way. In re Boner, 189 Fed. 93, 94.

NOTIFICATION

In Pub. St. c. 172, § 29, relating to sales of land on execution, requiring "notification thereof to be posted up in some public place in the city or town where the land lies, and also in two adjoining cities or towns, if there are so many in the county," the plural "notifications" would be construed, apart from history, with reference to the several cities or towns in which the notifications are required, notwithstanding the words "and so," and not as requiring two or more notifications in the city or town where the land lies. In fact, however, the plural is a survival from St. 1798, c. 77, § 4, which required the posting up of notifications in two or more public places in the town where the land lies. Rev. St. c. 73, § 39, substituted "some public place" for "two or more public places," and thereby made one notification sufficient. Holmes v. Jordan, 39 N. E. 1005, 1006, 163 Mass. 147.

NOTIFIED

The word "notified," as used in a certificate and protest by a notary public that he duly notified the indorser of the note of non-payment, there being no qualification of the word as to the mode of notice, must be regarded as meaning verbal notice. Ticonic Bank v. Stackpole, 41 Me. 321, 324, 66 Am. Dec. 246.

Where one desiring to ship goods informed the agent of the carrier that he would want two cars in which to transport the goods, an allegation in a complaint, founded on a failure to furnish the cars, that the agent "notified" the shipper that he "would endeavor" to secure the cars was insufficient to show an acceptance of the proposal according to the terms in which it was made, or an unconditional promise to comply with it. It was no more than a promise that the agent "would endeavor" to comply with the order which it was his duty to do without a contract. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Anderson, 79 N. E. 381, 383, 39 Ind. App. 112.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3626a, providing that, in an action to foreclose a lien for a municipal improvement, it must be shown that 10 days before suit the owner, if found or known, was "notified" of the assessment, including the amount thereof, with interest, and where payable, means a notice either verbal or written, and it may be given by any one interested in the claim, or by any municipal officer charged with a duty in connection with the making or collection of the assessment. Ross v. Van Natta, 74 N. E. 10, 11, 164 Ind. 557.

The word "notified," in the warrant of a county clerk to the treasurer directing the collection of taxes, reciting, "You are hereby notified to collect the taxes" enumerated in the lists attached, is sufficiently defined to warrant the treasurer to proceed to collect the taxes, pursuant to the statute providing that the county clerk shall attach to the lists his warrant in general terms requiring the treasurer to collect the taxes, and no informality shall render any proceedings for the collection of taxes illegal. Cadman v. Smith, 85 Pac. 346, 348, 15 Okl. 633.

NOTORIETY

"Notoriety" is the state or character of being well known, usually, and, always when applied to crime, in an unfavorable sense. It is often found with words of similar import, such as 'open' and 'flagrant.'" People

v. Salmon, 83 Pac. 42, 43, 148 Cal. 303, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268.

NOTORIETY OF POSSESSION

See Openness, Notoriety, and Exclusiveness of Possession

NOTORIOUS

See Open, Notorious, and Continuous Change of Possession.

The word "notorious" is used in the statute relating to the recognition of a child, with the design of emphasizing the thought that the understanding of the father's recognition should be as extensive as the immediate community of his residence and within the common knowledge of the public. Morgan v. Strand, 110 N. W. 596, 597, 133 Iowa, 299.

NOTORIOUS ADULTERY

See Open and Notorious Adultery.

NOTORIOUS POSSESSION

See Open and Notorious Possession.

"Notorious" possession as an element of title by limitation is possession which is generally known and talked of, and universally recognized, conspicuous, widely, or commonly known. Long v. Lackawanna Coal & Iron Co., 136 S. W. 673, 680, 681, 233 Mo. 713.

Within the rule that to constitute adverse possession it is necessary that the possession be "actual," "continuous," "notorious," and "hostile," "actual" means real, visible; "continuous" means without interruption; "notorious" means open, undisguised, generally known; and "hostile" means opposed and antagonistic to the claims of all others. Bradbury Marble Co. v. Laclede Gas Light Co., 106 S. W. 594, 599, 128 Mo. App. 96.

The elements of title by limitation are uninterrupted possession, actual, visible, notorious, adverse, and hostile under color and claim of right for the statutory period; the words "adverse and hostile" meaning practically the same thing. Long v. Lackawanna Coal & Iron Co., 136 S. W. 673, 680, 681, 233 Mo. 713.

NOTORIOUS PUBLIC INDECENCY

What is decent and indecent is determined by the sensibilities and moral standards of the people as evolved from generation to generation along with their civilization. Whether an act is decent or indecent depends on the time, place, and the circumstances, including the intention of the actor. When by general consensus of public opinion an act tending to debauch the morals is understood to be offensive to the common instincts of decency if done under particular circumstances, the act, when so done, is in contemplation of law a "notorious act of indecency." A public and intentional or wanton intruding upon the attention of the opposite sex of the sexual act or other things directly suggestive of it is an act of public indecency, within Pen. Code 1895, § 390, making notorious acts of public indecency a misdemeanor; the barrier erected by social decorum between the sexes being a fundamental of decency. For a man intentionally and wantonly to cause a bull and cow to copulate upon a public highway, knowing that a woman and children are so situated that they can hardly fail to see the act, and that they are likely to be offended by it, constitutes criminal notorious public indecency, within Pen. Code 1895, § 390. Redd v. State, 67 S. E. 709, 711, 7 Ga. App. 575.

NOVATION

A "novation" is the substitution of one obligation for another. Tilden v. Gordon & Co., 74 Pac. 1016, 1017, 34 Wash. 92.

A "novation" presupposes a previous obligation for which the new one is substituted. Linder Hardware Co. v. Pacific Sugar Corp., 118 Pac. 785, 17 Cal. App. 81.

The doctrine of "novation" is derived from the civil law, and a novation can neither be founded on an original claim, which was illegal, nor, under the civil law, be made by one incapable of contracting. Wadsworth v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 115 N. Y. Supp. 8, 18 (citing Green's Brice's Ultra Vires, p. 601).

A "novation" is in the nature of a release or discharge and is new matter which must be specially pleaded. There can be no "novation" and substitution in law unless the original creditor and the new debtor all enter into such an agreement. Temple v. Teller Lumber Co., 106 Pac. 8, 9, 46 Colo. 497.

A "novation" is the making of a new contract, its elements being essentially the same as in the first contract, which are, parties, a meeting of the minds, and a consideration. Davies County Bank & Trust Co. v. Wright, 110 S. W. 361, 363, 129 Ky. 21, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1122.

The necessary legal elements to establish "novation" are: Parties capable of contracting, a valid prior obligation to be displaced, the consent of all parties to the substitution, based on sufficient consideration, and the extinction of the old obligation and the creation of a new one. Harrington-Wiard Co. v. Blomstrom Mfg. Co., 131 N. W. 559, 563, 166 Mich. 276.

The essential elements of a "novation" are parties capable of contracting, a valid prior obligation to be displaced, the consent of all of the parties to the substitution, and the extinction of the old obligation and the creation of a new one. Gillett v. Ivory (Mich.) 139 N. W. 53, 56.

"Novation" is defined to be the substitution by mutual agreement of one debtor or of one creditor for another, whereby the old debt is extinguished, or the substitution of a new debt or obligation for an existing one, which is thereby extinguished. In re Ransford, 194 Fed. 658, 662, 115 C. C. A. 560.

"Novation" consists of a bilateral agreement for the substitution of one obligation for another, and may take place either by the substitution of a new for an old party, or by the substitution of a new agreement between the parties, or by a change of parties and agreement at the same time. Parsons Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton Ice Mfg. Co., 73 Atl. 254, 255, 78 N. J. Law, 309.

To constitute a "novation" by substitution of creditors or debtors, there must be a mutual agreement between three or more persons, whereby a debtor, in consideration of being discharged from his liability to the original creditor, contracts a new obligation in favor of the new creditor, and the new creditor must have consented to the discharge of his original debtor, and have accepted the new debtor. McAllister v. McDonald, 106 Pac. 882, 886, 40 Mont. 375.

The doctrine of "novation" cannot apply to an action for use and occupation of land to which plaintiff had no legal title, where neither defendant nor the lessee of the land was indebted to plaintiff, she being a stranger to the transaction, since novation implies a substitution of a debtor of a creditor and of a new contract. Pennington v. Gartley, 83 Atl. 701, 703, 109 Me. 270.

That defendant verbally agreed with the payee to pay others' notes, and the payee accepted the promise, and thereafter looked to defendant for payment, and the payee's cashier told a surety on the notes that defendant had agreed to pay them, and that the surety was released, is insufficient to show a "novation" binding defendant, for want of consideration, where it does not appear that defendant was indebted to the makers, or that they paid, or agreed to pay, him anything for assuming the debt, or that the payee formally released the makers or sureties or surrendered any security held under the old notes. Bank of St. James v. Walker, 111 S. W. 829, 830, 132 Mo. App. 117.

A broker, acting for several customers, whose orders for goods it had taken and agreed to fill, contracted with a seller for the purchase of the goods in lump. The seller knew that the merchandise was for different customers, and for convenience agreed to ship car load lots to customers and draw direct on them therefor. It shipped goods to a customer and drew against him therefor. The customer sued the seller for failure to deliver goods of a merchantable quality. Held, that he could not maintain the action on the theory that the seller severed the contract, and as to the customer released the broker and looked to him instead. H. Midwood's Sons Co. v. Alaska-Portland Packers' Ass'n, 67 Atl. 61, 62, 28 R. I. 303, 13 Ann. Cas. 954.

A "novation" is the substitution of a new obligation for an old one. The requisites of a novation are a valid prior obligation to be displaced, consent of all parties to the substitution, a sufficient consideration, the extinction of the old obligation, and the creation of a valid new one. The substitution may be in the debt or contract, in the debtor, or in the creditor. Where one, to whom wage claims of employees of bankrupts are assigned, exchanges them with the bankrupts for their note and duebill, there is a "novation" of the wage claims, extinguishing the preference given by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b4, 30 Stat. 563, to claims for wages. In re Fuller & Bennett, 152 Fed. 538, 541.

A real estate agent procured the sale of certain premises to defendant, and defendant, in consideration of the agent's release of his claim against the vendors for commissions, paid him $1,000, and agreed to pay him $8,600 more on sale of the premises. Later the agent placed his claim in the hands of an attorney for settlement, and negotiations were carried on between the attorney and the defendant. Defendant offered to pay $2,500 and $250 counsel fees, for the surrender of the contract, and the delivery of a general release by the agent. The offer was reported to the agent, who said he would accept it; and a day was fixed as the time, and the attorney's office as the place, for closing the transaction, but the transaction was never completed by the payment of the money or surrender of the contract and delivery of the release. At the time of the offer by defendant for surrender of the contract, negotiations had been completed for purchase of the premises by a third person, but the agent had no knowledge thereof. Held, that the transaction did not amount to a "novation" by the substitution of a new contract between the parties. Bandman v. Finn, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 1098, 103 App. Div. 322.

"Novation" is effected by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with the intention to extinguish the old one, or by the substitution of a new debtor with the intention to release the old one, or by the substitution of a new creditor with the intent to transfer the rights of the old one to him. There must be a mutual agreement among the parties for the substitution of the new debt in place of the old. There must be an extinguishment of the old debt and an agreement to look to the new debtor alone, and the mere taking of a new debtor will not, standing alone, amount to a "novation." The taking by a creditor of a note from one who has assumed the debt is not a "novation," releasing the old debtor; there being no agreement to this effect. M. Gimbell & Sons v. King, 95 S. W. 7, 8, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 188 (citing Beach, Mod. Con. § 786; Add. Cont. p. 530; Pimental v. Marques, 42 Pac. 159, 103 Cal. 406; Jackson Iron Co. v. Negaunee Concentrating Co., 65 Fed. 298, 12 C. C. A. 636; Stowell v. Gram, 69 N. E. 342, 184 Mass. 562; Western White Bronze Co. v. Portrey, 70 N. W. 383, 50 Neb. 801; Piehl v. Piehl, 101 N. W. 628, 138 Mich. 515).

Where by a written contract plaintiff sold land to defendant, with the agreement that plaintiff should receive one-third of profits above that amount when the property could be sold for as much as $19,000, and subsequently defendant asserted that she would not take less than $21,000 for her share, and that plaintiff might take any amount received above that sum, and plaintiff attempted to make a sale on such terms but failed to get $21,000, there was a rescission of the written agreement, and a substitution of the parol contract, constituting a novation, defined by Civ. Code, § 1530, as the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one. Simmons v. Sweeney, 109 Pac. 265, 267, 13 Cal. App. 283.

The owner of real estate contracted for its sale for a specified amount; a certain portion of the purchase price to be paid on the execution and delivery of the agreement, another on the delivery of the deed, the balance payable in three years, with interest at 5 per cent. for the first year and 6 per cent. for the balance of the term, to be secured by a purchase-money mortgage. The purchaser paid the agreed sum at the execution of the contract, and on the passing of the deed paid the vendor an amount much greater than the contract required to be paid at that time, and gave the mortgage for the balance. Held, that the receipt by the vendor at the delivery of the deed of an amount in excess of the amount agreed upon, and the acceptance of a mortgage for the balance, constituted a "novation," and that the vendor was not entitled to interest under the terms of the first contract on the excess of the amount received at the delivery of the deed over the amount agreed upon. Crimmins v. Carlyle Realty Co., 117 N. Y. Supp. 434, 435, 132 App. Div. 665.

Substitution of new debtor

"Novation" is the substitution of one debtor by mutual agreement for another, whereby the old debt is extinguished. Chenoweth v. National Bldg. Ass'n, 53 S. E. 559, 561, 59 W. Va. 653.

Where parties to an executory contract for work, acting with a third person, agree to substitute the third person, by consent of all, in place of the original contractor, there is a species of "novation." Security Nat. Bank v. St. Croix Power Co., 94 N. W. 74, 77, 117 Wis. 211.

The essence of "novation" is that all the three parties assent to or concur in the agreement whereby the new debtor is substituted for the old and the old debt extinguished. Elliott v. Qualls, 130 S. W. 474, 476, 149 Mo. App. 482.

Where a corporation, as creditor, accepts in payment of a debt the note of a third person, together with valuable security, a "novation" is effected, and it can thereafter look only to the substituted debtor for reimbursement. Security Warehousing Co. v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 103 N. Y. Supp. 399, 402, 118 App. Div. 350.

A "novation by the substitution of a new debtor" consists of a mutual agreement among three parties, the creditor, his immediate debtor, and the intended new debtor, whereby the liability of the last named is accepted in place of that of the original debtor in discharge of the original debt. Babbitt v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 130 S. W. 364, 367, 149 Mo. App. 439.

A "novation" occurs when a debtor makes an arrangement with his debtor, for a valuable consideration, whereby the second debtor assumes and is to pay the first debtor's debt, and if, before passing of the consideration, or completion of the transaction, either of the debtors explains the proposed transaction to the first debtor's creditor, and the creditor consents to the substitution and agrees to accept the new debtor and release the old one, the novation is complete. Bank of St. James v. Walker, 111 S. W. 829, 830, 132 Mo. App. 117.

Where a divorced husband and wife entered into an agreement that the wife would pay the husband's attorneys in consideration of his transferring certain property to her, and the husband's attorneys agreed to look to the wife for compensation, and the property was transferred, and the wife drew a check in favor of the attorneys, there was a complete "novation." Dougherty v. Van Ripper, 120 Pac. 333, 334, 16 N. M. 600.

Where, after the sale of goods to an individual, the business was incorporated, and the corporation requested the delivery of the goods under the contract to it, and made payment on account of such goods, a "novation" was effected, and the corporation was substituted for the original purchaser, as debtor of the seller. An express agreement is not requisite for a "novation" or substitution of parties to a contract, as it may be implied. J. H. Lane & Co. v. United Oilcloth Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 1061, 1062, 103 App. Div. 378.

Extinguishment of old debt

A "novation" requires the creation of new contractual relations, as well as the extinguishment of old. There must be the consent of all the parties to the substitution, resulting in the extinction of the old obligation and the creation of a valid new one. Held v. Caldwell-Easton Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 954, 955, 97 App. Div. 301.

To constitute a contract of "novation," the original indebtedness or obligation must be extinguished, and a mutual agreement made among the parties to the old and new obligations, whereby the new is substituted for the old. Inman v. F. N. Burt Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 210, 211, 212, 124 App. Div. 73 (citing Ryan v. Pistone, 35 N. Y. Supp. 81, 82 Hun, 78).

The essentials of a "novation" are a mutual agreement to which the creditor, the old debtor, and the new debtor assent, by which the old obligation is extinguished and a new and valid obligation is created and takes its place. Hemenway v. Beecher, 121 N. W. 150, 151, 139 Wis. 399.

"Novation" is the substitution of one obligation for another, and takes place either by the substitution of a new for an old party, or by the substitution of a new agreement between the old parties, or it may be by a change both of parties and of agreement at the same time." To support the claim of a "novation," the assent of the parties that the new obligation shall be accepted in extinguishment of an old one is an essential element, but the substitution may be accomplished by either an express or an implied agreement. Illinois Life Ins. Co. v. Benner, 97 Pac. 438, 439, 78 Kan. 511.

"Novation" takes place by agreement of all the parties concerned, and, where A. undertakes to pay B's debt, the obligation assumed may be collateral to B's obligation rather than substituted therefor, and, if intended as collateral, B's debt continues to exist, and this distinguishes such a case from one of novation in which B's debt would be extinguished. Hargadine-McKittick Dry Goods Co. v. Goodman, 45 South. 995, 997, 55 Fla. 361.

"Novation" is the substitution of a new obligation for an old one, which is thereby extinguished." Where a mortgagee, who had given a loan on security, falsely represented to be a first mortgage, and had brought an action for the deceit, discontinued on the oral promise of the mortgagor's father to pay the debt, but did not release the mortgage or the debt of the mortgagee but only the claim for the deceit, there was no such "novation" as to render the promise of the mortgagor's father binding under the statute of frauds. Bicknell v. Bicknell, 6 Atl. 976, 977, 27 R. I. 429 (citing Bouv. Lav. Dict.).

"Novation" is defined as the substitution of one obligation for another, and takes place either by substitution of a new for an old party or by the substitution of a new agreement between the old parties, or it may be by a change both of parties and agreement at the same time. One of the essential elements to a "novation" is that there should have been an extinguishment of the old debt, and another is that there should have been a mutual agreement between all of the parties that the old debt should become the obligation of a new debtor. Miles v. Bowers, 90 Pac. 905, 906, 49 Or. 429.

Where A. purchases a tract of land from B. and gives a purchase-money note therefor, payable to B. "or order," and B. transfers said note by indorsement, together with the reserved title to the land to C., C. becomes thereby a party both to the note and to the contract of purchase, and if said note becomes barred by the statute of limitations, and A. enters into a new agreement with C., whereby A. promises to pay to C. the balance due on said note by installments running through several years, the consideration remaining the same, and no new security being added, the fact that the holder of said note has been substituted as payee, and the time of payment definitely extended, does not constitute such a "novation" between said maker and holder as would extinguish the original debt and create a new one. American Mortgage Co. of Scotland v. Rawlings, 56 S. E. 110, 127 Ga. 82 (citing Wofford v. Gaines, 53 Ga. 485; Lott v. Dysart, 45 Ga. 358; McDonnell v. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co., 5 South. 120, 85 Ala. 401).

A bankrupt, having purchased certain land and executed a deed of trust thereon to secure a debt, conveyed the land to his father, who did not assume the debt, and later devised the land to his two children, consisting of the bankrupt and his sister. Held, that such transaction did not constitute a novation of the debt secured by the deed of trust, which can occur only when there is a substitution of a valid new obligation for an old one, necessitating the extinction of the old debt. In re Straub, 158 Fed. 375, 376.

Directors of a corporation, by vote reciting the inability of subscribers to stock to take and pay for all the shares subscribed for, agreed with such subscribers that in consideration of payment of certain sums in cash they would be released as to one-half of the amount subscribed for. The payments were made, the contract fully executed, the released subscribers thereafter treated as stockholders, the surrendered stock resold to other subscribers, and the whole transaction was in good faith, and was not repudiated by any stockholder. Held, that the agreement was in effect a "novation," which, under Civ. Code, § 1531, is made by the substitution of a new obligation, between the same parties, with intent to extinguish the old obligation; and the fact that payment of a part of the money required to be paid by the released subscribers was deferred did not have the effect of continuing them in their relation as stockholders, for the full amount of their subscription, until the final payment had been made. Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 117 Pac. 1041, 1045, 16 Cal. App. 403.

NOVEL

A complaint, in an action for libel, which alleges that defendant published and circulated a "book or novel" in which he referred to plaintiff in terms set out, does not negative by reason of the use of the word "novel" the allegation that the article complained of referred to plaintiff, though strictly speaking the characters in a novel are fictitious. Dalley v. Bobbs-Merrill Co., 136 N. Y. Supp. 570, 571.

NOVELTY

"Novelty," as used in its popular sense, means something altogether new and different from any other method and an improvement on any other method. Imperial Bottle Cap & Machine Co. v. Crown Cork & Seal Co., 139 Fed. 312, 321, 71 C. C. A. 442.

The novelty of an article, which will support the issuance of a patent thereon, must be a "novelty" in the means or mechanical device, and not in the use to which the combination is put. O'Rourke Engineering Const. Co. v. McMullen, 150 Fed. 338, 349 (quoting and adopting the definition in Woolensack v. Sargent, 14 Sup. Ct. 293, 151 U. S. 227, 38 L. Ed. 137).

"A 'patentable novelty' may be found in an improvement which simplifies a complicated train of mechanism by eliminating some of its elements, with the result that defects due to presence of those elements are done away with." Brown v. Huntington Piano Co., 134 Fed. 735, 739, 67 C. C. A. 639.

NOW

The word "now," as used in a will providing that executors should carry on the testator's business as "now conducted by me," must refer to the time of his death. Luers v. Luers, 124 N. W. 603, 604, 145 Iowa, 600 (citing Appeal of Allen, 17 Atl. 453, 125 Pa. 544).

A devise of all that part of land which "I now own" should be construed as if made at testator's death. Garrison v. Garrison, 29 N. J. Law, 153, 159.

A reference in a will to the "farm on which I 'now' live" refers to the existing state of things at the date of the will. Mueller v. Buenger, 83 S. W. 458, 465, 184 Mo. 458, 67 L. R. A. 648, 105 Am. St. Rep. 541 (quoting and adopting definition in Liggat v. Hart, 23 Mo. 127; Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 616).

The word "now," in the phrase "now being on the various tracts," implied present time, and the deed conveyed only the timber of the specified size at the time it was executed. Crawford v. Atlantic Coast Lumber Co., 60 S. E. 445, 447, 79 S. C. 166.

Under General Construction Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22), § 34, providing that the term "now," in a provision referring to laws in force or to facts as existing, relates to the laws in force or to the facts existing immediately before the taking effect of the provision, the word "now," in the constitutional provision referring to the jurisdiction of courts "now" exercised, relates to laws in force at the adoption of the Constitution, and to the jurisdiction existing immediately before the taking effect of the Constitution. Leach v. Auwell, 138 N. Y. Supp. 975, 979, 154 App. Div. 170.

The use of the word "now," in a statute, often precludes the statute from being deemed general, as, for example, certain things confined to cities where a board of assessment and revision "now" exists, or confined to honorably discharged soldiers "now" in office, or confined to cities in which there are "now" by law three members of common council. P. L. 1906, p. 192, providing that in all instances where excise commissioners are "now" by law appointed by the mayor or other governing body or any municipality shall be appointed by the court of common pleas in the county, is unconstitutional, because special. Bumsted v. Henry, 64 Atl. 475, 477, 74 N. J. Law, 162 (citing Richards v. Hammer, 42 N. J. Law, 435; Pierson v. O'Connor, 22 Atl. 1091, 54 N. J. Law, 36; Bennett v. Common Council of City of Trenton, 25 Atl. 113, 55 N. J. Law, 72).

A mortgage on a woolen mill, running gear, tools, implements, and working stock "now upon said premises" or in any way belonging to the said mills, and the business of the same," did not embrace after-acquired material. Cunningham v. Alryan Woolen Mills, 61 Atl. 372, 373, 69 N. J. Eq. 710.

Priv. Laws 1887, p. 219, c. 11, divides the city of Joliet into school districts, provides for the election of school inspectors, and gives the city council power to levy taxes for school purposes. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1714, c. 122, increases the power of the school inspectors, giving them authority to employ teachers, and to fix the amount of their compensation, and to build or purchase buildings, etc., but provides that all moneys necessary for school purposes shall be raised as "now provided by law," and that they shall be held by the treasurer subject to the order of the school inspectors on warrants to be countersigned by the mayor and city clerk. Held, that the latter statute did not give the board of school inspectors authority to levy taxes by repealing the former statute by implication. People ex rel. Board of School Inspectors of Joliet v. Mottinger, 74 N. E. 150, 152, 215 Ill. 256.

Under Code, § 3271, providing that "property to be subsequently acquired may be devised when the intention is clear and explicit," a will giving to certain persons, "all my real estate which is" (describing it) "and so including all other real estate now owned by me," devises real estate acquired by testator after execution of the will; "now" being referable to the time of testator's death. Luers v. Luers, 124 N. W. 603, 604, 145 Iowa 600, 139 Am. St. Rep. 453.

Rev. St. § 2168, providing for the naturalization of aliens honorably discharged from military service on proof of one year residence in the United States, requires that the court shall, in addition to such proof of residence and good moral character as "now" provided for by law, be satisfied by competent proof of the applicant having been honorably discharged from service of the United States. Held, that the word "now" is limited to the laws existing at the enactment of the statute, and did not include subsequent enactments. In re McNabb, 175 Fed. 511, 513.

An owner of stock contracted with certain parties to turn over to them all the stock in the corporation "now owned" by him. This stock, at the time, had been assigned to one of the proposed purchasers as security for a note given to him. Held, that the seller need not deliver the stock to the purchaser unincumbered. Fuehrman v. McCord, 95 N. Y. Supp. 489, 490, 107 App. Div. 12.

2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1, § 5, provides that every will devising in express terms, or by intent, all of testator's real estate, shall be construed to pass all he owned at his death. Testator's will read: "I give * * * to my husband all my real estate * * * of which I am now possessed." She subsequently sold a farm which she then owned and purchased property of which she died seised. Held, that the word "now" in the will did not extend its meaning, and under the statute the property subsequently acquired by the testator went to her husband under the will. Hodgkins v. Hodgkins, 10 N. Y. Supp. 173, 174, 123 App. Div. 110 (citing Lent v. Lent [N. Y.] 24 Hun, 436; Schuck v. Shook, 10 N. Y. Supp. 935; Heck v. Volz et al., 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 409, affirmed 24 N. E. 1104, 120 N. Y. 663).

Tillamook City Charter, art. 4, § 2, subsec. 2 (Sess. Laws 1893, pp. 551, 552), authorizes the city to collect road taxes from all property of the corporation equal to the "now" levied by law for road purposes, to be expended on highways, streets, and alleys within the corporation, under the supervision of the common council, and exempts citizens and property from the same tax for county road purposes. Held, that the word "now" meant "at the present time," and limited the city's right to levy taxes for street purposes to the amount the county was authorized to levy for road taxes when the charter took effect, and this amount was not changed or increased by subsequent statutes, raising the county rate, either by the same or subsequent Legislature. Tillamook City v. County Court of Tillamook County, 107 Pac. 482, 483, 56 Or. 112.

NOW ARE

A lease provided that the premises be surrendered at the end of the term of two years "in the same condition as they now are." It covenanted that the "premises are now in good repair." When the lease was executed the premises were in very bad condition, and it was agreed that the property should be put in good condition before the lessee would take possession. The necessary improvements cost a considerable sum, of which the lessee paid a small part. Held, in an action against the lessee for not surrendering the premises in the same condition they were at the time of the rental, that the parties intended the premises to be surrendered at the end of the term in the same condition as they were at the beginning thereof, the words "now are" not referring to the condition of the premises at the time of making the lease. Chesapeake Brewing Co. v. Goldberg, 60 Atl. 37, 39, 107 Md. 485, 15 Ann. Cas. 879.

NOW CONSTITUTED

See As Now Constituted.

NOW DUE

The phrase "debts now due," in the act of 1848, dividing the town of Windsor into Windsor and West Windsor, is synonymous with the word "liabilities," whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto. Hunter v. Windsor, 24 Vt. 327, 338.

NOW DUE AND PAYABLE

The allegation of a counterclaim, that plaintiff's indebtedness is "now due and payable," even treated as a statement of fact, does not show that the counterclaim existed at the time of the commencement of the action, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 438. Provident Mut. Building Loan Ass'n v. Davis, 76 Pac. 1034, 1035, 143 Cal. 253.

NOW FIXED BY LAW

The effect of the act adopting the Code of 1910 was to re-enact into one statute all of the provisions of that Code; and hence the phrase "now fixed by law," as used in section 2788 of that Code, comprehends all the law in the Code applicable to the provisions of that section. The Employer's Liability Act, found in section 2782 et seq., is applicable to a suit brought under authority of section 2788, by an employé against a federal receiver of a railroad operated partially within this state. Atkinson v. Swords, 74 S. E. 1063, 1065, 11 Ga. App. 167.

NOW OR HEREAFTER

The bond of a bank to a county treasurer, though given with express reference to a resolution of the county board authorizing the deposit in the bank by such treasurer of public funds in his hands, being, in terms, to secure repayment of all said deposits "now or hereafter placed in said bank or under its care or control by said treasurer," covers deposits in said bank of such funds by said treasurer before he was so authorized, the sureties knowing at the time of such deposits. Sawyer v. Stilson, 125 N. W. 822, 824, 146 Iowa, 707.

NOW PROVIDED BY LAW

See As Now Provided.

NOXIOUS

"Noxious" means hurtful, harmful, injurious, destructive. Johnson v. Northport Smelting & Refining Co., 97 Pac. 746, 747, 50 Wash. 567.

NOXIOUS ESTABLISHMENT

Any other noxious establishment, see Any Other.

NOXIOUS PORTION OR SUBSTANCE

"Noxious" means "hurtful, harmful, baneful, pernicious, destructive." "Potion" means "draught used as a liquid, medicine, or dose." (Webster, Dict.). "Poison" has been defined as "any substance which, when applied to the body externally, or in any way introduced into the system, without acting mechanically, but by its own inherent qualities, is capable of destroying life" (Beck, Med. Jur.), and "as a substance having an inherent deleterious property, which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life" (Wharton & Stillé). The term "noxious potion or substance" is a broader term than "poison." "Poison" would not include powdered glass or boiling water, while "noxious potion or substance" would not only embrace poisons, but the latter. As used in a statute inflicting a punishment on any one mingling "any other noxious potion or substance with any drug, food, or medicine, with intent to kill or injure any person," the word "potion" applies to some hurtful or baneful liquid; and the words "noxious substance" means some solid of hurtful or baneful character. The phrase "noxious potion or substance" means some character of poison. Runnels v. State, 77 S. W. 458, 460, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 446.

"Anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another, or his property, may constitute a nuisance." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Anderson, 81 S. W. 781, 787, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 121 (quoting Burditt v. Swenson, 17 Tex. 489, 501, 67 Am. Dec. 685).

A "nuisance" is an annoyance, and, according to Blackstone, it signifies anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. Hamm v. Briant, 124 S. W. 112, 113, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 614.

A "nuisance" is anything which interferes with the rights of a citizen, either in person, property, the enjoyment of his property, or his comfort. Thornton v. Dow, 111 Pac. 899, 903, 60 Wash. 622, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968.

A "nuisance" is anything which incumodes, annoys, or produces inconvenience or damage. City of New Orleans v. Lenfant, 52 South. 575, 577, 126 La. 455, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642.

"At common law a 'nuisance' was anything that worked hurt or inconvenience or damage." City of Chicago v. Gunning System, 73 N. E. 1035, 1038, 214 Ill. 628, 70 L. R. A. 230, 2 Ann. Cas. 892 (quoting and adopting definition in Harmon v. City of Chicago, 110 Ill. 400, 413, 51 Am. Rep. 698); Jones v. F. S. Royster Guano Co., 65 S. E. 361, 366, 6 Ga. App. 506.

A "nuisance" is defined as an unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use of one's own property to the annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or damage of another. Pritchard v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 225, 226, 92 App. Div. 178.

A "nuisance" is anything which works hurt, inconvenience, or damage; anything which essentially interferes with the enjoyment of life or property. State ex rel. Lyon v. Columbia Water Power Co., 63 S. E. 884, 889, 82 S. C. 181, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 435, 129 Am. St. Rep. 876, 17 Ann. Cas. 343 (citing 29 Cyc. p. 1152; Addison, Torts, 370).

The word "nuisance" designates a class of wrongs arising from an unreasonable or unlawful use of property, so as to produce such material discomfort or injury to another that the law presumes damage; every use of property, so as to materially violate the rights of another being, as a rule, an actionable nuisance. McNulty v. Ludwig & Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 84, 87, 153 App. Div. 206.

"The term 'nuisance' has a well-defined legal meaning. A thing cannot be declared a nuisance which is in fact not a nuisance." Boyd v. Board of Councilmen, 77 S. W. 669, 673, 117 Ky. 199, 111 Am. St. Rep. 240.

A "nuisance" consists in unlawfully doing an act, or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission either annoys, injures, or endangers the comfort, repose, health, or safety of others. Town of Colton v. South Dakota Cent. Land Co., 126 N. W. 507, 508, 25 S. D. 309, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 122.

"A 'nuisance' is anything that works hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another, and the fact that the act done may otherwise be lawful does not keep it from being a nuisance. The inconvenience complained of must not be fanciful or such as would affect only one fastidious taste, but it must be such as would affect an ordinary, reasonable man." Gabbett v. City of Atlanta, 73 S. E. 372, 373, 137 Ga. 180 (quoting and applying Civ. Code § 4457).

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 290, defines "nuisance" as whatever is injurious to health or is indecent or offensive to the senses or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as essentially interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property. Russell State, 69 N. E. 482, 483, 32 Ind. App. 243.

"Nuisance" is anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the land or hereditaments of another. The theory is the doing of something intrinsically lawful in a manner damaging to others; it being the resulting damage that creates the wrong. Henry v. Cherry Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 108, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006.

When the cause of annoyance and discomfort arising from a nuisance is continuous, equity will restrain it. Boyd v. Schreiner (Tex.) 116 S. W. 100, 104.

The question of nuisance vel non cannot be determined by reference to the rules of the common law, but each case must be considered on its own facts. A thing may or may not be a nuisance according to the manner in which it is used, the situation in which it is placed, or the time it has been carried on without complaint, when measured by the mind and taste of the average citizen. Dennis v. Evergreen Camp No. 147, Woodmead of the World, 112 Pac. 255, 61 Wash. 230, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1206.

To constitute a nuisance, there must be more than a tendency to injure, and there must be something appreciable, tangible, actual, or subsisting, and, in determining whether an injury charged comes within these general terms, regard must be had to the notions of comfort and convenience entertained by persons generally of ordinary tastes and susceptibilities, and the nuisance and discomfort must affect the ordinary comfort of existence as understood by the people. Everett v. Paschall, 111 Pac. 879, 881, 6 Wash. 47, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 827, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1128.

A "nuisance" is confined to such matter of annoyance as the law recognizes, and for which it gives a remedy by way of redress or abatement, or in a proper case, by restraining process. Berger v. Smith, 75 S. E. 1098, 1100, 60 N. C. 205.

"What is a nuisance is a relative question oftener than it is an abstract fact. Blackstone was wise in not attempting an explicit and invariable definition, and in confining himself to general terms. He said a nuisance is 'anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage.'" City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 879, 179 Mo. 8, 13 L. R. A. 778.

The test of nuisance is not injury and damage simply, but injury and damage resulting from the violation of the legal right of another. There is no nuisance, however much of injury and damage may ensue; but, if a right is violated, there is an actionable nuisance, even though no actual damage results therefrom. Powell v. Brookfield Pressed Brick & Tile Mfg. Co., 78 S. W. 646, 647, 104 Mo. App. 713 (quoting Wood, Nuis. 1015).

The word "nuisance" means that which annoys or gives trouble; annoys or disturbs one in the possession of his property, making its ordinary use or occupation physically uncomfortable to him. Iverson v. Dilno, 119 Pac. 719, 721, 44 Mont. 270.

Under Snyder's Comp. Laws, § 4751, and by the common law, anything which annoys or endangers the comfort, repose, or safety of others is a nuisance. Ex parte Jones, 109 Pac. 570, 573, 4 Okl. Cr. 74, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 448, 140 Am. St. Rep. 655.

A thing is not a "nuisance" merely because a municipal ordinance declares it to be such, but the state may declare what shall be deemed a "nuisance." Inhabitants of Houlton v. Titcomb, 66 Atl. 733, 738, 102 Me. 272, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580, 120 Am. St. Rep. 492.

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 3861, a nuisance is not as at common law essentially an injury to real property, but any unlawful use of property whereby another is injured, whether in property, business, person, or otherwise, is an actionable nuisance. Towaliga Falls Power Co. v. Sims, 65 S. E. 844, 846, 6 Ga. App. 49.

Irrespective of its public or private nature, a "nuisance" is "literally an annoyance, and signifies in law such a use of property or such a course of conduct as, irrespective of actual trespass against others or of malicious or actual criminal intent, transgresses the just restrictions upon use or conduct which the proximity of other persons or property in civilized communities imposes upon what would otherwise be rightful freedom." Johnson v. City of New York, 96 N. Y. Supp. 754, 756, 109 App. Div. 821; Acme Fertilizer Co. v. State, 72 N. E. 1037, 34 Ind. App. 346, 107 Am. St. Rep. 190.

Code Civ. Proc. § 731, defines a "nuisance" as anything which is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, and mere depreciation in value of surrounding property has no tendency to prove the cause of the depreciation a nuisance. Meek v. De Latour, 83 Pac. 300, 302, 2 Cal. App. 261.

"A 'nuisance' is literally an annoyance, and signifies in law such a use of property or such a course of conduct as * * * transgresses the just restrictions upon use or conduct which the proximity of other persons or property in civilized communities imposes upon what would otherwise be rightful freedom." The right to have a nuisance on another's property restrained or abated is not based upon an assertion of title to such property, or of any proprietary interest therein, or right or claim to the property itself, but is, on the contrary, based solely upon the breach of a personal duty which the owner of the property owes to his neighbor in its management and use; a breach of duty which may be punished by indictment, where the nuisance is of a public character, and which renders the offender personally liable in damages to the injured neighbor. And therefore the assertion by the neighbor of his right to have the nuisance restrained or abated, being based on the personal wrong and breach of duty on the part of the owner, and seeking merely to enforce the just restrictions which the law imposes upon him, in the use of his property, and prevent misuse, cannot be regarded in any just sense as the assertion on the part of the neighbor of a claim to property within the meaning of the judiciary act. Ladew v. Tennessee Copper Co., 179 Fed. 245, 252.

To determine a nuisance, the criterion is whether the condition is so serious as to interfere with the comfort of life and enjoyment of property, or so threatening as to constitute an impending danger to persons in the enjoyment of their legitimate rights. Kilts v. Board of Sup'rs of Kent County, 127 N. W. 821, 823, 162 Mich. 646.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 291, defining a nuisance as whatever is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, defines in general language a nuisance, and the court must determine whether facts charged bring a particular case within the statute. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Chicago, L. S. & S. B. Ry. Co., 92 N. E. 989, 990, 48 Ind. App. 584.

"'Nuisance,' in its largest sense, signifies anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. It is either public, annoying all the parties in the community, or it is private, injuriously affecting the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of an individual" (Blackstone). "A 'nuisance,' in the ordinary sense in which the word is used, is anything that produces an annoyance, anything that disturbs one or is offensive; but in legal phraseology it is applied to that class of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, real or personal, or from his own improper, indecent, or unlawful personal conduct, working an obstruction of or injury to a right of another or of the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt that the law will presume a consequent damage. Indeed, it may be stated as a general proposition that every enjoyment by one of his own property, which violates the right of another in an essential degree, is a nuisance, and actionable as such at the suit of the party injured thereby. While it is true that every person has and may exercise exclusive dominion over his own property of every description, and has a right to enjoy it in all the ways and for all the purposes in which such property is usually enjoyed, yet this is subject to the qualification that his use and enjoyment of it must be reasonable, and such as will not prejudicially affect the rights of others." Baker v. McDaniel, 77 S. W. 531, 537, 178 Mo. 447 (quoting Wood, Nuis.).

An actional "nuisance" is anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights. To constitute a nuisance, it is not necessary that the annoyance should be of a character to endanger health. It is sufficient if it occasions what is offensive to the senses and which renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable. Even that which does but cause a well-founded apprehension of danger may be a nuisance. The unauthorized or unreasonable use of, or the neglect of properly and reasonably using, one's own property, to the detriment, hurt, annoyance, discomfort, injury, or damage of another in his property or legal rights, or of the public, is a nuisance. A use made by one of his own property, which works an irreparable injury to another's property, or which deprives his neighbor of the reasonable and comfortable enjoyment and use of his property, or which violates the unwritten but accepted law of decency, or which endangers or renders insecure the life and health of his neighbor, is a nuisance. It is difficult to define just what degree of injurious annoyance must be reached in order to warrant the court in determining what circumstances constitute a nuisance. A mere tendency to injury is not sufficient. There must be something actually appreciable which of itself arrests the attention, that rests not merely in theory, but strikes the common sense of the ordinary citizen. The determination, however, of the question rests in sound judgment, and depends upon common sense in each case. Sanders v. Miller, 113 S. W. 996, 998, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 372 (citing Black- Com.; Burditt v. Swenson, 17 Tex. 489, Am. Dec. 665; Joyce, Nuisances, §§ 11, 19).

Crime distinguished

"Crime" and "nuisance" are not convertible terms. Hefferson v. New York Taxicab Co., 130 N. Y. Supp. 710, 712, 146 App. Div. 311.

Negligence distinguished

A "nuisance" involves the element of positive wrongdoing, as distinguished from mere negligence; and the mere "permitting" of a dog to lie in a hallway of an apartment house does not amount to a private nuisance. McCluskey v. Wile, 129 N. Y. Supp. 455, 457, 144 App. Div. 470.

Injury to health

The "nuisance" contemplated by Health Act (2 Gen. St. 1896, p. 1637) § 28, permitting any local board of health to file a bill in the name of the state for an injunction to prohibit the continuance of a nuisance hazardous to public health, is a nuisance which is hazardous to public health, and hence the subject of indictment. Board of Health v. Pompton Lakes v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., 80 Atl. 998, 1000, 79 N. J. Eq. 3.

The allegations of the petition on a demurrer to which the defendants elected to stand, taken as true, showed that a large number of hogs were kept adjacent to the city in such a manner that odors from the place and from garbage hauled thereto were offensive to the people living in the neighborhood and to those who passed along the streets, and offensive to such an extent as to impair the health of citizens and diminish the value of their property. Held to constitute a nuisance, the continuance of which should be perpetually enjoined. Kansas City v. Sihler Hog Cholera Serum Co., 125 Pa. 70, 71, 87 Kan. 786 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4855-4866).

Physical injury to property

Anything which causes hurt or damage to the lands or tenements of another, or which interferes with the reasonable employment of the same, is a "nuisance." In an action against a railroad company, where the complaint alleges that plaintiff's land was injured by the negligent flow of acids from the tower house, and the testimony shows that defendant's employes constantly poured the contents of vessels containing acids on plaintiff's land, and that such acts had been done within six years before bringing suit, it is error to enter a nonsuit. Stokes v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 63 Atl. 1028, 1030, 214 Pa. 415.

The placing, by a mining company, of slack, copperas, and other deleterious substances in and near a water course on its land, which the ordinary rains washed over the lands of a lower proprietor, thus injuring and rendering them unfit for agriculture constitutes a nuisance; a nuisance being anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands of another. Nebo Consol. Coal & Coking Co. v. Lynch, 133 S. W. 763, 764, 141 Ky. 711.

The use of water by an upper riparian proprietor in such a way as to carry sand, gravel, and mining débris over the land of a lower proprietor, rendering it valueless, constitutes a "nuisance," both at common law and under Civ. Code, § 4550, defining a nuisance as anything injurious to health or interfering with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property or unlawfully obstructing the customary use of a river. Chessman v. Hale, 79 Pac. 254, 257, 81 Mont. 577, 68 L. R. A. 410, 8 Ann. Cas. 1038.

A "nuisance" is "anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another" (quoting and adopting definition by Blackstone). The discharge of acids and waste from an oil mill, and other offensive matter from outhouses used in connection therewith, into a ditch originally constructed for drainage of the land, and extending through the land of an adjoining owner, by which the latter suffers injury to his crops and from the offensive and unwholesome odors, constitutes a private nuisance. Exley v. Southern Cotton Oil Co., 151 Fed. 101, 103.

Every person is bound to make a reasonable use of his property, so as to occasion no unnecessary damage or annoyance to his neighbor. If he make an unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use of it, so as to produce material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt to his neighbor, he will be guilty of a "nuisance" to his neighbor. And the law will hold him responsible for the consequent damage. "What is a reasonable use of one's own property cannot be defined by any certain general rules, but must depend upon the circumstances of each case. A use of property in one locality and under some circumstances may be lawful and reasonable, which under other circumstances would be unlawful, unreasonable, and a nuisance. To constitute a 'nuisance,' the use must be such as to produce a tangible and appreciable injury to neighboring property, or such as to render its enjoyment specially uncomfortable or inconvenient." The operation of the works of a cement company, during the season for harvesting ice, in such manner as to throw on the ice cinders, ashes, coal dust, and other substances which might sink into the ice and render it unmerchantable, was a nuisance. American Ice Co. v. Catskill Cement Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 455, 459, 43 Misc. Rep. 221 (quoting and adopting definition in Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 577, 20 Am. Rep. 567).

Trespass distinguished

See Trespass.

Acts or business authorized by law

That cannot be a "nuisance," so as to give a common-law right of action, which the law authorized. Casey v. Wrought Iron Bridge Co., 89 S. W. 330, 334, 114 Mo. App. 47 (citing Payne v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. Ry. Co., 20 S. W. 322, 112 Mo. 6, 17 L. R. A. 628; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4861; Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 640, 25 L. Ed. 336; Whitfield v. Town of Carrollton, 50 Mo. App. 98).

"Nuisances" always arise from unlawful acts. That which is lawful can never be a nuisance. Therefore, where the Legislature, by a proper act, authorizes that to be done which would otherwise be a nuisance, the act is made lawful and is not a nuisance so far as the public is concerned, unless the power given by the Legislature is exceeded. "There are two classes of nuisances, public and private. * * * There is no difference between these two kinds of nuisances except as they affect the public or any certain individuals." A legislative charter to a boom corporation to do work which, without the charter, would be a nuisance absolves it from liability by indictment or otherwise, but does not exempt it from action by an individual injured by its existence as a private nuisance. Pickens v. Coal River Boom & Timber Co., 65 S. E. 865, 866, 66 W. Va. 10, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 854 (quoting and adopting 1 Wood, Nuisances, p. 2, note).

If legislative sanction is given to such acts that otherwise would be deemed a "nuisance" (as, for instance, by St. 1894, p. 446, c. 399, licensing the storage of petroleum or any of its products), they cease to be such when properly exercised within the terms of the license which authorizes and permits them. Commonwealth v. Packard, 69 N. E. 1067, 185 Mass. 64 (citing Commonwealth v. City of Boston, 97 Mass. 555; Badger v. City of Boston, 130 Mass. 170; Aldworth v. City of Lynn, 26 N. E. 229, 153 Mass. 53, 10 L. R. A. 210, 25 Am. St. Rep. 608; Bacon v. City of Boston, 28 N. E. 9, 154 Mass. 100; White v. Kenney, 31 N. E. 654, 157 Mass. 12, 13; Taft v. Commonwealth, 33 N. E. 1046, 158 Mass. 526-548).

An offensive trade or manufacture may require interference in equity on the ground that it is a nuisance for, though necessary and lawful, it should be exercised in a remote place. McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co., 118 N. W. 786, 788, 140 Iowa, 429, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466.

A business may become a nuisance, where it is not conducted with due regard to the rights of surrounding property owners, and renders the enjoyment of their property impossible. Nowak v. Baier, 77 Atl. 1062, 1063, 78 N. J. Eq. 112.

That crowds of people, with their teams, will congregate at or near a cotton gin when erected, does not render the gin a nuisance, where it is not claimed that the crowds will conduct themselves improperly. Robinson v. Dale (Tex.) 181 S. W. 308, 310.

The erection by a railroad company of switch tracks and a freight depot in a residence neighborhood directly across the street from complainant's residence and flat building, and the construction of an elevated driveway from the street to the tracks and depot, but in such a manner as not to cause the traffic to interfere with the use of complainant's property any more than any other constant use of the street would do, cannot be enjoined as a "nuisance"; there being no showing that the depot was not necessary, or that it could have been as conveniently built elsewhere. Walther v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co., 74 N. E. 461-463, 215 Ill. 456.

One may not create a "nuisance" and justify himself in a continuation thereof upon the ground that his establishment is a source of benefit and profit to the community, and, as applied to a water course, a nuisance is created when the use of stream by the first user is unreasonable in character, and such as to produce a condition actually destructive of physical comfort or health, or a tangible, visible injury to property. A riparian proprietor operating a creamery, who deposits refuse therefrom in a stream to such an extent as to produce a condition destructive of physical comfort or health, or to create a tangible, visible injury to property rights of the lower riparian proprietor, is guilty of an act constituting a nuisance. Bowman v. Humphrey, 100 N. W. 854, 855, 124 Iowa, 744 (citing Ferguson v. Firmenich Mfg. Co., 42 N. W. 448, 77 Iowa, 576, 14 Am. St. Rep. 319; Weston Paper Co. v. Pope, 57 N. E. 719, 155 Ind. 394, 56 L. R. A. 899; Gould, Waters, § 208; Wood, Nuis. § 640); Id., 109 N. W. 714, 715, 132 Iowa, 234, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111, 11 Ann. Cas. 131.

Residents of cities, towns, or villages must of necessity submit to consequences resulting from occupations and pursuits carried on in the immediate neighborhood which are lawful and necessary for trade and commerce; and matters which, though in themselves annoying, are in the nature of ordinary incidents of city or town life, cannot be abated as nuisances. Locality is to be considered in determining whether a certain use of property is a nuisance. Gose v. Coryell (Tex.) 126 S. W. 1164, 1168.

The mere imposition of more railway tracks, or the increased use of the tracks beyond what may originally have been thought probable, resulting from the location of defendant's depot on land acquired by it adjoining the avenue, did not constitute a "nuisance." Oklahoma City & T. R. Co. v. Dunham, 88 S. W. 849, 850, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 575.

The presumption that a telephone pole in a street, claimed by plaintiff to be a nuisance, was erected with the consent of the city council, arising from the absence of an averment to the contrary in the complaint to compel the removal of the pole, would render the complaint bad. Merchants' Tel. Co. v. Hirschman, 87 N. E. 238, 241, Ind. App. 283.

Advertising signs

A corporation operating public stage through principal streets of a city, permitting its vehicles to carry advertising signs bearing colors, constituting a disfigurement rather than ornament, but not injuring public comfort, health, or safety, cannot be restrained by injunction from exhibiting such signs on the ground that they constitute a nuisance. Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 759, 761, Misc. Rep. 401.

Blasting

Blasting, without reference to the particular locality in which it is carried on, is not so intrinsically dangerous as to be ipso facto a "nuisance," so that a blaster would be liable for the injury caused by it, whether or not he was guilty of any negligence in the manner in which the blasting was done. Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 82, 84, 152 Cal. 500, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 14 Ann. Cas. 1159.

Where defendant by blasting caused rocks to fall into a stream where plaintiffs were to erect a pier for defendant, the injury was not a nuisance, since the term "nuisance" involves the idea of continuity or recurrence of the acts causing the injury, while a "tort" constituting an invasion of personal or contract right, expends its force in one act, though the injurious consequences may be of long duration. McCalla v. Louisville & N. Co., 50 South. 971, 972, 163 Ala. 107.

Bowling alley

A person keeping bowling alleys under license granted under Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 168, is not liable for maintaining a "nuisance," where the alleys are built in the manner such alleys are usually built, with padding and cushions to deaden the noise caused by the rolling of the balls, and where the alleys, as run, make no more noise than would be expected under similar circumstances. Levin Goodwin, 77 N. E. 718, 191 Mass. 341, 11 Am. St. Rep. 616.

Dams

In an action to enjoin a public "nuisance" resulting from a dam, an instruction that before plaintiff could recover the jury must find that the dam caused sewage, etc., to accumulate above the dam so as to actually pollute the water and render the river "materially" unwholesome or offensive to those residing near by, or in some "material" respect added to such offensive condition, was not erroneous as tending to mislead the jury, and as imposing a greater degree of proof than required. Boyd v. Schreiner (Tex.) 11 S. W. 100, 104.

Dangerous places

Where defendant maintained a stairway leading to a basement, the top of the stairs being over 4½ feet from the sidewalk and in a private alley, the stairway was not a "nuisance," and defendant was not liable to a person who, while walking on the sidewalk and in attempting to avoid a runaway horse, fell down the stairs. Sheehan v. Bailey Bldg. Co., 85 Pac. 44, 45, 42 Wash. 535.

Pen. Code, § 429, requiring one cutting ice to surround the openings with guards to obstruct the free passage of persons into the hole, and making failure to do so a misdemeanor, is a condition to the right to cut ice, and the failure to do so at a place much used for skating would constitute a nuisance within section 385, making it a public nuisance to unlawfully omit to perform a duty which endangers the safety of a considerable number of persons. Linzey v. American Ice Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 767, 768, 131 App. Div. 333.

A lease limiting the liability of the tenant respecting orders of a city department to those issued for the correction, prevention, and abatement of "nuisances" or "other grievances" does not render the tenant liable for the cost of a fire escape, as the words are to be taken in their natural and usual sense. The absence of a fire escape is not a "nuisance," as that word is commonly used, and the more generic words "other grievances" do not extend the plaintiff's liability so far as to render him liable for the cost of the fire escape. Kalman v. Cox, 92 N. Y. Supp. 816, 46 Misc. Rep. 589.

Dead body

A guest of a hotel, who knowingly permits the body of a dead infant to be concealed in the rooms occupied by him, or causes it to be concealed in any other part of the building, and in either case to remain until it becomes offensive to other guests, commits a nuisance, and may be chargeable with liability for damages resulting to the landlord's business; but, unless he actively causes or participates in the concealment in a place not under his control, he is not chargeable with liability unless the act was done by one for whom he is responsible. Parkes v. Seasongood, 152 Fed. 583, 585.

Drains

Where a drain laid by property owners in a public street, under permission from the city, empties into a natural stream, and thereafter, without express license from the city, is used as a sewer to discharge sewage into the stream to the injury of a lower riparian owner, the drain is a "nuisance," and the city is liable for negligence in not abating it. Schlesinger v. Gilhooly, 81 N. E. 619, 631, 189 N. Y. 1, 12 Ann. Cas. 1138.

Drunkenness

Drunkenness in a public place is a nuisance and disorderly conduct, within Kirby's

Dig. §§ 5438, 5461, authorizing municipal corporations by ordinance to prevent nuisances and disorderly conduct. Dewitt v. Lacotts, 88 S. W. 877, 878, 76 Ark. 250.

Explosives

Whether the maintenance of a powder magazine within 1,000 feet of a dwelling house was a "nuisance" was a question for the jury, in an action for injuries caused by an explosion of the magazine. H. S. Kerbaugh v. Caldwell, 151 Fed. 194, 196, 80 C. C. A. 470, 10 Ann. Cas. 453.

To constitute the keeping of gunpowder a nuisance, there must be negligence in the fact or the manner of keeping and storing the gunpowder; and whether the storing of gunpowder is a nuisance depends on the locality, quantity, and surrounding circumstances. Where a powder magazine was imperfectly constructed and improvidently maintained, and its location, manner of construction, and maintenance was dangerous to life and property, the magazine was a nuisance, and the owner thereof was liable for an explosion thereof. Fisher v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co., 108 Pac. 659, 662, 12 Cal. App. 739.

"A 'nuisance,' at common law, may consist in the keeping or manufacture of gunpowder, naphtha, or other explosive or inflammable substances in such quantities and places or in such manner as to be dangerous to the persons and property of the inhabitants of the neighborhood." In a community sparsely settled, a magazine of the capacity of that belonging to defendants, when filled with the quantity of gunpowder shown by the evidence, may not imperil life or property in the vicinity by reason of a possible explosion; but, if located in a more populous neighborhood, it might be found to endanger both. In such an inquiry, the proximity of dwellings or of highways, or of the usual facilities for public travel, or the density of population, may be shown. Flynn v. Butler, 75 N. E. 730, 731, 189 Mass. 377 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Kidder, 107 Mass. 188, 192).

Fences

To constitute a fence a private nuisance, within Rev. St. 1902, c. 22, § 6, making a fence unnecessarily exceeding six feet, in height, maliciously kept to annoy another, a private nuisance, it is not required that annoyance shall be the sole purpose, but it is sufficient if it is the dominant one. An adjoining owner may erect a fence as much higher than six feet as may be necessary to protect himself, his family, and his property from annoyances inflicted or threatened by his neighbor; but, if the fence is built higher than six feet for the malicious purpose of, in turn, annoying his neighbor, it is a nuisance within the statute. Healey v. Spaulding, 71 Atl. 472, 473, 104 Me. 122.

Fireworks

The primary meaning of "nuisance" is that which injures. If the natural tendency of the act complained of is to create danger and inflict injury upon person or property, it may properly be found a nuisance as a matter of fact; but, if the act in its inherent nature is so hazardous as to make the danger extreme and serious injury so probable as to be almost a certainty, it should be held a "nuisance" as a matter of law. The exhibition of fireworks, allowed to be given in a public street, where a large number of people are assembling, is not a "nuisance" as a matter of law, and whether it is a nuisance in fact is a question for the jury. Melker v. City of New York, 83 N. E. 565, 567, 190 N. Y. 481, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 13 Ann. Cas. 544.

Grade crossing

A grade crossing or the condition existing by reason of such an intersection of two highways is in the nature of a "nuisance," and can only lawfully exist under state authority. Cowles v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 66 Atl. 1020, 1022, 80 Conn. 48, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067, 10 Ann. Cas. 481.

Hospital

Hospitals for the treatment of patients suffering from infectious and contagious diseases are nuisances when located in the residential parts of cities and towns, and the danger differs in kind rather than degree. Shepard v. City of Seattle, 109 Pac. 1067, 1070, 59 Wash. 363, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 647.

A building used as a hospital for the treatment of contagious diseases is not a "nuisance" per se. Where buildings used as a hospital for contagious diseases were located in a sparsely settled neighborhood on land entirely surrounded by highways, and on which there were no other buildings, and with ordinary caution there was no probability of communication of contagious diseases from the hospital unless by transmission through the air, and the buildings were at a greater distance from the highways than smallpox is transmissible in the open air, there was no showing of a "nuisance." State ex rel. Board of Health of Hamilton Tp. v. Inhabitants of City of Trenton (N. J.) 63 Atl. 897, 898.

Jail

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 290, provides that whatever is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as essentially to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, is a nuisance, and the subject of an action, thus following the common law, which defines a "nuisance" as anything which causes an injury to lands or houses and renders them useless or even uncomfortable for habitation, but the erection of a jail next to a residence is not the creation of a nuisance. Pritchett v. Board of Com'rs of Knox County, 85 N. E. 82, 35, 42 Ind. App. 3 (citing Hill. Torts [4th Ed.] p. 584).

Keeping disorderly house

The keeping of a disorderly house is a nuisance, both at common law and under the statute, and the offense is a misdemeanor, for which the ordinary remedy is by criminal proceedings. Weldner v. Friedman, 151 S. W. 56, 57, 126 Tenn. 677, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063.

Noises, odors, gases, and smoke

Noxious gases arising from the carrying on of lawful occupations are not "nuisances" in all situations, but may become such by reason of the trade being carried on in improper localities, or by reason of the gases being negligently suffered to escape. Lois v. Louisville & N. B. Co., 107 S. W. 203, 204, 128 Ky. 26, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 673.

Any act, omission, or use of property which pollutes the atmosphere with offensive gases, stenches, or vapor, so as to cause material discomfort, or annoyance, or injury to health or property, is a "nuisance." Woodstock Hardwood & Spool Mfg. Co. v. Charleston Light & Water Co. (S. C.) 63 S. E. 54, 55, 56.

Noise alone, if it be of such a character as to be productive of actual physical discomfort and annoyance to a person of ordinary sensibility, may create a "nuisance," the subject of a remedy at law or in equity. Longley v. McGeoch, 80 Atl. 843, 846, 115 M. 182.

"Under the statutes anything which produces noxious exhalations, offensive smells, or other annoyances, injurious to the health, comfort, or property of individuals, is a 'nuisance.' It is not necessary that these odors be deleterious to health. It is sufficient that they offend the senses in such a manner as to produce actual discomfort." Rhoades v. Cook, 98 N. W. 122, 123, 122 Iowa, 336.

The malicious annoyance of another by loud noises, consisting of screaming and pounding on tin pans, fences, and iron, the consequence of which another is injured in health and business, is a "nuisance," which equity will abate. Shellabarger v. Morris, 9 S. W. 1005, 1007, 115 Mo. App. 566.

An authorized business properly conducted at an authorized place is not a "nuisance" for whatever is lawful cannot be wrongful, and the owner of a railroad thus authorized and operated is not liable in damages to one whose residence is permeated by smoke, cinders, and gas emitted from the engines to such an extent as to be injurious to the health and comfort of the inhabitants. Armstrong v. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 9 Pac. 978, 979, 71 Kan. 366, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 113, 114 Am. St. Rep. 474.

The operation of a crematory and fertilizer plant, in which ordinary garbage and other waste matter are subjected to a burning process, and the residue, in the shape of ashes, used in connection with other elements to make a fertilizer, in such a manner that, under certain conditions of the atmosphere and direction of the wind, the smoke arising from the cremation and the odor due to the method of handling the elements of the fertilizer compels those residing within a distance of from 2,000 to 2,500 feet to keep their windows closed, and renders their houses uncomfortable for habitation, and prevents them from sitting out of doors, constitutes a "nuisance." Laird v. Atlantic Coast Sanitary Co., 67 Atl. 387, 388, 73 N. J. Eq. 49.

"While it is true that dancing is frequently an innocent amusement, and drinking may be engaged in without becoming a nuisance, yet if the dancing and drinking are accompanied by swearing and being drunk, making loud noises and otherwise misbehaving, there can be no doubt that such acts will constitute a 'nuisance.'" Commonwealth v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 112 S. W. 613, 614, 139 Ky. 429, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 427 (citing and adopting Jung Brewing Co. v. Commonwealth, 96 S. W. 595, 123 Ky. 507, 124 Am. St. Rep. 376).

Noises resulting from the operation of a manufacturing plant, to constitute a "nuisance," must be unreasonable and of such a character as to be of actual physical discomfort to persons of ordinary sensibilities. McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co., 118 N. W. 786, 788, 140 Iowa, 429, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466.

A creamery discharged its waste on the land of another, and thereby increased the flow of water on the land, and interfered with the proper cultivation thereof. Noisome odors arose from the waste, but these were not noticeable until one got near the point of discharge, and there was no evidence that any one suffered therefrom. Held, that the waste was not a nuisance within Code, § 5078, defining "nuisances." Ruthven v. Farmers' Coop. Creamery Co., 118 N. W. 915, 916, 140 Iowa, 570.

Noises which are not "nuisances" on a week day may be when made on a Sunday, if disturbing the quiet and rest which a citizen is entitled to have for his recuperation; and the fact that such noises are forbidden by the Sunday laws takes away any defense for making them, though they be but slight. McMillan v. Kuehnle, 73 Atl. 1054, 1056, 76 N. J. Eq. 256.

A private park in the residence part of a city, inclosed by a fence and rented to lodges and other bodies for holding entertainments by day and night, is, when permitted to be so conducted that it is a rendezvous for bolsterous, dissolute, drunken people, who indulge in music, dancing, and obscenity until very late hours of the night, so as to disturb the sleep of neighboring residents, a "nuisance." Palestine Bldg. Ass'n v. Minor (Ky.) 86 S. W. 695, 696.

"At common law a 'nuisance' was anything that worked hurt or damage. A public or common nuisance was that which affected the public or was an annoyance to the king's subjects at large." An Illinois statute, providing that a city council in cities shall have the power to declare what shall be a nuisance, to abate the same, and to impose fines on parties who may create, continue, or suffer a nuisance to exist, authorized the Chicago city council to pass Ordinance March 23, 1903, § 10, declaring the emission of dense smoke from the stack of any boat, locomotive, or chimney anywhere within the city, with certain exceptions, to be a public nuisance. Glucose Refining Co. v. City of Chicago, 138 Fed. 209, 214 (adopting the quotation from Harmon v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 400, 51 Am. Rep. 698).

"It may be laid down broadly as a general rule that any act, omission, or use of property which results in polluting the atmosphere with noxious or offensive effluvia, gases, stenches, or vapors, thereby producing material physical discomfort and annoyance to those residing in the vicinity or injury to their health or property, is a nuisance." The occupant of a dwelling is entitled to an injunction to restrain the operation of a slaughter house adjacent thereto, where such operation causes the dwelling to be filled with noxious smells. Wright v. Ulrich, 91 Pac. 43, 44, 40 Colo. 437.

A "nuisance" is defined as an "unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use of one's own property, to the annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or damage of another." Under this definition, the jury was justified in finding that an electric light plant, erected in a residential neighborhood, was a nuisance, where the evidence showed that the machinery produced a vibration of an adjoining hotel, that dirt and cinders came into the rooms of the hotel, that noise and bad odors invaded the premises, and that the income derived from rental of rooms had decreased since the plant was established. Pritchard v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 225, 229, 92 App. Div. 178 (quoting and adopting definition in Bly v. Edison Co., 64 N. E. 745, 172 N. Y. 1, 58 L. R. A. 500).

Where it was proven that the owner of a steam mill, to obtain water, made an excavation in a hollow leading down from a suburb of a nearby town, with the assent of most of the inhabitants of the neighborhood, that the filth from the nearby premises corrupted the water, so that it inconvenienced the neighborhood, and that the pond was of too recent origin to have, as yet, injuriously affected the health of the community, instructions that whatever is openly injurious to public health and comfort, is a "nuisance," though not all the members of the community are affected thereby, that a "nuisance" must either be in a populous neighborhood, or so contiguous to a highway as to affect those passing thereon, that a "nuisance" was not necessarily detrimental to the public health, it being sufficient if its bad odors affected the public at large, and that, if the defendant maintained a "nuisance" by maintaining a pond wherein was drained a part of the filth of a nearby town, endangering the public health, and likely, in the nature of things, to generate disease, they should convict, were applicable to the evidence. West v. State, 71 S. W. 483, 484, 71 Ark. 144.

In determining whether the maintenance of a planing mill, coalyard, and bins in a residence district in a city are a "nuisance," the effect on persons of ordinary sensibilities only, and not on persons of very delicate and fastidious tastes or sensibilities, should be considered. First Avenue Coal & Lumber Co. v. Johnston, 54 South. 598, 600, 171 Ala. 470, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522.

It is not essential to the existence of a "nuisance" from offensive odors that they should be calculated to break down or injure health, or that health should be impaired or even threatened by them. It is sufficient that they may be nauseating or physically discomforting or annoying to persons of ordinary sensibilities, "interfering with the ordinary comfort physically of human existence, not merely according to elegant and dainty modes and habits of living, but according to plain and sober and simple notions among the English people." The sound condition of those employed in fish factories and habituated to the smells necessarily generated in their operation is not determinative of the question whether such a factory is a nuisance. It is well known that persons can become, accustomed to foul and noisome odors and retain their health. United States v. Luce, 141 Fed. 385, 408.

Under Code, § 4302, defining a "nuisance" to be whatever is injurious to health, indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, one using his property so as to unwarrantably impregnate the atmosphere with smoke, odors, etc., which would not exist but for his instrumentality, creates a nuisance; but only where an unreasonable amount of smoke or noisome fumes are emitted, or they are emitted in an unreasonable manner, resulting in tangible injury, will the courts interfere. McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co., 118 N. W. 786, 787, 140 Iowa, 429, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 291, makes whatever obstructs the use of property so as to essentially interfere with its comfortable enjoyment a "nuisance," and the subject of an action. The complaint alleged that plaintiffs did a retail clothing and furnishing business on the first floor of a building, under a lease from one of the defendants, and that such defendant caused and permitted the upper story to be used by the other defendant as a roller skating rink, the noise from which prevented conversation in plaintiffs' store, and annoyed and drove away their customers, thereby causing loss of profits and injury to the business which could not be compensated for by damages, and that if such use is permitted to continue plaintiffs' business will be destroyed, and also alleged facts showing the character and extent of plaintiffs' business, their inability to procure another room and prayed an injunction. Held, that the complaint showed that the business would be destroyed if the rink was continued, so that plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction; the injury not being susceptible of compensation in damages. Foor v. Edwards, 90 N. E. 78, 45 Ind. App. 259.

The use of soft coal in a factory situated in a country district suitable for country homes that black smoke therefrom great in volume and dense in quality, envelops and discolors a neighboring dwelling, causing discomfort and financial loss to the occupants, is a "nuisance," where the use of soft coal is not necessary for the running of the factory, and is not a reasonable use of the manufacturer's property. McCarty v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 81 N. E. 549, 550, 189 N. Y. 40, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, 12 Ann. Cas. 840.

By Civ. Code 1895, § 3861, a "nuisance" is anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage, to another; and the fact that the act done may otherwise be lawful does not keep it from being a "nuisance." The inconvenience complained of must not be fanciful, or such as would affect only one of fastidious taste, but it must be such as would affect an ordinarily reasonable man. The employment, by the owner of a ginning plant, of machinery which separates dust and sand from cotton and expels the particles of dust and sand into the air in large volumes, causing the same to be blown into the dwelling house of an adjacent proprietor, to his great discomfort and injury, is an invasion of his property rights, for which an action for damages will lie. Ponder v. Quitman Ginney, 49 S. E. 746, 747, 122 Ga. 29 (citing Swift v. Broyles, 42 S. E. 277, 115 Ga. 885, 58 L. R. A. 390; Farley v. Gate City Gaslight Co., 31 S. E. 193, 105 Ga. 331; Austin v. Augusta T. Ry. Co., 34 S. E. 852, 108 Ga. 671, 4 L. R. A. 755).

Obstruction of highway

An obstruction in a public highway constitutes a "nuisance." State v. Southern Indiana Gas Co., 81 N. E. 1149, 1150, 169 Ind. 124, 13 Ann. Cas. 908 (citing Zimmerman v. State, 31 N. E. 550, 4 Ind. App. 583).

"A permanent encroachment upon a public street for a private purpose is a 'purpose ure.' and is in law a 'nuisance.'" Lacey v. City of Oskaloosa, 121 N. W. 542, 545, 143 Iowa, 704, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 853.

The general rule is that any unauthorized obstruction or excavation in a public street, impairing its safety, constitutes a public "nuisance." Mixer v. Herrick, 62 Atl. 1019, 78 Vt. 349.

An obstruction placed within the limits of a public way is a "nuisance" at common law, as well as under Rev. St. 1903, c. 22, § 1. Smith v. Preston, 71 Atl. 653, 656, 104 Me. 156.

A temporary obstruction of a street or highway with the consent of the proper public authorities, in the course of construction of a building, sidewalk, or other work, is not a "nuisance." Malkan v. Carlin, 93 N. Y. Supp. 378.

A fence obstructing a street, which is a public highway, and thereby rendering its use less convenient, would be an indictable "nuisance." State v. Godwin, 59 S. E. 132, 133, 145 N. C. 461, 122 Am. St. Rep. 467.

A spike two inches high in a sidewalk is a "nuisance." Wile v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co., 83 Pac. 271, 272, 2 Cal. App. 190.

Civ. Code, § 3479, defines a "nuisance" as anything which obstructs the free use of property or free passage or use of any street. Section 3493 provides that a private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance, if it is specially injurious to him. Held, that the owner of a lot abutting on a street has such an easement over it that he may maintain an action to abate structures erected in the street opposite his lot. McLean v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 83 Pac. 1082, 1084, 2 Cal. App. 346.

"At common law any act or obstruction which unnecessarily incommodes or impedes the lawful use of a highway by the public is a 'nuisance.'" Where the owner of a building negligently maintained a leader from the roof of a building so as to discharge water on the sidewalk, by which ice accumulated thereon and the walk became dangerous, he was liable to any person injured thereby. Tremblay v. Harmony Mills, 64 N. E. 501, 171 N. Y. 598 (quoting and adopting definition in Ang. Highw. § 223).

An obstruction is merely matter out of place and that which may be a stepping stone in a position where it is needed and may be used as such becomes an obstruction when occupying a place intended for other use, and where it is not needed and cannot be so used. Where a pavement has been laid, the asphalt surface of which lays smoothly down to the curb, a block of stone placed within the curb is an obstruction and becomes a "nuisance." McCormack v. Robin, 52 South. 779, 781, 126 La. 594, 139 Am. St. Rep. 549.

The accumulation of water and ice in a depression in a sidewalk, so as to obstruct the free and safe use of the sidewalk, by water being collected on a roof and cast on the sidewalk by a projecting conductor, constitutes a "nuisance," which it is the duty of the city to prevent or abate, negligent failure to perform which will make it liable to one injured thereby. City of Muncie v. Hey, 74 N. E. 250, 251, 164 Ind. 570.

Under Ky. St. § 2885, providing that it shall be the duty of police officers in cities to remove all nuisances in the public streets, parks, and highways, it was the duty of a policeman, on obtaining knowledge of a dangerous cave-in in a street, to guard the same in order to prevent injury thereby, and hence the policeman's knowledge thereof was notice to the city; the word "nuisance," as there used, not being limited to a physical obstruction placed in a street, but including anything that "worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage." City of Louisville v. Lenehan, 149 S. W. 932, 934, 149 Ky. 537.

An owner, collecting surface water into a definite channel and pouring the same on a public highway where the water freezes, creates a "nuisance," and he is liable for the damages ensuing as a probable consequence. Field v. Gowdy, 85 N. E. 884, 885, 199 Mass. 568, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236.

Where a trench, dug in a city street for the purpose of supplying heat to the city library building, had been partly filled, but the remainder was left open awaiting material for making pipe connections, such excavation, having been made for a proper purpose, was not a "nuisance" per se, and did not become such unless it was allowed to remain open for an unreasonable length of time. Garnetz v. City of Carroll, 114 N. W. 57, 136 Iowa, 569.

The trees, grass, and flowers growing on park strips maintained by a municipality between the curbing and the sidewalk and proper barriers placed around them to protect them are not obstructions or "nuisances," within the meaning of the statute requiring the city council to keep the streets of a municipality open, in repair, and free from nuisance. Village of Barnesville v. Ward, 96 N. E. 937, 938, 85 Ohio St. 1, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1234.

Civ. Code, § 3479, declares anything which unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use of a public street a "nuisance." Section 3490 defines a "public nuisance" as one affecting an entire community or any considerable number of persons. Section 3493 provides that a private person may maintain an action for a "public nuisance" only if it is specially injurious to himself. In an action to enjoin the construction or operation of a railroad in the street in front of plaintiff's premises, the complaint alleged that the construction and operation of the railroad would greatly obstruct the use of plaintiff's premises and impair the easement of access thereto and egress therefrom, and would greatly hamper plaintiff in carrying on his business on the premises and lessen the value thereof. Held, that the allegations were merely statements of the plaintiff's opinion or conclusions as to the effect of defendant's proposed acts, and hence the complaint was demurrable as not showing a nuisance resulting in some special injury, within the meaning of Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480, 3493. Brown v. Rea, 88 Pac. 713, 714, 150 Cal. 171 (citing Aram v. Schallenberger, 41 Cal. 449; Bigley v. Nunan, 53 Cal. 403; Hogan v. Central Pac. R. Co., 11 Pac. 876, 71 Cal. 87).

Obstruction of waters

A obstruction in a stream, caused by filling it, and resulting in damages to property through water being set back, is a "nuisance." Hedrick v. City of St. Joseph, 122 S. W. 375, 376, 138 Mo. App. 396.

Laws 1905, c. 57, § 4, gives corporations organized for clearing and improving streams for logging purposes, power to build wing dams and sheer booms, etc., for the purpose of holding logs, providing that no such dam, etc., shall be so maintained as to obstruct the outlet of the stream, and that if such dam, etc., is constructed so as to interfere with the use of the stream for any other purpose or injure adjacent land, compensation shall be first determined, and the appropriation of the use made by eminent domain. Held, that the statute contemplated the obstruction of navigation at times by the construction of dams, etc., for driving timber, the only limitation being that the outlet of the stream be not obstructed, so that the fact that a boom built in a river navigable to some extent for three or four miles from its mouth at high tide for floating logs necessarily obstructed navigation above the boom would not be a "nuisance," as defined by Rem. & Bal. Code, § 943 (1 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 3085, 3093 [Pierce's Code, §§ 1870, 1867]), so that the boom company could condemn the privilege of using the river in that manner. State ex rel. Pealer v. Superior Court of Chehalis County, 109 Pac. 340, 341, 58 Wash. 565.

Comp. Laws 1909, § 4751, defines a "nuisance" to consist in unlawfully doing an act or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission, among other things, "unlawfully interferes with, obstructs or tends to obstruct, or renders dangerous for passage, any lake, or navigable river, bay, stream, canal, or basin, or any public park, square, street, or highway." McKay v. City of Enid, 109 Pac. 520, 522, 26 Okl. 275, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1021.

Pool room

The maintenance of a place for selling for gain pools upon horses at an exhibition trial of their speed on a race track and the selling of the pools is punishable as a "nuisance" at common law and under B. & C. Comp. § 1930, providing for the punishment of any person who willfully or wrongfully commits any act which grossly disturbs the public peace or health, or which openly outrages the public decency and is injurious to the public morals. State v. Ayers, 58 Pac. 653, 49 Or. 61, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 992, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1036.

A pool room on one of the principal thoroughfares in the city, in which persons daily congregate to bet upon horse races reported to the proprietor by telegraph, is a gaming house, punishable as a "nuisance," at common law and under the statute providing for the punishment of any person who willfully and wrongfully commits any act which grossly disturbs the public peace or health, or which openly outrages the public decency, and is injurious to the public morals. State v. Nease, 80 Pac. 897, 898, 46 Or. 433.

Roller skating rink

"Any business, however lawful, which causes annoyances that materially interfere with the ordinary comfort, physical, of human existence, is a 'nuisance' that should be restrained." The operation of a roller skating rink, so conducted as to render the appropriate enjoyment of adjacent church property impossible will be enjoined. First Methodist Episcopal Church of City of Cape May v. Cape May Grain & Coal Co., 67 Atl. 613, 614, 73 N. J. Eq. 257 (quoting and adopting definition in Cleveland v. Citizens' Gas Light Co., 20 N. J. Eq. 201, 205).

Saloons and other places of sale of liquors

A saloon or tippling house was not a "nuisance" at common law if properly conducted, and therefore a conviction for maintaining a nuisance cannot be sustained by proof of the maintenance of an unlicensed tippling house, in the absence of proof that it was so conducted as to annoy, disturb, or scandalize the people in a community, by showing that drunkards, thieves, prostitutes, or other disorderly persons were permitted to resort there. State v. Ingram & Adams, 94 S. W. 790, 791, 118 Mo. App. 323.

Under Rev. St. 1903, c. 22, § 1, a place of resort is a "nuisance" if used by a club either to sell intoxicating liquor to its members, or to distribute among them liquor owned in common, or to procure and dispense to its members liquor bought for and belonging to them individually. State v. Kaplesky, 73 Atl. 830, 832, 105 Me. 127, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737.

Sanitarium

Under the statute (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8309) defining a nuisance as an act or omission which either annoys, injures, or endangers the comfort, health, or safety of others, the maintenance in a residential district of a city of a sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis patients is a "nuisance," where the fear induced by the proximity of the sanitarium disturbs the "comfortable enjoyment" of adjacent property, whether the fear is founded on scientific facts or not, for "comfortable enjoyment" means mental quiet as well as physical comfort, and the word "comfort" implies whatever is requisite to give security from want and furnish reasonable physical, mental, and spiritual enjoyment. Everett v. Paschall, 111 Pac. 879, 880, 61 Wash. 47, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 827, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1128.

Surface water

The action of a railroad in permitting surface water from one side of its track to escape to the other side alongside of a highway does not create an actionable "nuisance." Townsend v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 381, 387, 56 Misc. Rep. 258.

NUISANCE PER SE

A "nuisance per se" is a nuisance in itself, and which cannot be so conducted as to be lawfully carried on or permitted to exist. Cooper v. Whissen, 130 S. W. 703, 704, 95 Ark. 545.

"A 'nuisance per se' is an act, thing, or omission or use of the property which in and of itself is a nuisance, and hence not permissible or excusable under any circumstances." Loth v. Columbia Theater Co., 94 S. W. 847, 854, 197 Mo. 328.

"A 'nuisance at law' or a 'nuisance per se' is an act, occupation, or structure which is a nuisance at all times, under any circumstances, regardless of location or surroundings." Swain v. Morris, 125 S. W. 432, 434, 93 Ark. 362, 20 Ann. Cas. 930 (quoting and adopting the definition in 29 Cyc. P. 1153).

A "nuisance per se" is an act, thing, or omission, or use of the property, which in and of itself is a nuisance, and hence is not permissible or excusable under any circumstances. A lawful business is not generally a "nuisance per se," but may become so by being located in an inappropriate place, or being kept in an improper manner. Remsburg v. Iola Portland Cement Co., 84 Pac. 548, 549, 73 Kan. 66.

A "nuisance" is anything which incommodes, annoys, or produces inconvenience or damage. A "nuisance per se" is one which is always a nuisance in certain localities. A "nuisance in fact" is one which becomes a nuisance by reason of circumstances and surroundings. City of New Orleans v. Lefant, 52 South. 575, 577, 126 La. 455, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642.

A "nuisance per se," as the term implies, is a nuisance in itself, and one which cannot therefore be so conducted or maintained as to be lawfully carried on or permitted to exist. Sullivan Realty & Improvement Co. v. Crockett, 138 S. W. 924, 926, 158 Mo. App. 573.

Awnings

"Nuisances" are of three kinds, viz.: Per se, malum in se (that is, naturally evil); malum prohibitum, because forbidden by law; and those which do not fall within the two definitions mentioned, but may be found in fact to be nuisances." Awnings constructed of wood, with roofs covered with metal, extending over and about 15 feet above a street, and attached to substantial brick buildings, the outer edge resting on posts in the sidewalk or curb, did not constitute a public "nuisance per se." Brown v. Town of Carrollton, 99 S. W. 37, 39, 122 Mo. App. 276.

Cemetery

A public cemetery is not a "nuisance per se." Sherman v. Crawford (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1075, 1076.

Dead animals

Dead domestic animals are not "nuisances per se," and cannot be made such by legislative declaration. City of Richmond v. Caruthers, 50 S. E. 265, 163 Va. 774, 70 L. R. A. 1005, 2 Ann. Cas. 495.

Electricity

The transmission of electricity at a high voltage over a right of way, being authorized by law, is not a "nuisance per se," as it is well settled that a lawful business or erection is never a "nuisance per se." Mull v. Indianapolis & C. Traction Co., 81 N. E. 657, 659, 660, 169 Ind. 214.

Explosives

The arbitrary rule that the keeping of gunpowder, nitroglycerine, or other explosive substances in large quantities in the vicinity of a dwelling house or place of business is a "nuisance per se" has been modified, and the present rule is that the question whether they are a nuisance depends on the locality, the quantity, and the surrounding circumstances, and the method and manner of keeping and using. The owner of an automobile garage, licensed to store one barrel of gasoline in the building, which is a frame building and adjacent to other frame buildings, will be enjoined from introducing gasoline into the tanks of the automobile inside of the building, and from storing automobiles, with gasoline in the tanks, inside the building. O'Hara v. Nelson (N. J.) 63 Atl. 836, 840 (citing, in support of a general rule, Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 38 Am. Rep. 654; Rudder v. Koopman, 22 South. 601, 116 Ala. 382, 37 L. R. A. 489; Kinney v. Koopman, 22 South. 593, 116 Ala. 310, 37 L. R. A. 497, 67 Am. St. Rep. 119; Kleebauer v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co., 71 Pac. 617, 138 Cal. 497, 60 L. R. A. 377, 94 Am. St. Rep. 62; Collins v.

Alabama G. S. R. Co., 16 South. 140, 104 Ala. 390; High, Inj. [3d Ed.] p. 593, § 776, et seq.; 1 Pom. Equit. Remedies, § 515 et seq.; Barnes v. Zettlemoyer, 62 S. W. 111, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 468; Flynn v. Butler, 75 N. E. 730, 189 Mass. 377).

Gaming house

A gambling house, under the statute and as recognized by the courts, is a "nuisance," and even at common law such a nuisance could be enjoined at the instance of any person who was injured thereby. Ex parte Allison, 90 S. W. 492, 494, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 634, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 622, 13 Ann. Cas. 684.

"A 'nuisance per se' is any act or omission, or use of property or thing, which is of itself hurtful to the health, tranquility, or morals, or outrages the decency, of the community." Keeping a common gaming house, which is held to include pool rooms where betting on horse races is indulged (Bollinger v. Commonwealth, 35 S. W. 553, 98 Ky. 574; Commonwealth v. Simmonds, 79 Ky. 618; Brown v. State, 13 S. W. 236, 88 Tenn. 566; Swigart v. People, 40 N. E. 432, 154 Ill. 284), to which there is common resort for the purpose of betting, and at which money or other property is bet, won, or lost, is per se a nuisance at common law (1 Hank. P. C. p. 733; Kneffler v. Commonwealth, 22 S. W. 446, 94 Ky. 359). Ehrlick v. Commonwealth, 102 S. W. 289, 290, 125 Ky. 742, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 995, 128 Am. St. Rep. 269.

Slaughterhouse

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 56 (entitled "Nuisance") §§ 1, 3, 8, 10, declaring that a nuisance consists in unlawfully doing any act or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission annoys, injures, or endangers the comfort, health, or safety of others, and declaring that a public nuisance is one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, though the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted on the individual may be unequal, etc., a slaughterhouse is not a "nuisance per se," unless it appears from the evidence, independent of the manner in which it is being used and conducted, that its location, proximity, and relationship to the public make it so. Weaver v. Kuchler, 87 Pac. 600, 602, 17 Okl. 189.

Steam traction engine

The use of a steam traction engine and trailers in the streets of a city is not a public "nuisance per se."—McCarter v. Ludlum Steel & Spring Co. (N. J.) 63 Atl. 761, 767.

Trains

The noises of locomotives, shifting of cars, smoke, offensive odors, loading and unloading of freight, and the like, occasioned by and incident to the use and conduct of a railroad freight and passenger terminal, and resulting in damages to the premises as a place of religious worship does not constitute an actionable nuisance, where the railroad company conducts its operations with reasonable care. Neither does the running of trains and shifting of cars on Sunday at the time of regular church services constitute a "nuisance per se," since under the express provisions of Revisal 1905, § 2613, a railroad company may operate its trains on Sunday. But, while this is true, it also remains true that a railroad so operated as to needlessly cause injury would be such a nuisance. Taylor v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 59 S. E. 129, 132, 145 N. C. 400, 122 Am. St. Rep. 455.

Undertaking establishment

An undertaking establishment is not a "nuisance per se." The maintenance of an undertaking establishment in a building 3 or 4 feet from the residence of one of the plaintiffs and 35 feet from the residence of the other in a residence district of a city, though the mortician operating the same intended to occupy the upper stories of the building as a residence, constituted a nuisance where it was shown that noxious odors, gases, etc., were likely to permeate the houses of the plaintiffs therefrom, and that there was danger of infection and contagion from the proximity of the morgue, with the possibility of flies passing from one place to the other, etc. Densmore v. Evergreen Camp No. 147, Woodmen of the World, 112 Pac. 255, 61 Wash. 230, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1206.

NUISANCE VALUE

A "nuisance value" is the value of a franchise "because it may be used to hinder or defraud another enterprise, although itself conferring or securing nothing of value." Consolidated Gas Co. v. New York, 157 Fed. 849, 874.

NUL TIEL RECORD

"The plea of 'nul tiel record' raises but one question, and that is whether there is such a record as that set out in the writ." Bank of Eau Claire v. Reed, 83 N. E. 820, 821, 232 Ill. 238, 122 Am. St. Rep. 66.

NULL AND VOID

The terms "null" and "void" are used interchangeably. "Void" is defined as having no legal force, entirely null, incapable of confirmation or ratification; and "null" is defined as of no legal or binding force or validity, of no efficacy, invalid, void, nugatory, useless, or of no account or significance. Forrester & MacGinniss v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 74 Pac. 1088, 1091, 29 Mont. 397 (citing Standard Dict.).

Though a conveyance was, as between the parties, within the statute providing that all fraudulent conveyances shall be "null and void," the fraudulent grantee having conveyed the property to a third person, who was not made a party to a suit by creditors of the vendor to subject the land to their claims, he was not bound by a decree in favor of complainant. The words "null and void," as used in this statute, are to be given the sense of "voidable," since the conveyances are good as between the parties and also as against the grantor. As stated by Bacon in his Abridgment, tit. "Void and Voidable": "A thing is void which was done against law at the very time of the doing it, and no person is bound by such act; but a thing is only voidable which is done by a person who ought not to have done it, but who nevertheless cannot avoid it himself after it is done. * * * Of a void act or deed every stranger may take advantage, but not of a voidable one." Tudor v. Tudor, 67 Atl. 539, 80 Vt. 220, 130 Am. St. Rep. 977 (citing Carpenter v. McClure, 39 Vt. 9, 91 Am. Dec. 370; Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150).

In a statute providing that all capital stock or securities of a company purchased of the company by a director thereof for less than the par value thereof shall be "null and void," the term "null and void" should be construed as meaning "voidable." Toledo St. L. & K. C. R. Co., v. Continental Trust Co., 95 Fed. 497, 526, 36 C. O. A. 155.

The words "void," "void and of no effect," and "null and void," are used in statutes and legal documents in the sense of voidable merely—that is, capable of being avoided—and not as meaning that the act or transaction is absolutely a nullity, as if it never had existed, incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances. Code 1896, § 1286, provides that no certificate of incorporation shall issue when the corporate name assumed is that of a person or firm, unless there be joined thereto some name designating the business he carries on, followed by the word "company" or "corporation," and if any corporation shall fail to comply with this qualification its organization is void. Section 1282 provides that, when any corporation fails to comply with the requirements of the statute in its organization, the failure may be remedied by filing with the probate judge who issued the certificate of incorporation a statement setting forth the omission and supplying the same. Failure of a corporation to comply with the qualifications of section 1286, by inserting the word designating the business to be carried on, did not render its incorporation "void," but "voidable" only; such being the evident import of the two sections of Code 1896, which are pari materia. State ex rel. Thompson v. Colias, 43 South. 190, 191, 192, 150 Ala. 515 (citing Ewell v. Daggs, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 108 U. S. 148, 27 L. Ed. 682; Inskeep v. Lecony, 1 N. J. Law, 112; New York & Long Island Bridge Co., 42 N. E. 1088, 148 N. Y. 540; Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v.

Braillard, 40 Pac. 382, 12 Wash. 22; Van Shaack v. Robbins, 36 Iowa, 201; Rheiner v. Union Depot, etc., Co., 17 N. W. 623, 31 Minn. 289; Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 538, 552).

NULLA BONA

A return on an execution "nulla bona" is a return that the execution is uncollectible. Card v. Groesbeck, 124 N. Y. Supp. 372, 373, 140 App. Div. 30.

A return on an execution issued on a justice's judgment, reciting: "Executed the within writ in the county of Stoddard, state of Missouri, on the 2d day of May, 1893. No property found to levy this execution"—constituted a sufficient return of "nulla bona." Scharff v. McGaugh, 103 S. W. 550, 552, 205 Mo. 344.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REGI

"The maxim 'nullum tempus occurrit regi' only applies in favor of the sovereign power, and has no application to municipal corporations deriving their powers from the sovereign, although their powers, in a limited sense, are governmental. Thus the statute runs for or against towns and cities, and also for or against counties." In an action between a county and an individual, the statute of limitations is applicable to the same extent as though both parties were natural persons. State ex rel. Board of Com'rs of Fountain County v. Stuart, 91 N. E. 613, 615, 46 Ind. App. 611 (quoting Wood, Lim. § 53).

NUMBER

See Reasonable Number; Street and House Number; Street Number.

Where the evidence showed that the state's witness on "one" occasion stated that he bought the liquor from another, and not from defendant, the court properly refused to instruct the jury to acquit, if they believed from the evidence that such witness made a "number" of statements that he did not purchase the liquor from defendant, but from another. Faulk v. State, 59 South. 225, 226, 4 Ala. App. 177.

NUNC PRO TUNC

An entry "nunc pro tunc" is something different from an entry correcting an oversight or mistake. Such entry assumes that an act was done at a particular time, which never got of record in the proper books; and the entry is finally made now for then. Hofacre v. City of Monticello, 103 N. W. 488, 489, 128 Iowa, 239.

"The court may order 'nunc pro tunc' entries, as they are called, made to supply some omission in the entry of what was done at the preceding term; yet this is a power the extent of which is limited and not easily defined. In general, mere clerical errors may be amended in this way." Evans v. Freeman, 140 Fed. 419, 424.

The office of a "nunc pro tunc" entry is, not to make an order now for then, but to enter now for then an order previously made; and the fact that a judge in chambers expressed a willingness to make a desired order extending the time for filing a motion for new trial, where no such order was actually made or directed in court, does not warrant the entry of such an order nunc pro tunc at a succeeding term. Klein v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 Fed. 213, 216.

A "nunc pro tunc" entry can only be employed to correct a clerical mistake or mispronunciation of the clerk. It can never correct a mistake or oversight of the judge, nor be used to correct judicial errors, nor to render a judgment different from that actually rendered, even though the judgment actually rendered, was not the judgment the judge intended to render. Burnside v. Wand, 71 S. W. 337, 339, 170 Mo. 531, 62 L. R. A. 427.

A "nunc pro tunc" entry can only be made upon evidence furnished by the papers and files in the cause, or something of record, or in the minute book or judge's docket, as a basis to amend by. The stenographer's notes of proceedings in an action do not constitute a paper or file in the cause, which can be made the basis of an amendment of a judgment "nunc pro tunc." A memorandum for a judgment drawn by an attorney to be copied by the clerk does not constitute a record, paper, or file in the action, which can be made the basis of an amendment of a judgment "nunc pro tunc." Becher v. Deuser, 69 S. W. 363, 364, 169 Mo. 159 (citing Missouri, K. & E. Ry. Co. v. Holschlag, 45 S. W. 1101, 144 Mo. 256, 66 Am. St. Rep. 417; Young v. Young, 65 S. W. 1016, 165 Mo. 624, 88 Am. St. Rep. 440).

The purpose of an order "nunc pro tunc" is to make a present record of an order which the court made at a previous term, but which was not then recorded; it being improper to make the record show an order not previously actually made, and hence accused, who was sentenced on a plea of guilty, is not entitled to an order nunc pro tunc setting aside the sentence. People v. Wilmot, 98 N. E. 973, 975, 254 Ill. 554.

NURSE

As servant, see Servant.

The mere giving of massage treatments professionally falls within the profession of a trained "nurse," and one who gives such treatments is not required to be licensed. People, to Use of State Board of Health, v. Hettiger, 150 Ill. App. 448, 451.

Merely giving massage treatment bathing a patient falls properly within the profession of a trained "nurse," while administering osteopathic treatment does not. Witty v. State, 90 N. E. 627, 630, 173 Ill. 404, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1297 (citing People v. Gordon, 62 N. E. 858, 194 Ill. 560, 88 Am. St. Rep. 165).

An agreement to "nurse" an adult implies that the object of the care is sick, and means much more than mere watchfulness and contemplates such care and attention of the person as will conduce to the comfort and hasten the recovery of the patient, but the practice of medicine, within the statute regulating its practice, implies not only the knowledge of the professional nurse, but implies much more, and includes the application of medical knowledge of disease, and the loss of health, and hence an agreement to nurse a person during his lifetime in consideration of the devise of the patient's property is not an agreement to practice medicine without a license prohibited by the statute, so as to prevent specific performance of the contract. Oswald v. Nehls, 84 N. E. 616, 622, 233 Ill. 438.

NURSING

The word "caring," in an instruction for an action by a parent for injuries to his minor child authorizing a recovery for the services of his wife in nursing, and medical attendance made necessary by the injury, is synonymous with "nursing," and means the usual attendance on sick persons, and the use thereof does not render the instruction misleading. Johnson v. St. Paul & W. Co., 111 N. W. 722, 723, 131 Wis. 627.

NUTS

Marrons (chestnuts) preserved in syrup are not dutiable as "nuts" under paragraph 272, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 172. Schall & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 1005, 83 C. C. A. 329.

Apricot stones come within the common definition of "nuts," and apricot kernels are dutiable as "nuts" * * * not specially provided for," under paragraph 272, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 172. United States v. Spencer & Co., 151 Fed. 1022, 81 C. C. A. 663.

NUT OIL OR OIL OF NUTS

"Nut oil" derived from the fruit of aleurites vernica of China, which is similar to the so-called Jatropha nuts, is properly subject to classification of "nut oil or oil of nuts," not otherwise specially provided for under the provisions of the Free List of the Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, par. 62, 30 Stat. 199. Edward Hills, Sons & Co. v. United States, 127 Fed. 970.

NUTGALLS

"Extract of nutgalls," an article which is made by grinding nutgalls, digesting the residue in water, and filtering to remove impurities, a chemical being added as a preservative without working any chemical change, is not dutiable as tannin or tannic acid, under paragraph 1, Schedule A, § 1, Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 151, as a chemical compound under paragraph 3, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, either directly or by similitude as "drugs," as * * * nutgalls, * * * advanced in value or condition," under paragraph 20, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 152. W. N. Proctor & Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 586, 588.

NUTRINE

"Nutrine," which is made out of crushed grain, corn, and wheat sifted, mixed with cotton seed meal and molasses, is not flour, within article 280 of the Constitution of 1898, in reference to exemption from taxation. Atlas Feed Products Co. v. City of New Orleans, 87 South. 531, 533, 113 La. 611.

O. F. B. A.

Where a writ was indorsed "Dr. Peter Brudgeman, O. F. B. A.," it was held clear from the remainder of the writ that "Odd Fellows' Building Association" was meant. Odd Fellows' Bldg. Ass'n v. Hogan, 28 Ark. 261, 264.

O. K.

"O. K." may have no title to be classed as elegant English, but in the business life of this country it has for many years been in common use, and has acquired a meaning which is not all obscure or uncertain. Webster's International Dictionary defines it as "all correct." The Century Dictionary gives its meaning as "all right; correct; now commonly used as an indorsement, as on a bill." It is neither more nor less than a brief, but expressive, certificate of the correctness of the bill or claim on which it is indorsed. Hence mere "O. K." indorsements on bills by architects are a sufficient compliance with a contract for the erection of a building requiring an estimate to be given by the architect for 85 per cent. of work and materials, and providing that payments shall be made on written certificates of the architects, without designating any particular form of certificate. Getchell & Martin Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Petterson & Sampson, 100 N. W. 550, 554, 124 Iowa, 599.

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 3437, requiring each water commissioner to keep an account of the time of each assistant employed by him, and to certify it to the board of county commissioners, accounts of deputies containing "O. K. George Hider, Water Commissioner, District No. 40," are sufficiently certified by the commissioner; the abbreviation "O. K." meaning "all right," "correct." Board of Com'rs of Gunnison County v. Hider, 107 Pac. 1068, 1069, 47 Colo. 443.

As indicating consent

The court, on plaintiff's motion for the direction of a verdict, discharged the jury, and directed plaintiff's counsel to prepare the findings and judgment. Thereupon defendant's attorney, in open court, stated, "And we can have an exception to each and every finding." Findings and conclusions, with form of judgment, were prepared and served on defendant's counsel. In the transcript, below the findings, conclusions, and judgment entry, was the abbreviation "O. K.," followed with the signature of defendant's counsel. Held, that the abbreviation "O. K." did not show that defendant's counsel assented to the findings, conclusions, and judgment. Humphries v. Sorenson, 74 Pac. 690, 692, 33 Wash. 563.

O N

A bill of lading declared that, if the word "Order," was written thereon immediately before or after the name of the party to whose order the property was consigned, the surrender of the bill of lading, properly indorsed, should be required before delivery of the property. An organ blower was shipped by plaintiff under a bill of lading, reciting: "Consigned to Organ Power Company, P. R. M. Co. Notify Patton-Rubush Music Company. Via Merchants Dispatch." The freight bill contained the following: "Consignee Organ Power Company, O N Patton-Rubush M. House." Held that, as the court would take judicial notice that the letters "O N" signified "order notify," the carrier was chargeable as for a misdelivery in delivering the blower to the person to be notified without surrender of the bill of lading and payment of the draft thereto attached. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Organ Power Co., 46 South. 254, 92 Miss. 781.

O. R.

"O. R.," as used in a contract of shipment, indicates that the shipment is made on the owner's risk. Nairn v. Missouri, E. & T. R. Co., 106 S. W. 102, 126 Mo. App. 707.

OAK

See White Oak.

OAR

In mechanics an oar is but a lever. The oarlock is the fulcrum; so that, given a loose oar, the distance from the fulcrum to the power or weight is liable to shift or vary between the oars, and result in an uneven or unsteady stroke, and prevent, in such contingency, true and safe rowing. Where an employer furnished a safe boat with which to row its employes to their place of work, the fact that the boat was provided with tight oars did not render the employer liable for the death of a servant, who was drowned by the overturning of the boat. Chrismer v. Bell Telephone Co., 92 S. W. 378, 384, 194 Mo. 189, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492.

OATH

See Corporal Oath; General Oath; Supplementary Oath.

See, also, Swear—Sworn.

An "oath" is an outward pledge, given by the person taking it, that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God. Pumphrey v. State, 122 N. W. 19, 20, 84 Neb. 636, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023, 18 Ann. Cas. 979.

An "oath" is a solemn adjuration to God to punish the affiant if he swears falsely, and its sanction is a belief that the Supreme Being will punish falsehood. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Jung, 49 South. 434, 440, 161 Ala. 461, 18 Ann. Cas. 557.

The word "oath" does not necessarily imply perjury, for an oath may be taken outside of judicial proceedings, or by other lawful authority, and, although false, would not be perjury, but only false swearing. United States v. Howard, 132 Fed. 325, 338.

Comp. Laws 1909, § 2177, defines "oath" as including every mode of attesting the truth of that which is stated which is authorized by law. Town of Checotah v. Town of Eufaula, 119 Pac. 1014, 1017, 31 Okl. 85.

The requirement of Civ. Code 1910, § 5049, that exceptions to the award of arbitrators be made "on oath," is not met by affidavit of the party filing such exception that they are true to the best of his knowledge and belief. Winn v. Miller, 71 S. E. 658, 659, 136 Ga. 388.

OATH OF OFFICE

See Neglect to Take Oath.

OATH-BOUND FRATERNITY

"Oath-bound" and "secret," as used in St. 1909, p. 332, prohibiting "secret, oath-bound" fraternities in the public schools, are synonymous. Bradford v. Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco, 121 Pac. 929, 932, 18 Cal. App. 19.

OATS

See Country Run Oats; Texas Red Rust-Proof Oats.

As provisions, see Provisions.

The word "oats" is defined as "provisions laid in large for man and beast." Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Graham, 74 Pac. 232, 233, 67 Kan. 791 (citing Dr. Johnson's Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

OAT FEED

Since the term "oat feed" in its ordinary acceptance does not mean the whole oat grain, either crushed or ground, but instead means that part of the grain which remains after the miller subtracts the portions useful for human food, consisting of nubbins, middlings, hulls, and oat dust, a compound substance sold in packages under the name "Corno Horse and Mule Feed," and described on the package as a "mixture of ground alfalfa, oats, corn, alfalfa, oat and hominy feeds," with the name of the manufacturer and place of manufacture, followed by an analysis of its contents, was not misbranded in violation of the food and drugs act (Act Cong. June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 768), because it contained an excess of oat hulls in compound and not the whole ground oats.

United States v. One Car Load of Corno Horse and Mule Feed, 188 Fed. 453, 457.

OAT HULLS

A by-product in the manufacture of oatmeal, which consists merely of the broken hulls of the oats, and is known as "oatmeal feed," is dutiable as "oat hulls," under the Tariff Act of July 24, 1897. United States v. McGettrick, 139 Fed. 304.

OBITER DICTUM

See Dictum.

OBJECT

See Natural Object of His Bounty.

"Object" is the end to be attained by a given action or effort. Sawter v. Shoenthal, 80 Atl. 101, 81 N. J. Law, 197.

Of action

"The 'object' of an action is the relief demanded; the recovery of damages or the land or personalty sued for; the restraint or other relief demanded." Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co., 48 S. E. 642, 643, 136 N. C. 89, 1 Ann. Cas. 456.

Of conspiracy

Under Rev. St. § 5440, making criminal a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States or to defraud it, where one or more of the conspirators do some act to effect the "object" of the conspiracy, it is not enough that the conspiracy be directed to the attainment of some unlawful object, but it must be directed to the attainment of such an object as brings the conspiracy within the class made criminal, and, when that object is attained, "the object of the conspiracy" is effected, and there can be no further overt act. Lonabaugh v. United States, 179 Fed. 476, 481, 103 C. C. A. 56.

Of statute or ordinance

The "object" of a law is the aim or purpose of the enactment. State v. De Hart, 33 South. 605, 606, 109 La. 570.

"The object of an act," as used in Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 4, requiring that every law shall embrace but one "object," and that shall be expressed in its title, means the end or aim of the subject. There must not be mixed in one and the same act such things as have no proper relation to each other. To except from an act one of the class which the act would otherwise interdict is not to intermingle subjects having no relation to each other, but to legislate on a subject covered by the statute and germane to its provisions, and to give expression in the one act to the legislative purpose covering all the subjects embraced within the object of the statute. The act entitled "An act for the protection of pigeons and other fowl and constituting the violation of its provisions a misdemeanor," approved April 12, 1904 (P.

L. p. 515) is not in conflict with such constitutional provisions. State v. Davis, 61 Atl. 2, 3, 72 N. J. Law, 345.

Under the requirement of the Constitution that the "object" of an act must be expressed in its title, the true rule is that the object expressed must give notice of the effect of the legislation to one conversant with the existing state of the law. The validity of the title is not to be determined by nice distinctions of etymology or definition of words, but by the facts of the case and the history of the legislation. Sawter v. Shoen-thal, 83 Atl. 1004, 83 N. J. Law, 499; Harris v. American Casualty Co. of Reading, Pa., 85 Atl. 194, 83 N. J. 641, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 70.

OBJECTION

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

Exception synonymous, see Exception.

Subject to objection, see Subject To.

Cases on appeal are tried from a bill of "exceptions," not a bill of "objections." It is true that the word "object" in certain connections may have the same meaning as "except." In the course of a trial an objection is made to the end that a ruling of the court may be had. This ruling is not upon what the court itself has done, but upon what the parties are doing or offering to do. The objection goes to the act of persons other than the court and is made to get action from the court. When the court acts, the error is preserved by an exception to the ruling. Thus the origin of the term "bill of exceptions." Harding v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 134 S. W. 641, 643, 232 Mo. 444, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1221.

OBJECTIONABLE JUROR

An "objectionable juror" is one against whom exists some ground or cause, such as the formation of opinion or some prejudice, which might be ground, of challenge, and would tend to show that the jury was not absolutely fair and impartial. Carter v. State, 76 S. W. 437, 439, 45 Tex. Or. R. 430.

OBJECTIVE SYMPTOM

"Objective symptoms" are those which the surgeon discovers from a physical examination of his patient, while subjective symptoms are those he learns from what his patient tells him. Dean v. Wabash R. Co., 129 S. W. 953, 957, 229 Mo. 425.

OBLIGATE

OBLIGATION

See Civil Obligation; Existing Obligations; General Obligation; Imperfect Obligation; Joint Obligation; Moral Obligation; Natural Obligation; Original Obligation; Pecuniary Obligation; Personal Obligation; Right Arising Out of an Obligation; Several Obligation; Single Obligation; Strictly Obligatory Obligation.

Other obligation by which debt is secured, see Other.

"The word 'obligation' * * * imports an existing moral or physical necessity." Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 87, 144, 3 L. Ed. 162 (Johnson, J., dissenting).

The term "obligation," as used in Louisiana, is in its general and most extended sense synonymous with "duty." Obligations are of three kinds, imperfect, natural, and civil, or perfect, obligations. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Stewart, South. 138, 143, 119 La. 392.

The term "obligation," as used in Beard v. United States, 1895, art. 1194, subd. 5, providing that when one has contracted in writing to perform an obligation in a particular country, suit may be brought therein or in the country of defendant's domicile, means such an obligation that its breach would deprive the other party of some appreciable right or cause him some actionable damage; as where a written contract for the sale of lumber did not provide that the price was to be paid in H. county, or provide where the lumber was to be delivered, merely providing that the seller should pay the freight to a point in that county, there was no obligation to be performed in H. county which was breached by the buyer's refusal to order and receive the remainder of the lumber, whether the contract of sale be considered as executed or executory; the refusal to pay the full contract price being the only material obligation breached in the first instance, and the seller's measure of damages not being affected by such refusal, if the contract was executory. Ogburn-Dalch Lumber Co. v. Taylor (Tex.) 126 S. W. 452.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 373, providing that in pleading the performance of a condition precedent in a contract it shall be sufficient to allege generally that the party performed all the conditions on his part, an allegation that plaintiff fully performed the obligations required of her was a sufficient compliance; for, while "obligation" and "condition" are not synonymous terms, the effect of a valid condition is to impose upon the party to whom it applies the obligation of performance. Security Accident Sick Ben. Ass'n v. Lee, 66 N. E. 745, 160 Ind. 249.

In an action on notes, defendant interposed a counterclaim for damages through violation of instructions by plaintiff's former firms as factors, alleging that plaintiff assumed and agreed to pay the "obligations" of such firms. Held, that while the word "obligations" has been limited on the one hand to sealed instruments of a certain kind only and extended on the other to include all legal duties, though as commonly used it im-lies no more than a cause of action evidenced by a writing, and would not extend to an unliquidated liability sounding in tort, it would on demurrer be assumed that the pleader used the word in its larger sense, and the remedy for indefiniteness being by motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 546, the counterclaim would be held to state a cause of action on contract. Carroll v. Sharp, 122 N. Y. Supp. 694, 697, 67 Misc. Rep. 254.

Rev. Codes, § 4965, defines a "contract" as an agreement to do or not to do a certain thing. Section 4966 provides that to a contract there should be parties capable of contracting, their consent, a lawful object, and a sufficient cause of consideration. Section 4892 defines an "obligation" as a legal duty by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing. Section 4893 provides that an obligation arises either from the contract of the parties or by operation of law. Section 6446 provides that an action upon a contract, account, or promise not founded upon an instrument in writing must be commenced within five years. Section 6447 provides that an action upon an obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument in writing other than a contract, account, or promise must be commenced within three years. Defendant, acting as agent to sell real property to plaintiff, received $5,000 on the purchase price. The sale was not completed, and but $4,000 was returned to plaintiff. Held, in an action for the balance that the terms "contract" and "obligation," as used in sections 6446 and 6447, were defined by sections 4965, 4966, 4892, and 4893, and as there was no contract between the parties for the return of the money an action to enforce its return was not an action upon a contract as defined by the Codes, or as used in the statute of limitations, but the duty to return the money was an "obligation" or legal duty, and the action being upon an obligation, not founded upon an instrument in writing within the statute of limitations, and not being brought within three years, was barred. Schaeffer v. Miller, 109 Pac. 970, 973, 41 Mont. 417, 137 Am. St. Rep. 746.

Agreement in writing

The words "obligation executed," as used in P. L. 1902, p. 459, prohibiting any corporation from pleading usury on any obligation executed by it, refers to corporate obligations such as bonds, mortgages, and the like, and does not apply to an agreement to pay a usurious commission to an agent. Mazarin v. Hudson County Real Estate & Building Co., 78 Atl. 322, 323, 80 N. J. Law, 35.

Check

A bank check is not an "obligation for the payment of money," within the legal meaning of such term as used in Rev. St. § 5451, providing for the punishment of bribery of United States officers. The definitions of the word "check" as given in 1 Bouv.

Law Dict. 225, 1 Abb. Law Dict. 214, 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. (4th Ed.) § 1566, Blah. St. Crimes (2d Ed.) p. 299, § 328, and People v. Howell (N. Y.) 4 Johns. 301, do not support the proposition that a "check" is an "obligation for the payment of money," within the meaning of the statute. The definitions of the word "obligation" as found in 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 254, Whart. Law Dict., 2 Abb. Law Dict. 193, Strong v. Wheaton (N. Y.) 38 Barb. 616, Crandall v. Bryan (N. Y.) 15 How. Prac. 48, Rippon's Ex'rs v. Townsend's Ex'rs (S. C.) 1 Bay, 445, and Basehore v. Rhodes, 85 Pa. 44, are not sufficiently broad to cover the case of a "check." A "check" is a representation by the drawer that he has money on deposit with the drawee subject to his order. The law implies a consideration for the check, and a promise on the part of the drawer to pay the amount of the check in case it is not paid or accepted by the bank or banker on which it is drawn. The giving of a check is not the creation of an obligation, but is merely the admission by the drawer of the existence of an obligation to pay a certain sum of money. If payable to bearer, or to the order of the payee, it is negotiable and passes by delivery or indorsement; but the check imposes no obligation on the drawee to pay the same, at least as between the drawee and payee; but if the bank refuses to pay the check, having funds with which to pay the same, the payee cannot maintain an action in law or in equity against the bank unless the bank has accepted the check. A check is neither a draft or bill of exchange, although it has many of the features of a bill of exchange and some of the features of a draft. It is not a bond or a promissory note. It is not a contract, for it contains no promise by the drawer to any person. United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 645, 650 (citing Bull v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Sup. Ct. 62, 123 U. S. 110, 111, 31 L. Ed. 97; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 604, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Chapman v. People, 39 Mich. 357, 359; In re Richter, 100 Fed. 295, 297; U. S. v. Royall, 3 Cranch, C. C. 618, 27 Fed. Cas. 906; Elsasser v. Haines, 18 Atl. 1095, 52 N. J. Law, 10; Sinton v. Carter County, 23 Fed. 535, 537, 538; Regina v. Reed, 8 Carrington & Payne, 623; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 604, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Bull v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Sup. Ct. 62, 123 U. S. 110, 111, 31 L. Ed. 97; People v. Howell [N. Y.] 4 Johns. 296, 301).

Debt or liability

Obligation as debt, see Debt.

Rev. St. Ohio 1892, § 3300, authorizes any railroad company to purchase a railroad constructed by another company, and declares that after such purchase the purchasing company shall be vested of all the rights and powers in respect to the location, construction, completion, and operation of such railroad, and shall be subject to all the duties,

"obligations," and restrictions of the former company. Held, that a claim for breach of a contract to transport plaintiff's stone for a specified rate, existing against a railroad company whose line was purchased by defendant, was not an "obligation" which defendant was bound to perform under such section; defendant never having agreed to assume such liability. Rice v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 153 Fed. 497, 498, 82 C. C. A. 447.

Where testator paid the secured debt of his insane nephew in order to preserve the security for the nephew in case he regained his reason, the nephew's liability to reimburse testator was an "obligation" within Rev. St. 1909, § 1889, declaring that actions on contracts, obligations, or liabilities, express or implied, shall be barred in five years, and hence an action to enforce testator's right to subrogation must be brought within that time. Petty v. Tucker, 148 S. W. 142, 144, 166 Mo. App. 98.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 5047, relating to attachment, defines "debtor" as one who by reason of an existing obligation has or may become liable to pay money to another, whether such liability is certain or contingent, and, so defined, the term "debtor" has its usual signification; that is, one from whom a debt is due, using the word according to its common meaning. Section 3762 defines an "obligation" as a legal duty by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing. The several sections quoted make it plain that the Legislature has broadened the common meaning of the words "debtor" and "creditor," so as to include all persons from whom or to whom obligations are due, whether arising from contract or imposed by law; but none of these provisions define the term "debt," or furnish ground for the contention that "debt" and "obligation" are synonymous. It will be conceded that the common and ordinary meaning of the term "debt," in legal acceptance of the term, is an obligation resting upon contract, either express or implied. Under the statutory definitions of a debtor, it is not necessary to owe a debt. It is sufficient if one owes an obligation imposed by law. Every debt, however, is an obligation; but every obligation is not a debt. "Obligation" is the broader term; "debt," the narrower. The term "obligation" includes all debts. The term "debt" does not include all obligations, but only that particular kind of obligations known as debts. The statement, therefore, that the Legislature has specifically defined the term "debt," and that the term "debt" is synonymous with the word "obligation," is not sustained by the statute. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 97 N. W. 557, 560-563, 12 N. D. 227.

Deed or sealed instrument

Under Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 745, c. 99, § 12, providing that to an obligation for the payment of any sum not exceeding $200 there may be an extra warrant, duly executed, authorizing any justice of the peace to enter judgment thereon by confession, the word "obligation" imports an instrument under seal, as does the warrant, and hence a note and warrant attached, neither of which were under seal, do not give a justice authority to enter judgment by confession. Slaughter v. Provident Sav. Bank of Preston, Md. (Del.) 80 Atl. 243, 244, 2 Boyce, 333.

Duty as obligation

See Duty.

Enforceable obligation

A promise founded upon a good consideration rendered at the time is obligatory and enforceable. A loan of money and simple contract debts are familiar instances of the kind. The promise to repay the money or to discharge the debt becomes binding and obligatory by reason of the promisor having received a consideration for making it. When, however, a promise, by whatsoever reason, has become binding, it is more aptly termed an "obligation." But a promise of material import will support a counter promise, and vice versa. When mutually entered into, they operate one as a consideration for the other; thus constituting an agreement binding and obligatory upon both parties. Where the agreement is wholly executory, it is essential that the obligation be mutual; else there is no consideration for its support, and it is but a mere nudum pactum. Livesley v. Johnston, 76 Pac. 946, 948, 45 Or. 30, 65 L. R. A. 783, 106 Am. St. Rep. 647.

Liability enforceable against homestead

The meaning of the word "obligations," as used in Const. 1885, art. 10, § 1, providing that an exemption of a homestead shall not apply to obligations contracted for the purchase of the property or for improvements thereon, means a debt contracted to be paid, or a duty to be performed by the purchaser, as a consideration of the purchase. Platt v. Platt, 39 South. 536, 537, 50 Fla. 594 (quoting and adopting definition in Whitaker v. Elliott, 73 N. C. 186, and citing Fox v. Brooks, 88 N. C. 234).

A loan to the owner of a homestead, to pay a note due for the purchase money of the homestead, the lender taking the owner's note, with an indorsement of a third person thereon to whom he looks for payment, is not an "obligation," within a constitutional exception rendering a homestead liable for an obligation contracted for the purchase thereof. Wilhelm v. Locklar, 35 South. 6, 46 Fla. 575, 110 Am. St. Rep. 111.

Should implying

Should implying, see Should.

Tax

In reference to the payment of taxes, the terms "obligation" and "duty" are used two senses; the first being in reference to individuals, and the second being in reference to the sovereign imposing the tax. The matter of obligation to individuals arises from the legal or equitable relation of the parties; the matter of duty to the sovereign is fixed by the legislative enactments imposing the tax. In neither case is the measure of obligation fixed by the mere fact of an interest in an estate in the land. It is settled by the authorities that the party under obligation to pay taxes cannot acquire a title at a tax sale. Shringley v. Black, 71 Pac. 301, 303, 13 Kan. 213 (dissenting opinion, quoting Pratt v. Price, 18 Fla. 289).

Tort

An order of the federal court directing a receiver of a railroad to restore to the railroad its property in his hands on the agreement of the railroad to assume "all legal liabilities and obligations of" the receiver existing on a designated date and save the receiver harmless against the payment of any liabilities incurred by him, imposes on the railroad the payment of liabilities incidental to the receiver's operation of the road, including the liability for injuries to a passenger through the negligence of the receiver's servants; the word "obligations" meaning duties arising out of a contract or from an actionable tort, and the word "liabilities" including any form of legal obligation measured by money valuation, whether arising from contract, express or implied, from duty imposed by law or judgment of court, or in consequence of a tort. Vandalia R. Co. v. Keys, 91 N. E. 173, 175, 46 Ind. App. 353 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4878).

OBLIGATION BY WHICH DEBT IS SECURED

Const. art. 13, § 1, permits provision, except in case of credits secured, for a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents. Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 3, provides that a mortgage, or other "obligation" by which a debt is secured, when land is pledged, shall, for the purposes of taxation, be deemed as interest in the land so pledged, and by subdivision 6 the term "credits" means those solvent debts not secured owing to the person assessed, and the term "debt" means those unsecured liabilities owing by the person assessed to bona fide residents and section 3628, provides that, in assessing solvent credits not secured, a reduction shall be made of debts due bona fide residents, and section 3630, subd. 15, provides that in entering assessments containing solvent credits, subject to deduction, the assessor must enter in the proper column the value of debts and deduct them therefrom. Const. art. 13, § 1, provides that a mortgage, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed an interest in the property affected. Pol. Code, § 3627, contains the same provision. Held, that a collateral security of credits by a loan on personalty was not a mortgage, etc., or "other obligation by which a debt is secured," within Const. art. 13, § 4, that section applying only to liens on land; nor was it a "mortgage or trust deed," within section 1, so that the person assessed on such credits was entitled to have his debts deducted therefrom; and Pol. Code, § 3629, subd. 6, directing the assessor to require each person assessed to show separately all solvent credits unsecured, is not applicable, not referring to the assessor's duty in making the assessment, but only prescribing the form of the taxpayer's return for the assessor's information. Bank of Willows v. Glenn County, 101 Pac. 13, 155 Cal. 352.

OBLIGATION FRAUDULENTLY INCURRED

A debtor, who by fraudulent representations procures an extension of time within which to pay a debt, fraudulently incurs an "obligation," within Rev. St. § 2781, subd. 4, and renders his property subject to attachment. First Nat. Bank of Stevens Point v. Rosenfeld, 28 N. W. 370, 371, 66 Wis. 292.

OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT

See Impairing Obligation of Contract.

"The 'obligation of a contract,' within the meaning of the Constitution is a valid subsisting obligation, not a contingent or speculative one." Ochiltree v. Iowa Railroad Contracting Co., 21 Wall. (88 U. S.) 249, 252, 22 L. Ed. 546.

The "obligation of a contract" is its engaging quality, the attribute of binding force upon the parties to it. State ex rel. Coleman v. Pullman Co., 90 Pac. 319, 321, 75 Kan. 664.

The "obligation of a contract" consists of the binding force of its stipulations upon those who make them, and depends upon the continued existence of the means of enforcing its stipulations; otherwise a contract would be without obligation, and would have only such effect as the parties should choose to give it, and a state law which unreasonably restricts the time to sue in its own courts to enforce the judgment of a sister state on an existing contract impairs the obligation of the contract and is invalid. Lamb v. Powder River Live Stock Co., 132 Fed. 434, 439, 65 C. C. A. 570, 67 L. R. A. 558.

"The 'obligation of a contract' consists in its binding force on the party who makes it. This depends on the laws in existence when it is made. These are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and form a part of them as the measure of the obligation to perform them by the one party and the right acquired by the other. There can be no other standard by which to ascertain the extent of either than that which the terms of the contract indicate, according to their settled legal meaning. When it becomes consummated, the law defines the duty and the right, compels one party to perform the thing contracted for, and gives the other a right to enforce the performance by the remedies then in force. If any subsequent law affect to diminish the duty or to impair the right, it necessarily bears on the obligation of the contract in favor of one party, to the injury of the other; hence any law which in its operation amounts to a denial or obstruction of the rights accruing by a contract, though professing to act only on the remedy, is directly obnoxious to the prohibition of the Constitution." "The obligation of a contract in the constitutional sense is the means provided by law by which it can be enforced—by which the parties can be obliged to perform it. Whatever legislation lessens the efficacy of these means impairs the obligation. If it tend to postpone or retard the enforcement of the contract, the obligation of the latter is to that extent weakened." Harrison v. Remington Paper Co., 140 Fed. 385, 391, 392, 72 C. C. A. 405, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 5 Ann. Cas. 314 (quoting and adopting the definitions in McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. [43 U. S.] 608, 611, 612, 11 L. Ed. 397, and Louisiana ex rel. Ranger v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 206, 26 L. Ed. 132); Myers v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 139 Fed. 111, 115, 71 C. C. A. 199, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171 (adopting definition in McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. [43 U. S.] 608, 611, 11 L. Ed. 397).

Remedy as part of

The remedy, where it affects substantial rights, is included in the terms "obligation of a contract," and the remedy cannot be altered so as to materially impair such obligation. Welsh v. Cross, 81 Pac. 229, 230, 146 Cal. 621, 106 Am. St. Rep. 63, 2 Ann. Cas. 796 (citing Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 600, 24 L. Ed. 793).

"The 'obligation of a contract' includes everything within its obligatory scope. Among these elements nothing is more important than the means of enforcement; that is the breath of its vital existence. Without it a contract, in the view of the law, ceases to be, and falls into the class of those 'imperfect obligations,' as they are termed, which depend for their fulfillment upon the will and conscience of those upon whom they rest. The ideas of right and remedy are inseparable. * * * The laws which subsist at the time and place of making a contract enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms. This rule embraces alike those which affect its validity, construction, discharge, and enforcement." Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 569, 15 N. D. 5, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 125 Am. St. Rep. 574 (quoting and adopting definitions in Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. Ed. 793).

"The 'obligation of a contract,' in the constitutional sense, is the means provided by law by which it can be enforced, by which the parties can be obliged to perform it. Ex parte Folsom, 131 Fed. 496, 503; Herman & Grace v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 64 Atl. 742, 745, 71 N. J. Ed. 541 (quoting Louisiana ex rel. Ranger v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 206, 26 L. Ed. 132). Thus a constitutional amendment intended to impair the means provided by law for the payment of municipal bonds is obnoxious to the federal Constitution. Ex parte Folsom, 131 Fed. 496, 503 (quoting and adopting definition in Louisiana ex rel. Ranger v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 206, 26 L. Ed. 132).

OBLIGATION OF UNITED STATES

United States treasury checks, or orders issued for interest accrued upon registered bonds of the United States, where intended for immediate payment, may be taxed by a state, in the hands of the owner, without violating Rev. St. U. S. § 3701, exempting "obligations of the United States" from state taxation. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. City and County of San Francisco, 26 Sup. Ct. 285, 286, 200 U. S. 310, 50 L. Ed. 495, Ann. Cas. 934.

OBLIGATORY WRITING

See Writing Obligatory.

What constitutes a writing, see Writings—Writings.

OBLIGEE

As creditor, see Creditor.

OBLITERATE—OBLITERATION

OBLITERATED CORNER

Section 2 of a circular of the United States General Land Office relative to the restoration of lost or obliterated corners defines an "obliterated corner" as one where no visible evidence remains of the work of the original surveyor in establishing it; and defines a "lost corner" as one, the position of which cannot be determined beyond reasonable doubt, either from original or reliable marks or reliable external evidence. Craven v. Lesh, 126 Pac. 774, 775, 22 Idaho, 463.

OBSCENE—OBSCENITY

The word "obscene," when used, as in the statute, to describe the character of a book, pamphlet, or paper, means containing immodest and indecent matter, the reading whereof would have a tendency to deprave and corrupt the minds of those into whose hands the publication might fall, whose minds are open to such immoral influences. United States v. Moore, 129 Fed. 159, 160 (citing United States v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 732).

The word "obscene" means "offensive to senses; repulsive; disgusting; foul; filthy; offensive to modesty or decency; impure; unchaste; indecent; lewd." Holcombe v. State, 62 S. E. 647, 648, 5 Ga. App. 47.

In Rev. St. § 3893, as amended in 1888, making it a misdemeanor to mail any obscene writing, the word "obscene" should be taken fully as broad a significance as it had in common law. Knowles v. United States, 1 Fed. 409, 412, 95 C. C. A. 579.

A letter held not to contain matter which is "obscene, lewd or lascivious," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 3893, so as to render its mailing an indictable offense thereunder. United States v. O'Donnell, 165 Fed. 218, 220.

The word "vulgar," as used in the act of May 6, 1893 (Gen. Laws, p. 177, c. 121), as amended by the act of April 27, 1901 (Gen. Laws, p. 314, c. 136), requiring a bond by liquor dealers to keep an orderly house, and providing that it must not contain any vulgar or obscene pictures, conveys such meaning, with its companion word "obscene," as to accomplish the purpose of the statute, which was to prevent the exhibitions in saloons of immoral and indecent pictures. The word "obscene" in the statute is not limited to pictures suggestive of lewdness or obscenity. An instruction defining "obscene" as "offensive to chastity and decency, impure, expressing or presenting to the mind in view something which delicacy, purity, and decency forbid to be exposed," is erroneous. Raley v. State, 105 S. W. 342, 344, Tex. Civ. App. 426.

Insulting language

A remark to a married woman; "Look in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?"—will not sustain a conviction for using "obscene and vulgar language" in the presence of a female, where there is nothing in the evidence to indicate that the remark was intended to convey an obscene and vulgar meaning. Roberts v. State, 47 S. E. 511, 512, 120 Ga. 177.

The phrase "obscene and vulgar language," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 396, making a person who shall use obscene and vulgar language in the presence of a female guilty of a misdemeanor, includes any foul words which would reasonably offend the sense of modesty and decency of a woman in whose presence the words are spoken, under the circumstances of the case. Holcombe v. State, 62 S. E. 647, 648, 5 Ga. App. 47.

"Language" is a generic term, and includes any words or speech by which thought may be conveyed, and language may be "obscene and vulgar" when used in the presence of a female without the use of a single word which could be intrinsically classified as being obscene and vulgar. Morris v. State, 85 S. E. 58, 59, 6 Ga. App. 395.

Sexual impurity

As used in Rev. St. § 3893, declaring every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, print, or other publication of an indecent character, or notices giving information for obtaining such publications, to be nonmailable matter, and prescribes a punishment for the use of the mails to transmit or circulate the same, the word "obscene" signifies that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity, having the same meaning as is given them at common law in prosecutions for obscene libel. Hanson v. United States, 157 Fed. 749, 750, 85 C. C. A. 325.

OBSCURE

"Obscure" means not clear, full, or distinct; clouded; imperfect. "Obscurement of reason" is not synonymous with "dethronement of reason" as a definition of "heat of passion." Dillon v. State, 119 N. W. 352, 356, 137 Wis. 655, 16 Ann. Cas. 913.

OBSCUREMENT OF REASON

Dethronement of reason distinguished, see Dethronement of Reason.

OBSERVE

The word "observe" is defined to mean "to notice with care; to be on the watch respecting." An employé has the right to assume that a machine is safe, and is chargeable with notice of dangers or defects that are plain and obvious to view, but is not bound to make an inspection to ascertain if the machine is free from defects; that is, he is not required "to take notice with care" and "to be on the watch" for defects or imperfections, which would be implied from the use of the word "observe" in an instruction that the law required him to be observing, and that his failure to observe what he should have observed would defeat a recovery. Rock Island Sash & Door Works v. Pohlman, 71 N. E. 428, 430, 210 Ill. 133.

Where, by defendant's constitution, benefits were restricted to members in good standing who had paid all dues, and who faithfully observed the laws, rules, commands, and regulations then in force, or which might thereafter be added to the constitution, by-laws, and rules, and in taking his obligation of membership, without which admittance was impossible, decedent agreed in writing to abide by the constitution as it then was, or might thereafter be amended, the words "to observe" and "to abide by" meant to obey and to accept the consequences of, and, so far as amendments were concerned, were not restricted to amendments of those laws and rules as related entirely to disciplinary and social regulations, but extended as well to amendments affecting decedent's right to benefits. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Smith, 192 Fed. 102, 104, 112 C. C. A. 442.

Sunday

Unless an individual ceases from labor on Sunday, he does not "observe" the day, within the meaning of Cr. Code, § 241, and if he does on every Sunday, or the seventh day of the week, refrain from labor, he observes that day. Ex parte Caldwell, 118 N. W. 133, 135, 82 Neb. 544.

OBSTACLE

As obstruction of highway

The word "obstacle," as used in a statute making it a misdemeanor to cut or place a tree, brush, or other obstacle across a public road, so as to impede travel, and not remove the same within six hours, should be construed as referring to obstructions of a temporary character, which, if not willful, do not become criminal unless they remain for as long as six hours. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. State, 40 South. 991, 992, 145 Ala. 99.

OBSTETRICS

As practice of medicine, see Practice of Medicine.

OBSTINATE DESERTION

See, also, Desertion.

"'Obstinate' means determined, fixed, persistent." "Even if a wife deserts without cause, and afterwards realizes that she has acted hastily or foolishly, and would return if the way was opened for her, but the husband refrains from doing anything to induce her to return, for the purpose of making her absence a ground for divorce, her desertion is not 'obstinate,' and not, therefore, a ground for divorce." A husband is not bound to attempt to induce his wife to return, when it is clear any effort in that direction would be unavailing. Hudson v. Hudson, 51 South. 857, 858, 859, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 21 Ann. Cas. 278 (quoting and adopting definition in Trall v. Trall, 32 N. J. Eq. 231).

A desertion can only be adjudged "obstinate" within the statute relating to divorce when it has resisted such efforts or concessions as the party alleging desertion ought, under the particular circumstances, to have made to prevent it or to bring it to an end, though the conduct of the deserting party may be of such a nature that the desertion will be deemed obstinate without any effort on the part of the deserted party to prevent or terminate it. Kipp v. Kipp, 78 Atl. 682, 77 N. J. Eq. 585.

OBSTRUCT—OBSTRUCTION

See Lawful Obstructions; Temporary Obstruction; Wrongful Obstruction.

See, also, Obstacle.

Of due administration of justice

Since the United States commissioner, after having held a person accused to answer to the federal courts, has no further duty to perform in the matter, a subsequent assault committed by such accused on the commissioner, induced by the latter's act, does not constitute an "obstruction of justice," within Rev. St. § 5399, providing for the punishment of every person "who corruptly, or by threats or force, obstructs or impedes, or endeavors to obstruct or impede, the due administration of justice" in any court of the United States. United States v. McLeod, 119 Fed. 416, 418.

A bare attempt, without success, to induce a third person to do what he could to influence jurors in a pending case in a federal court, did not obstruct or impede the administration of justice, so as to constitute a contempt, punishable under Rev. St. § 725, under the rule that, to constitute such contempt, the act done by the accused must naturally and directly tend to such obstruction. As stated in United States v. Seeley, 27 Fed. Cas. 1010, "to 'obstruct,' independent of the acceptance the word has obtained in the criminal law, would seem to stand ex vi termini a direct and positive interposition, which prevented or tended to prevent the action of the officer or court in respect to a matter then to be proceeded in. 'Impede' must necessarily bear a similar import, and, if there be any discrimination between the two terms, it can only be that the same direct and positive interference may, without amounting to a complete obstruction, become an impediment to the action intended to be intercepted. The intention of the Legislature to give these terms an application only to direct acts of violence or menace is inferable from the construction that the endeavor is made equally criminal with the entire completion of the purpose. An endeavor to obstruct or impede, etc., by threats or force, would necessarily imply the effort to put forth some act which in its natural, if not necessary, consequence must be attended with an obstruction, and with a forced and compelled interruption of further progress in the administration of justice." United States v. Carroll, 147 Fed. 947, 953 (citing United States v. Bittinger, 24 Fed. Cas. 1149; Ex parte McRae, 77 S. W. 211, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 285).

Of highway

As injury to property, see Injury to Property.

As public nuisance, see Public Nuisance.

The term "obstruction," used with reference to a street or highway, means the placing of obstacles or impediments in the way, so as to prevent free passage along it and render it difficult for travel. People v. Eckerson, 117 N. Y. Supp. 419, 422, 133 App. Div. 220.

A street railway company's act in permitting its cars to stand upon its tracks for a reasonable length of time does not constitute an "obstruction of a highway." Poland v. United Traction Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 498, 500, 107 App. Div. 561.

An "obstruction" is a blocking up; filling with obstacles or impediments; impeding; embarrassing or opposing the passage along and over a street. Meservey v. Gulliford, 93 Pac. 780, 786, 14 Idaho, 133 (citing Chase v. City of Oshkosh, 51 N. W. 560, 81 Wis. 313, 15 L. R. A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898; 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4891).

An "obstruction" is an obstacle in the way, or an impediment or hindrance which impedes, embarrasses, opposes, or interferes with the free passage along the highway. A petition in an action for damages for the removal of a cattleway across a public highway, which alleges that the cattleway was not a direct obstruction, does not negative the inference that it was an obstruction within Code Supp. 1907, § 1560, requiring the road supervisor to remove all obstructions in the road. Davis v. Pickerell, 117 N. W. 276, 277, 139 Iowa, 186.

A "street" is a public way, from side to side and end to end, so that any private use which in any degree hinders or prevents its free use as a public way to its full extent is an "obstruction" or "incumbrance" within the meaning of the law. Lacey v. City of Oskaloosa, 121 N. W. 542, 544, 143 Iowa, 704, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 853.

An "obstruction" is merely matter out of place, and that which may be a stepping stone in a position where it is needed and may be used as such becomes an obstruction when occupying a place intended for other use, and where it is not needed and cannot be so used. Where a pavement has been laid, the asphalt surface of which lays smoothly down to the curb, a block of stone placed within the curb is an "obstruction," and becomes a nuisance. McCormack v. Robin, 52 South. 779, 781, 126 La. 594, 139 Am. St. Rep. 549.

An embankment in a street dedicated to public travel and traveled as a public street, is an "obstruction," and under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 160, c. 153) the superintendent of streets is liable for failing to take steps to protect against the danger to public travel caused thereby. Merritt v. McFarland, 88 Pac. 369, 370, 4 Cal. App. 890.

The placing of a fence across a public road constitutes an "obstruction," within Rev. Code 1852, as amended 1893, p. 501, c. 60, § 31, declaring that, if any person shall obstruct a public road, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. State v. Southard (Del.) 66 Atl. 372, 373, 6 Pennewill, 247. But a fence permitted by a city to remain across an unopened street after the land had been acquired for street purposes is not an illegal "obstruction," so as to entitle one to recover damages caused by surface flood water turned back over his land by the fence; such permission being expressly authorized by the city's charter. Parsons Bros. v. City of New York, 95 N. Y. Supp. 131, 133, 107 App. Div. 324.

A barbed-wire fence intentionally placed nearly lengthwise the traveled portion of a public highway; Bartlett v. Beardmore, 46 N. W. 494, 497, 77 Wis. 35; or a structure within the limits of the highway which impedes or seriously inconveniences travel thereon, constitutes an "obstruction" within the meaning of St. 1898, § 1326, imposing a penalty therefor, Jones v. Tobin, 115 N. W. 807, 808, 135 Wis. 286; and a post set between two large stones already in a highway may be an "obstruction" within this statute. Neale v. State, 120 N. W. 345, 346, 138 Wis. 484.

Any object unlawfully placed within the limits of a highway is an "obstruction," if it impedes or seriously inconveniences public travel or renders it dangerous, and it is unnecessary that such object should stop travel in order to be an obstruction. Jennings v. Johannott, 135 N. W. 170, 171, 149 Wis. 660.

The trees, grass, and flowers growing on park strips maintained by a municipality between the curbing and the sidewalk and proper barriers placed around them to protect them are not "obstructions" or nuisances within the meaning of the statute requiring the city council to keep the streets of a municipality open, in repair, and free from nuisance. Village of Barnesville v. Ward, 96 N. E. 937, 938, 85 Ohio St. 1, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1234.

A step 4½ inches high and 10½ inches wide, close up to a building in front of which it is placed, and used as a means of access to it from the street, does not constitute an unlawful "obstruction," and does not interfere to an appreciable or unreasonable extent with the use of the sidewalk, so as to sustain an action by a pedestrian injured by stumbling over it. City of Richmond v. Lambert, 68 S. E. 276, 111 Va. 174, 277, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380.

The lawful change of the grade of a street is not a "use or obstruction of the street," within the meaning of Laws 1889, c. 255, making municipal and other corporations liable for the use or obstruction of streets, so as to materially interfere with their usefulness as such, etc. Smith v. Eau Claire, 47 N. W. 830, 831, 78 Wis. 457.

Of navigation

A barge negligently moored to the bank of a canal, which because of such negligence floats out into the channel of the canal causing a collision with a passing vessel, is clearly within the meaning of the term "obstruction." Gillikin & Gaskell v. Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co., 60 S. E. 654, 147 N. C. 39.

Act Cong. March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 9, 30 Stat. 1151 relating to the "obstruction" of navigable streams, declares that it shall not be lawful to construct or commence the construction of any bridge, dam, dike, or causeway over or in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other navigable water of the United States, unless the consent of Congress to such structures shall have been obtained, and until the plans for the same shall have been approved by the chief of engineers and the Secretary of War, with certain provisos. Section 10 prohibits the creation of any obstruction, not affirmatively authorized by Congress, to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States. Held, that section 10 not only includes the kind of structures specifically referred to in section 9, but all others that may be an obstruction to the navigable capacity of the waters of the United States, without reference to whether the obstruction is but slight, and only temporary. Hubbard v. Fort, 188 Fed. 987, 997.

Of officer

Pen. Code 1895, § 306, making it a misdemeanor to "obstruct," resist, or oppose an officer serving or attempting to execute any lawful process, implies force as a necessary element of the resistance. Moses v. State, 64 S. E. 690, 6 Ga. App. 251.

An officer was sent into a saloon to arrest one S., who was in a fight. The defendant, a one-armed man, who had known the officer for some 30 years and was a friend of the belligerent, put his arm on the officer's shoulder, and told him to let S. go, and he would take him home and take care of him. The officer struck the defendant, who then desisted from any further act. An information was filed, alleging that the defendant had unlawfully obstructed an officer in the discharge of his duty. Penal Code, under which this information was based, provides that any one who willfully delays or obstructs an officer in the discharge of his duty is guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that acts of the defendant did not constitute an obstruction of the officer, as "obstruction" usually means "to impede, hinder, or stop." State v. Knudson, 131 N. W. 400, 401, 27 S. D. 400.

Of prosecution of action

The term "obstruct or hinder" in the statute of limitations imports resistance and obstruction of rights, and unless acts complained of by a creditor are in point of fact such as would hinder or prevent him bringing suit, notwithstanding his desire to do so, they cannot properly be said to obstruct or hinder him. Ky. St. 1903, § 2552, provides that if judgment be rendered for plaintiff in any case provided in the four preceding sections (which refer only to sureties), and the same be afterward reversed or arrested, or if the judgment be obstructed by appeal, supersedeas, or injunction, the time of such obstruction shall also be disallowed, does not apply where an appeal is made in an action against the principal, and so does not suspend the statute of limitations in favor of the sureties. McGovern v. Bectanus (Ky.) 105 S. W. 985, 987, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 390 (citing Reid v. Hamilton, 18 S. W. 770, 92 Ky. 619; Coleman v. Walker, 3 Metc. [60 Ky.] 68, 77 Am. Dec. 163; Kennedy v. Foster's Executor, 14 Bush [77 Ky.] 479).

Of railroad track or train

A statute which requires warnings to be given by a locomotive when an "obstruction" appears on a railroad track extends to persons appearing on the track, or so near thereto as to be within striking distance. One does not pass "beyond striking distance," so as to absolve the railroad from the duty of stopping the train, so long as he was still so close to the track that, having due regard for the instinct of self-preservation and the involuntary movements of the body, there was still a reasonable probability or likelihood that he might fall or be thrown against the side of the engine or train as it passed him. Southern Ry. Co. v. Sutton, 179 Fed. 471, 474, 103 C. C. A. 51.

The word "obstruction," in Code 1907, § 5473, requiring a railroad engineer, on perceiving any "obstruction" on the track, to stop the train, is not to be construed in the sense of "object," and the statute does not require the stoppage of a train on the engineer perceiving any object on the track, as a chicken, turkey, or buzzard. Smith v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 51 South. 792, 793, 153 Ala. 407.

The condition of the atmosphere and the hour of the day do not constitute "obstructions," such as will excuse a traveler from exercising his sense of sight and hearing in crossing a railroad track. On the contrary, the darker it is, the more careful he should be. Morrow v. North Carolina R. Co., 59 S. E. 158, 159, 146 N. C. 14.

An object does not appear on the "road" within Shannon's Code, §§ 1574, 1575, requiring railroads to maintain a lookout on the locomotive, and when any person or other "obstruction appears on the road" to sound the alarm whistle, etc., until the object is near enough to be struck by a passing train. Rogers v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 136 Fed. 573, 574, 69 C. C. A. 321 (citing Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Reidmond, 11 Lea [79 Tenn.] 205).

Of sidewalk

Plaintiff was injured by falling over a plank left by a city contractor across a sidewalk. The court charged that plaintiff in the complaint alleged that defendants had notice of the obstruction in time to have prevented the injury to plaintiff, that notice of the condition might be either actual or constructive, and might be inferred from the length of time the obstruction existed, together with all the other facts and circumstances concerning the same, and in determining whether defendants knew of the obstruction the jury should take into account when it was placed, the length of time it existed, the condition of the street and sidewalk as to whether there was much or little travel, or otherwise, and from all the facts determine whether defendants knew it. Held, that the court did not err in referring to the plank as an "obstruction," since anything which to any extent obstructs the free use of a street or sidewalk is an "obstruction" though every obstruction is not of such a character as to render the street or sidewalk unsafe for use, and that the instruction was not misleading as either assuming or intimating that the obstruction was dangerous or of such a character as to indicate that defendants were negligent in placing it there or permitting it to remain. City of Evansville v. Pifer (Ind.) 100 N. E. 110, 112.

OBTAIN

"Obtain" is defined as follows: "I. trans. 1. To get; procure; secure; acquire; gain; as to obtain a month's leave of absence; to obtain riches. * * * II. intrans. 1. To secure what one desires or strives for; prevail; succeed." An indictment under the federal statute for mailing a letter giving information where and how and of whom and by what means articles and things designed and intended for the procuring of an abortion might be "obtained" states an offense, where it sets out a letter written to defendant inquiring for some medicine or other means for accomplishing such result, and a letter, alleged to have been mailed by defendant in reply, which, when read in connection with the letter of inquiry, in effect offers for a stated consideration to effect the desired result by some treatment or operation, although the particular means is not specified; the word "thing," as used in the statute, being a comprehensive term, which includes any kind of treatment or operation. United States v. Somers, 164 Fed. 259, 262 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

As acquire possession of "Obtain" means "to get hold of by effort," "to get possession of," or "to have in possession." On an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, it appeared that defendant, in Pennsylvania, to establish a financial credit, made written statements to a company in New York, which relied on the same, and accepted his order for goods, and delivered them to a carrier, and they were received in Pennsylvania by the person making the order. Held that, such statements being false and fraudulent, defendant was guilty of "obtaining" goods in Pennsylvania under false pretenses. Commonwealth v. Schmunk, 56 Atl. 1088, 1089, 207 Pa. 544, 99 Am. St. Rep. 801.

OBTAIN VALIDITY

As used in Rev. St. 1909, § 1275, providing that before any school bond "shall obtain validity or be negotiated, such bond shall first be presented to the state auditor, who shall register the same," the term "obtain validity" means to become clothed with validity as a present and subsisting obligation, and the term "negotiated" means sold and put in circulation by delivery in consummation of the sale; and officers of a school district, after bonds have been voted, may advertise for bids and accept a bid for bonds before they have been registered by the state auditor; and hence such acts of the officers furnish no reason for refusing registration. State ex rel. Carrollton School Dist. v. Gordon, 133 S. W. 44, 47, 231 Mo. 547.

OBTAINABLE

The word "obtainable," in a contract providing that scrip exchangeable for tickets will not be honored for passage on trains except from stations where tickets are not obtainable, cannot be given its full natural meaning, but must be restricted to mean that scrip cannot be used for fare on trains, except from stations where tickets are not kept on sale or for exchange for scrip. Kozminsky v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 104 Pac. 570, 572, 36 Utah, 454, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 758.

OBTAINING CREDIT ON FALSE STATEMENT

A financial statement, made by a bankrupt to a mercantile agency in response to a request therefor stating that "this information is asked for and received in strict confidence for commercial use only," is not within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b (3), as added by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4, making it a ground for refusal of a discharge if a bankrupt has "obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit," as respects a creditor who sold goods to the bankrupt more than a year after such statement was made, and such creditor has no standing to oppose a discharge under such provision. Novick v. E. P. Reed & Co., 192 Fed. 20, 112 C. C. A. 408.

OBTAINING PROPERTY BY FALSE PRETENSE

See False Pretense.

OBVIOUS

The word "obvious" means easily discovered, plain, manifest, evident. The Sikh, 175 Fed. 869, 871; State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620 (quoting Webster's Dict.).

A charge that the rules of a railway company are to be strictly construed against the company, and will not be held to enjoin upon an employé a particular duty with respect to a particular subject, unless such duty be comprehended within the clear and "obvious" meaning of the rule itself, and that the violation of a rule by an employé will not forfeit his right to recover unless there has been a negligent violation of the rule, according to its plain and "obvious" meaning, nor unless such violation of the rules has been a contributing cause for his injury, is not erroneous because of the use of the word "obvious," which is a pretty strong sounding word. Its chief juridic employment is by judges of courts of review, who generally pronounce obvious those propositions which they are able to support with but sparse array of precedent and which they are unwilling to put forth as an original dictum without the supporting influence of some strong, impressive, faith-bearing word; for a proposition weak in substance is oft aided in appearance by the strength of sonancy, and "obvious" is a sonant word. However, this word is not absolutely interdicted to the trial judges; and in proper cases they may use it cautiously, if the facts are sufficient to justify it. Georgia, F. & A. Ry. Co. v. Sasser, 61 S. E. 505, 508, 4 Ga. App. 276.

The word "obviously," as used in the rule that the employer will not discharge his duty by furnishing the ordinary place or appliance, if such ordinary place or appliance be obviously dangerous, does not apply to any person, no matter how unskilled or ignorant, but to the ordinarily careful employer who is charged with the duty of furnishing the place or appliance, or to a person possessing equal skill and judgment and opportunity for examination as such an employer. Yazdewski v. Barker, 111 N. W. 689, 690, 691, 131 Wis. 494, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1059.

The word "obviously," before the word dangerous, in an instruction that, where an employé has two ways of performing a duty, one of which is dangerous and the other safe, and he knowingly and voluntarily, or through negligent ignorance, seeks the dangerous one, thereby bringing on himself an injury which probably would not have befallen him if he had selected the other one, merely emphasizes the notion that, to impute contributory negligence to the employé as a matter of law, the danger of the means or methods must have been known to him, or the circumstances must have been such that it ought to have been known to him, and the use of the word does not render the instruction erroneous. Johnson v. Maletta, 87 Pac. 447, 450, 34 Mont. 477.

OBVIOUS DANGER

Exposure to, see Exposure.

Obvious risk of danger, see Obvious Risks.

OBVIOUS DEFECT

See Open and Obvious Defect.

OBVIOUS ERROR

The act of the board in making a gross increase in the aggregate valuation was an "obvious error" within Kirby's Dig. § 7903, providing that, where there has been an obvious error discovered in the assessment of personal property, the owner may have it adjusted upon proper showing to the county court. Board of Equalization of Saline County v. Hughes, 105 S. W. 577, 84 Ark. 347.

OBVIOUS RISKS

An "obvious danger," with reference to the character of an employment, is one that is discoverable in the exercise of that reasonable care which persons of ordinary intelligence may be expected to take for their own safety. Hardy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 115 N. W. 8, 11, 139 Iowa, 314, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997 (citing Newbury v. Getchell & Martin Lumber & Mfg. Co., 69 N. W. 743, 100 Iowa, 451, 62 Am. St. Rep. 582; Hanson v. Hammell, 77 N. W. 839, 107 Iowa, 171).

"Obvious danger," as applied to assumption of risk by a servant, is that danger which would have been seen and observed by reasonably prudent men. James Ramagosa Paper Co. v. Bulduzzi, 147 Fed. 151, 154, 7 C. C. A. 393.

Stepping from a moving train, irrespective of the speed at which it was moving, is not, as a matter of law, an "obvious danger," within an accident insurance company's policy relieving the company from liability for death resulting from exposure to an obvious risk. National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Lokey, 52 South, 45, 47, 166 Ala. 174.

The term "obviously dangerous" means plainly dangerous. If a carrier's station platform is obviously dangerous, the carrier is guilty of the grossest negligence. Randolph v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 79 S. W. 1170, 1171, 106 Mo. App. 648.

A flagstone in a sidewalk 6 feet wide which projected at the highest point 2 1/2 inches above the other stones, and gradually decreased till it was level with the other stones at the outside of the walk, was not an "obviously dangerous" defect, rendering the city liable for injuries to one tripping and falling over it. Davidson v. City of New York, 117 N. Y. Supp. 185, 186, 133 App. Div. 352.

A clause in an accident policy limiting recovery, in case of death "due to unnecessary exposure, to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger," must be deemed to include all cases of exposure to unnecessary danger attributable to negligence on the part of the insured and it is proper to charge the word "obvious," as used in the policy, means "apparent."

at," "perceivable," or whether or not a thing can be seen. Price v. Standard Life & Acc. Co., 99 N. W. 887, 888, 92 Minn. 238.

An "obvious risk" is such as would instantly appeal to the senses of an intelligent person familiar with the business, and about which there can be no difference of opinion in the minds of intelligent persons; and it is not required that the servant make close scrutiny into all the details of the instrumentalities with which he deals to determine the risk involved. Millen v. Pacific Bridge Co., 95 Pac. 196, 199, 51 Or. 538; Gentzkow v. Portland Ry. Co., 102 Pac. 614, 619, 54 Or. 114, 135 Am. St. Rep. 821 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnston v. Oregon S. R. Co., 31 Pac. 283, 286, 23 Or. 94, 1905, and citing and adopting Stevens v. United Gas & Electric Co., 60 Atl. 848, 850, 73 N. H. 159, 163, 70 L. R. A. 119; Bergin v. Southern New England Tel. Co., 38 Atl. 888, 10 Conn. 54, 39 L. R. A. 192; Law v. Central Nat. Printing & Telegraph Co., 140 Fed. 568; Anderson v. Inland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 58 Pac. 657, 19 Wash. 575, 41 L. R. A. 10; Wood, Master & Servant, 763).

Risks which are incident to the business must not be confounded with such as are denominated "obvious." The former sort comprises those which accompany or arise from the natural or usual method of conducting the particular business, and has more special relation to perils which attend the business generally, while the latter include such as are manifest as to the sense of observation, open, and readily discernible, whether they arise from the nature of the business, the particular manner in which it is conducted, or the use of defective and unsafe appliances. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Elec. L. Co. v. Rombold, 106 N. W. 218, 16, 73 Neb. 259.

Laws 1902, p. 1750, c. 600, § 3, providing that an employé, by entering on or continuing in the employer's service, shall be presumed to have assented to the necessary risks of the employment, such risks including those inherent in the nature of the business, after the employer has exercised due care for the safety of employé, and complied with laws regulating such business, distinguishes between "necessary risk" and "obvious risk," the latter may be due to the master's failure to perform his duty. Hurley v. Olcott, 19 N. Y. Supp. 430, 435, 134 App. Div. 631.

In a dissenting opinion in Logerto v. Central Bldg. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 604, 123 App. Div. 840, the term "obvious risk" is defined as such a risk "as is apparent, and it must be apparent to the person who is claimed to have assumed the risk." Ward v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 608, 10, 124 App. Div. 22.

An instruction that a servant, in entering on his employment, "assumed all the obvious and ordinary risks or dangers incident to the employment, and that, if the injury arose out of such obvious risks and dangers, defendant was not liable," was not improper for failure to separate "obvious and ordinary risks" from "the obvious and the ordinary risks"; the case having been tried on the theory that the risk was an ordinary one. Thomas v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 87 Pac. 972, 973, 34 Mont. 370.

OCCASION

See Privileged Occasion; Special Occasion.

The word "occasion," as used in an averment in a pleading of estoppel that S. had full time, occasion, and opportunity in which to notify the plaintiff of a forgery, held to mean, not only time and opportunity, but such conditions and circumstances as required him to speak, or otherwise be forever estopped from denying his signature. Shinew v. First Nat. Bank, 95 N. E. 881, 883, 84 Ohio St. 297, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1006, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 587.

The statute providing that any telegraph company within the state shall be liable for all damages "occasioned" by the negligence of their operators in receiving, copying, transmitting, or delivering messages, does not render telegraph companies liable for damages other than the proximate result of its negligence. The word "occasioned" is used with reference to settled rules of legal responsibility for breach of duty constituting actionable negligence. Fisher v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 96 N. W. 545, 547, 119 Wis. 146.

"Webster defines 'occasion' as follows: 'To cause or to bring about by furnishing the condition or occasion needed for the action of a principal cause; to cause accidentally or incidentally, or simply to cause or bring about.'" A fire insurance policy provided that the company should "not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by invasion, * * * or by order of any civil authority, or for loss or damage occasioned 'by or through * * * earthquake.'" Held, that the words "directly or indirectly" did not apply to the provision respecting earthquake; that, construing such provision most strongly against the insurer, in accordance with the established rule, the word "occasioned" was equivalent to "caused," and related to the origin of the fire, and the provision exempted the company from liability for loss only where an earthquake was the immediate, direct, and proximate cause of the fire which destroyed the property. Baker & Hamilton v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co., 157 Fed. 280, 283. See, also, Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 406, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

Under a fire insurance policy which exempted the insurer from liability for any loss "occasioned by or through earthquake," there can be no recovery if it is shown by a preponderance of the evidence that if there had been no earthquake, and, but for the earthquake, the fire which destroyed the insured property would not have started, and a fire thus started by an earthquake in another building, which spread to and destroyed the insured property, is one occasioned "by or through earthquake" within the meaning of such provision. Henry Hilp Tailoring Co. v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 157 Fed. 285, 286.

OCCASIONAL DRINK

A life policy was issued on an application wherein insured stated that he had no daily habit as to the use of liquor, but took an occasional drink of whisky, and that he had always been in the habit of so doing. Insured drank more or less frequently for weeks at a time, or not at all. His intervals for drinking were not regular. He was never so intoxicated as to be incapable of doing business. Held, that insured's statements were not willfully and intentionally false, and he could recover on the policy; the word "occasional" meaning occurring more or less frequently, but not at fixed or regular intervals. Aris v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 103 Pac. 50, 52, 54 Wash. 269.

An "occasional" glass of beer may mean anything from a glass once a month to one every 15 minutes, according to the capacity of the individual, or, perhaps, according to the "liberality" of his views. A statement in an application for life insurance that the applicant drinks a "glass of beer occasionally" is sufficient to suggest to a discreet person the advisability of further inquiry. Biermann v. Guaranty Mutual Life Ins. Co., 120 N. W. 963, 965, 142 Iowa, 341.

OCCUPANCY

See During Occupancy of Building.

In relation to building insured, see Unoccupied; Vacancy—Vacant—Vacate.

"Occupancy" does not necessarily include residence. Webster defines "occupancy" as "the act of taking or holding possession," and an "occupant" as "one who occupies or takes possession; one who has the actual use or possession, or is in possession of a thing." Twiggs v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 75 Pac. 729, 731, 27 Utah, 241.

OCCUPANCY — OCCUPATION — OCCUPY (Of Land)

See Action for Use and Occupation;

Actual Occupant; Physical Occupancy.

Ready for occupancy, see Ready.

"Occupation" is to hold or keep for use, to possess, to cover or fill. So to say that one occupies or has occupied land continuously is tantamount to saying that he has or has had actual possession of the same. Hall v. Roberts (Ky.) 74 S. W. 199, 200 (citing Webst. Dict.).

The phrase "occupy and use," in a lease which binds the lessee to expend a certain sum for improvements on the premises, and which stipulates that in default of the payment of the rent the lessor may re-enter and "occupy and use" for its benefit all improvements thereon, shows that it was not intended that the improvements should be removed, or that they were in any manner severable from the land, and the improvements made by the lessee are part of the real estate. In re Long Beach Land Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 503, 506, 101 App. Div. 159.

Actual occupancy or residence

"Occupied" implies actual possession, not constructive possession. A testator gave to his housekeeper for life the use of certain premises occupied by him. A portion of the premises was at the time of his death occupied by him as a residence, and a portion by a bank paying a monthly rental. The housekeeper acquired the use of the portion of the premises occupied as a residence only. In re Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388.

A tract of 250 acres of timber land was "occupied," within Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 801, c. 908) § 9, allowing land to be assessed as nonresident land only where there is not an owner or occupant of it residing in the tax district, and section 134, providing that the term "occupant" shall be construed to mean a person who has lawfully entered upon the land so occupied, and is in possession of the same to the exclusion of every other person, and that the term "occupancy" shall mean the actual, lawful and exclusive use and possession of such lands and premises by such an occupant, where the owners had marked its exterior lines by blazing away part of them, and left a larger quantity on the skids, and, at the time the assessors were on their annual rounds, were erecting on it a substantial shanty large enough to house them and their bark peelers. Clark v. Kirkland, 118 N. Y. Supp. 315, 319, 133 App. Div. 826.

The relator owned lots bordering on Lake Placid, on which it had built an inn, and also owned the greater parts of two lots situated in part on Moose Island in the lake and in part under the water of the lake, the parts of which nearest to the inn were from 2¼ miles to 2½ miles distant, and which made, with the other lots, a fairly compact tract owned and cared for by the relator. The lots sold were connected with the inn and with relator's boathouse by the waters of the lake, and were used in connection with the tract of land for picnics and camping, and for the purposes of enjoyment by the members of the Lake Placid Boat Club, and there were boat landings on the two lots, and relator had expended money in repairing and improving the approaches to the lots and had put up signs forbidding shooting, etc. Held, that "occupancy," as defined by Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60) § 134, did not require that the owner should build a house and reside upon the particular part of the lands sold for taxes, and that relator, upon the occupancy shown, was entitled to redeem the lots from a tax sale. People ex rel. Lake Placid Co. v. Williams, 129 N. Y. Supp. 67, 770, 145 App. Div. 34.

An owner of a preserve purchased additional land to straighten the boundary line thereof. The additional land was subsequently used in connection with the preserve. The owner's superintendent actually resided on the preserve, and controlled the same, including the additional land which was not inclosed, cultivated, or improved. The owner expended large sums in improving the other portion of the preserve, and also continuously kept domestic animals thereon. He also maintained on the premises metal notices warning persons against trespassing. The notices were placed along the boundary of the preserve, including the additional land. Held, to show an actual occupancy and possession by the owner of the entire premises, including the additional land within Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 60) § 134, defining an "occupant" as one who has lawfully entered on land and is in possession thereof to the exclusion of others, and "occupancy" as the actual, lawful, and exclusive use and possession of land by the occupant, and the owner was entitled to notice to redeem the premises from a tax sale. People ex rel. Moynihan v. Gaus, 118 N. Y. Supp. 756, 757, 134 App. Div. 80.

Under the Constitution, requiring occupancy as well as intention to create a homestead, intention without occupancy is insufficient to create a homestead, and there must be some acts which, coupled with intention, constitute the necessary occupancy. Where a widow purchased a vacant lot, which for three years she used only for the raising of vegetables, being without sufficient means to erect a house, there was no "occupancy" sufficient to entitle her to claim the lot as a homestead. Ware v. Hall, 101 N. W. 47, 138 Mich. 70, 87 L. R. A. 313, 110 Am. St. Rep. 301.

"To 'occupy' means to hold in possession; to hold or keep for use; as to occupy an apartment." Act Cong. Aug. 14, 1848 (establishing the territorial government of Oregon) § 1, contains the proviso that the title to the land, "not exceeding 640 acres, now occupied as missionary stations" among the Indian tribes in said territory, together with the improvements thereon, be confirmed and established in the several religious societies to which said missionary stations respectively belong. Held, that such statute was not a grant certain of 640 acres to each religious society having a missionary station on public lands within such territory, but was a grant only of so much land as was actually occupied by such station, not exceeding 640 acres. Bishop of Nesqually v. Gibbon, 15 Sup. Ct. 779, 784, 168 U. S. 155, 168, 39 L. Ed. 931.

Operation of mine

"In the primary and most familiar sense of the word, 'occupy' is the equivalent of the word 'possess.' It implies the conception of permanent tenure for a period of greater or less duration." As used in a deed relating to the occupation of a coal bed, the word "occupy" is synonymous with "work" or "operate." Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321, 330 (citing Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. 520).

Possession

As commonly used and understood, the word "occupation" is synonymous with "possession." Yost v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 594, 599.

"Possession" does not imply "occupation." United States v. De la Maza Arredondo, 6 Pet. (31 U. S.) 691, 743, 8 L. Ed. 547.

"Possession" means actual control of property by physical occupation. Collar v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 56, 60, 72 Misc. Rep. 274.

The word "possession," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4787, providing that an action may be brought by any person in "possession," by himself or tenant, of real property, against any person who claims an estate or interest therein adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse estate or interest, is not equivalent to the word "occupancy," and one who temporarily vacates a homestead owned in fee simple; for the purpose of giving educational advantages to minor children, does not so abandon the possession as to forfeit his right to maintain an action to remove a cloud from the title. Womble v. Pike, 87 Pac. 427, 429, 17 Okl. 122.

The ordinary meaning of the word "possession" is the same as "occupancy." It is defined as the act of possessing; a having and holding or retaining of property in one's power or control. Nathan v. Dierssen, 79 Pac. 739, 740, 146 Cal. 63; Iler v. Miller, 111 N. W. 589, 590, 78 Neb. 675, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 289 (citing Cent. Dict.).

Mere occupancy or personal presence of complainant on the ground does not constitute such possession as to sustain an action of forcible entry, and a mere trespasser cannot by the very act of trespass immediately and without excuse give himself what the law understands by possession against the person whom he ejects. Schwinn v. Perkins, 78 Atl. 19, 21, 79 N. J. Law, 515, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 51, 21 Ann. Cas. 1223.

The words "occupation" and "possession" are frequently used synonymously, especially in leases and like instruments. Thus where a guaranty for the payment of rent recited that the landlord had exacted from the lessees a guaranty that they would pay the rent that might become due under the lease while they were "in the occupation" of the premises, and stipulated that the guarantor would, on default for such months as the lessees were "in occupation" of the premises pay the rent, it was held that, to make the instrument effective, the words "in occupation" will be construed to mean "in possession." Woods v. Broder, 113 N. Y. Supp. 335, 336, 129 App. Div. 122.

Where an indictment for burglary charged an entry without the consent of the occupant of a house, "occupancy" is equivalent to "possession," and embraced a chicken house on the premises of prosecutor. Moore v. State, 88 S. W. 230, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 400.

Right of way

An owner of land adjoining a railroad location may acquire by prescription during 20 years an easement of travel longitudinally over a part of the location, notwithstanding St. 1861, c. 100, now St. 1906, c. 463, pt. 2, § 80, providing that no length of occupancy of land of a railroad corporation by an occupier of adjoining land shall create in him a right to such land, which, when considered in connection with St. 1892, c. 275, prohibiting the acquisition by prescription of a right of way across any railroad location, refers only to titles in fee and not to an easement; the word "occupancy" meaning a permanence and continuity of possession greater than that required in the establishment of a right of way. Hall v. Boston & M. R. R., 97 N. E. 914, 915, 211 Mass. 174.

Tenancy

The word "occupation," as used in a statute providing that every contract or agreement for the leasing, rent, and occupation of buildings, not in writing, shall be a tenancy from month to month, terminable only by a month's written notice, does not mean a mere possession of premises by any one who happens to be in them or get in them, but means an occupation pursuant to an agreement between the owner and the occupier, sufficient to create the relation of landlord and tenant. Permission of a landlord to a tenant, on moving out, to leave boxes in the building for a few days, on the understanding that the tenant would turn the premises over clean and in good condition, is not such an occupation. Sterling v. Heimann, 82 S. W. 539, 540, 108 Mo. App. 40.

Use

The occupancy contemplated by Pub. St. c. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by St. 1899, c.

465, exempting from taxation property literary, benevolent charitable, and scientific institutions, "occupied by them or their officers for the purposes for which they were incorporated," must tend directly to promote the purposes for which the institution was incorporated. The occupation of premises belonging to a college by the president and the professors, and the officers of the institution and their families, is not necessarily inconsistent with the intent of the statute. Phillips Academy v. Inhabitants of Andover, 55 N. E. 841-843, 175 Mass. 118, 48 L. R. A. 550.

Dormitories furnished by a college without rent or lease, for the use of its students who club together for the purpose of obtaining board at cost, are "occupied" for the purposes for which the college was incorporated, within the meaning of this statute; and so is a house built with public funds on the college grounds for its president, and occupied by him and his family as a dwelling, and also used as a place for commencement and holding other receptions incident to his functions, faculty and committee meetings, etc.; and so are houses belonging to, and kept in repair by, the college, and used partly for its convenience and partly for uses incident to the duties of professors who occupied them for dwelling purposes without rent or lease, except that the value of their use as dwellings was taken into account when the professors' salaries were voted. Harvard College v. Assessors of Cambridge, 55 N. E. 844, 846, 175 Mass. 144, 48 L. R. A. 547.

OCCUPANT—OCCUPIER

See Actual Occupant; Bona Fide Occupant.

In a prosecution for breaking and entering a storage room in the custody of C., a instruction that, if C. had the key and exclusive right and means of entry, then he was the "occupant," was correct, and was not objectionable as charging that C. was in fact the occupant of the room burglarized. Kinney v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 783, 785.

The words "the occupant thereof," as used in a statute providing that, if the property is actually occupied, the occupant thereof must be made defendant, may be read as meaning "an occupant" and not "all the occupants." Glos v. Patterson, 68 N. E. 444, 204 Ill. 540 (quoting Hennessey v. Paulsen, 41 N. E. 516, 147 N. Y. 255).

Of land

Ordinarily the "occupant" or "actual occupant" of land is one in actual possession. "Occupant" is defined in the Century Dictionary as: "One who occupies; an inhabitant; especially one in actual possession, as a tenant, who has actual possession, in distinction from the landlord, who has legal o constructive possession." The Standard definition is: "One who occupies; especially a tenant in possession of property, as distinguished from the actual owner. * * *"

Parsons v. Prudential Real Estate Co., 125 N. W. 521, 523, 86 Neb. 271, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608.

The word "occupant," as ordinarily used in statutes, means one in actual possession of land, as distinguished from constructive possession thereof; that is, one who holds possession and exercises dominion over it. There may be occupancy of land, without actual residence thereon. Thus the owner of a farm, of which he is in actual possession, though he resides in a village near by, is an "occupant" within Rev. Laws 1905, § 1172 requiring notice of hearing on a petition for a highway to be served on the occupants of the land. McCauley v. Town of McCauleyville, 127 N. W. 190, 191, 111 Minn. 423, 20 Ann. Cas. 828.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 20, providing that if any cattle shall trespass or do damage upon the premises of another, the aggrieved party, whether he be the owner or occupant, may recover against the owner of the cattle, plaintiff, who purchased lucerne seed from the owner of land and left it in an inclosed field to dry, was an "occupant" within the purview of the statute, and might support an action against the owner of cattle which trespassed upon the field, and ate and ruined the seed, without pleading or proving negligence; the statute apparently warranting a recovery for injury to personalty, as well as to real estate. Peterson v. Peterson, 117 Pac. 70, 71, 39 Utah, 354.

A tract of 250 acres of timber land was occupied, within Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 801, c. 908) § 9, allowing land to be assessed as nonresident only where there is not an owner or "occupant" of it residing in the tax district, where the owners had marked its exterior lines by blazing trees, had made roads, cut and skidded a large quantity of logs, drawn away part of them, and left a larger quantity on the skids, and, at the time the assessors were on their annual rounds, were erecting on it a substantial shanty large enough to house them and their bark peelers. Clark v. Kirkland, 118 N. Y. Supp. 315, 319, 183 App. Div. 826.

An owner of a preserve purchased additional land to straighten the boundary line thereof. The additional land was subsequently used in connection with the preserve. The owner's superintendent actually resided on the preserve, and controlled the same, including the additional land which was not inclosed, cultivated, or improved. The owner expended large sums in improving the other portion of the preserve, and also continuously kept domestic animals thereon. He also maintained on the premises metal notices warning persons against trespassing. The notices were placed along the boundary of the preserve, including the additional land. Held, to show an actual occupancy and possession by the owner of the entire premises, including the additional land within Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 60) § 134, defining an "occupant" as one who has lawfully entered on land and is in possession thereof to the exclusion of others, and "occupancy" as the actual, lawful, and exclusive use and possession of land by the occupant, and the owner was entitled to notice to redeem the premises from a tax sale. People ex rel. Moyneham v. Gaus, 118 N. Y. Supp. 756, 757, 134 App. Div. 80.

Laws 1900, p. 62, c. 20, § 220, gives to the commission of the forest preserve the care and control of the forest preserve, and by its wardens, foresters, and protectors it actually occupies the preserve, so that it is an "occupant," within the meaning of Laws 1896, p. 842, c. 908, § 134, requiring that, where land shall be sold for taxes, notice shall be given to the occupant to redeem before a deed is given. People ex rel. Turner v. Kelsey, 72 N. E. 524, 525, 180 N. Y. 24.

Same—Landlord

"An 'occupant' is defined by Webster as 'one who occupies or takes possession; one who has the actual use or possession, or is in possession of a thing.' Bouvier defines 'occupant' as 'one who has actual use or possession of a thing.' Shumaker & Longsdorf in their Law Dictionary, in defining 'occupant,' say: 'One who has the actual possession or use of a thing; occupancy implies the exclusion of every one else from enjoyment. Tenant in possession.' Under the statute providing that forcible detainer involves entry during the absence of the "occupant," an owner of land in actual possession of a tenant cannot maintain forcible detainer against one dispossessing the tenant. Chezum v. Campbell, 85 Pac. 48, 49, 42 Wash. 560, 7 Ann. Cas. 921.

Same—Tenant

Lessees in possession are "occupants" of land, so that they may object to the granting of a liquor license. American Woolen Co. v. Town Council of North Smithfield, 69 Atl. 293, 294, 29 R. I. 93, 16 Ann. Cas. 1227 (citing Lonsdale Co. v. Board of License Com'rs, of Town of Cumberland, 25 Atl. 655, 18 R. I. 7).

As used in St. 1898, § 1391, providing that respective "occupants" of adjoining lands used for farming shall maintain partition fences, and that "owners" of land who do not maintain lawful partition fences cannot recover for trespass by animals, the term "owners" includes a tenant as the occupant of the land, so that his failure to maintain the partition fence precludes him from recovering for trespass. Peterson v. Johnson, 111 N. W. 659, 132 Wis. 280 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 4904, 5134).

Of public land

Rev. St. U. S. § 2387, provides that the judge of the county court may enter at the proper land office land occupied as a town site of an unincorporated town, in trust for the "occupants"; the execution of the trust to be under regulations prescribed by the Legislature of the state or territory. Rev. St. Ariz. 1901, pars. 4075-4077, 4079, 4080, 4085, 4093, 4094, providing the method of executing the trust, require the payment by the "claimant" to the trustee of the purchase price of $5 per lot before he is entitled to a deed. Held, that this requirement applies to actual occupants, and not only to those who merely claim the right to possession, and an occupant, to be entitled to his deed, must be a claimant, file his statement, and pay to the trustee the purchase price. Robertson v. Martin, 76 Pac. 614, 615, 8 Ariz. 422.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2387, provides that, whenever any portion of the public lands have been occupied as a town site, it is lawful for the judge of the county court, in case the town is unincorporated, to enter the lands so occupied in trust for the benefit of the occupants thereof, the execution of which trust shall be regulated by the legislative authority of the territory, etc. Held, that the "occupants" for whom the trustees took the legal title under the act were those who were such at the time the town site was entered. City of Globe v. Slack, 95 Pac. 126, 11 Ariz. 408.

"An 'occupant,' within the meaning of the town-site law, is one who is a settler or resident of the town and in bona fide actual possession of the lot at the time the entry was made. * * * The 'occupancy' must be actual, and cannot be begun by an agent. It must be for residence, or for business, or for use, and the residence, business, or use must be by the claimant. There must be a subjection of the land to his will and control. * * * It follows * * * that there can be no such thing as constructive occupancy under the town-site law, but there must be an actual bodily presence of the claimant, or some one for him, on the lot or lots for which he seeks to acquire title, or a purpose to enjoy, united with or manifested by such visible acts, improvements, or inclosures as will give to the claimant the absolute exclusive enjoyment of it." Where plaintiff staked out a lot in a mining camp in Alaska and built a log cabin thereon, in which he resided for some three years and then left, leaving some tools, a stove, etc., in the cabin, and asking two different persons to look after the property for him, neither of whom took possession of or occupied it, and did not return for three years, and about a year after leaving other persons located the lot, and went into continuous possession, and made valuable improvements on the property, and conveyed it, plaintiff, although his title was recorded in the book kept for the benefit of settlers, there having been no steps taken to locate a town site, was not an occupant or in possession, and had no right therein which would ripen into a title under the town-site law (Rev. St. § 2387; Act March 3, 1891 [26 Stat. 1095, c. 561, § 11]) at the time of its location by the grantor, or which would support an action to recover the property from the grantee. Gordon v. Ross-Higgins Co., 162 Fed. 637, 640, 89 C. C. A. 429 (quoting and adopting language in Bender v. Shimer, 19 L. D. 333, 337).

Of right of way

The grantee of a railway right of way is not the owner or "occupant" of the estate over which it is granted. The mere running of trains over a road does not make the company running them an "occupant" of the land. Kansas & C. P. R. Co. v. Burns, 79 Pac. 238, 239, 70 Kan. 627 (dissenting opinion) (quoting Cook County v. Chicago, 8 B. & Q. R. Co., 35 Ill. 460).

Under White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 845c, providing that the term "private residence" shall be construed to mean any building or room "occupied and actually used" at the time of the offense as a residence, it is not necessary, to constitute the offense of burglary of a private residence, that the family be personally present at the time of the burglary, but it is sufficient if the house is actually used at the time as a private residence, though the family are temporarily absent. Handy v. State, 80 S. W. 526, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 406.

"The word 'occupation,' as applied to a dwelling house, means living in it; and hence, to become vacated or unoccupied, it must be without an occupant—without any person living in it." Baggerly v. Lee, 73 N. E. 921, 923, 37 Ind. App. 139 (citing Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Boyd, 49 N. E. 285, 19 Ind. App. 173; Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 5 Thomp. & C. 619; American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 169).

OCCUPATION (Vocation)

See Dangerous Occupation

As property, see Property.

As trade, see Trade.

Change of occupation, see Change

Following occupation, see Follow—Following.

Other occupation, see Other.

Some other occupation, see Some Other.

The term "occupation" is synonymous with calling, trade, business, or profession. City of Topeka v. Jones, 86 Pac. 162, 163, 74 A. 164.

The word "occupation" is a generic term, and is that to which one's time and attention are habitually devoted, vocation, calling, trade, business, and a "vocation" is an employment, occupation, calling, trade, including professions as well as mechanical occupations. Village of Dodge v. Guidinger, 127 N. 122, 87 Neb. 349, 138 Am. St. Rep. 494.

"Occupation," as commonly understood, signifies vocation, calling, trade, the business in which one principally engages in to secure a living or obtain wealth. Joliff v. State, 109 W. 176, 177, 178, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 61 (citing Indford v. State, 16 Tex. App. 331); Cohen v. State, 110 S. W. 66, 67, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 422, (quoting and adopting the definitions in Indford v. State, 16 Tex. App. 331; Love v. State, 20 S. W. 978, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 469; Benig v. State, 26 S. W. 835, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 47, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35; State v. Austin, 33 S. W. 113, 89 Tex. 20, 30 L. R. A. 100; Dozier v. State, 137 S. W. 679, 681, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 258.

"Occupation" is a term of broad significance, and includes the trade, calling, profession, office, employment, or business by which one generally gets his living; and it is not incidental, recreatory, or even necessary suspension of the performance of regular work which constitutes a "change of occupation" by one insured against accident. Everett v. General Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Limited, of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. E. 658, 661, 122 Mass. 169. Thus, where an accident policy insured plaintiff as the manager of a saloon and contained a rider that the insurance would not be forfeited by a temporary change of occupation, it was not material that his injury sued for occurred while he was operating a mower as a mere temporary diversion. Kenny v. Bankers' Accident Ins. Co. of Des Moines, 113 N. W. 566, 569, 136 Iowa, 140.

The term "occupation," as used in an accident policy, implies simply that which at the time of the accident constitutes the assured's principal business or pursuit; that which engages his attention and time, as distinguished from that which is incidentally connected with the life of men in any or all occupations. Thus, where a party obtains a policy of insurance against injury by accident, specifying the occupation of the assured to be that of a druggist, deemed to be a set risk, and that of a farmer or supervising farmer only is specified as a more hazardous risk, calling for a larger premium, and thereafter the drug store of the assured was destroyed by fire, whereupon the assured moved upon a tract of land entered as a homestead, into a house built by him thereon, which he thereafter occupied with his family as his home, and superintended the construction of a barn thereon, and caused to be fenced and broken and cultivated 40 acres of the land thereof, under his supervision, for a period of six months, and was preparing for further cultivation of the land at the time of his injury, and for eight months prior to such injury had no connection with the business of a druggist, his occupation was that of a supervising farmer, and not that of a druggist, within the meaning of the policy. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 138 Fed. 630, 633, 71 C. C. A. 79. And so, where the application for a life policy stated that assured's occupation was "dealer in pumps and well supplies," and the policy stipulated that enumerated occupations, such as "blasting, mining, and handling or transporting of inflammable or explosive substances" were risks not assumed by the insurer during the first year, and the assured died within the year by reason of an explosion during an attempt to blow out a well casing with dynamite in the course of his designated business, it was held that the risk of using the dynamite did not constitute a risk not assumed by the insurer; the stipulation in the policy relating to an occupation different from that named in the application as assured's occupation. Mortensen v. Central Life Assur. Ass'n, 99 N. W. 1059, 124 Iowa, 277.

A by-law of a fraternal benefit order which bars from admission to the order persons "engaged" in blasting, coal mining, manufacturing explosives, etc., or who are engaged in any other occupation deemed extra-hazardous, or who are engaged either as principal, agent, or servant in the sale of liquor as a beverage, and which provides that any member who shall engage in any of the prohibited occupations shall thereby render his certificate void, is violated by a member who with his son opened a saloon as copartners, the license therefor being issued in their joint names, and the member being peculiarly interested therein, though he performed no labor in or about the saloon and took no active part in the business, the word "engaged" being the equivalent of the words "carry on," and the word "occupation" meaning "business." Graves v. Knights of the Maccabees of the World, 92 N. E. 792-794, 199 N. Y. 397, 139 Am. St. Rep. 912.

A by-law of the defendant, a fraternal insurance company, provided that if a member should enter into the business or occupation of selling at retail intoxicating liquors as a beverage his membership should cease, and the insurance certificate and all rights thereunder should become forfeited. Plaintiff's husband, a common laborer, while a member, accepted work in a village saloon as a temporary substitute for the bartender for five or six weeks, during which time he paid an assessment that came due on the membership certificate. This assessment was accepted and retained by the officers of the local lodge. Three days after the insured quit the said temporary employment he died. After his death, and with knowledge of his said employment, defendant's grand recorder requested further proofs, not only as to his "occupation," but as to burial. Assuming that the temporary employment forfeited the insurance, it is held that the trial court's finding that there was a waiver of the forfeiture is sustained by the evidence. Hendrickson v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 138 N. W. 946, 950, 120 Minn. 36.

"Occupation" is correctly defined, in an action on a benefit certificate, in which the defense is a wrong statement in the application as to insured's occupation, by an instruction stating that it means that which practically takes up one's time and energies, especially one's regular business or employment, and that the word does not necessarily mean the present occupation, but it means that which principally takes up one's time, thought, and energy, especially one's regular business or employment, so that one might have a regular occupation, such as that of a painter, and be out of employment, and might temporarily engage in other business, yet, if he was questioned as to what was his occupation, he would give it as a painter, that being his general occupation. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor v. Baker, 50 South. 958, 960, 163 Ala. 518.

An accident policy provided that, if the insured was injured while engaged in any "occupation or exposure" more hazardous than that against which he was insured, his insurance shall be so much as the premiums paid will purchase at the rates fixed for such increased hazard. "Occupations" were classified, with an explanation that merely riding a bicycle for pleasure is not an "occupation," and that one insured as a proprietor of a manufacturing industry does not change his status by incidentally riding a bicycle. Held, that the fact that an insured is injured while incidentally riding a bicycle does not place him in a different class as to hazards from the "occupation" named in the policy. Comstock v. Fraternal Accident Ass'n, 93 N. W. 22, 25, 116 Wis. 382.

Where defendant, a farmer, had provided himself with the necessary equipment to operate a flying jenny, an occupation taxed by law, and to operate the same for profit, he was guilty of pursuing an occupation without paying the occupation tax provided therefor; the word "occupation," as used in the statute, meaning vocation, calling, trade, or the business which one engages in to procure a living or obtain wealth. Robbins v. State, 123 S. W. 695, 696, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 462.

In a prosecution under Acts 29th (Gen. Laws 1905, p. 91) c. 64, providing the punishment of any one, or the agent, employé of any one, engaged in the "business or occupation" of keeping or storing intoxicants for others in any county, etc., in which the sale of intoxicants had been prohibited, who permits another to drink intoxicants within such place of business, an instruction defining "business or occupation" to be that which engages one's time and attention or labor, or that about which one is engaged, employed, was misleading, where accused claimed that the intoxicants shown to have been drunk on the premises were not kept for hire or profit, nor as a business or calling, but that such keeping was casual and incidental; the terms "business" and "occupation," as used in the statute, meaning a calling, trade, or vocation in which one engages to make a living or obtain wealth. Coburn v. State, 110 S. W. 66, 67, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 42.

Under Act April 15, 1909 (Acts 31st c. 15), making it a felony to pursue the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor in a prohibition territory, the word "occupation" does not necessarily mean principal business, but may mean a business carried on by the defendant as a side line, and hence a charge of a prosecution under that law, that in order to constitute and engage in or pursue the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor it is necessary for the state to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the defendant unlawfully followed that business, places a greater burden on the state than the law requires, and was not prejudicial to defendant. Clayton v. State, 136 S. W. 260, 264, 61 Tex. Cr. 597.

An instruction that it was not necessary that a party should make a profit in his business in order to be guilty of pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors was not an improper limitation on the meaning of the words, "occupation" or "business," as used in the statute, and was proper where the evidence showed that accused would order whisky for his store customers, and charge it in their store account at cost to be paid when the rest of the account was paid, since each of these transactions constituted a sale. And a further charge that the state was not required to show that such "business" or "occupation" was accused's principal "business" or "occupation," or that he gave the whole or the greater part of his time to such business, but that if, although engaged in his usual occupation, he secretly sold intoxicating liquors when the opportunity presented, he would be guilty, was not objectionable on the grounds that it did not properly define "business" or "occupation." Dickens v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 914, 919.

OCCUPATION RENTAL

One occupying real property under a lease which is subsequent and subject to mortgage under foreclosure, in an action wherein a receiver has been appointed, must answer to such receiver for rent which may be due or which may accrue after such receiver's appointment; or, if the occupant claims to have a defense to the landlord's claim for rent as such, then the occupant must pay to the receiver as custodian of property which is security for a mortgage—and to safeguard such security—a reasonable amount for the use and occupation of such mortgaged premises, called "occupation rental," during the pendency of the action. Deroy v. Brandt, 90 N. Y. Supp. 980, 981, 99 App. Div. 257.

OCCUPATION TAX

License or occupation tax, see License Tax.

Laws 1903, c. 176, § 19, requiring itinerant physicians to pay an annual sum for a license to practice as such, imposes an occupation tax within Const. art. 6, § 17, requiring that taxation shall be equal and uniform. State v. Doran, 134 N. W. 53, 56, 28 S. D. 486.

A specific tax upon agents and representatives of packing houses and of dealers in packing house goods and products having a place of business or stock of merchandise in a city and selling to customers therein is a vocation or occupation tax. City of Savannah v. Cooper, 68 S. E. 138, 139, 140, 131 Ga. 870.

The fees imposed by a city to pay the cost of necessary inspection of the installation of electrical appliances inside and outside of buildings in the city are not taxes within Const. art. 8, § 1, providing that persons engaged in mechanical and agricultural pursuits shall not be required to pay an occupation tax. License and inspection fees levied under the police power of a city are not an "occupation tax" within this constitutional provision. Ex parte Cramer, 136 S. W. 61, 62, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 11, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 78, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 588.

A tax levied on a corporation for the exercise of the privilege of carrying on its business is an occupation tax within Const. art. 8, § 1, authorizing the Legislature to impose occupation taxes on persons and corporations doing business in the state. State v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 97 S. W. 71, 77, 100 Tex. 153.

Laws 1907, c. 65, imposing on every insurance company doing business in the state, except domestic mutual insurance companies, an annual tax of 2½ per cent. of the gross amount of premiums received in the state during the preceding year, etc., when construed in the light of the history of the legislation on the subject, imposes an "occupation tax" and not an "ordinary tax" within the Constitution relating to taxation. Queen City Fire Ins. Co. v. Basford, 130 N. W. 44, 46, 27 S. D. 164.

OCCUPIED AS DWELLING HOUSE

A landlord who rents the second story of a store building, to be used by the lessee for printing and publishing a newspaper therein, in the absence of an agreement in the lease, is not bound to put the building in a condition fit for such occupation, and repair future dilapidations thereof, as the property leased is not intended "for occupation of human beings" within the meaning of Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 863, 864. Tucker v. Bennett, 81 Pac. 423, 424, 15 Okl. 187.

OCCUPIED AS FACTORY

Defendant insured an ice manufacturing plant after its operation had been abandoned, the policy describing the property as a building "occupied as an ice factory," and described the personal property as appurtenances and appliances necessary to be used in plaintiff's business, all while contained in such building. The policy also declared that if the subject of insurance was a manufacturing establishment, and it should cease to be operated for more than 10 consecutive days without the insurer's consent, the policy should be forfeited. Held, that the policy being construed most strictly against the insurer did not insure an ice manufacturing plant in operation, but merely a building and appliances therein that had been used for that purpose, and that the policy was therefore not forfeited by a continued failure to operate the plant without insurer's consent. Home Ins. Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & Electric Co., 111 S. W. 994, 996, 86 Ark. 538, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201.

OCCUPIED AS SALOON

In a fire insurance policy, the words, "occupied as a saloon," are words of description only, and do not mean that the building insured shall be at all times conducted as a saloon. Silver v. London Assur. Corporation, 112 Pac. 666, 668, 61 Wash. 593.

OCCUPIED AS A STEAM LAUNDRY

The phrase "occupied as a steam laundry" in a fire policy on property described as a two-story basement and brick building, and additions adjoining and communicating, including foundations, "occupied as a steam laundry," renders a boiler house connected with the building within the policy. Guthrie Laundry Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, 87 Pac. 649, 651, 17 Okl. 571, 10 Ann. Cas. 936.

OCCUPIED BY ITS TRACKS

The phrase "occupied by its tracks," in Pub. St. 1882, c. 113, §§ 32, 33, requiring every street railway company to keep in repair the paving of the portion of the street occupied by its tracks, refers to the rails and the space between them over which the cars pass. City of Boston v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 71 N. E. 295, 186 Mass. 274.

Under a city ordinance, requiring a street railway company operating a line within the corporate limits to keep in good repair all that part of the street occupied by it, whenever the street car company took possession of that portion of the street for the purpose of laying a track, it was "occupied by it." Montgomery St. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 39 South. 757, 761, 146 Ala. 316.

OCCUPIED EXCLUSIVELY AS A DWELLING

The owner of a two-story building having two show windows with an entrance between them conducted a laundry therein from July until September, when the sign was taken down and not replaced until the following June or July, when the business was resumed. Held that, though the owner lived in a part of the building, it was not "occupied exclusively for a dwelling" within Liquor Tax Law requiring consents to the granting of liquor licenses, and therefore could not be counted in ascertaining assent of the owners of the surrounding homes to the proposed application for a liquor tax certificate, though on the date of the application the sign was down and the laundry had been suspended for the season. In re Bennett, 136 N. Y. Supp. 910, 911, 76 Misc. Rep. 310.

OCCUPIED FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES

In a legal and technical sense, a public school building in which a public school is being conducted is "occupied for common school purposes" from the beginning to the ending of the term, including school days, Saturdays, Sundays, and nights. The term "unoccupied for common school purposes," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5920a-5981, relating to the duration of school terms in school townships; and section 5990, granting the right to use a public school building for other than school purposes when "unoccupied for common school purposes," has reference only to the time intervening between terms of school, and the statute does not authorize a religious organization to use a schoolhouse on Sundays and evenings during a school term, when the school was not actually in session. Baggerly v. Lee, 73 N. E. 921, 923, 37 Ind. App. 139.

OCCUPY

See Cease to Occupy; Occupancy—Occupation—Occupy (Of Land).

In relation to insurance, see Unoccupied; Vacancy—Vacant—Vacate.

"To occupy" is generally defined to be to take and hold possession of, have in possession and use, to take possession of, to keep in possession, to possess, to hold and use, as to occupy a house or a farm. Thieme v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 499, 501, 100 App. Div. 278 (quoting in support of definitions, Stand. Dict.; Imperial Dict.).

An ordinance which makes it unlawful to "occupy" or allow to be occupied any portion of a house to be used as a house of ill fame or disorderly house in the city of Atlanta means that occupancy which contributes in some manner to the unlawful character of the house, and does not preclude an innocent and lawful occupancy of a room or a portion of a house which may in other parts thereof be used for disorderly and immoral purposes. Dannie v. City of Atlanta, 73 S. E. 684, 685, 10 Ga. App. 471.

"Occupy," within Rev. St. c. 9, § 13, subsec. 1, providing that personality employed in trade shall be taxed in the town where it is employed April 1st, if the owner occupies the place, etc., means having control of the whole or a part, having a special right of use. Inhabitants of Georgetown v. Williams, 131 E. Hanscome & Co., 79 Atl. 379, 380, 108 M. 131.

OCCUR

If a political party at its primary makes no nomination of a candidate for election to an office, a vacancy has "occurred," within the meaning of the statute (Cobbey's Ann. S. 1911, § 5888); and the proper party committee may fill that vacancy. State ex rel. Currys v. Wells, 138 N. W. 165, 167, 92 Neb. 337, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068.

Acts 1909, c. 103, § 3, amending Acts 1907, c. 435, provides that all vacancies in the State Board of Elections shall be filled by the joint vote of the General Assembly, except vacancies occurring when it is not in session, when, if the office of only one member is vacant, the remaining members of the board shall fill the vacancy, and if they fail to do so it shall be filled by the Secretary of State, Comptroller, and Treasurer, and that if there be more than one vacancy it shall be filled by appointment by such officers. Held, in view of the meaning of "vacant," which meant "without an incumbent," regardless of when or how it became vacant, and of the words "occur" and "happen," which were synonymous and meant "existing" or "to be found," that the Comptroller, Secretary of State, and Treasurer were authorized to fill two or more vacancies in the board of elections during recess of the Legislature, whether such vacancies occurred during recess or while the Legislature was in session. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 684, 12 Tenn. 471.

OCCURRENCE

OCEAN

OCEAN FRONT

P. L. 1894, p. 146, an act to enable cities situated near the ocean and embracing within their limits any beach or ocean front to open and lay out a public park, defines in its title "ocean front" as meaning as much of such front as is within the territorial limits of such city. Crossan v. Ventnor City, 78 Atl. 80 N. J. Law, 511.

CONTRACT TAX

The "droit de ville" and an "octroi tax" are internal revenue impositions of France which are not general in their application, but vary with the locality and are not collected if the merchandise is exported. United States v. F. Downing & Co., 131 Fed. 653, 654.

ODD WITNESSES

The term "odd witnesses," used in a real estate bill that 60-odd witnesses were introduced in an eminent domain proceeding, referred to number rather than to singularity. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. v. Aubuchon, 97 S. W. 867, 869, 199 Mo. 352, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 116, 116 Am. St. Rep. 499, 8 Ann. Cas. 822.

The preposition "of," as used in an act establishing a city police court with jurisdiction to enforce any penalty for the violation of any regulation of such city "or any board thereof," should be construed to denote source, creation, or authorship, as distinguished from mere existence or possession. Board of Health of City of Asbury Park v. New York & L. B. R. Co., 71 Atl. 259, 77 N. J. Law, 15.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6119, requiring the publication of annual statements of insurance companies in "two daily papers of the largest general circulation to be designated by the Insurance Commissioner," requires the publication in any two papers belonging to the class having the largest circulation, which class may consist of more than two papers, and the commissioner has discretion to designate any one of the papers belonging to the class, and to determine what papers belong to the class having the largest circulation, though the difference in the circulation may be considerable; the word "of" indicating the aggregate or whole of which the limited word denotes a part, or of which a part is referred to, etc. State ex rel. Cowles v. Schively, 114 Pac. 901, 903, 63 Wash. 103.

Under a statute authorizing a town to take "of" the waters of a certain pond and so much as may be necessary for certain specified purposes, such town did not have the exclusive right to the water as against a railroad company that had been authorized by statute to use the water of the pond. Framingham Water Co. v. Old Colony R. Co., 57 N. E. 680, 681, 176 Mass. 404.

As belonging to

The words "of the United States," in Act Cong. August 1, 1892 (27 Stat. 340, c. 352), relating to hours of labor of laborers or mechanics employed upon any of the public works of the United States, means belonging to the United States. Dredging a channel in Boston Harbor is not a public work of the United States, within the meaning of the act forbidding a contractor under penalty of fine or imprisonment to permit or require employes on public work to work more than eight hours each day. Ellis v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 600, 602, 208 U. S. 246, 51 L. Ed. 1047, 11 Ann. Cas. 589.

The validity of an indictment for larceny is not affected by the omission of the preposition "of" between the words "goods and chattels" and the name of the prosecutor. Bennett v. State, 84 S. W. 483, 73 Ark. 386.

The word "of," where it precedes the words "all existing steam railroads" in an elevated railroad franchise regulating the height of the superstructure over the "tracks of all existing steam railroads," was not intended to denote ownership or possession, and that the right of way and tracks referred to therefore are only those owned by "existing steam railroads," but was evidently intended only to identify the right of way and tracks mentioned in the ordinance by indicating the character of the road of which they formed a part. Peabody Coal Co. v. Northwestern Elevated R. Co., 82 N. E. 573, 575, 230 Ill. 214.

As in

The preposition "of," as used in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 23, § 366, relating to the "streets or highways of Baltimore city," and the granting of franchises for their use to electric light and power companies, is not descriptive of or relating to title or ownership, but refers to location and municipal jurisdiction; and the expression quoted embraces streets or roads within the city limits which are currently traversed without objection by its citizens, whether the municipality has or has not acquired the legal title to the land lying under them. Patapsco Electric Co. v. City of Baltimore, 72 Atl. 1039, 1041, 110 Md. 306.

Lands "of" the state, as used in the title of an act to promote public health, etc., by draining the lands "of" the state, means lands "within" the state. Sisson v. Board of Sup'rs of Buena Vista County, 104 N. W. 454, 458, 128 Iowa, 442, 70 L. R. A. 440.

As portion or part of

A marine policy insured "in port and at sea, * * * at all times, in all places and on all occasions, * * * upon the hull, spars, sails, materials fittings, boats (including launches, steam or otherwise, if any), furniture, provisions, stores, * * * boilers, etc., of and in the schooner yacht Rosemary," against all manner of marine perils, and the furniture and boats against fire when laid up on shore. Held, that a naphtha launch, part of the equipment of the yacht, carried on davits when she was under way, and used as a means of communication with the shore when in port, while being so used in the usual way between the yacht and shore was "of and in" the yacht, and covered by the policy. Dennis v. Home Ins. Co., 136 Fed. 481, 482.

As to

Defendant employed plaintiff as a traveling salesman, agreeing to pay a salary of $1,800 per year, to allow $1,200 for traveling expenses, and to pay a commission of 5 per cent. in excess "to $40,000" sales made by plaintiff and shipped by defendant. Held, that the use of the word "to" was a mere grammatical error, the intention of the parties being that plaintiff was only to receive commissions on sales made by him in excess of $40,000, and that the preposition "to" should give place to "of" with which it was synonymous. Ettenson v. Mendelson, 133 N. Y. Supp. 283, 284, 75 Misc. Rep. 307.

OF COUNSEL

Where the judge before whom defendant was brought for trial on an indictment for suborning a witness at a hearing in bankruptcy to commit perjury while conducting a hearing in a bankruptcy case to discover assets, appeared to be angry and said in the presence of accused: "This is a nasty piece of business. This estate has been looted by some one"—and then turned to an officer of the court and directed that he use what was left of the estate, even to the last penny, to investigate the matter, and if any one, whoever he might be, had committed any act that could be reached and punished under the law, to institute proceedings against him, the judge merely performed his duty to direct an official inquiry of what appeared to be a criminal offense, and did not thereby become disqualified to try accused therefor, as being either "concerned in interest" or "of counsel" for the prosecution, within the meaning of the statute. Epstein v. United States, 196 Fed. 354, 355, 116 C. C. A. 174.

OF COURSE

See Continued of Course; Costs as Course.

The term "of course," as employed Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1229, 1774, providing that in an action for divorce, judgment cannot be taken "of course" upon the decision or report, etc., and declaring that after the expiration of three months final judgment shall be entered as "of course" upon the decision, etc., means, without special direction or provision or pursuant to settled rule for which there need be no further direction or authority. Petit v. Petit, 91 N. Y. Supp. 979, 984, 45 Misc. Rep. 155.

OF GRACE

A chancellor is said to act "of grace." That grace sometimes becomes a matter of right to the suitor, and, when it is clear that the law cannot give protection and relief which the complainant in equity is admittedly entitled, the chancellor cannot withhold his grace any more than the law can deny protection and relief, if able to give the same. This is often overlooked when it is said that in equity a decree is of grace and not of right. The phrase "of grace" had its origin in an age when kings dispensed their royal favors at the hands of chancellors, but has no rightful place in the jurisprudence of the commonwealth. Sullivan v. Jones & Laugel Steel Co., 57 Atl. 1065, 1071, 208 Pa. 549, 66 L. R. A. 712. See, also, American Smelting & Refining Co. v. Godfrey, 158 Fed. 237, 89 C. C. A. 139, 14 Ann. Cas. 8 (from the opinion of Marshall, District Judge, the Circuit Court, quoting from Walters McElroy, 25 Atl. 125, 151 Pa. 549).

OF NO EFFECT

The phrase "of no effect," as used in rule 40 of the Supreme Court, providing that rules, whether granted by the court or by justice, shall be entered in the minutes within ten days and in default thereof shall be "of no effect," is synonymous with "void" and not with "voidable." Jersey City v. Davis, 76 Atl. 969, 80 N. J. Law, 609.

OF RECORD

The rule that unsurveyed land within the bounds of a railroad grant, which was occupied by a bona fide settler intending to homestead the land, acquires a superior right founded on the terms of the statute granting certain alternate sections, provided they were free from pre-emption or other claims of rights, was not altered by an opinion of the Supreme Court referring to such claim by homesteader as "of record," as the court did not intend to require that all such claims of rights must be of record, but intended to describe only one class of claims which were excepted from the granting act. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Trodick, 31 Sup. Ct. 607, 609, 221 U. S. 208, 55 L. Ed. 704 (citing United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 7, 218 U. S. 233, 54 L. Ed. 1015).

On a contract not to become interested in the business of catching certain kinds of fish, other than the business to be conducted by the other party, or the business of manufacturing fish into oil or guano, "upon, along, or off the Atlantic seaboard" the word "off" adds to and enlarges the meaning of the words "upon" and "along," and carries the prohibition out into the deep water more distant from the coast, and includes all the waters adjacent to the eastern coast of the United States, and does not exclude bays or other indentations along the coast. American Fisheries Co. v. Lannen, 118 Fed. 869, 874.

OFFAL

"Offal" is defined in Cent. Dict. as "that which is suffered to fall off as of little value or use; waste meat; waste or refuse of any kind." Under a city ordinance providing that "no person shall go about collecting any refuse or offal consisting of animal and vegetable substances, or carry the same through any of the streets, lanes or courts of the city," except the person appointed for that purpose by the sanitary committee, the term "house offal" is held to include refuse food from the table, discarded victuals, and swill consisting of refuse from the table, though none of it be in a decayed condition. State v. Robb, 60 Atl. 874, 875, 100 Me. 180, 4 Ann. Cas. 275.

A libel for condemnation of catsup, alleging that it was misbranded, in that it was made in part from tomato pulp screened from seedlings and cores, as the "offal" of tomato canning factories, and not from choice ripe tomatoes, etc., as stated in the labels, did not charge a violation of the provision of the pure food law (Act Cong. June 30, 1906, c. 915, § 7, par. 6) relating to preparations consisting in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal or vegetable substance; the words "as the offal of tomato canning factories" being of no exact signification, and the word "offal" not the equivalent of a charge that the tomato pulp was a filthy, decomposed, or putrid vegetable substance. United States v. Six Hundred and Fifty Cases of Tomato Catsup, 166 Fed. 773, 774.

"An 'offense,' in its legal signification, means the transgression of a law." Town of Neola v. Reichart, 109 N. W. 5, 7, 131 Iowa, 492 (quoting and adopting definition in Moore v. State of Illinois, 14 How. [55 U. S.] 19, 14 L. Ed. 306; Grafton v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 749, 754, 206 U. S. 333, 353, 51 L. Ed. 1084, 11 Ann. Cas. 640).

"'Offense' signifies a public wrong which subjects the perpetrator to legal punishment." An attempt to commit suicide is not an indictable offense in the state of Maine. May v. Pennell, 64 Atl. 885, 887, 101 Me. 516, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 115 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 Ann. Cas. 351.

In Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 114, providing that, whenever a magistrate is informed on oath that an offense is about to be committed against the person or property of the informant or of another, "or if any person has threatened to commit an offense," he must issue a warrant for the arrest of accused, the word "offense," as used in the clause "or if any person has threatened to commit an offense," has the same meaning and is used in the same sense as the word "offense" in the preceding part of the same article, and should be limited in its meaning to offenses against person or property. Ex parte Muckenfuss, 107 S. W. 1131, 1132, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 467.

An "offense" is a breach of the laws established for the protection of the public, as distinguished from an infringement of mere private rights. The word is used as a genus, comprehending every crime and misdemeanor, or as a species, signifying a crime not indictable but punishable summarily or by the forfeiture of a penalty. Laws Okl. T. 1903, p. 168, c. 15, § 4, providing that it shall be unlawful for any carrier to receive any of the game mentioned in section 1 of the act, for the purpose of carrying it to any of the places within or beyond the territory, and that any carrier so doing shall forfeit a certain sum with costs, creates an offense within the meaning of Organic Act (Act Cong. May 2, 1890, c. 182, 26 Stat. 87) § 10, and a civil action brought for the recovery of the penalty must be tried within the county where the violation is alleged to have occurred. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Territory of Oklahoma, 105 Pac. 677, 679, 25 Okl. 238.

"Offense" is used synonymously with "misconduct," which is defined as "wrong conduct; bad behavior; mismanagement." Ball- ey v. Examining and Trial Board of Police Department of City of Helena, 122 Pac. 572, 574, 45 Mont. 197.

"Offense" is now used synonymously with "crime." United States v. Zarafonitis, 150 Fed. 97, 101, 80 C. O. A. 51, 10 Ann. Cas. 290 (quoting and adopting Burr. Law Dict. verbo "Offense"). And while the words "offense" and "crime" are in certain cases considered synonymous, the "offenses" specified by New York Military Code, § 95, for the most serious of which the punishment is dismissal from the service with a small fine, and no one of which is designated as a "crime," are not "crimes." People v. Wendel, 112 N. Y. Supp. 301, 302, 59 Misc. Rep. 354.

The word "offense" implies a violation of a law by which alone it can be denounced. Thomas v. United States, 156 Fed. 897, 900, 84 C. C. A. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720.

An "offense" which is pursued at the discretion of the injured party or his representative is a civil injury, while an offense which is pursued by the sovereign or the subordinate of the sovereign is a crime. Jernigan v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 361, 362, 104 Va. 850.

"An 'offense' which may be the subject of criminal procedure is an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it." Dent v. United States, 71 Pac. 920, 922, 8 Ariz. 138 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Eaton, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 144 U. S. 677, 38 L. Ed. 591).

An action by the state for penalties imposed by the anti-trust act of Texas, declaring that corporations violating the act shall be guilty, and when convicted, shall be subject to penalties recoverable by "suit" where the "offense" is committed, is not a criminal prosecution, within the statute prescribing the time for the institution of criminal prosecutions, but is a civil suit; the word "offense" having reference to violations of the acts, and not being equivalent to the words "felony" or "misdemeanor." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 106 S. W. 918, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162.

The word "offense," as used in Const. art. 5, § 13, giving the Governor power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after convictions for all offenses, is equivalent to "crimes," and the Governor cannot pardon an offense until after conviction by the judgment of the court. Ex parte Campion, 112 N. W. 585, 588, 79 Neb. 364, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 865, 126 Am. St. Rep. 607, 16 Ann. Cas. 319.

The term "offense," as used in Rev. St. §§ 4364-20a, 4364-20b, which provide for an election in any municipality to determine whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be permitted, and which declare that whoever shall sell where sales are prohibited shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and which prescribe the punishment for the first offense and for a second offense, embraces the entire charge, though there may be a number of counts, and means a conviction. Hence an affidavit charging three separate sales to different persons on the same day, without alleging a previous conviction, is in legal effect a charge of a first offense only. Carey v. State, 70 N. E. 953, 956, 70 Ohio St. 121.

Driving an automobile at a prohibited rate not being an offense against the police of towns, fines imposed by a justice of the peace for violations of the speed limit, in the absence of special provision to the contrary, belong to the county under Pub. St. 1901, c. 256, § 2, providing that, unless otherwise specially provided, all fines and forfeitures imposed by a justice of the peace for "offenses against the police of towns," and violations of by-laws of towns, and fines and forfeitures imposed by a police court, shall be for the use of the town, and all other fines and forfeitures shall be for the use of the county. The phrase "offenses against the police of towns" refers to the offenses enumerated under that title in Pub. St. 1901, c. 264. Rockingham County v. Chase, 71 Atl. 634, 635, 75 N. E. 127.

Violation of city ordinance

A violation of a city ordinance is an "offense" against the city. The violation is termed a petty offense and constitutes a crime in the broad sense of that word. Pearson v. Wimblish, 52 S. E. 751, 755, 124 Ga. 704, 4 Ann. Cas. 501 (citing McRae v. Mayor, etc. of City of Americus, 59 Ga. 170, 27 Am. Rep. 390).

A grand juror is not rendered incompetent because charged with a violation of municipal sanitary ordinance; which is not a "crime or offense" within the intentment of section 1, Act No. 135, p. 216, of 1898. State v. Calhoun, 41 South. 360, 361, 117 La. 8 (citing State v. Thibodeaux, 19 South. 630, 4 La. Ann. 600; State v. Nicholas, 33 South. 92, 109 La. 84).

Nuisance

B. & C. Comp. § 1930, punishing any person committing any act which grossly injures the person of another, or which grossly disturbs the public peace or health, or openly outrages the public decency and is injurious to public morals, not otherwise made punishable, covers offenses against the public peace, health, and morals not otherwise made punishable, and known at common law as indictable nuisances; and at common law what ever tends to corrupt society is an "offense against good morals," and is punishable as a nuisance, and such act need not be a continuous one, but may consist of a single act, and it may not affect the public at large, but only such as come in contact with it. State

Daymire, 97 Pac. 46, 47, 48, 52 Or. 281, 21 A. (N. S.) 56, 132 Am. St. Rep. 699.

ENSE AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

A conspiracy to violate the "bucket shop" of the District of Columbia is an "offense against the United States," within the meaning of the statute providing for the removal of offenders against the United States and the statute relating to conspiracies to commit offenses against the United States. United States v. Campbell, 179 Fed. 762, 764.

In Rev. St. § 4540, relating to conspiracies, the words "offenses against the United States" have the same meaning as the words "offenses against the laws of the United States" in the original act of March 2, 1867 (Stat. 484, c. 169) the change being merely one of phraseology made by the revision commission, and such section denounces conspiracies to commit offenses created by any statute of the United States. Thomas v. United States, 156 Fed. 897, 901, 84 C. C. 77, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720.

Assisting the importation of alien contract laborers is an "offense against the United States," within the meaning of Rev. U. S. § 5440, providing for the criminal punishment of persons conspiring to commit offenses, since Congress, in making it a misdemeanor, by Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1184, § 1, Stat. 900, to assist the immigration of such persons, has made such action a crime, punishable as such, although, by section 5 of that act, it has provided a remedy in the form of a civil action for the recovery of a penalty for a violation of the act. United States v. Stevenson, 30 S. Ct. 37, 38, 215 U. S. 100, 54 L. Ed. 157.

ENSE INVOLVING MORAL TURPITUDE

See Moral Turpitude.

OFFENSIVE

Where a restriction in a deed forbade the erection on the land of "any tavern, drinking saloon, slaughterhouse, skin-dressing establishment, or any other building for offensive purpose or occupation," it includes a building for use as a garage for hire, storage, and repair of automobiles and the furnishing of needed facilities. Hibberd v. Edwards, 84 Atl. 437, 235 Pa. 454.

The owner of land divided it into building lots, and in each deed inserted a restriction that the property should not be used for business "offensive to the neighborhood of dwelling houses." In a suit by one of the lottees to restrain the erection of an automobile garage, it appeared that the building was designed to accommodate about 125 automobiles, a part of one story being designed for a repair shop, and it being intended to place in the building a portable engine; that demonstration cars were to be kept, with demonstrators to run them; and that about 75 or 100 customers were expected to store automobiles there, such machines to go in and out on an average of once a day. Held, that a finding that the maintenance of such building would constitute a violation of the restriction was warranted. Evans v. Foss, 80 N. E. 587, 589, 194 Mass. 513, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 11 Ann. Cas. 171.

OFFENSIVE ESTABLISHMENT

OFFER

See, also, Proposal.

Const. art. 5, § 7, provides that one who shall offer or promise to pay to another any money as an inducement for the giving or withholding of such other's vote at an election shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words, "If you will vote the Republican ticket, I will pay you $20 after the polls have closed," constitute an offer to pay within the Constitution, and render the person making the offer guilty of a misdemeanor; no acceptance of the offer being required, and no tender being needed to make an offer. State v. Barr (Del.) 79 Atl. 730, 733, 7 Pennewill, 340.

In an action for rescission and cancellation of a deed fraudulently obtained, an allegation that plaintiffs are ready and willing to execute a deed to the land traded for to defendants is a sufficient offer to restore within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 827. Clark v. O'Toole, 94 Pac. 547, 552, 20 Okl. 319.

The word "offered," in a charge against a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers that he had "offered" his advice and service to railroad officials in their proposed plan to run engineers through from one city to another, means that he had volunteered his advice and service. Fritz v. Knaub, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1003, 1008, 57 Misc. Rep. 405.

As attempt

As respects an attempt or offer to cast a ballot and vote, the terms "offer" and "attempt" are practically the same in meaning. One of the definitions given by Mr. Webster of the word "offer" is "attempt." State v. Fielder, 109 S. W. 580, 583, 210 Mo. 188.

To support a conviction for a violation of a statute punishing every person who shall corrupt or attempt to corrupt a juror, by offering to give any gift with intent to bias the juror, it is not necessary to prove an actual tender of the gift offered as a bribe, so as to enable the juror to at once accept or reject the same. Evidence showing a proposal or a willingness to give a bribe to bias the juror's verdict is sufficient. State v. Woodard, 81 S. W. 857, 861, 182 Mo. 391, 103 Am. St. Rep. 646.

In 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, p. 827, the definition of "offer" is "a proposal to do a thing." To prove the commission of the offense created by Rev. St. 1899, § 2043, punishing every person who shall corrupt or attempt to corrupt a juror by "offering to give any gift . . . with intent" to bias the juror, it is not necessary to show an actual tender of the bribe, but evidence showing a proposal and declaration of a willingness to give a bribe or gratuity to bias the juror's verdict is sufficient. State v. Miller, 81 S. W. 867, 872, 182 Mo. 370.

Where a verdict found defendant guilty of an "attempt" to bribe, it sufficiently showed a violation of the statute prohibiting "an offer" to bribe an officer; the words "offer" and "attempt" in such connection being synonymous. Johnson v. State, 92 S. W. 257, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 250.

As contract

See Contract.

As tender

The word "offer" is frequently used by courts and text-writers as synonymous with "tender," and it may be properly so used with reference to articles capable of manual delivery and actually produced. But with respect to heavy articles of merchandise, situated at a distance from the place to which they must be transported, if restored to the vendor, the phrase "offer to return" is more commonly and aptly applied to express a willingness, or to make a proposal to rescind the contract and return the goods. In order to work a rescission, it is not sufficient for the purchaser, who has taken delivery of the goods at the vendor's place of business, to give notice to the vendor that he holds the goods subject to his order, or that the goods are at a designated place subject to his disposal. The goods must be returned to the place where accepted, unless, upon an "offer to return," such offer is refused by the vendor. Mundt v. Simpkins, 115 N. W. 325, 326, 81 Neb. 1, 129 Am. St. Rep. 670 (quoting and adopting definition in Miliken v. Skillings, 89 Me. 180, 36 Atl. 77).

Under Rev. St. § 3627, providing that, at the joining of issue in an action for involuntary trespass before a justice, defendant may "offer in writing" to permit plaintiff to take judgment against him for damages and costs, and section 3628, providing that if plaintiff fails to recover a more favorable judgment he shall not recover costs made after such offer, the oral answer of defendant entered by the justice in his docket, that "defendant tenders judgment for six cents and costs up to day," is sufficient to satisfy the statute. It bound defendant just as effectually as though he had himself written and subscribed it, and then served it on the plaintiff. Williams v. Ready, 39 N. W. 779, 72 Wis. 408.

Medical treatment

A will devising and bequeathing property to trustees to convert into security and pay specified sums and the balance some hospital "offering" to treat tubercular patients, makes a gift to a hospital bestowing free treatment to tubercular patients and hence is a public charity, as distinguished from a private enterprise for profit; word "offering" without any condition annexed and connected with a hospital in bestowing free treatment to those suffering from disease. French v. Calkins, 9 Ill. 877, 881, 252 Ill. 243.

OFFER AND REFUSAL

A statement by a seller contracting to repurchase at the expiration of one year the buyer desiring it, made before the expiration of the year in response to the buyer's demand to repurchase that he could not do so, is the legal equivalent of an "offer and refusal" within Civ. Code, § 1515, providing that a refusal to accept performance made before an offer thereof is equivalent to an offer and refusal, unless before performance is actually due he gives notice of his willingness to accept it, and the seller declines to hold plaintiff to performance must be made that prior to the expiration of the year the seller expressed a willingness to repurchase, unless the statement is withdrawn before the expiration of the year, the buyer may not make demand and offer at the expiration of the year. Howard v. Galbraith, 109 Pac. 889, 890, 13 Cal. App. 373.

OFFER FOR SALE

Announcement that property will be sold at auction to the highest bidder is a declaration of intent to hold an auction, and is not an offer to sell becoming binding, conditionally, on the owner when a bid is made. Anderson v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry., 120 N. W. 39, 46, 107 Minn. 296, 20 L. Ed. (N. S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 S. D. Cas. 379.

A merchant has "offered or exposed for sale" an adulterated or misbranded article of food, in violation of Agricultural Law, § 165, added to Laws 1893, c. 338, by Laws 1903, c. 524, by having the adulterated or misbranded article in stock for the purpose of sale, without actually making a sale. People v. Lewis, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1026, 1027, App. Div. 673.

The uncontradicted testimony of state agents that defendant delivered a quantity of adulterated milk at a lunchroom, taking receipt therefor from the person in charge, is sufficient evidence of "sale," or "offer for sale," in violation of Consol. Laws, c. 1, § 1, making it unlawful to sell or offer for sale adulterated milk. People v. McDermott Dairy Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 294, 295.

Under a contract with receivers by which broker was authorized to "offer and sell" stock of salmon of a canning company, in a provision that the sales were to be subject to the receivers' instructions and consultation, he was not required to procure an offer but a purchaser, and was entitled to the stipulated commission if he was the efficient means of procuring a purchaser whose offer, made directly to the receivers, was accepted, and to whom a sale was made. Colonial Trust Co. v. Pacific Packing & Navigation, 158 Fed. 277, 279, 85 C. O. A. 539.

OFFER TO GIVE

As convey.

A bill for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, which alleges that defendant "offered to give" plaintiff certain land, provided plaintiff would not erect a building in a certain place and manner, and that plaintiff accepted the offer, changed the plan of the building, took possession of the land, and erected the building in accordance with the agreement, states a cause of action as against a demurrer; the allegation of an agreement "to give" being construed as an agreement "to convey." Wiley v. Fink, 62 Atl. 360, 361, 102 Md. 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002.

OFFICE

Student in office of attorney, see Student.

To have an "office," in ordinary or technical parlance, implies to have that control over an office which an owner or lessee, or at least a licensee, would exercise. Althaus v. Paranty Trust Co. of New York, 137 N. Y. 945, 947, 78 Misc. Rep. 181.

The word "office," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 3160, providing that a plaintiff in an action brought in the City Court of New York, who has an office for the regular transaction of business in person within the city of New York, is deemed a "resident" of that city, within the meaning of sections 3268 and 3269, which provide that a defendant may require security for costs where plaintiff is not a resident, means a place where service is rendered or business is done. Brassack v. Newburgh Rapid Transit Co., 121 N. Y. 215, 216, 66 Misc. Rep. 190.

An "office" in Missouri, within Rev. St. 1899, § 3862, authorizing service on a foreign corporation having no office or place of business in Missouri, by service on any agent or employé in any county or state where such service may be obtained, means an ordinarily established office, and not a mere casual place of meeting, and hence a return of service on such a corporation was not objectionable in that it recited that the corporation had no "regular office" or place of business within the state. Stegall v. American Pigment & Chemical Co., 130 S. W. 144, 153, 150 Mo. App. 251.

Where a majority of the board of directors of a corporation met pursuant to a regular call for a special meeting of the board, and were unable to obtain access to the office of the corporation, and convened as a board in the hallway of the building just outside of the office, and then adjourned the meeting to a designated date, the meeting of the board was valid as against the objection that the board did not meet at the office, within Civ. Code, § 319, requiring the holding of meetings of boards of directors at the corporation's office. Seal of Gold Mining Co. v. Slater, 120 Pac. 15, 17, 161 Cal. 621.

The word "office" as used in Civil Code 1910, § 2259, is synonymous with "place of business." An action upon a contract with a mining corporation, which was made or was to be performed in a county where the corporation maintained a plant, together with a superintendent who was in control of its business and a large force of laborers, and a place for the transaction of such business as was necessary to the operation of the plant, may be brought in the county where the plant is located, notwithstanding the principal office of the corporation was by its charter located in another county, where its board of directors met and its financial operations were carried on. General Reduction Co. v. Tharpe, 75 S. E. 339, 340, 11 Ga. App. 334 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4921).

Under a petition alleging that plaintiff was lawfully occupying a room or "office" in the northwest part of the courthouse, when defendants assaulted, struck, and wounded him and forcibly ejected him from the room to his damage, but containing no allegation that plaintiff was entitled to maintain possession of such room as clerk of the county court or of the records thereof, whether he was the lawful county clerk and as such official entitled to possession of the room and records was not in issue; the word "office" in the connection in which used signifying a room or apartment. Morgan v. Owen, 91 S. W. 1055, 1056, 193 Mo. 587.

An ordinance directing the corporation counsel to bring an action to collect and recover on the bond of a city official such money paid to him and belonging to the city "as may be shown to have been stolen from or misappropriated in the office of the city treasurer and not duly accounted for," did not contemplate that the moneys for which a recovery was sought should be shown to have been actually stolen from the room in which the treasurer held his office, or misappropriated in that particular room, but included moneys of the city stolen or misappropriated by the treasurer or his subordinates in such a way that the treasurer was liable therefor. City of Syracuse v. Roscoe, 123 N. Y. Supp. 406, 411, 66 Misc. Rep. 317.

A foreign stock corporation, leaving its blank stock certificates and its stockbook with a trust company in this state, which acted as a transfer agent, cannot be said to have an "office for the transaction of business" in this state, within Stock Corporation Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 59) § 33, providing that every foreign corporation having an office for the transaction of business in this state shall keep therein a stockbook, and that, if any such foreign stock corporation has in this state a transfer agent, such stockbook may be deposited in the office of such agent, for inspection of stockholders. Althause v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 137 N. Y. Supp. 945, 946, 78 Misc. Rep. 181.

An "office," as the term is used in the Constitution, means something to be held, not something to be done. Ross v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 55 Atl. 310, 313, 69 N. J. Law, 291.

The term "public office" implies permanence and duties of a public nature. Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 55.

An "office" is a public charge or employment, and the term comprehends every charge or employment in which the public is interested. Michael v. State ex rel. Welch, 50 South. 929, 931, 163 Ala. 425.

An "office" is a position or station in which a person is employed to perform certain duties, or by virtue of which he becomes charged with the performance of certain duties, public or private, or a place of trust and emolument is a usual, but not a necessary, element of office. Wells v. State, 9 N. E. 321, 322, 175 Ind. 380, Ann. Cas. 1913 86.

"Office" implies much more than the right to physically occupy a specified room to exercise certain powers, and to receive prescribed emolument. People v. Ahearn, 13 N. Y. Supp. 664, 131 App. Div. 30; Id., 89 E. 930, 933, 196 N. Y. 221, 26 L. R. A. (S.) 1153.

A "public office," while not property, a position held by right of election or appointment, and courts will protect one in the enjoyment of these rights as quickly and fully as though it were property. Christy Kingfisher, 78 Pac. 135, 137, 13 Okl. 555.

An "office" is a trust conferred by public authority for a public purpose and for a definite time. It is "a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of the government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties." State v. Rose, 86 Pac. 296, 298, Kan. 262, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 843, 10 Ann. Cas. 927 (quoting United States v. Hartwell, Wall. [73 U. S.] 385, 393, 18 L. Ed. 530).

"An 'office,' as defined by Blackstone, a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging, whether public as those of a magistrate, or private, as bailiffs, receivers, and the like." In re Opinion of the Justices, 62 Atl. 969, 970, 73 N. J. 621, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415, 6 Ann. Cas. 2 (quoting and adopting definition in Shelby Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 72 Am. Dec. 169, 171).

"The term 'office' is defined as 'a right to exercise a public or private employment and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging.' It embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties, and these ideas or elements cannot be separated and each considered abstractly. All taken together, constitute the office." Tanner v. Edward, 86 Pac. 765, 766, 31 Utah. 120 Am. St. Rep. 919, 10 Ann. Cas. 106 (quoting Kendall v. Raybould, 44 Pac. 106, 13 Utah, 226; 2 Bl. Comm. 36).

"An 'office' is defined to be the right to exercise a public or private employment and to take the fees or emoluments thereunto belonging." 2 Bla. Com. 36. (State v. Warner, 10 Pac. 885, 13 Or. 385). The office of jury commissioner, created by Sess. Acts 1879, c. 28, embodied in Rev. St. 1899, §§ 6539, 6540 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3272), relating to the appointment of jury commissioner in cities having a specified population, is not an "office" within Const. art. 9, § 14, limiting the term of office of county, township, and municipal officers to four years. State ex inf. Hadley v. Corcoran, 103 S. W. 1044, 1048, 206 Mo. 1, 12 Ann. Cas. 565.

An "office" is a public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of an office is an "officer." Blackstone says: "An office is the right to exercise a private or public employment and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging. An office implies an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power of the state, either making, administering, or executing the laws." The power and jurisdiction of an office constitute the "office" and are inseparable from it. The true test of a public office seems to be that it is a part of the administration of government, civil or military. A surfer is not an "officer" at all, or for any purpose; for there cannot be a de facto officer when a de jure officer already fills the place. Commonwealth v. Bush, 115 S. W. 251, 252, 131 Ky. 384 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Maurice, 2 Fed. Cas. 103, 26 Fed. Cas. 1211; Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481; Union of the Judges, 3 Me. 481; Commonwealth v. Gamble, 62 Pa. 343, 1 Am. Rep. 1; Eliason v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 235; cit. Eubank v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 126 Ky. 348; United States v. Alexander, 46 Fed. 728; McCahon v. Leavenworth, 8 Kan. 437; Matter of Gunn, 32 Pac. 948, 50 Kan. 155, 19 L. R. A. 519).

"Office" is an incorporeal right and consists in the right to execute a public trust or to take the emoluments belonging to it. An injury to the right is an injury to the private right for which there ought to be a remedy. Maloney v. Collier, 88 S. W. 667, 112 Tenn. 78 (citing Dodd v. Weaver, 2 Tenn. [34 Tenn.] 670).

"An office is an incorporeal right, and consists in the right to execute a public trust or to take the emoluments belonging to it." March 27, 1907, art. 8, § 8, declares that offices existing under the charter of the city of Memphis and acts in amendment thereof are thereby vacated and abolished. Under the charter there was a city tax assessor, city attorney, and assistant attorney, clerk, and clerk of the city court, mayor, and city assessor; and Act March 27, 1907, provides for a city assessor, city counselor, president, vice president, whose duties are respectively substantially the same as those of the corresponding officers under the city charter. Held, that the act could not have the effect to remove the officers holding under the city charter and create a vacancy to be filled by appointment, since, though purporting to abolish the offices, it restored them under other names, and the rule being that, while an office may be abolished, the officer cannot be legislated out of office without an abolition thereof. Maloney v. Williams, 103 S. W. 798, 818, 118 Ky. 390, 121 Am. St. Rep. 1002 (quoting and adopting the definition in Dodd v. Weaver, 2 Tenn. [34 Tenn.] 670).

That a board of revision of a city is not a quasi corporation, as some boards are, and that there is attached to the duty no emolument has no effect as to such board constituting an office. Neither of such characteristics is an essential element. The most essential characteristic of an office is that the incumbent in his independent capacity is clothed with some part of the sovereignty of the state to be exercised in the interest of the public and required by law, and that the duties are of a continuous character as opposed to a mere temporary employment. Barker v. State, 68 N. E. 575, 576, 69 Ohio St. 68 (citing State v. Brennan, 29 N. E. 593, 49 Ohio St. 33; State ex rel. Armstrong v. Halliday, 55 N. E. 175, 61 Ohio St. 171).

"Public office," as used in the Constitution, has respect to a permanent trust to be exercised in behalf of the government or of all citizens who may need the intervention of a public functionary or officer and in all matters within the range of the duties pertaining to the character of the trust. It means a right to exercise generally, and in all proper cases, the functions of a public trust or employment, and to receive the fees and emoluments belonging to it, and to hold the place and perform the duty for the term and by the tenure prescribed by law. People v. Ahearn, 89 N. E. 930, 937, 938, 196 N. Y. 221, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153 (concurring opinion of Edw. T. Bartlett, J.; quoting Matter of Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238, 244).

"A 'public office' is the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law by which, for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is vested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public" (quoting and adopting definition in Mechem on Public Officers, as approved in Kimbrough v. Barnett, 55 S. W. 120, 93 Tex. 301). "As said by Chief Justice Marshall, 'although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office.' Mr. Mechem, in his work on Public Officers, says: 'The most important characteristic which distinguishes an office from an employment or contract is that the creation and conferring of an office involves a delegation to the individual of some of the sovereign functions or government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public; that some portion of the sovereignty of the country, either legislative, executive, or judicial, attaches for the time being, to be exercised for the public benefit. Unless the powers conferred are of this nature, the individual is not a public officer.' Now, while the fact that the position of stenographer is designated in the act providing for its creation as an office, and that it declares that the person who may be called to perform its duties 'shall be a sworn officer of the court,' affords some reason for determining it to be such, still it is believed the place possesses none of those sovereign functions of the judicial department of the government to which it relates, to distinguish it from a mere employment to perform a species of service, under public authority, for the assistance and convenience of the court and parties litigant therein, in which no judicial discretion or judgment is involved. The creation of the position, as shown by the very terms of the act, was designed for no other purpose than to provide some one by whom the oral evidence offered, and other proceedings involving objections made to the admissibility of testimony, the ruling of the court, and exceptions thereto, might be taken in shorthand as a method of preserving those matters as they occurred, without delaying trials, to be afterwards transcribed and furnished the court and parties to the suit, to aid them in an accurate and prompt preparation of the record. The report or transcript of the proceedings by the stenographer is not binding, however, upon the court, and may be adopted or rejected at his discretion. No act which he is authorized to do is independent of the control of others, or vested in him as a supreme power to be exercised as a right or prerogative of a judicial office. We conclude that while the position of a stenographer, under the statute in this state, may be, in a sense, an office, and the term thereof may continue for a longer period than two years, yet there is no such sovereign function of government embraced in the powers conferred upon the individual performing its duties as brings it within the meaning of the word 'office' as used in the section of the Constitution quoted." Robertson v. Ellis County, 84 S. W. 1097, 1098, 1099, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 146.

Agency, duty, or trust

A public office is an agency of the state. State ex rel. Le Blanc & Railey v. Michel, 36 South. 869, 870, 113 La. 4.

"The words 'office of public trust' are equivalent to 'public office.'" State v. Monahan, 84 Pac. 130, 133, 72 Kan. 492, 115 Am. St. Rep. 224, 7 Ann. Cas. 661.

An "office" is a public agency, and an "officer" is a mere agent of the public, entitled to exercise the functions and perform the duties of the office for the public benefit, and not for his own. Goodrich v. Mitchell, 75 Pac. 1034, 1035, 68 Kan. 765, 64 L. R. A. 945, 104 Am. St. Rep. 429, 1 Ann. Cas. 288.

An "office" has been defined as "a special trust or charge created by competent authority"; more tersely still "a public office is a public trust." The general doctrine is that the idea of office clearly embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, fees or emoluments, rights and powers, as well as that of duty. The true test of public office is "that it is a parcel of the administration of government." Gracey v. City of St. Louis (Mo.)

111 S. W. 1059, 1163 (citing State ex rel. Walker v. Bus, 36 S. W. 636, 135 Mo. 331, 33 L. R. A. 616; 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4923; 2 Bouv. L. Dict. tit. "Officer").

A "public office" is a personal public trust created for the benefit of the state without any element of property. Scheuing v. State (Ala.) 59 South. 160, 161.

"A 'public office' is an agency for the state, and the person whose duty it is to perform this agency is a public officer. The essence of it is the duty of performing an agency; that is, of doing some act or acts, or a series of acts, for the state." Malone v. Williams, 103 S. W. 798, 820, 118 Tenn. 390, 121 Am. St. Rep. 1002 (quoting and adopting the definition in Clark v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 63, 8 Am. Rep. 488; adopted in Wood v. Bellamy, 27 S. E. 115, 116, 120 N. C. 212); Martin v. United States, 104 S. W. 678, 684, 7 Ind. T. 451.

"Though the word 'office' may be used in varying senses, the term in any proper sense implies, as indicated by its etymology, a duty or duties to be performed. Other elements, such as the public nature of the duty and its permanence, may be necessary to constitute a public office; but this element—that is, duty or service to be performed—is an essential part of the definition." Though the word may, like other terms, be used in an improper sense, it will be presumed, unless the contrary appears, that the proper sense was intended. "The term 'officer' and 'office' are, indeed, paronymous, and in their original and proper sense are to be regarded as strictly correlative. But both terms, like most other terms, are used in various senses; nor do the variations of the one always correspond with the other." Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 55.

An "office or place of trust," within a constitutional provision prohibiting persons holding any office or place of trust under the United States or under the state from holding or exercising any other office or place of trust under the authority of the state, means a public position involving a delegation to the individual of some part of the sovereign functions of the government to be exercised for the public benefit. The most important characteristic which distinguishes an office from a public agency is that the conferring of the office carries with it a delegation to the individual of some of the sovereign functions of the government. In this respect the terms "office" and "place of trust" as used in such constitutional provisions are synonymous. The position of a public administrator is not an office within such constitutional provisions, but is a mere administrative agency. Wootton v. Smith, 59 S. E. 649, 650, 145 N. C. 476.

A "public office" is a personal public trust created for the benefit of the state and not for the benefit of the individual citizens thereof, and it has in it no element of property. Therefore a statute providing for preference of honorably discharged soldiers of the Civil War in appointment, employment, and promotion in public service over others of equal qualification does not violate Const. art. 1, § 6, declaring that the General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities not equally belonging to all; the right to hold a public office or to be employed by the state in any capacity not being a privilege. Shaw v. City Council of Marshalltown, 104 N. W. 1121, 1124, 131 Iowa, 128, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 825, 9 Ann. Cas. 1039.

"A 'public elective office' is a public agency, which barring any constitutional inhibition, express or implied, may be abolished, curtailed, or regulated by legislative enactment." State ex rel. Henson v. Sheppard, 91 S. W. 477, 481, 192 Mo. 497.

A public office embraces more than the right to physically occupy a specified room, exercise certain powers, and receive a prescribed emolument. It means the right to exercise generally and in all proper cases the functions of a public trust or employment, to receive the fees and emoluments belonging to it, and to hold the place and perform the duty for the term and by the tenure prescribed by law. People v. Ahearn, 115 N. Y. S. 664, 667, 131 App. Div. 30.

A public office is a mere public agency created by the people for the purpose of the administration of the necessary functions of organized society, and the agency may at any time be terminated by the power which created it. As between the office holder and individuals in their private capacity, and perhaps as against any authority except the sovereign power itself acting in pursuance of a power of removal expressly reserved or necessarily implied from the nature of office, the officer is entitled to the full protection of the law in his right to hold the office, practically to the same extent as if it were private property. In re Carter, 74 Pac. 997, 141 Cal. 316.

In the most general and comprehensive sense, a "public office" is an agency for the state, and a person whose duty it is to perform this agency is a "public officer." Stated more definitely, a "public office" is a charge or trust conferred by public authority for a public purpose, the duties of which involve, in their performance, the exercise of some portion of sovereign power, whether great or small. A public officer is an individual who has been elected or appointed in the manner prescribed by law, who has a designation or title given to him by law, and who exercises the functions concerning the office assigned to him by law. A parish superintendent is an officer. State ex rel. Smith v. Theus, 38 South. 870, 872, 114 La. 1097.

Compensation

An "office" may be only one of honor without perquisites or profits. Some employments of a private nature are considered public offices, if connected with the public, as a bank or railroad president, secretary, treasurer, or director. Rouse v. Thompson, 81 N. E. 1109, 1120, 228 Ill. 522 (dissenting opinion by Carter, J.; citing People ex rel. Koerner v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. 65; Dickson v. People ex rel. Brown, 17 Ill. 191).

The position of city surveyor of the city of New York is not perhaps strictly speaking an "office," for it does not carry a salary, yet inasmuch as the surveyor is appointed and is required to take an oath of office, and because by virtue of his appointment under the authority of law and the taking of such oath eligible to certain employment in the nature of public service for which he is entitled to receive compensation which compensation in turn is to be assessed upon the property, the amount thereof depends upon the law at the time the service is rendered. Pepole ex rel. Crane v. Ahearn, 110 N. Y. Supp. 308, 310, 125 App. Div. 795.

Continuance regardless of incumbency

An office is a legal entity, and may exist, though it be without an incumbent. Childs v. State, 113 Pac. 545, 548, 4 Okl. Cr. 474, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 563.

Created and duties prescribed by law

An office is a place in a governmental system created or recognized by the law of the state which either directly or by delegated authority assigns to the incumbent thereof the continuous performance of certain permanent public duties. Fredericks v. Board of Health of Town of West Hoboken, 82 Atl. 528, 82 N. J. Law, 200.

Election or appointment

"An 'office' is a public station of emolument conferred by the appointment of government. The term embraces the idea of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties." State ex rel. Mosconi v. Maroney, 90 S. W. 141, 146, 191 Mo. 531.

Employment distinguished

Apart from the statute, the distinction between a public officer and an employé is that the former is charged with duties involving an exercise of some part of the sovereign power in the performance of which the public is concerned, and which are continuing and not occasional, while one merely performing duties required of him by persons employing him under an express contract or otherwise, though the employer is a public officer and the employment be a public work or business, is a mere employé. Sanders v. Belue, 58 S. E. 762, 763, 78 S. C. 171.

An employment differs from both an office and a position, in that its duties, which are nongovernmental, are neither certain nor permanent. Fredericks v. Board of Health of Town of West Hoboken, 82 Atl. 528, 529, 82 N. J. Law, 200.

While generally speaking an "officer" is one employed on behalf of a government in a strict legal sense, the term implies employment in some fixed and permanent capacity; those engaged in mere transient or occasional employment being more properly employes than officers. Bilger v. State, 116 Pac. 19, 24, 63 Wash. 457.

In Const. art. 7, § 8, providing for the appointment of officers whose offices shall be created by law, the word "office" differs in its legal signification from "employé," an employé being a mere agent. Blue v. Tetrick, 72 S. E. 1033, 1035, 69 W. Va. 742.

An "office" is a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of government. The term embraces the idea of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties. A government "office" is different from a government contract. The latter is necessarily limited in its duration and specific in its object. An act of the council of the Muskogee Nation, empowering the chief thereof to employ an attorney until the dissolution of the tribal relations and until a specified date, with prescribed duties, at an annual salary, payable from the general funds of the nation, does not create an "office"; but the attorney is an employé under contract. Porter v. Murphy, 104 S. W. 658, 669, 7 Ind. T. 395.

"The distinction is plainly taken between a person acting as a 'servant' or 'employé' who does not discharge independent duties but acts by the direction of others, and an 'officer' empowered to act in the discharge of a duty or legal authority in official life." Padden v. City of New York, 92 N. Y. Supp. 928, 928, 45 Misc. Rep. 517 (quoting and adopting definition in Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481; citing People ex rel. Glichrist v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 535).

"Although an office is an 'employment,' it does not follow that every employment is an 'office.' A man may certainly be employed under a contract express or implied to do an act or perform a service without becoming an officer." An "office" is defined as "an employment on behalf of the government in any station of public trust not merely transient, occasional, or incidental." It is a "special trust or charge created by competent authority. The officer is distinguished from the employé in the greater importance, dignity, and independence of his position, in being required to take an official oath, and perhaps to give an official bond, in the liability of being called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office and usually, though not necessarily, in the tenure of his position. United States v. Schlierholz, 137 Fed. 616, 622 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Marice, 26 Fed. Cas. 1211, 2 Brock 96; In re Attorneys' Oaths [N. Y.] 20 Johns. 492; People ex rel. Throop v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673.

The use of the word "employed" in section 1, c. 114, Laws 1891 (section 4643, Gen. St. 1909), providing that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, mechanics, or other persons employed on behalf of any city of the state, includes officers; an office being distinguished from an employment, in that it implies tenure, duration, emolument, and duty. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 394, 84 Kan. 100.

Investment with functions of government

"'Office' is generally defined as a public charge or employment, through which the incumbent discharges a part of the functions of government for the benefit of the public." State v. Peake, 120 N. W. 47, 55, 18 N. D. 101 (dissenting opinion of Morgan, J.).

A "public office" is a right, authority and duty created and conferred by law, which an individual is invested with so as to perform a portion of the sovereign functions of the government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public. It implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power to and possession of it by the person filling the office. State v. Mackie, 74 Atl. 759, 761, 82 Conn. 398.

"A 'public office' is one whose duties are in their nature public—that is, involving in their performance the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, whether great or small—and in whose proper performance all citizens, irrespective of party, are interested, either as members of the entire body politic or of some duly established division of it." Greenough v. Lucey, 66 Atl. 300, 28 L. 230.

"The term 'office' implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power to, and possession of it by, the person filling the office, and the exercise of such power within legal limits constitutes the correct discharge of the duties of such office. The power thus delegated and possessed may be a portion belonging to one of the three great departments, and sometimes to another; still it is a legal power which may be rightfully exercised, and in its effects will bind the rights of others, and be subject to revision and correction only according to the standing law of the state." In re Opinion of the Justices, 62 Atl. 969, 970, 73 N. H. 621, 5 L. R. A. (C. S.) 415, 6 Ann. Cas. 283 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Opinion of the Justices [Me.] 3 Greenl. 481, 482).

A "public office" is the right, authority and duty created and conferred by law, which, for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with the portion of the sovereign functions of government, either executive, legislative, judicial, to be exercised for the benefit of public; and unless the powers conferred of this nature the individual is not a public officer. Guthrie Daily Leader v. Cam- n, 41 Pac. 635, 639, 3 Okl. 677.

The true test of "public office" is in itself parcel of the administration of government. "office" has been defined as a special trust charge granted by competent authority. "public office" is a public trust. The general definition is that the idea of office comprehends the idea of tenure, duration, fees, emoluments, rights and powers, as well as duty. Gracey v. City of St. Louis, 18 S. W. 1159, 1163, 213 Mo. 384 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4923; 2 Bouv. Law t. tit. "Officer"; People ex rel. Throop v. Hodgdon, 40 Mich. 682; State ex rel. Cannon May, 17 S. W. 660, 106 Mo. 488).

The individual invested with the "right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, or invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public," is a "public officer." State ex rel. Mesconl v. Maroney, 90 S. W. 141, 146, 191 Mo. 531 (quoting and adopting the definition in Mechem, Pub. Off. § 1).

As used in Const. art. 14, § 7, providing that no person, who shall hold any office or place of trust or profit, under the United States, or any department thereof, or under the state, etc., shall hold or exercise any other office or place of trust or profit under the authority of the state, provided, etc., the terms "office" and "place of trust" are synonymous, and have reference to a public position, involving a delegation to the individual of some part of the sovereign functions of government, to be exercised for the public benefit. Wooten v. Smith, 59 S. E. 649, 650, 10 N. C. 476.

An administrator belongs to that class of officers represented by curators, guardians, receivers, referees, and the like, whose duties are private, and whose acts concern private rather than public interests. An administrator is vested with no portion of the sovereign functions of the state to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public, and he is therefore not a "state officer" within the meaning of Const. art. 8, § 12, providing that "no person shall be elected or appointed to any 'office' in this state, civil or military, who is not a citizen of the United States, and who shall have resided in this state one year next preceding his election or appointment." A "public office" is a right and authority created by law by which an individual is invested with some portion of the functions of government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public for a given period of time, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power. The word "office," as here used, is to be distinguished from its application to such positions as are at most quasi public only, as the charge of an executor, administrator, or guardian, and from the offices of a private corporation. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing Mechem, Pub. Off. § 1; In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238).

As license

A license to keep a dramshop is not an "office," which can be tested or vacated by quo warranto. Hargett v. Bell, 46 S. E. 749, 750, 184 N. C. 394.

Position distinguished

A position is analogous to an "office," in that the duties that pertain to it are permanent and certain, and it differs from an office in that its duties may be nongovernmental and not assigned to it by public law. Fredericks v. Board of Health of Town of West Hoboken, 82 Atl. 528, 529, 82 N. J. Law, 200.

A "public office" is a place created, or at least recognized, by the law of the state, and to which certain permanent duties are assigned either by the law itself or by regulations adopted under authority of law. A "position," within the purview of the veteran act of 1895 (8 Gen. St. 1895, p. 3702), is a place, the duties of which are continuous and permanent, analogous to those of an office, and which pertain to the position as such. Hart v. City of Newark, 77 Atl. 1086, 1087, 80 N. J. Law, 600.

As property

As privilege of citizen

See Privileges and Immunities.

As public office

The word "offices," as used in the general tax law of 1903 (P. L. 1903, p. 396, § 3, par. 8), cannot be deemed to refer to other than public "offices." North Jersey St. Ry. Co. v. Jersey City, 67 Atl. 33, 35, 74 N. J. Law, 761.

The word "office," in Mansf. Dig. Ark. c. 151, §§ 6464, 6466, providing that in lieu of the writs of scire facias and quo warranto actions by proceedings at law may be brought to vacate or repeal charters and prevent the usurpation of an office or franchise, and declaring that when a person usurps an office or franchise to which he is not entitled by law an action by proceedings at law may be instituted against him either by the state or the party entitled to the office or franchise, to prevent the usurper from exercising the office or franchise, means a public office, and does not include the offices of a private corporation. Le Bosquet v. Myers, 103 S. W. 770, 771, 7 Ind. T. 75.

OFFICE COPY

An "office copy" of a record is "a copy authenticated by an officer intrusted for that purpose, and it is admitted in evidence upon the credit of the officer" (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 507). Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3098, providing that records kept in any public office of a sister state, not appertaining to a court, shall be evidence in this state, if attested by the keeper of said records and the seal of his office, it is necessary to show, as a basis for the introduction of an alleged certified copy of articles of incorporation granted by a sister state, that the laws of that state required the articles to be kept or recorded by the officer certifying the copy. Florsheim & Co. v. Fry, 84 S. W. 1023, 1024, 109 Mo. App. 487 (citing 6 Thomp. Priv. Corp. § 7712).

OFFICE FOR THE REGULAR TRANSACTION OF BUSINESS IN PERSON

The expression "office for the regular transaction of business in person," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 3160, does not necessarily mean one who carries on some business at some particular place of which he is proprietor; hence the place where one is regularly employed to render services, where he attends every business day, is a place or office for the regular transaction of business, regardless of the character of the business transacted. Brassack v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 215, 216, 66 Misc. Rep. 190.

OFFICE FOUND

A legislative act directing the possession and appropriation of public land which had been granted "is equivalent to 'office found,'" and "before a forfeiture or reunion with the public domain could take place a judicial inquiry should be instituted, or, in the technical language of the common law, 'office found' or its equivalent." Spokane & B. C. R. Co. v. Washington & G. N. R. Co., 95 Pac. 64, 67, 49 Wash. 280 (quoting United States v. De Repentigny, 5 Wall. [72 U. S.] 211, 267, 268, 18 L. Ed. 627).

An alien purchasing lands or taking them by devise may not be divested of his estate even by the state until after a formal proceeding called "office found," and until that is done he may sell and convey or devise the lands, and pass a good title to the same. Though during the life of an alien the state, by proper proceedings, could have declared an escheat of land held by her in contravention of Const. art. 2, § 33, on her death it lost that right; the land descending to her heirs. Abrams v. State, 88 Pac. 327, 329, 45 Wash. 327, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186, 122 Am. St. Rep. 914, 13 Ann. Cas. 527.

"Inquisition" or "office found," as relating to a trial for or declaration of forfeit-ture, etc., have no relation to the ordinary common-law trial by jury, and the jury there summoned was not the common-law jury before whom a citizen has a right to demand a trial where his peace or his rights were in question. Blackstone defines "inquisition" or "office found" to be "an inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ to them sent for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitled the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. This is done by a jury of no determinate number, being either twelve, or less, or more. * * * These inquests of office were devised by law, as an authentic means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record; without which he, in general, can neither take nor part from anything." For "it is a part of the liberties of England, and greatly for the safety of the subject, that the king may not enter upon or seize any man's possessions upon bare surmises without the intervention of a jury." It was a procedure peculiarly adapted for the king's use, and the important thing about it was that a record might be made and entered whereon the king could base his right to possess himself of the lands, goods, and chattels of his subject; and, as it respects lands, the office found put him into immediate possession, without the necessity of a formal re-entry. Although its frequent use was for the determination of attainder, escheats, and breaches of conditions annexed to grants, and the like, the record was not conclusive, and the subject was yet entitled to a trial suitable at common law for the final determination of his rights. A good illustration is found in escheats. "The usual form of proceeding for this purpose was by an inquisition or inquest of office before a jury, which was had upon a commission out of the Court of Chancery, but was really proceeding at common law; and, if it resulted in favor of the king, then, by virtue of ancient statutes, any one claiming title in the lands might, by leave of that court, file a traverse, in the nature of a plea or defense to the king's claim, and not in the nature of an original suit. * * * The inquest of office was a proceeding in rem; when there was a proper office found for the king, that was notice to all persons who had claims to come in and assert them; and, until so traversed, it was conclusive in the king's favor." United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 186 Fed. 861, 926 (quoting 3 Bl. Comm. 258, 259; Hamilton v. Brown, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 587, 161 U. S. 258, 268, 40 L. Ed. 691).

OFFICE FURNITURE

By a mortgage bill of sale of all the desks, chairs, trunks, and "office furniture" in a certain office, the mortgagor intended all the articles of use in the office at the time should pass; and an iron safe, which was then used there, would be embraced as an article of office furniture. Skowhegan Bank v. Farrar, 46 Me. 293, 296.

OFFICE HOURS

See Business Hours.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1222, authorizing the service of citation upon a corporation by leaving a copy of the same at the principal office of the company during "office" hours, a return showing service during "business" hours is sufficient. El Paso & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Kelly (Tex.) 83 S. W. 855, 860.

OFFICE OF HONOR OR PROFIT

Service as a grand juror is not an "office of honor or profit," within Const. art. 2, § 2, providing that no person shall hold two offices of honor or profit at the same time. State v. Graham, 60 S. E. 431, 432, 79 S. C. 118.

OFFICE OF TRUST

The chairman of the executive committee of a political party does not hold an office of trust, etc., within Terrell election law (Sayle's Ann. Civ. St. Supp. 1906, p. 183), providing that no holder of an office of profit or trust, etc., shall be a judge of election. Walker v. Mobley (Tex.) 105 S. W. 61, 62.

The office of a commissioner of the United States Centennial Commission is an "office of trust" under Const. U. S. art. 2, § 1, disqualifying the holder of an office of trust under the United States for the office of elector of president and vice president of the United States. In re Corliss, 11 R. I. 638, 640, 23 Am. Rep. 538.

OFFICE UNDER THE STATE

Civil office under the state, see Civil Officer.

The provision of the Constitution that "no Senator or Representative shall hold an 'office under the state' * * * the emoluments of which have been increased during the session of the Legislature of which he was a member, until one year after the expiration of his term of office in the Legislature," does not prohibit a member of a Legislature that has increased the emoluments of members of the Legislature from being a member of the next Legislature, as an "office under the state" does not include the legislative office. State ex rel. Olson v. Scott, 117 N. W. 1044, 1045, 105 Minn. 513.

OFFICEHOLDING

"Officeholding" is a political privilege and the matter of appointment to office is not affected by the fourteenth amendment or other provision of the federal Constitution, and, as has been said, the power of the Legislature is supreme in respect to appointments, save as the Constitution has limited it. Goodrich v. Mitchell, 75 Pac. 1034, 1036, 68 Kan. 765, 64 L. R. A. 945, 104 Am. St. Rep. 429, 1 Ann. Cas. 288.

An "officer" is defined to be "one who is lawfully invested with an office." State v. Kelly, 77 S. W. 996, 997, 103 Mo. App. 711 (quoting Bouvier, Law Dict.).

"The terms 'officer' and 'office' are, indeed, paronymous, and in their original and proper sense are to be regarded as strictly correlative. But both terms, like most other terms, are used in various senses; nor do the variations of the one always correspond with the other." Thus it sometimes happens that the word "officer" is used without reference to the original and proper sense. Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 55.

"A 'public officer' is one who is appointed to discharge a public duty and receive compensation for the same." People v. Warner, 104 N. Y. Supp. 279, 282 (quoting and adopting Conner v. City of New York [N. Y.] 2 Sandf. 355).

"A 'public officer' is an individual who has been appointed or elected in the manner prescribed by law, who has a designation or title given to him by law, and who exercises the functions concerning the public assigned to him by law." State ex rel. Mosconi v. Maroney, 90 S. W. 141, 146, 191 Mo. 531.

"To be an 'officer' one must be chosen or appointed or otherwise invested with the position. It is not a thing that a person gets merely by fitting himself therefor. It takes the act of some other person or body of persons." Danforth v. Egan, 119 N. W. 1021, 1024, 23 S. D. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418.

Where either the people or the Legislature create an office or designate a person to perform some function of government, the head of such an office would be a public officer. People ex rel. O'Toole v. Hamilton, 90 N. Y. Supp. 547, 549, 98 App. Div. 59.

An officer who exercises important public duties and has delegated to him some of the functions of government, and whose office is for a fixed term, and whose powers and duties and emoluments become vested in a successor when the office becomes vacant, is a "public officer." Richie v. City of Philadelphia, 74 Atl. 430, 431, 225 Pa. 511, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 289.

When public functions are conferred by law on certain persons elected by the people or appointed by the Legislature, and such functions concern the general interests of the state, and are not merely local or temporary, such persons are public officers, especially if they be paid a salary for their services out of the public treasury, but not so if their duties are merely transient, occasional, or incidental. In re Appointment of Revisor, 124 N. W. 670, 676, 141 Wis. 592, 18 Ann. Cas. 1176 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 4925-4927).

"'Officers,' with regard to the public body for which they act, are officers of the general government, state officers, county officers, and municipal officers." State ex rel. Long v. Rexford, 109 N. W. 216, 217, 21 S. D. 86.

An "officer" is a mere agent of the public, entitled to exercise the functions and perform the duties of the office for the public benefit, and not for his own. Goodrich v. Mitchell, 75 Pac. 1034, 1035, 68 Kan. 765, 64 L. R. A. 945, 104 Am. St. Rep. 429, 1 Ann. Cas. 288.

"A 'public office' is an agency for the state, and the person whose duty it is to perform this agency is a 'public officer.' The essence of it is the duty of performing an agency; that is, of doing some act or acts, or a series of acts, for the state." Malone v. Williams, 103 S. W. 798, 820, 118 Tenn. 390, 121 Am. St. Rep. 1002 (quoting and adopting the definition in Clark v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 63, 8 Am. Rep. 488; adopted in Wood v. Bellamy, 27 S. E. 115, 116, 120 N. C. 212).

An "officer" is simply an agent of the public, whose power of attorney is the law, which prescribes his duties and limits his authority to such acts only as are necessary and incidental to a proper discharge of such duties as it imposes. As the agent of the public, he can no more transcend the power given by his principal than can the agent of the humblest individual. While this power is sometimes exceeded, an act in excess of it can never be legal. Callaghan v. McGown (Tex.) 90 S. W. 319, 327.

Every one who is appointed to discharge a public duty, and receives compensation, in whatever shape, is a "public officer," and if a duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rules prescribed by the government, and not by contract, it is very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who holds it from an "officer." Michael v. State ex rel. Welch, 50 South. 929, 931, 163 Ala. 425 (quoting and adopting definition in Bac. Abr. and in United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 102, 26 Fed. Cas. 1211).

An "office" is a public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of an office is an "officer." Blackstone says: "An 'office' is the right to exercise a private or public employment and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging. An office implies an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power of the state, either in making, administering, or executing the laws." The power and jurisdiction of an office constitute the "office" and are inseparable from it. The true test of a public office seems to be that it is a part of the administration of government, civil or military. A usurper is not an "officer" at all, or for any purpose; for there cannot be a de facto officer when a de jure officer already fills the office. Commonwealth v. Bush, 115 S. W. 249, 251, 252, 131 Ky. 384 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 103, 26 Fed. Cas. 1211; Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481; Opinion of the Judges, 3 Me. 481; Commonwealth v. Gamble, 62 Pa. 343, 1 Am. Rep. 422; Eliason v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 235; citing Eubank v. Commonwealth, 103 S. Rev. Codes Mont. § 262, authorizing a board of examiners to employ clerical help for any state officer or board, and prohibiting such "officers" or "boards" from employing clerks without the authority of the board of examiners, does not apply to the employees of the Supreme Court; it not being an "officer" or "board" within the terms of the act. State ex rel. Schneider v. Cunningham, 101 Pac. 962, 965, 39 Mont. 165.

A coroner's physician appointed by him, as authorized by Laws 1882, p. 429, c. 410, § 1769, is a subordinate of the coroner and is not a public officer, exercising as he does no part of the sovereign power. In re Flynn, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1079, 1083, 65 Misc. Rep. 233.

Administrator, assignee, receiver, or trustee

An administrator belongs to that class of officers represented by curators, guardians, receivers, referees, and the like, whose duties are private and whose acts concern private rather than public interests. An administrator is vested with no portion of the sovereign functions of the state to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public, and he is therefore not a "state officer" within the meaning of Const. art. 8, § 12, providing that "no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, civil or military, who is not a citizen of the United States, and who shall not have resided in this state one year next preceding his election or appointment." A "public office" is a right and authority created by law by which an individual is invested with some portion of the functions of government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public for a given period of time, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power. The word "office," as here used, is to be distinguished from its application to such positions as are at most quasi public only, as the charge of an executor, administrator, or guardian, and from the offices of a private corporation. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing Mechem, Pub. Off. § 1; In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238).

Though Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 18, 30 Stat. 544, defines the term "officer" as used in the act as including trustees, a trustee in bankruptcy does not occupy an "office" in the sense in which that term is used in the law which prohibits an alien from being a public officer, since his duties are not general or permanent, and therefore an alien is not disqualified from acting as a trustee in bankruptcy. Section 45 of this act provides that individuals who are competent to perform the duties of a trustee and who reside or have an "office" in the judicial district within which they are appointed may act as trustees. "Individual" is a very broad term and is sufficient to include an alien. In re Coe, 154 Fed. 162, 163 (citing In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238; United States v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508, 25 L. Ed. 482; Auffmordt v. Hedden, 11 Sup. Ct. 103, 137 U. S. 310, 34 L. Ed. 674).

An action by a receiver of a national bank to recover assets is one by an officer of the United States suing under authority of an act of Congress, within Rev. St. § 629, cl. 3, of which a Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction without regard to the amount involved or the citizenship of the parties. Murray v. Chambers, 151 Fed. 142, 143.

Priv. Laws 1851, p. 5, provided for the election of trustees to administer the Kaskaskia commons, and provided for the division and lease of the lands and for the use of the same for school purposes. Section 7 also authorized trustees to appropriate a portion of the proceeds to religious purposes, when asked for by a majority of the voters of the town of Kaskaskia, etc. Held, that the trustees were not "public officers," but trustees of an educational and religious trust, the administration of which was within the jurisdiction of the court of chancery. Stead v. President, etc., of Commons of Kaskaskia, 90 N. E. 654, 663, 243 Ill. 239.

Attorney at law

An attorney at law is not a "public officer." McKannay v. Horton, 91 Pac. 598, 602, 151 Cal. 711, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 121 Am. St. Rep. 146.

An attorney and counselor at law is a public officer appointed by the court to perform duties of a public character, and vested with certain power and authority incidental to the office. In re Spencer, 122 N. Y. Supp. 190, 192, 137 App. Div. 330.

A prosecuting attorney is a public officer, because he represents the sovereign power of the people of the state by whose authority and in whose name, under Const. art. 6, § 20, all prosecutions must be conducted, and not because of his relation to the court. Fleming v. Hance, 94 Pac. 620, 622, 153 Cal. 162.

In order to constitute an attorney employed to assist the Attorney General an officer of the state, the term of his appointment and continuance in office must be coterminous with the term of office of the Attorney General who appointed him, and of the Governor approving the appointment. Terrell v. Sparks, 135 S. W. 519, 521, 104 Tex. 191.

Candidate for office

A candidate nominated at a primary election for a public office is not an "officer" within the statute allowing officers to resign. State ex rel. Donnelley v. Hamilton, 111 Pac. 1026, 1029, 33 Nev. 418.

The provision of Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 33, § 128, that cases of contested elections of any of the officers not otherwise provided for shall be decided by the judges of the courts therein named, does not apply to primary election contests; the nominee of a political party not being an "officer." Foxwell v. Beck, 82 Atl. 657, 658, 117 Md. 1.

Corporate officer

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17a (4), 30 Stat. 550, excepting from a discharge in bankruptcy debts created by the bankrupt's fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer, or in any fiduciary capacity, an indebtedness of an officer of a private corporation, created by his misappropriation of the fund of such corporation, is not dischargeable in bankruptcy. Tatum v. Leigh, 72 S. E. 236, 238, 136 Ga. 791, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 216.

A director of a trust company is not a "public officer" within Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 1857, punishing omission of public duty by a public officer, and a director guilty of neglect of duty as such is not punishable under the section. People v. Knapp, 99 N. E. 841, 844, 208 N. Y. 373.

The bankruptcy acts of 1841 and 1867 excepted from the operation of a discharge debts contracted in consequence of a defalcation as a "public officer." The act of July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, cl. 4, 30 Stat. 550, provides that the discharge shall release a bankrupt from all provable debts, except such as were created by fraud, embezzlement, or defalcation, while acting as an "officer." Held, that it must be presumed that the change was intentional, and, by omitting the word "public," officers of private corporations are included within the term "officer." In re Harper, 133 Fed. 970, 973.

Officers of a corporation, where they get control, with an attendant fiduciary obligation, of property of the corporation, are "officers," within Bankruptcy Act, exempting from discharge debts created by misappropriation or defalcation while acting as an "officer," so that a continuance of a suit in a state court against corporate officers for the value of corporate property misappropriated by them will not be stayed on the application of the officers who had been adjudicated bankrupt. In re Gulick, 186 Fed. 350, 351.

County or parish officer or employé

The superintendent of public education in a parish is a public officer. State ex rel. Smith v. Theus, 38 South. 870, 872, 114 La. 1097.

The superintendent of a county infirmary, who resides in some apartment of the infirmary or building contiguous thereto, performs such duties as the directors may impose, and is governed in all respects by their rules and regulations, and is not removed except for good and sufficient cause, is not the holder of a "public office" within Rev. St. § 6760, so as to authorize quo warranto to oust him from the same, but is a mere employé. The most general distinction of a "public office" is that it embraces the performance by the incumbent of a public function delegated to him as a part of the sovereignty of the state, and it is essential that certain independent public duties, a part of the sovereignty of the state, should be appointed to it by law to be exercised by the incumbent in virtue of his election or appointment to the office thus created and defined, and not as a mere employé, subject to the direction and control of some one else. To the incumbent of a "public office" are delegated some of the sovereign functions of government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public, and some portion of the sovereignty of the country, either legislative or executive or judicial, attaches for the time being, to be exercised for the public benefit. The office of county warden is a public office, as the incumbent has power to appoint assistants to assist in policing certain reservoirs of the state and territory pertaining thereto in their respective counties, and to arrest all violators of the laws for the protection of fish and game. Palmer v. Zeigler, 81 N. E. 234, 236, 237, 76 Ohio St. 210; Id., 81 N. E. 238, 76 Ohio St. 229 (citing State ex rel. Attorney General v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 547, 557, 558; State ex rel. Attorney General v. Jennings, 49 N. E. 404, 405, 57 Ohio St. 415, 424, 63 Am. St. Rep. 723; State ex rel. Leland v. Mason, 56 N. E. 468, 61 Ohio St. 513; State ex rel. Attorney General v. Halliday, 56 N. E. 118, 61 Ohio St. 352, 49 L. R. A. 427).

An "officer" in the constitutional sense being one who is elected or appointed to an office, and who takes the oath of office and is responsible for the official acts of himself and subordinates, his clerks are not "officers," and the provision in Const. art. 2, § 20, that the General Assembly shall fix the compensation of all officers, is not infringed by Act March 22, 1906 (98 Ohio Laws, p. 89), authorizing the county commissioners to fix the compensation of clerks of county officers. Theobald v. State, 30 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 414, 415.

A janitor is not a county officer, within the constitutional definition of an "office," so that the salary of a janitor cannot be considered in determining whether a certain amount was properly levied for the salary of county officers. People v. Cincinnati, L. & C. Ry. Co., 93 N. E. 421, 247 Ill. 506.

Within Veteran Act March 14, 1895 (3 Gen. St. p. 3702), protecting only those persons who hold an "office" or a "position," a person employed by a board of chosen freeholders to work as a carpenter at daily wages, about the county courthouse, under the direction of the county superintendent, does not hold an "office." Kreigh v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 40 Atl. 625, 62 N. J. Law, 178 (citing and adopting Lewis v. Jersey City, 17 Atl. 112, 51 N. J. Law, 240; Stewart v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 38 Atl. 842, 61 N. J. Law, 117).

A comparison clerk in the county clerk's office of the county of New York is a public officer in the civil service of the state. People ex rel. O'Toole v. Hamilton, 90 N. Y. Supp. 97, 44 Misc. Rep. 577.

Members of a building committee appointed by a county court to contract for the erection of a courthouse are "public officers," within Acts 1899, p. 358, c. 182, making it a misdemeanor for any "public officer" to award a contract for any public work without requiring the bond provided for in the act. W. T. Hardison & Co. v. Yeaman, 91 S. W. 1111, 1115, 115 Tenn. 639.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6633b, provides that county boards of education shall constitute boards of truancy, who shall appoint one truant officer in each county, and also fixes the duties and compensation of such officer. Held, that such truant officer was a "public officer," and therefore bound to qualify, before entering on the duties of his office, by taking the oath prescribed by section 7523. Feathermgill v. State ex rel. Wright, 72 N. E. 181, 182, 33 Ind. App. 683.

The term "public officers," as used in Const. art. 12, § 3, providing that the compensation of any public officer shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, when construed in connection with the provisions that no money shall be paid out of the treasury except on appropriation by law, and on warrant drawn by the proper officer, and that the general appropriation bill shall embrace only appropriations for ordinary expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments, etc., and with article 5, § 19, article 30, §§ 8, 15, and article 21, § 2, providing for the terms and salaries of county judges, and supreme and county judges, applies only to state officers who draw their salaries from the state treasury, and does not include the county judges. Hauser v. Seeley, 100 N. W. 437, 438, 18 S. D. 308.

A "public officer," as defined by Act 1901 (23 St. at Large, p. 754), declaring that the term "public officer" shall include all officers of the state previously commissioned, the trustees of the various colleges of the state, members of the various state boards, dispensary constables, and other persons whose duties are defined by law, includes a poorhouse superintendent appointed by a county board of commissioners, under the authority conferred by Civ. Code 1902, §§ 785, 786. Sanders v. Belue, 58 S. E. 762-764, 78 S. C. 171.

Under Const. art. 3, § 28, prohibiting the granting of any extra compensation to any public officer, and Code Civ. Proc. § 3280, providing that each public officer on whom a duty is expressly imposed by law, must execute the same without fee, except where a fee is expressly allowed, an agreement to pay a county clerk, a "public officer" under Public Officers Law, § 2, for services imposed by law, is invalid on the ground of public policy. Wadsworth v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 115 N. Y. Supp. 8, 15.

The provisions of section 6 of "an act to reduce the number of members of boards of chosen freeholders," etc. (the Strong Act [P. L. 1902, p. 67]), concerning the terms of office of certain officers, do not apply to a mere clerkship in a county institution. Walker v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 85 Atl. 166, 83 N. J. Law, 695.

"Mr. Freeman says that a 'better definition of an office is that it is a right to exercise a public function or employment and take the fees belonging to it.' Applying the rule or definition thus indicated, we think that, if the person who has been duly selected and authorized to do the official county printing is not to be considered an officer, his position is so analogous to that of an officer that the rules which have been approved with reference to the conflicting claims of officers de facto and officers de jure and their respective claims against the state, county, or other municipality may be held applicable." Smith v. Van Buren County, 101 N. W. 186, 188, 125 Iowa, 454.

Court officer or employé

Judges are not public officers within Const. art. 3, § 13, providing that no law shall extend the term of a public officer, or change his salary, after his election or appointment. Commonwealth v. Mathues, 59 Atl. 961, 980, 210 Pa. 372.

A county judge is a "public officer" within Const. art. 5, § 30, providing that, except as otherwise provided in the Constitution, no law shall extend the term of any public officer or diminish or increase his salary or emoluments after his election or appointment. Henderson v. Boulder County, 117 Pac. 997, 998, 51 Colo. 364.

Judges of the superior court of West Florida were "public officers acting under authority of Congress" within the meaning of the proviso in Act June 22, 1860, § 3, prohibiting commissioners from embracing among the Florida land claims which ought to be confirmed "any claim which has been heretofore presented for confirmation before any board of commissioners or other public officers acting under authority of Congress, and rejected as being fraudulent, or procured or maintained by fraudulent or improper means." United States v. Dalcour, 27 Sup. Ct. 58, 59, 62, 203 U. S. 408, 51 L. Ed. 248.

One appointed court stenographer, though for a single case only, by the judge, under Sess. Laws 1899, pp. 111, 112, c. 72, is in the discharge of his duties a "public officer," so that the contract of the parties to pay him more than provided by the statute for transcribing the testimony is void, as against public policy. Dull v. Mammoth Min. Co., 79 Pac. 1050, 1051, 28 Utah, 467.

"A 'public office' is the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law by which, for a given period either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is vested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public" (quoting and adopting definition in Mechem on Public Officers, as approved in Kimbrough v. Barnett, 55 S. W. 120, 93 Tex. 301). "As said by Chief Justice Marshall, 'although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office' Mr. Mechem, in his work on Public Officers, says: "The most important characteristic which distinguishes an office from an employment or contract is that the creation and conferring of an office involves a delegation to the individual of some of the sovereign functions of government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public; that some portion of the sovereignty of the country, either legislative, executive, or judicial attaches for the time being, to be exercised for the benefit of the public. Unless the powers conferred are of this nature the individual is not a public officer." Now, while the fact that the position of stenographer is designated in the act providing for its creation as an office, and that it declares that the person who may be called to perform its duties 'shall be a sworn officer of the court,' affords some reason for determining it to be such, still it is believed the place possesses none of those sovereign functions of the judicial department of the government to which it relates, to distinguish it from a mere employment to perform a species of service, under public authority, for the assistance and convenience of the court and parties litigant therein, in which no judicial discretion or judgment is involved. The creation of the position, as shown by the very terms of the act, was designed for no other purpose than to provide some one by whom the oral evidence offered, and other proceedings involving objections made to the admissibility of testimony, the ruling of the court, and exceptions thereto, might be taken in shorthand as a method of preserving those matters as they occurred, without delaying trials, to be afterwards transcribed and furnished the court and parties to the suit; to aid them in an accurate and prompt preparation of the record. The report or transcript of the proceedings by the stenographer is not binding, however, upon the court, and may be adopted or rejected at his discretion. No act which he is authorized to do is independent of the control of others, or vested in him as a power to be exercised as a right or prerogative of a judicial office. We conclude that while the position of a stenographer, under the statute in this state, may be, in a sense, an office, and the term thereof may continue for a longer period than two years, yet there is no such sovereign function of government embraced in the powers conferred upon the individual performing its duties as brings it within the meaning of the word 'office' as used in the section of the Constitution quoted." Robertson v. Ellis County, 84 S. W. 1097, 1098, 1099, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 146.

Deputy

Persons who are appointed deputies under a statute are "public officers." Wells v. State, 94 N. E. 321, 322, 175 Ind. 380, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 86.

A deputy sheriff, appointed under the authority of Shannon's Code, § 448, to serve process in the portion of the county in which he resides, being required by sections 1079, 1080, to take the constitutional oath of office, is an officer, within Const. art. 2, § 28, declaring that no person shall hold more than one office at the same time. State v. Slagle, 89 S. W. 326, 115 Tenn. 336.

A statute making it a misdemeanor for any officer required to keep a court docket, or to keep an account of fees or fines and to pay over the same, to falsify such docket or account, is not restricted to public officers, and applies not only to the clerk of a district court but to the deputy clerk. State v. Hanlin, 110 N. W. 162, 164, 134 Iowa, 493.

Under Const. art. 2, § 2, providing for the appointment of officers by the President or heads of departments, a deputy United States surveyor, appointment of whom by a Surveyor General is provided for by Rev. St. § 2223, is not an "officer of the United States" within Act March 3, 1887, c. 359, § 2, 24 Stat. 505, as amended by Act June 27, 1898, c. 503, 30 Stat. 495, withdrawing from the jurisdiction of the Circuit and District Courts suits for fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States. Scully v. United States, 193 Fed. 185, 186.

Deputy inspectors of boilers and elevators, provided for by the charter of the city of St. Louis, perform public functions. They have a fixed tenure of office of four years, and are required to give bond. Their salaries are fixed at a certain sum per year. Their qualifications are prescribed by law. Their public position is expressly denominated as an office, and their duties as official duties. The charter defines "officers" as those holding situations under the city government or its departments with an annual salary or for a fixed definite term of office, and the forms of official oath and bond prescribed refer to their positions as officers. In view of this, it was held that they are "officers," although McQuillin's Municipal Code of St. Louis, § 2197, authorizes the inspectors of boilers and elevators to "employ" deputies; the word "employ" conveying the idea of selecting and intrusting with a duty. Gracey v. City of St. Louis, 111 S. W. 1159, 1160, 1161, 1163, 213 Mo. 384 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4923).

An "officer" in the constitutional sense being one who is elected or appointed to an office, and who takes the oath of office, and is responsible for the official acts of himself and subordinates, his deputies are not "officers," and the provision in Const. art. 2, § 20, that the General Assembly shall fix the compensation of all officers, is not infringed by Act March 22, 1906 (98 Ohio Laws, p. 89), authorizing the county commissioners to fix the compensation of deputies of county of-

Theobald v. State, 30 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 415.

Since the Legislature has not provided the office of deputy town marshal or delegated to towns the power to create such of the deputy town marshal of an unincorporated town was not a "public officer" within Code 1901, § 143, making it a criminal offense to resist a public officer. Findley v. State (Ariz.) 127 Pac. 716.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3863, as amended, provides that every justice issuing any process authorized by chapter 43, art. 3, including summons, on being satisfied that process will be executed for want of an officer to be in time to execute it, or in all cases where the constable is a party to the pending, or is otherwise interested in the result thereof, may empower any suitable person a party to the suit to execute the same endorsement thereon, and that the party empowered shall possess all the authority the constable in relation to its execution. Section 3864 (page 2143) declares that every constable or "other person" serving any process authorized by the article shall return thereon in writing the time and manner of service, and shall sign his name to such return. Held, that a private person specially authorized to serve a justice's summons is in essence an "officer," but is in law and fact an agent of the party at whose instance and whose risk he has been named, and hence, although required to make return of the time and manner of service, such return is subject to impeachment in the action by motion to set aside, or plea in abatement, and is not within the rule that the return of an officer is conclusive on the parties, and can be impeached only in a direct action on the officer's return for a false return. Stegall v. American Cement & Chemical Co., 130 S. W. 144, 150, Mo. App. 251.

Drainage district director

The director of a drainage district is in essence a public officer; but, as his office is one provided for by the Constitution, nor is one of the same general character, as those that are referred to in that instrument, must be deemed not to be within the scope of the prohibition; the Kansas Bill of Rights, prohibiting any religious test or property qualification as a requirement for any office of public trust or for any vote at any election. State v. Monahan, 84 Pac. 130, 133, 72 Kan. 115 Am. St. Rep. 224, 7 Ann. Cas. 661.

Election judges or clerks

The judges and clerks of election, appointed under the authority of Act March 28, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 170), creating a board of election commissioners in cities having a population of over 300,000, requiring the board to appoint, 90 days prior to the first election after the adoption of the act and within two years thereafter, judges and clerks of election for each precinct in the city, providing for the removal of the judges and clerks from "office" for grounds specified, prescribing their duties, and fixing their emoluments, are "public officers" holding office for a fixed period. State ex rel. Mosconi v. Maroney, 90 S. W. 141, 145, 191 Mo. 531.

A judge of election is a public officer under "An act to regulate elections" (Revision of 1898; C. S. p. 2073), upon whom a duty is imposed, and the depositing by him of a ballot, in the ballot box, of a voter who has been challenged, before the board had by a majority vote decided to receive such ballot, makes him guilty of a misdemeanor under section 197 (C. S. p. 2137). State v. Lockman, 83 Atl. 689, 690, 83 N. J. Law, 168; Same v. Stockwell, 134 N. W. 767, 770, 23 N. D. 70.

Employé, laborer, or servant

See Employé; Laborer; Servant.

Distinction between officer and employé generally, see Office.

Insurance agent

An insurance agent, as such, is not a "public officer," nor is his character a matter of public interest; except as the public has an indirect interest in the private character and conduct of every member of society; but this interest is not sufficient to invoke the privilege in libel, granted in case where one holds or is a candidate for some position of public trust. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co., 100 N. W. 867, 873, 124 Iowa, 707.

Jailer or other prison keeper

The office of keeper of a county jail is an "office or franchise" within Revision, p. 905, providing that in case any person shall usurp or intrude into any office or franchise the Attorney General on leave of the Supreme Court may bring information. State ex rel. Bownes v. Meehan, 45 N. J. Law, 189, 196.

One employed as an assistant matron of a workhouse is not an officer but a mere employé, although under contract for one year, and on sufficient proof of misconduct or neglect may be summarily removed by the board in control. Jameson v. City of Cincinnati, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 41, 43.

Within the definition of an office as a place in a governmental system created, or recognized, by the law of the state which, either directly or by delegated authority, assigns to the incumbent thereof the continuous performance of certain permanent public duties, the wardenship of the Essex county penitentiary, in view of Act March 22, 1900 (P. L. p. 168) § 6, and the duties imposed on the warden by the board of freeholders of the county, is an office, and not a mere employment, so that quo warranto, and not certiorari, is the proper remedy to determine which of the parties is the lawful incumbent thereof. Hosp v. Martin, 84 Atl. 1059, 1060, 83 N. J. Law, 299.

Juror or jury commissioner

The qualifications and competency of grand jurors, except as prescribed by Code 1907, § 7239, providing that grand jurors must be male residents of the county, over 21 and under 60 years of age, are for the judgment of the jury commissioners, and a juror need not be a qualified elector, and section 1467, fixing the eligibility to office, has no application to jurors. Wilson v. State, 54 South. 572, 574, 171 Ala. 25.

A jury commissioner is an "officer" within Const. art. 160, providing that all officers shall take the oath of office and, unless he takes the oath prescribed by that article, he cannot enter on the discharge of the duties, though he may have sworn to discharge those duties according to acts 1898, p. 216, No. 135, or some other statute. State v. McClendon, 43 South. 417, 418, 118 La. 792 (citing State v. Newhouse, 29 La. Ann. 824; State v. Arata, 32 La. Ann. 193; State v. Dellwood, 33 La. Ann. 1229; State v. Nockum, 6 South. 729, 41 La. Ann. 689; State v. Fuseller, 26 South. 264, 51 La. Ann. 1317; State v. Scott, 34 South. 479, 110 La. 371).

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1449, requiring jury commissioners to take an official oath to honestly perform their duties "during their term of office," and section 1456, declaring that any person appointed a jury commissioner who shall "fail to take upon himself said office," etc., shall be guilty of contempt of court, a person appointed a jury commissioner is an "officer" whose acts are protected by the de facto doctrine. State v. Sutherland, 75 N. E. 642, 645, 165 Ind. 339.

The office of jury commissioner, created by Sess. Acts 1879, p. 28, relating to the appointment of jury commissioner in cities having a specified population, is not an "office" within Const. art. 9, § 14, limiting the term of office of county, township and municipal officers to four years. State ex inf. Hadley v. Corcoran, 103 S. W. 1044, 1045, 206 Mo. 1, 12 Ann. Cas. 565.

A grand juror is not a "public officer" to be commissioned by the Governor, within the statute construing the term "public officers" to mean all officers of the state that have heretofore been commissioned by the Governor, etc. State v. Graham, 60 S. E. 431, 432, 79 S. C. 116.

Municipal officer or employé

Persons employed in a city hall in managing and conducting the affairs of the municipality are public officers, charged with the performance of public duties; and the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to such employments. Schwalk's Adm'r v. City of Louisville, 122 S. W. 860, 862, 135 Ky. 570, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

An assistant city auditor, whose duty it is to assist the city auditor and to act in his absence, is a "public officer," defined as one the performance of whose duties involve the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, and in whose proper performance all citizens are interested, either as members of the entire body politic or of some subdivision of it. Attorney General v. Tillinghast, 8 N. E. 1058, 1060, 203 Mass. 539, 17 Ann. Cas. 449.

The superintendent of streets in Oldtown in 1904-05 was not an employé or agent of the city entitled to damages for breach of contract for employment, but was a "public officer" possessing official powers and charged with public duties, and hence can recover only the salary or emoluments established by law for that office to be paid by the city. Stephens v. City of Oldtown, 65 Atl. 115, 117, 102 Me. 21.

A teacher in the public schools is not a "public officer" of the city within the provisions of original Greater New York Charter, § 111, relating to the transfer to the service of the consolidated city of those holding office for definite terms. Bogert v. Board of Education of City of New York, 94 N. Y. Supp. 180, 183, 106 App. Div. 56.

A "public officer" being one who renders a public service, or service in which the general public is interested, a municipal fireman is a public officer, as he is charged with the public duty of protecting the property of the municipality from fire. Schmitt v. Downing, 140 S. W. 197, 198, 145 Ky. 240, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1078.

Since Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 8684, 8685, providing for the creation of boards of health recognizes and treats them as one of the executive departments of the city, members of such board are city officers, and not mere employées. Watts v. City of Princeton, 96 N. E. 658, 659, 49 Ind. App. 35.

The word "officer," as used in Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 109, c. 49, § 255, providing that the corporation counsel shall be the attorney for the city and each and every officer, and shall conduct all the law business in which the city is interested and shall be the legal adviser of the mayor and city boards and officers, and shall furnish them such advice and legal assistance as may be required, clearly related to those officers who were on the same general footing as the mayor, city boards, and officers, etc., and not to the subordinate officers. Forshaw v. Keeshan, 87 N. Y. Supp. 144, 147, 9 App. Div. 602.

A clerk appointed under Greater New York Charter, § 1571, authorizing the coroner to appoint a clerk, etc., who performs routine duties in strict subordination to a public officer, and with no authority under the statute to do anything except where it is authorized and directed by such officer, is not a "public officer," and hence when dismissed in violation of Civil Service Law, § 2 (Laws 1899, p. 809, c. 370, as amended by vs 1904, p. 1604, c. 697), mandamus is remedy. People ex rel. Hoefle v. Cahill, N. E. 453, 454, 188 N. Y. 480.

Under Rev. St. 1889, § 5777, declaring term "officers" to include any person holding any situation under the city government or any of its departments, with an annual salary or for a definite term of office, a person appointed to perform certain engineering duties with regard to sewers in a class of the third class, for no definite term, to receive a per diem wage, is not an "officer," entitled to perform such work unsection 5848, requiring the same to be performed by a city engineer or other officer. Weesner v. Central Nat. Bank, 80 S. W. 320, 106 Mo. App. 668.

A clerk of the street department is one of the subordinate officers whose appointment by the council is authorized by the charter of the city of Trenton, but his term of office is for one year unless sooner removed, and an appointment for three years is beyond the power of the council. Where the subordinate office of clerk of the street department is created by ordinance under a charter provision authorizing the common council to appoint such subordinate officers shall be necessary, the incumbent must be elected and appointed by the common council, and the duty cannot be delegated to one of the city officials appointed by the council. The clerk of the street department having duty to perform other than those directed by the street commissioner, his appointment is not to a public office, but was in the nature of a contract of employment. McAvoy v. Inhabitants of City of Trenton, 80 Atl. 951, 82 N. J. Law, 101.

A councilman of an incorporated city is "officer or agent of a corporation" within the statute prohibiting any "officer or agent of a corporation" or public institution to be interested in any contract to sell or furnish supplies, etc., to the corporation, etc. Commonwealth v. Witman, 66 Atl. 986, 988, Pa. 411.

A city councilman, like a city marshal, is a "public official." His duties are defined by law. He is not the general or private agent of the city, and the councilmen could not bind the city by such construction as they are by law authorized to make, and, hence the right of any public officer can extend only by law, the city council is powerless to bind the city in any manner to pay compensation to the marshal not fixed by valid ordinance. O'Dwyer v. City of Montreal, 100 S. W. 670, 671, 123 Mo. App. 184.

A charter provision for a board of apportionment composed of two aldermen and one citizen, to which should be referred all matters pertaining to taxation, does not create a new "office," but confers upon the aldermen, when selected, a power which might have been given to the entire council, and does not violate Const. art. 16, § 40, providing that no person shall hold at the same time more than one civil "office" or emolument. City of Houston v. Stewart, 87 S. W. 663, 665, 99 Tex. 67.

The word "officers," as used in a city charter providing that the mayor shall appoint all officers of a city whose election or appointment is not otherwise provided for in the charter or by-laws, does not cover employes, but only includes such officers whose appointment is not otherwise provided for at the time of the appointment. MacDonald v. Lane, 90 Pac. 181, 182, 49 Or. 530.

The secretary of a city board of health is an "officer" within the act for the incorporation of cities, approved March 14, 1887, declaring that no city "officer" shall be in any manner interested in any contract with the city, and a contract made in violation thereof to be void, and hence a contract, between a city and the secretary of the board, whereby the secretary is to care for small-pox patients, is void unless such an emergency exists that it would be manifestly unjust to delay action in order to comply with the strict requirements of the statute. City of Greenfield v. Black, 82 N. E. 797, 798, 42 Ind. App. 645.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 5848, relating to the duties to be performed by a city engineer or other officer and providing that on the completion of any sewer district the city engineer or other officer having charge of the work shall compute the cost thereof, and shall apportion the same against the lots, an officer other than the city engineer may perform the duties in regard to sewers, but an inspector appointed by the city engineer to have oversight of a sewer construction, as agent of the engineer during his temporary absence from the work, is not such an officer. Ernst v. City of Springfield, 130 S. W. 419, 423, 145 Mo. App. 89.

The word "officer," in Pen. Code, § 672, punishing one who with intent to defraud presents for allowance or payment to any officer of any city, authorized to audit, allow, or pay bills, fraudulent claims, includes the comptroller of the city of New York, authorized by Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 50, c. 466, § 149, to adjust claims against the city. People v. Miles, 108 N. Y. Supp. 510, 123 App. Div. 862.

The use of the word "officer" in a city charter authorizing the common council to make rules and regulations for the government of all "officers," and to fix the fees and charges for all official services, and to fix salaries and wages not otherwise provided by general laws, or by the charter, and a further provision stating the amount of the annual salaries of the officers of the city, and empowering the council to fix the salaries of all other officers, does not include a charter officer, and the common council was not authorized to create salaries for its members. Woods v. Potter, 95 Pac. 1125, 1127, 8 Cal. App. 41.

Village Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 64) § 332, providing that an "officer" shall not be interested in a contract which he or a board of which he is a member makes on behalf of the village nor in furnishing work or materials, held not to apply to the street superintendent of the village of Saratoga Springs, as the act creating such office omitted as to him the restriction applicable generally to village officers, so that he may recover for the use of a horse and wagon furnished by him to convey the sewer, water, and street commissioner about the village in the discharge of his duties. Morrissey v. Sewer, Water & Street Commission of Saratoga Springs, 133 N. Y. Supp. 365, 366, 73 Misc. Rep. 432.

The office of a city treasurer, appointed by the mayor pursuant to Municipal Code Act (Acts 1907, pp. 799, 811) §§ 17, 33 (Code 1907, §§ 1067, 1171), providing for the determination by ordinance of the officers of a city, their salary, manner of election, and terms of office, and an ordinance thereunder fixing the office of treasurer, defining his duties, requiring him to make bond, etc., is a "public civil office," the title to which may be tried by quo warranto proceedings under Code 1907, § 5453. Michael v. State ex rel. Welch, 50 South. 929, 931, 163 Ala. 425.

The treasurer of a village is not an "officer" within Village Law, Laws 1897, p. 451, c. 414, § 313, providing that an officer shall not be interested in a contract which he or a board of which he is a member is authorized to make on behalf of the village, since under section 81 (page 388) the village treasurer is not a member of the board of trustees, and is not authorized to make contracts on behalf of the village, so that a contract for public work entered into between a village and a corporation of which the village treasurer is president is not void. In re Village of Kenmore, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1008, 1013, 59 Misc. Rep. 388.

Under Spokane Charter, which established a commission form of government and classified civil service, one entitled to the position of foreman in the water construction department is an "officer," and not a mere subordinate, as affecting his right to maintain quo warranto on wrongful discharge. State ex rel. Powell v. Fassett, 125 Pac. 963, 964, 69 Wash. 555.

St. 1865, c. 153, being an act for supplying the city of Cambridge with water, provides, in section 6, that the powers therein granted shall be exercised by such agents as the "city council" shall direct. A water board is not provided for by any subsequent act, but subsequent ordinances of the city, in designating its agents, use the phrase "water board." St. 1891, c. 364, amending the city charter, recognizes the existence of the water board, but makes no provision for the election of its members, except in section 9, which provides that all "officers" not elected by voters shall be appointed by the mayor, subject to confirmation by the board of aldermen. Held, that members of the water board are "officers," within the meaning of the latter section, and therefore an ordinance providing for their appointment in such manner is valid. O'Brien v. Thorogood, 39 N. E. 288, 162 Mass. 598.

The foreman of the yard of health department of a city being one of those engaged in the labor service of the city holds an "employment" rather than an "office." Garvey v. City of Lowell, 85 N. E. 182, 185, 199 Mass. 47, 127 Am. St. Rep. 468.

St. Louis City Charter, art. 4, § 43, defines the term "officers" to include "all persons holding any situation under the city government or its departments, with an annual salary or for a definite term." An inspector to assist the commissioner of public buildings in the inspection of private buildings in the course of erection is an officer. Magner v. City of St. Louis, 78 S. W. 784, 179 Mo. 495.

An exempt fireman holding the position of assistant building inspector holds a "position" and not an "office." Hence certiorari and not quo warranto was the proper remedy to test the legality of his removal. McGrath v. City of Bayonne, 83 Atl. 780, 83 N. J. Law 224.

Where a fireman wrongfully discharged from the fire department of the city of New York pending reinstatement accepted a position as sergeant at arms to the council of the municipal assembly, he was a mere "employee" of the city and not an "officer," within New York City Charter (Laws 1897, p. 54, c. 378, § 1549), prohibiting "municipal officers from holding two offices." Padden v. City of New York, 92 N. Y. Supp. 926, 927, 45 Misc. Rep. 517.

Firemen are not officers within Conn. art. 15, § 1, providing that state and county officers shall subscribe to an oath not to receive or use any free pass or free transportation during their term of office. Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 48, 50, 20 Okl. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651.

New Haven city charter provides for the appointment of a director of public works who shall have necessary clerical assistants to perform the clerical work of the board and examine all transfers of real estate within the city, and preserve such abstracts of title as may facilitate the departmental work. The charter also creates a civil service board to prescribe civil service rules for positions in the city government, including all clerical copyists, janitors, stenographers, etc. An dinance provided that the clerk of the department of public works shall keep a record of the proceedings of the department and perform other prescribed duties. The director of public works appointed relator to examine the records of transfers of real estate and make and preserve abstracts of title for use of the department, but prescribed no other duties. The position was known as "examiner of records" with an annual salary assigned to it, and the city yearbook contained relator's name, followed by that title. Upon adoption of the civil service rules, relator took the civil service examination, was appointed and continued in the same duties until his removal. Held, that relator's position was not a "public office" to try title to which quo warranto will lie, relator not being invested with part of the sovereign functions of government. State ex rel. Neal v. Brethauer, 75 Atl. 705, 706, 83 Conn. 143.

Notary public

"The position or place of 'notary public' is clearly a public office." Since, under the common law, women are disabled from holding office, they are disqualified from appointment as notaries public. In re Opinion of the Justices, 62 Atl. 969, 970, 971, 73 N. H. 621, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415, 6 Ann. Cas. 283 (citing People v. Rathbone, 40 N. E. 395, 396, 145 N. Y. 434, 437, 28 L. R. A. 884).

"A notary public, who receives his appointment and commission from the Governor of the state upon the recommendation of the county court, must be regarded as a public 'officer' of the county." Governor v. Gordon, 15 Ala. 72-75.

A notary public is a "public officer," within the meaning of Const. N. Y. art. 13, § 5, prohibiting the use of free transportation by a public official. People v. Wadhams, 68 N. E. 65, 176 N. Y. 9 (citing People v. Rathbone, 40 N. E. 395, 145 N. Y. 434, 28 L. R. A. 384).

A "public officer" is one who has some duty to perform concerning the public; and he is not less so when his duty is confined to narrow limits, because it is the duty and the nature of that duty which makes him a public officer, and not the extent of his authority; and, where an employment or duty is a continuing one which is defined by rules or prescribed by law and not by contract, such a charge or employment is an office, and the person who performs it is an officer. A notary public is a public officer. In re Opinion of the Justices, 62 Atl. 969, 970, 73 N. H. 621, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415, 6 Ann. Cas. 283 (quoting and adopting definition in Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 72 Am. Dec. 169, 172).

One who has been commissioned as notary, and has taken the oath of office, and has been acting as notary for many years, and has the reputation of being such in the community in which he lives, but who has failed to file his oath of office in the offices of the Secretary of State and of the clerk of court, and has also failed to renew his bond every five years, as required by law, is a notary de facto; and acts passed before him have the same validity as acts passed before a notary de jure. The position of a notary public is an "office," and where a person holds a commission as a notary, and acts as one, and has the reputation of being a notary public, he is a "notary public de facto." Davenport v. Davenport, 41 South. 240, 241, 116 La. 1009, 114 Am. St. Rep. 575.

Officer of political party

The office of Democratic ward committeeman of a city is not a "public office." Greenough v. Lucey, 66 Atl. 300, 301, 23 R. I. 230.

The local executive committee of a political party, though required to perform certain duties by Laws 1905, p. 510, c. 93, and required to conduct political campaigns, are not "public officers." Attorney General v. Barry, 68 Atl. 192, 74 N. H. 353.

Police officer, marshal, or other peace officer

A city marshal elected by the people is a "public officer," within Const. 1890, § 175, providing that such officer shall not be removed from office for willful neglect of duty or misdemeanor in office, except on an indictment and conviction. Lizano v. City of Pass Christian, 50 South. 981, 982, 96 Miss. 640.

A city marshal, holding office under Greater New York Charter, § 1424, is a "public officer," within Municipal Court Act, § 333, authorizing increased costs where the successful defendant is a public officer appointed or elected under the authority of the state. Scherl v. Flam, 121 N. Y. Supp. 522, 523, 136 App. Div. 753.

"A 'public officer' is one who has some duty to perform concerning the public; and he is not the less a public officer when his duty is confined to narrow limits, because it is the duty, and the nature of that duty, which makes him a public officer, and not the extent of his authority." Policemen are "officers," within Const. § 20, requiring officers to be appointed for a definite time, so that an ordinance authorizing appointment of policemen during good behavior is void. Monette v. State, 44 South. 989, 91 Miss. 662, 124 Am. St. Rep. 715 (quoting and adopting definition in Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 72 Am. Dec. 169).

A special policeman appointed by the Governor at the instance of a railroad company pursuant to Code 1899, c. 145, § 31 (Code 1906, § 4281), and paid by such company for his services, is prima facie a public officer, for whose acts the company is not liable. McKain v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 64 S. E. 18, 19, 65 W. Va. 233, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 289, 131 Am. St. Rep. 964, 17 Ann. Cas. 634.

Policemen are not officers within Const. art. 15, § 1, providing that state and county officers shall subscribe to an oath not to receive or use any free pass or free transportation during their term of office. Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma Ry. Co., 83 Pac. 48, 51, 20 Okl. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651.

A janitor of a police station is not a "public officer." Sims v. O'Meara, 79 N. E. 824, 825, 198 Mass. 547 (distinguishing Ham v. Boston Board of Police, 7 N. E. 540, 142 Mass. 90).

A janitor of a police station, appointed for a year, is not a public officer, but a mere employé, whose contract gives him no estate for years in the station house, and no right of entry beyond a revocable license. Wiggin v. City of Manchester, 58 Atl. 522, 523, 72 N. H. 576.

For the purpose of determining his right to compensation during a period of suspension on written charges which on investigation are found untrue, a policeman appointed subject to the civil service rules as required by the charter of the city of Portland (section 179), who is required to take an oath of office and give a bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, who is made a peace officer by B. & C. Comp. § 1593, and a large part of whose duties are such that he must have authority to act, not as agent for the state or city, but by virtue of the office, is an officer, and, when legally appointed, has title to the office, which can only be terminated in the manner provided by law. Reising v. City of Portland, 111 Pac. 377, 378, 57 Or. 295, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 895.

Section 11 of the charter of the city of Portland provides that there shall be elected a mayor, treasurer, municipal judge, city attorney, auditor, and 15 councilmen, who shall be officers of the city. Section 18 prescribes the terms of such officers. Municipal officers embraced in a department, which includes detectives, are subject to the civil service rule found at section 306. Const. art. 6, § 7, provides that such other city officers as may be necessary shall be elected or appointed in such manner as may be prescribed by law. Article 15, § 2, provides that, when the duration of any office is not provided by the Constitution, it may be declared by law, and, if not so declared, the office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment, but the legislative assembly shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall exceed four years. Held, that a detective is not an officer within Const. art. 15, § 2. Reising v. City of Portland, 111 Pac. 377, 378, 57 Or. 295, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 895.

A duly appointed patrolman of the police department of a city is an "officer," within the meaning of the laws of Ohio. State v. City of Painesville, 32 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 123, 129.

Road commissioner, overseer, or supervisor

A supervisor of public roads is a public officer. Mial v. Ellington, 46 S. E. 961, 962, 134 N. C. 131, 65 L. R. A. 697.

"A road overseer is a public officer, obstructing him in the performance of his duties as such public officer constitutes a public offense." Richardson v. Dybedahl, N. W. 164, 166, 17 S. D. 629.

School or school district officer

The office of school director is an "office" within Const. art. 6, § 12, conferring exclusive appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in cases involving the title to an office within this state. State ex inf. Sutton v. Fasse, S. W. 1, 189 Mo. 582.

A school trustee is an "officer," within the meaning of the word as used in a constitutional provision that all officers shall take a prescribed oath before entering the duties of their office. Buchanan v. Graham, 81 S. W. 1237, 1239, 36 Tex. Civ. A. 468.

Powers in the directors of a school district will be implied when the exercise thereof is necessary to enable them to perform the duties imposed upon them; school directors being "public officers," and subject to the same rules as other public officers in respect to their implied powers. A. H. Andrews v. Delight Special School Dist., 128 S. W. 3363, 95 Ark. 26.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 42, § 27, providing that the school committee of a town "shall have the general charge and superintendence of all the public schools," the school committee act, not as "agents" of the town, but as "public officers," intrusted with powers and charged with duties concerning the maintenance of the schools. Morse v. Ashley, 79 E. 481, 482, 193 Mass. 294.

A "public officer" is a person appointed by the government and not by contract to perform a continuing duty defined by law or governmental rules. The superintendent of the Arkansas State School for the Blind, elected by the state board of trustees of charitable institutions under a statute authorizing such election, whose compensation is fixed by the statute, and whose duties of a public nature are prescribed by law, are continuing and not affected by change of the person of the incumbent, and who is required to give a bond for the faithful performance of his duties connected with the institution, is a public officer and not an employé. Lucas v. Futrall, 106 S. W. 667, 669, 670, 84 Ark. 540.

Rev. St. § 3899-3, provides that on the third Monday in April, 1896, and biannually thereafter, the school councils shall elect a clerk, who shall not be a member of the council, and who shall be clerk of the board of education. School Code April 25, 1900.

provides that all existing officers of boards of education and school councils shall hold their offices until boards of education are elected and organized under the provisions of this act. On the third Monday in April, 1904, the council neglected to elect a clerk, but elected one on April 25, 1904, after the provisions of the new School Code went into effect. Under certain statutory provisions the clerk of the board of education, outside of his mere clerical duties, which he has to perform for the board and as directed by it, has many statutory duties, for the faithful performance of which he must answer to the people. Held, that the incumbent of the office was a public officer, occupying the office of clerk of the board of education at the time the new Code took effect, and hence there was no vacancy in the office at the time the school council undertook to elect the defendant clerk, and the pretended election was void. State ex rel. Myers v. Coon, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 241, 242.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4274 (Rev. St. 1889, § 4266), provides the period within which civil actions shall be commenced, after the cause of action has accrued, as follows: "Within three years: First, an action against a sheriff, coroner, or other officer, upon a liability incurred by the doing of an act in his official capacity, and in virtue of his office, or by the omission of an official duty, including the nonpayment of money collected upon an execution or otherwise," etc. Section 9864 requires the board of a school district to organize by electing a president and a treasurer. Section 9868 requires the treasurer to give a bond conditioned "that he will render faithful and just account of all money that may come into his hands as such treasurer, and otherwise perform the duties of his office according to law." Section 9869 provides that the treasurer "shall be responsible on his official bond," etc. Section 9871 requires the treasurer to make annual settlements, and prescribes that "at the expiration of his term of office" he shall deliver over to his successor in office * * * all monies or other property in his hands," etc. Held, that a treasurer of a school district is a public officer within the meaning of section 4274. State ex rel. School Dist. of Selma v. Harter, 87 S. W. 941, 943, 188 Mo. 1.

State officer or employé

The state secretary of mine industries provided for in the act creating the State Association of Miners (Gen. St. 1901, § 4178) is ex officio state mine inspector, and a public officer. Titus v. Sherwood, 106 Pac. 1070, 81 N. 870.

The words "public officer" may be synonymous with officer and broad enough to include any person authorized to perform any public duty, but "public officer" is a term used in the Connecticut Constitution except in article 24, providing that neither the General Assembly, nor any county, city, etc., shall pay or grant any extra compensation to any public officer, etc. It is rarely used in legislation unless limited by its context. In article 10, providing a form of oath for members of the General Assembly, executive and judicial officers, the generic word "officer" is dealt with in its broadest meaning, and the classes to which it may apply are defined as members of the General Assembly, executive officers, civil officers, judicial officers, and military officers. Such term, as used in article 24, cannot include members of the General Assembly or legislative officers, the Governor or Lieutenant Governor. McGovern v. Mitchell, 63 Atl. 433, 439, 78 Conn. 536.

Laws 1911, p. 18, § 63, in so far as it appropriated $7,000 for salary and expenses of N. as special agent and expert to the Missouri Waterway Commission he not being an officer of the state, and there being no law creating an office, tenure, or duties which he was required to fill, is unconstitutional as a gift of money to an individual, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 46, and as granting to him a special and exclusive right or privilege, in violation of article 4, § 53, par. 26; but the invalidity of such provision did not invalidate the balance of the law, appropriating $10,000 to the Commission. Kavanaugh v. Gordon, 149 S. W. 587, 592, 244 Mo. 695.

Ky. St. 1903, § 4258, authorizes the auditor of public accounts to appoint revenue agents, whose term of office shall be four years. Section 4259 requires revenue agents to take the oath required of other officers, and to execute a bond to the commonwealth. The duties of such agents are prescribed by law, and in many matters they may act independently of the auditor, as in assessing omitted property under section 4241. Held, that a revenue agent, though an appointee of the auditor, is an "officer of the commonwealth" holding for a fixed term, and is not subject to removal by the auditor under section 140 of the statutes, authorizing the auditor to remove the assistant auditor and auditor's clerk. Hager v. Lucas, 86 S. W. 552, 553, 120 Ky. 307.

The commissioners of incorporated ports appointed under Laws Or. 1909, c. 39, § 8, who are vested with the power and authority given to corporations organized under the act, are mere agents for the performance of certain duties defined by the act, and are not "officers," within the meaning of Const. art. 15, § 2, limiting the tenure of officers appointed by the Legislature to four years. Bennett Trust Co. v. Sengstacken, 113 Pac. 863, 868, 58 Or. 333 (citing David v. Portland Water Co., 12 Pac. 174, 14 Or. 96; State v. George, 29 Pac. 356, 22 Or. 142, 16 L. R. A. 737, 29 Am. St. Rep. 568; White v. Mears, 74 Pac. 931, 44 Or. 215).

Under Const. art. 7, § 8, providing for the appointment of "officers," whose offices shall be created by law, the state Tax Commissioner holds an "office" which the Legislature is authorized to create. Blue v. Tetrick, 72 S. E. 1033, 1035, 69 W. Va. 742.

Superintendent or employé of state institution

"A 'public officer' is one who has some duty to perform concerning the public, and he is not the less a public officer because his duty is confined to narrow limits, because it is the duty or the nature of that duty which makes him a public officer and not the extent of his authority." Hence the clerk of the penitentiary board, created by Code 1906, § 3598, which calls the officers therein provided for employés of the penitentiary, is a "public officer," and may maintain quo warranto as such. Yerger v. State, 45 South. 849, 850, 91 Miss. 802 (quoting and adopting definition in Monette v. State, 44 South. 989, 91 Miss. 662, 124 Am. St. Rep. 715).

Tax collector or assessor

Include tax collectors within the rule that "'public officers,' who are required to discharge an official duty and to make a certificate or return thereof, are presumed to have truly done all that is certified and all they are required to do to make the certificate true." Hughes v. Owens (Ky.) 92 S. W. 595, 596.

Real estate assessors in counties having a population of 1,000,000 or over are public officers within section 13, art. 3, Const. Pa., providing that "no law shall extend the term of any public officer, or increase or diminish his salary or emoluments after his election or appointment," and they are not entitled to the benefit of Act May 31, 1907 (P. L. 329), which increases the salaries of real estate assessors in counties having a population of 1,000,000 or over from $2,000 to $3,000; the term "public officers" not being restricted merely to constitutional offices, but applying to officers who exercise important public duties, have delegated to them some of the functions of government, and whose offices are for a fixed term and whose powers, duties, and emoluments become vested in a successor, when the offices become vacant. Richie v. City of Philadelphia, 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 190, 192.

Townsite trustee

The position of townsite trustee is not an office within the provision of the Constitution prohibiting a judge from accepting any office other than a judicial office during the term for which he is elected. State ex rel. Jennett v. Stevens, 116 Pac. 601, 604, 34 Nev. 128.

As trustee

See Trustee.

United States officer or employé

A post office is an office of profit or trust under the authority of Congress, so as to prevent a postmaster from holding an executive or judicial office while continuing to exercise the office of postmaster. McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 428, 434, 39 Am. Dec. 231.

An "officer" of the United States is, as a general rule, one who holds his place by virtue of appointment by the President, by one of the courts of justice, or by the heads of departments authorized by law to make such appointments, and the governor of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, incorporated by act of Congress, holding by appointment of the board of managers, is not an "officer" of the United States. In re Doe's Estate, 138 N. W. 97, 99, 151 Wis. 136.

A clerk in the office of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes in Muskogee, Ind. T., appointed by the Commissioner acting on behalf of the Secretary of the Interior, is an "officer," within the federal statute, providing a punishment for any officer, having the custody of any record filed in his office or deposited with him, who fraudulently takes it away, etc. Martin v. United States, 104 S. W. 678, 684, 7 Ind. T. 451.

"Public officer," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 63, providing that an action against a public officer for an act done by him in virtue of his office shall be brought in the county where the cause of action arose, includes an officer of the United States as well as one of the state. Layne v. Sharp (Ky.) 105 S. W. 373.

The cashier of a mint is not a "public officer," within Rev. St. § 3506, providing that the superintendent of each mint shall be a keeper of all bullion or coin therein except when the same is legally in the hands of other "officers." United States v. Cole, 130 Fed. 614, 617.

The giving out of information by a clerk of a government department in respect to a matter which it was understood should be kept secret, although for private gain, is not a crime against the United States, unless made so by law, as a mere clerk in a public office is not a "public officer." United States v. Haas, 167 Fed. 211, 214.

A government mineral surveyor appointed by the surveyor general under the federal statutes is not an "officer, clerk, or employé" in the General Land Office, within the statute prohibiting such persons from obtaining government land, and hence is not disqualified thereby from locating a mining claim. Hand v. Cook, 92 Pac. 3, 5, 29 Nev. 518.

Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1245-1259, provide for the retirement of army officers. Section 1259 authorizes the assignment of retired officers to duty at the Soldiers' Home, and by subsequent enactments retired officers may be detailed for service with the militia of the several states or in colleges and military schools, and in time of war may be employed on active duty other than in command of troops. Act March 2, 1903, c. 975, 32 Stat. 927, 932; Act April 23, 1904, c. 1485, 33 Stat. 259; Act Nov. 3, 1893, c. 13, 28 Stat. 7; Act Aug. 6, 1894, c. 228, 28 Stat. 233; Act April 21, 1904, c. 1403, 33 Stat. 225. Held, that a retired army officer is not, by reason of such retirement, holding an office within State Const. art. 4, § 20, making any person holding any lucrative office under the United States ineligible to any civil office of profit under the state. Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 55.

The acceptance by an army officer on the active list, detached to command a battalion of Philippine scouts, of a small sum from the civil government of the Philippine Islands, to be used by him in connection with his military command in the preparation and display of an exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, did not make him a "public official," so as to be amenable to Pen. Code P. I. art. 300, punishing the falsification of a public document by a public official. Carrington v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 203, 204, 208 U. S. 1, 52 L. Ed. 367.

An expert accountant, who is not an attorney at law, appointed by the Attorney General "a special assistant to" a United States attorney to assist in the investigation and prosecution of a particular case is not an "officer of the Department of Justice," within the meaning of Act June 30, 1906, c. 3935, 34 Stat. 816, and cannot be authorized by the Attorney General to conduct, or assist in conducting, proceedings before the grand jury in connection with such case, nor to be present in the room during the examination of witnesses, to aid the district attorney by suggestions. United States v. Heinze, 177 Fed. 770-772.

"A mail carrier is not a 'public officer,' but is a private agent of the contractor for carrying the mail" (and in some cases the contractor himself). State v. Boone, 44 S. E. 595, 132 N. C. 1107 (citing Mechem, Pub. Off. § 41; Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Grat. [58 Va.] 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445; Throop, Pub. Off. § 12; State v. Barnett, 11 S. E. 735, 34 W. Va. 74; Hathcote v. State, 17 S. W. 721, 55 Ark. 181).

A railway postal clerk is not "an officer, clerk, or employe" traveling "under the order, or direction of the Postmaster General," within the intent of the Post Office Regulation, § 11. That regulation refers only to officers detailed for special duty. Hartman v. United States, 40 Ct. Cl. 133, 137.

A rural mail carrier is merely an employe in the postal department of the United States and is not an "officer" within Pen. Code 1911, arts. 475, 476, punishing any person carrying any pistol unless he is an officer engaged in the discharge of official duty. Lattimore v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 588, 589.

United States mail carriers are not "officers" contemplated or included by Const. art. 15, § 1, providing that senators and representatives, and all judicial, state and county officers, shall, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe an oath not to receive or use any free pass or free transportation during their term of office. Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 48, 51, 20 Okl. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651.

A clerk of the commissioner to the five Civilized Tribes, employed at a salary of $1,200 a year, under authority granted the Secretary of the Interior, was not an officer of the United States, and punishable under Rev. St. § 5408, providing that any officer having the custody of any record or paper, who fraudulently takes away or destroys any such record or paper, shall suffer the penalties there prescribed. Martin v. United States, 168 Fed. 198, 200, 93 C. C. A. 484.

A special agent of the General Land Office, whether appointed by the Secretary of the Interior or by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, is not an "officer" of the United States, within the meaning of article 2, § 2, of the Constitution, or of Rev. St. § 5481, providing for the punishment of "every officer" of the United States who is guilty of extortion under color of his office," and is not subject to indictment and prosecution under said section. United States v. Schlierholz, 138 Fed. 838, 836.

Under Const. art. 2, § 2, providing that all officers shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice of the Senate but that Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts, or in the heads of departments, no one can be deemed an "officer of the United States," within Rev. St. § 5481, relative to extortion by an officer of the United States, unless appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the President alone, by a court of law, or the head of a department; and if by the head of a department Congress must have created the office, if not created by the Constitution itself, and vested the power of appointment in the person making it. A special agent of the Land Department, appointed under an act appropriating money to meet the expenses of protecting timber on public lands, but providing no fixed salary, tenure of office, or person with power to appoint the agents the employment of which is impliedly authorized, was not an officer of the United States. United States v. Schlierholz, 137 Fed. 616, 618, 622.

OFFICER (Of Corporation)

As officer in general, see Officer.
Misconduct of, see Misconduct.

"Officers" are the means, the hands, the head by which corporations normally act. The word "officer" has this precise meaning. Webster gives its etymology as "ops," help, and "facere," to do or make. A corporation, in common, with a natural person, may act either in chief or by an agent. In the former case, being an artificial person, it can act only through the office of some natural person, who is on this account called its officer, and who, being thus inherent in such artificial person, is not, as regards it, an alius or other person, and hence is not an agent, within the meaning of the maxim "Qui facit per alium facit per se." American Soda Fountain Co. v. Stolzenbach, 68 Atl. 1078, 1080, 75 N. J. Law, 721, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 703, 127 Am. St. Rep. 822.

Rev. St. § 5102, provides that, when a corporation is the party, the verification of the pleading may be made by an "officer thereof, its agent or attorney." The word "officer" is not used in this statute tautologically, but is used in contradistinction to the word "agent," and an officer of a corporation may verify a pleading when an agent can or cannot do so. Bullock Beresford Mfg. Co. v. Hedges, 81 N. E. 171, 172, 76 Ohio St. 91.

A councilman of an incorporated city is an "officer or agent of a corporation," within a statute prohibiting any "officer or agent of any corporation" or public institution to be interested in any contract to sell or furnish any supplies, etc., to the corporation, etc. Commonwealth v. Witman, 66 Atl. 986, 988, 217 Pa. 411.

Agent distinguished

One distinction between officers and agents of a corporation lies in the manner of their creation. An "officer" is created by the charter of the corporation, and the officer is elected by the directors or the stockholders. An agency is usually created by the officers, or one or more of them, and the agent is appointed by the same authority. It is clear that the two terms "officers" and "agents" are by no means interchangeable. One deriving its existence from the other, and being dependent upon that other for its continuation, is necessarily restricted in its powers and duties, and such powers and duties are not necessarily the same as those pertaining to the authority creating it. The officers, as such, are the corporation. An agent is an employé. A mere employment, however liberally compensated, does not rise to the dignity of an office. The term "general agent," as applied to one representing a corporation, does not necessarily import that the person designated is an officer of the corporation. Vardeman v. Penn.

Mut. Life Ins. Co., 54 S. E. 66, 67, 125 Ga. 117, 5 Ann. Cas. 221.

Bookkeeper

One employed as bookkeeper for a definite period is not an officer or agent of such corporation within Code 1906, § 2281, holding his place during the pleasure of the directors, and removable by them without cause without liability on the corporation for breach of the contract of employment. Munn v. Wellsburg Banking & Trust Co., 66 S. E. 230, 231, 66 W. Va. 204, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

Director

A director of a corporation is an "officer," within General Corporation Act, § 57, giving employes of an insolvent corporation priority for wages, but declaring that the word "employé" shall not include any officer, and he is not entitled to priority as an employé for wages as a foreman. In re Peninsula Cut Stone Co., 82 Atl. 689, 9 Del. Ch. 348.

Foreman

A foreman acting under the direction of the superintendent of a corporation is not an "officer" of the corporation, and is not a person on whom service of summons on the corporation can be made. Simmons v. Defiance Box Co., 62 S. E. 435, 436, 148 N. C. 344.

General agent

A mere employment, however liberally compensated, does not rise to the dignity of an office, and the term "general agent," as applied to one representing a corporation, does not necessarily import that he is an "officer" of the corporation. One distinction between an "officer" of a corporation and an "agent" thereof is that an officer may by mandamus compel the corporation to reinstate him, while an agent may be dismissed without cause, and his only remedy would be compensation in damages. Vardeman v. Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 54 S. E. 66, 67, 68, 125 Ga. 117, 5 Ann. Cas. 221 (citing Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Lawson, 15 N. W. 398, 57 Wis. 400; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Warring, 20 Wis. 305; Thomas F. Meton & Sons v. Isham Wagon Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. 215; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Pullmann Co., 50 S. E. 1008, 122 Ga. 704; Commonwealth v. Christian [Pa.] 9 Phila. 558).

Manager

The manager of a corporation is an "officer of the corporation," so that the verification of a complaint by him is the verification by an "officer." Stockton Lumber Co. v. Blodgett, 84 Pac. 441, 3 Cal. App. 94.

Solicitor

A "solicitor of business" is not within the clause "and other officers," in Rev. St. U. S. § 5136, giving a national bank power to appoint a president, vice president, cashier, other officers, and dismiss such officers measure; but under subdivisions 3 and 7 said section, empowering such a bank to make contracts and to exercise, by duly authorized "officers" or agents, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the banking business, it may employ a director of business for a year. Case v. First Bank of City of Brooklyn, 109 N. Y. 1119, 1120, 59 Misc. Rep. 269.

OFFICER ELECT

The term "officer elect" implies a person eligible to hold office, and though a person chosen at a general election, where he is eligible to hold office, he is not an "officer" within Code 1906, § 3436, which provides for the holding of an election to fill a vacancy created by the failure of an officer to qualify. State v. Hays, 45 South. 730, 91 Miss. 755.

OFFICER HAVING GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE

A treasurer of a corporation is not an officer having a general superintendence of its concerns," within General Corporation (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 23) §§ 90, 91, authorizing a creditor, trustee, director, manager, or other officer of a corporation having general superintendence of its concerns, to compel officers to account for their official conduct. Loughlin v. Wocker, 137 N. Supp. 257, 152 App. Div. 466.

OFFICER PRO TEM.

An "officer pro tem." is one who pro tempore (for the time being) is such officer, completely, and he is, as Revisal 1905, § 33, provides, authorized "to execute the duties" of such office. State v. Thomas, 53 N. 522, 523, 141 N. C. 791.

OFFICIAL

See Defaulting Official.

OFFICIAL ACT

All acts of officials are not "official acts," only such as are done under some authority derived from the law, or in pursuance of prescribed duties. Chase v. Cochran, 67 Atl. 320, 322, 102 Me. 431.

A statute authorizing county supervisors to declare a charge against a county, the expenses of a county officer in defending an action against him for an "official act" applies only to official acts in which the public has concern, and does not apply to the act of the sheriff in returning an execution. Wey v. O'Hara, 95 N. Y. Supp. 81, 84, 48 Misc. Rep. 82.

"By an 'official act' is not meant a lawful act of the officer in the service of process; if so, the sureties would never be responsible. It means any act done by the officer in his official capacity, under color and by virtue of his office." Where a constable, in levying an execution, committed an assault on the judgment debtor's wife, who was attempting to assist the debtor in making a schedule of his property claimed to be exempt, he was acting under color and by virtue of his office, so as to render his bondsmen liable, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1272, c. 79, § 9, providing that the bonds of constables shall be held for the security and benefit of all persons who may be injured by their official acts or misconduct. Greenberg v. People, 80 N. E. 100, 102, 225 Ill. 174, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1223, 116 Am. St. Rep. 127 (quoting and adopting the definition in Turner v. Sisson, 137 Mass. 191).

Where, when deputy sheriffs were within 250 yards of certain men at night and saw flashes of pistols and heard pistol shots fired in the public street of a town, such acts constituted the commission of an offense against the public peace, so that the officers' acts in attempting to arrest the persons supposed to be guilty of such offense were "official acts," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 4897, making sheriffs responsible for the official acts of their deputies. King v. Brown, 94 S. W. 328, 329, 100 Tex. 109.

The rendition of a judgment is the "official act" of the court, as distinguished from the ministerial act of spreading it on the records. Simmons v. Hanne, 39 South. 77, 78, 50 Fla. 267, 7 Ann. Cas. 322 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Black, Judg. § 106).

OFFICIAL BALLOT

The "official election ballot" and "official ballot," in Comp. St. 1903, c. 26, § 32, providing that in no case shall the candidate of any political party be entitled to be designated on the official election ballot as the candidate of more than one political party, and shall be designated on the "official ballot" as the nominee of the party in whose nomination his name appears as the political party with which he affiliates, refer to the general election ballot and not to the primary election ballots. State ex rel. Adair v. Drexel, 105 N. W. 174, 177, 74 Neb. 770.

Rev. St. 1908, § 5919, requiring persons desiring to be candidates for school director to file a written notice of intention, and requiring the secretary of the school district to prepare ballots containing the names of candidates who have certified such intention, and providing that no other person shall be voted for, cannot be sustained as prescribing an "official ballot," which is a ballot prepared for election by public authority at public expense, and ballots other than those prepared by the secretary cast at the election by duly qualified electors must be counted in the absence of any fraud. Littlejohn v. People, 121 Pac. 159, 162, 52 Colo. 217, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 610 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4952).

St. 1900, p. 91, c. 133, extending the provisions of the civil service law to the police force of the town of Natick, and providing in section 4 that the act shall take effect on its acceptance by a majority of the legal voters at an annual town meeting or at any meeting called for the purpose, and if the vote thereon is taken at the annual town meeting it shall be by official ballot, etc., could not be accepted by the precinct voting, the provision that the vote shall be by official ballot not warranting the inference that the vote could be taken by precincts; the term "official ballot," as defined by St. 1907, p. 633, c. 560, § 1, meaning "a ballot prepared for any election, caucus, or primary by public authority and at public expense." Sweeney v. Bigelow, 88 N. E. 917, 918, 202 Mass. 539 (citing Stat. 1898, p. 541, c. 548, § 1; Rev. Laws, c. 11, § 1; Stat. 1907, p. 633, c. 560, § 1).

OFFICIAL BOND

Under Code 1906, § 3463, relating to "official bonds," the bond of the treasurer of a levee board is an "official bond." Adams v. Williams, 52 South. 865, 869, 97 Miss. 113, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1129.

A bond given by a county contractor under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7723, is an "official bond" within section 1278, which provides that defects in official bonds shall not vitiate them. Holthouse v. State, 97 N. E. 130, 132, 49 Ind. App. 178.

OFFICIAL DUTY

See While in Discharge of Official Duty.
Discharge of official duty, see Discharge.

Proceedings instituted by a drain commissioner to enforce payment of his salary were not "official duty" imposed on him by law, but were rather for enforcement of a private right, and hence fees for services of an attorney employed by him in such proceedings were not necessary expenses incurred by him as drain commissioner in the discharge of the duties of his office, to be paid by the county as required by Pub. Laws 1909, c. 9, No. 118, § 5. Hatch v. Board of Sup'rs of Calhoun County, 136 N. W. 335, 170 Mich. 322.

A county treasurer's failure to account to the county and the state, and pay over the revenue in his hands, was an omission "official duty," within the meaning of Code 1851, § 1659, providing that actions against a public officer, growing out of an omission of an official duty, must be commenced within three years after it accrues. State v. Dy, 17 Iowa, 223, 227 (citing and adopting definition in State, to Use of Mount Pleasant Bank, v. Conway, 18 Ohio. 234; State, to Use of Knox County Com'rs, v. Blake, 2 Ohio 147).

OFFICIAL JOURNAL

The "official journal" of each of the houses of the Legislature is the Journal filed in the office of the Secretary of State in accordance with law, and it controls in case of any discrepancy between it and the printed journal. State ex rel. McKinley v. Martin, 48 South. 846, 847, 160 Ala. 181.

Antedating by a clerk of a court of the filing of a paper, filed out of time, so as to show filing within time, is "official misconduct" warranting his removal under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3531. Howard v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 135 S. W. 707, 709 (citing Harris v. Hopson, 5 Tex. 529).

Where the mayor of a city by intoxication voluntarily incapacitated himself for the performance of his duties, but without undertaking official business during such time, and in the case in question owed no official duty to the men from whom he procured the intoxicating liquors unlawfully, he was guilty not only of private, but "official misconduct," warranting his removal from office for intoxication pursuant to Acts 33rd Gen. Assem. c. 78, § 1. State v. Henderson, 124 N. W. 767, 769, 145 Iowa, 657.

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS

See Public Official Proceedings.

OFFICIAL SEAL

Nothing short of an impression on the paper will constitute an "official seal." The requirement of Rev. St. § 182, that a commissioner of deeds for Wisconsin in another state shall have a seal of office, by which his official acts shall be authenticated, is not complied with by the use of a seal which does not contain the name of the state, but which the space for such name is left blank, and in the impression the word "Wisconsin" is written in such space with a pen. Ullermann v. Ide, 68 N. W. 393, 395, 98 S. 669, 57 Am. St. Rep. 947.

OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHER

Where two stenographers took the testimony at the trial, acting at different times, whether of them was the "official stenographer," within Laws 1910, c. 111, requiring demand for a transcript for purposes of appeal to be served on the "official stenographer" within 30 days after adjournment of court; and, such demand having been served, the transcript furnished will not be stricken, unless shown to be incorrect in some material particular. Lumber Mineral Co. v. King, 54 S. W. 250, 251, 98 Miss. 733.

OFFICIAL SURVEY

An "official survey," under St. 1890, §§ 4, 1735, must show distinctly of what piece of land it is a survey, at whose request was made, what owners were notified and present at the date of the survey, and the name of the chainman; and if such essentials are omitted it cannot be treated as an official survey. Watkins v. Havighorst, 74 C. 318, 319, 13 Okl. 123.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, it may be inferred that a child described in relation to a named man as his child is not merely a child committed to his custody, but the "offspring" of his body and lawfully gotten. Rimes v. State, 67 S. E. 223, 7 App. 553.

OHM

The electrical unit of resistance, called "ohm," is 1,000,000,000 units of the centimeter-gram-second, usually called the C. G. S. system. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria R. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

OLD

"Old" is defined in the Century Dictionary as having the form or resemblance of a thing indicated, like, as, in anthropoid, the man; crystalloid, like crystal; hydroid, like water. It is much used as an English derivative, chiefly in scientific words. Rubroid, therefore, is a descriptive word, meaning like rubber. Standard Paint Co. v.

OIL COMMONLY USED IN SOAP MAKING

Niger-seed oil, which, while used in soap making, can be used for other purposes, though without the proper qualities for such purposes, is within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 568, 30 Stat. 151, for oils "commonly used in soap making, * * * fit only for such use." United States v. Colby & Co., 153 Fed. 883, 82 C. C. A. 629.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 568, 30 Stat. 198, relating to "oils commonly used in soap making" and "fit only for such uses," does not include so-called "oleic acid," or red oil, which is fit for other uses, although commonly used as soap stock. *Edward Hill's Sons & Co. v. OLD

OLD BRASS

"Composition metal" is a commercial designation for all composite metals of copper, tin, lead, and spelter containing 70 per cent. or more of copper, and articles made of that metal are not "old brass," within the commercial meaning of that term. "Composition scrap" is the commercial designation which includes old cannon and various other articles made of composition metal, which are dealt in by the old-metal trade. Down- ing v. United States, 122 Fed. 445, 446, 58 C. C. A. 427.

OLD-FIELD PINE

A timber deed, which conveyed all the pine timber 10 inches and up, includes every kind of pine on the land, regardless whether it is worth sawing, and so includes "old-field pine," which is pine that grows on land that has been once farmed. Hearin v. Union Sawmill Co., 151 S. W. 1007, 1008, 105 Ark. 455.

OLD LINE POLICY

A contract of life insurance which does not unalterably fix the payments to be made by the insured, and which makes the benefit to be paid dependent upon the collection of such assessments as may be necessary, is an assessment policy, an old-line policy being one in which the premiums and the liability incurred by the insurer are fixed and unalterable. Knott v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 144 S. W. 178, 183, 161 Mo. App. 579.

Where a policy provided that the price of the insurance was calculated on the American Tables of Mortality, and that a certain sum should be laid aside from the premiums for the first two years to make an emergency fund required by Rev. St. 1899, § 7905, and that, if the death rate should exceed that estimated in the American Tables, an assessment might be made to meet the emergency, it was an "old line life insurance policy," and not an assessment policy, defined by section 7901 as one where the amount is dependent on the collection of an assessment on persons holding similar contracts, and hence the policy in question was within section 7890, declaring that no misrepresentation should avoid a policy unless the matter represented should have actually contributed to the contingency or event on which the policy was to become payable. Williams v. St. Louis Life Ins. Co., 87 S. W. 499, 503, 189 Mo. 70.

OLD WATER

Where benefits of an irrigation system were classified under two heads, one of "old water," and the other of "new water," and the term "old water" referred to existing water rights at the time of the purchase of the canal, and "new water" referred to rights yet to be acquired by the enlargement of the canal, and no benefits under the head of "old water" were apportioned to plaintiff's land, and the canal had not been enlarged so as to acquire any "new water," until such enlargement occurred, or it was made to appear that the canal company had sufficient water to supply plaintiff's demand without interfering with prior users, he could not acquire a perpetual water right by the temporary use of water from the canal when prior users were not demanding their full rights.

OLEOMARGARINE

Dealer in oleomargarine, see Dealer.

"Oleomargarine is a manufactured product made of oleo oil, neutral lard, milk and cream, and pure butter, although pure butter is not used in all grades, and butter and milk and cream and other coloring matter is evidently used for the purpose of giving it the semblance of the true dairy product." Stat. v. Armour Packing Co., 100 N. W. 59, 60, 12 Iowa, 323, 2 Ann. Cas. 448.

Agricultural Law, Laws 1893, p. 660, c. 338, art. 2, § 20, defines oleomargarine as an article or substance in the semblance of butter not the usual product of the dairy, and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, or (2) any article or substance into which any oil, lard, or fat not produced from milk or cream enters as a component part. Section 26 (page 663), amended by Laws 1894, p. 870, c. 426, Laws 1897, p. 810, c. 768, and Laws 1902, p. 986, c. 385, provides that any person manufacturing, selling, etc., any substance in imitation or semblance of butter, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of the agricultural law whether he sells such substance as butter, oleomargarine, or under any other name or designation whatsoever. Depositions on which a warrant charging a violation of said section 26 was issued showed that respondent sold an article called "Oleomargarine," consisting of a small brick of white substance wrapped in paper, and labeled "Oleomargarine." There was no statement that the article imitated or was in semblance of natural butter. The chemist who analyzed the substance deposed that it was not natural butter, nor of the color of natural butter, produced from pure milk or cream, etc., but was what is commonly known as oleomargarine. Held, that the depositions negated the fact that the substance was an imitation or in semblance of natural butter, and disproved the essential facts necessary to constitute the crime. People ex rel. McAuley v. Wahle, 109 N. Y. Supp. 629, 631, 124 App. Div. 762.

OLIVE OIL

OLIVE OIL IN TINS

Construing Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 40, 30 Stat. 153, providing (1) for olive oil "in bottles, jars, tins, or similar packages," and (2) for "olive oil not specially provided for," held, that oil in 5-gallon tins, in which form it is not sold to the consumer but to hotels and retail dealers, is not subject to the first provision, but to the latter. United States v. La Manana, Azema & Farnan, 154 Fed. 927.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 284, 30 Stat. 171, relating to olives "in bottles, jars or similar packages," and "in casks or otherwise than in bottles, jars, or similar packages," does not import an intention to make a division between olives in retail packages and those in wholesale packages, and that "olives in jars" holding 10 gallons are therefore within the first of these provisions. United States v. Shingun & Co., 173 Fed. 844, 845.

OMISSION

See Willful Omission.

"Omission" denotes a negative and inhibition. Randle v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 53 South. 918, 921, 169 Ala. 314.

"Omission" is a correlative of duty. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 16 Fed. 267, 269, 92 C. C. A. 331.

The act of a railroad company in closing and obstructing a drain so as to damage lands and crops was an act of "commission" and not of "omission." Brown v. Louisiana & W. R. Co., 42 South. 656, 118 La. 87.

Under St. 1894, c. 389, requiring in case of omission to state the place of the injury, the term "omission" means something more than a failure to state the precise spot of the accident with sufficient clearness. The failure must be an omission patent on the face of the document. Hence a notice of accident on a highway, stating that it occurred while driving along the F. road, leading from W., about three or four miles from W., at a point thereon on the F. side of the five ridges, is not within the statute. Tobin v. inhabitants of Brimfield, 65 N. E. 28, 182 Mass. 117.

The violation by a corporation of the duty imposed by the Employers' Liability Act, requiring all railroads to equip their cars used in interstate commerce with automatic couplers, constituted an "omission," within the meaning of Code 1896, § 27, giving a right of action to the personal representative of the wrongful act, omission, or negligence of any person or corporation causing the death of intestate. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg, 37 South. 395, 400, 141 Ala. 258.

Neglect distinguished

OMISSIONS, NEGLECTS, AND DEFAULTS

An alderman, clothed with original criminal jurisdiction by the town charter, who failed to charge a person brought before him with any offense under the charter, and who tried him for an offense not embraced within the charter, and who fined and imprisoned him for an offense of which he was not tried in an orderly manner, and to which he had not pleaded guilty, and who failed to keep a record of his judicial proceedings was guilty of "omissions, neglects, and defaults," within Rev. Code 1852, as amended to 1893, p. 697, c. 92, § 2, authorizing the judges of the superior court to punish the contempt, omissions, neglects, and defaults of enumerated officers. In re Tull (Del.) 78 Atl. 299, 300, 2 Boyce, 126.

OMIT

See Neglect.

Under Code Supp. 1907, § 1385b, authorizing the auditor to correct errors in the assessment list, and to assess for taxation any omitted property on notifying the owner, etc., taxable property is omitted from the assessment roll where the assessor erroneously decides that property subject to taxation is not taxable and leaves it off the roll on that account, as well as where through oversight or ignorance of the existence of the property it is omitted; the word "omit" meaning to let fall, to leave out, not to insert or name, to neglect to mention or to speak of, as to "omit" an item from a list, etc. Talley v. Brown, 125 N. W. 248, 253, 146 Iowa, 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

ON—UPON

See As Upon the Trial; In or Upon; In, Upon, or About; Lived Upon; Long On; Squatted Upon; Standing or Erected Upon.

The word "upon" is ordinarily synonymous with "on" in all of its meanings; the prefix "up" being almost eliminated. State ex rel. Barrett v. Hitchcock, 146 S. W. 40, 51, 241 Mo. 433.

Where a note is payable on a fixed day, and not "on or about" a fixed date, and the debtor makes payment before the maturity of the note, he is not entitled, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, to interest on the payments from the time they are made to the date on which the note is due. Blackshear Mfg. Co. v. Stone, 70 S. E. 29, 30, 8 Ga. App. 661.

While jurisdiction of the courts of a state extends only to things "on" a river, and not to permanent structures attached to the river bed within another state, it includes a suit relating to floating structures used in connection with fish nets in the river, although anchored by means of weights. Co- lumbia River Packers' Ass'n v. McGowan, 172 Fed. 991, 997.

In calling for the Ohio river as the northern boundary of a magisterial district which bordered on it, the designation of the beginning point as "on the Ohio river" means that the district line begins in the line of the county on its northern shore. Commonwealth v. Louisville & E. Packet Co., 80 S. W. 154, 155, 117 Ky. 936.

In a conveyance the words "to," "on," "by," "at," "along," a nontidal stream presumptively carry title as far into the stream as the grantor possesses. Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419, 428.

A conveyance of land bounding "on" a way, where, as a matter of construction, the granted premises do not stop at the side line, goes to the line of the ownership of the grantor. An owner laid out a passageway along the easterly line of his tract. He subsequently conveyed the tract by mortgage, which described the land as "on a" way and gave courses and distances. He subsequently conveyed the way to a third person. Held, that the mortgages operated to convey to the center of the way, with a right of way over the other half, and that the third person had a half of the way, with a corresponding right of way over the other half. Gould v. Wagner, 82 N. E. 10, 11, 13, 196 Mass. 270.

In an action against a street railroad company for personal injuries, an allegation in the declaration that plaintiff was "on" one of defendant's cars renders the count demurrable, as plaintiff might have been on the car as a trespasser; the action being based on his legal presence on the car. Breese v. Trenton Horse R. Co., 19 Atl. 204, 205, 52 N. J. Law, 250.

"There is a long line of uniform authorities that the words 'on,' 'when,' 'after,' 'from and after,' and like expressions, used in a devise of a remainder following a life estate, do not afford sufficient ground in themselves for adjudging that a remainder is contingent and not vested, and that such words, unless their meaning is enlarged by the context, are to be construed as relating merely to the time of the enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting an interest. Where nothing appears in the context of the will which enlarges these words, they do not of themselves effect a postponement of the vesting of the remainder until the death of the life tenant." Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 235, 236, 112 App. Div. 254 (citing Connelly v. O'Brien, 60 N. E. 20, 166 N. Y. 406; Hersee v. Simpson, 48 N. E. 890, 154 N. Y. 496; Nelson v. Russell, 31 N. E. 1008, 135 N. Y. 137, Moore v. Lyons [N. Y.] 25 Wend. 119).

Adverbs of time, such as "upon," "then," "from and after," etc., in the devise or bequest of a remainder limited upon life estate, are construed to relate merely to the time of enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting in interest. Staples v. Mead, 137 N. Y. Supp. 847, 850, 152 App. Div. 745.

The location of a depot at a point within 300 feet of the northern boundary of a town, 100 feet of its eastern boundary, and 1,450 feet from its southern boundary at the nearest point, is not a location "on" the southern limits of the town within the terms of a deed delivered in escrow and conveying land in consideration of such location. Bridgers v. Beaman, 75 S. E. 798, 799, 159 N. C. 521.

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 847, as it stood prior to 1897, requiring that judgment be rendered upon the coming in of the report of sale, the word "upon" does not mean "immediately upon." Hence a deficiency judgment in a foreclosure suit, under such statute, was not erroneous because not rendered immediately upon the coming in of the report of sale, where entered at the term at which confirmation was had. Crary v. Buck, 95 N. W. 839, 840, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 596.

As after

As used in a will directing the payment of certain indebtednesses "upon" the death of testator's wife, the word "upon" meant immediately after. Brown v. Ferren, 58 Atl. 870, 73 N. H. 6.

In section 2330, Rev. Codes 1905, relating to the division of counties, the word "upon" means after, or following, and the section makes the qualifying of the commissioners a condition precedent to clothing the new county with legal existence. The word "formed" means and relates only to the area of the county and has no reference to a county equipped with means of government, and therefore the voters are legal voters at a primary held before the appointment of the commissioners. Murray v. Davis, 128 N. W. 305, 306, 21 N. D. 64.

As and

Where a lease recited that the lessee had hired a store in the course of erection "on" a lot described, it was held that the word "on" could not be read as "and," and that the building only was demised. Kille v. Von Broock, 37 Atl. 469, 472, 56 N. J. Eq. 18.

As at the time of

A clause in a will devising property to testator's grandchildren "upon the death" of their mother does not indicate an intention to postpone the vesting of the remainder to the date of the mother's death, instead of from the date of testator's death, but merely refers to the time when the remaindermen shall come into the enjoyment of the estate. Archer v. Jacobs, 101 N. W. 195, 199, 25 Iowa, 467.

A remainder is not to be considered contingent where it may be vested consistently with the intent of testator; and the words "after" and "upon the death of," and like words, do not make a contingency, but merely indicate when the remainder shall take effect in possession. Clark v. Peters, 124 N. Y. Supp. 961, 962, 68 Misc. Rep. 252.

A will gave part of testator's estate in trust for his brother, providing that "upon his death" the property should be conveyed to another. Held, that the use of the word "upon," followed by directions to convey, indicates that, until the contingency named should happen, there was to be no vesting. In re Keogh, 95 N. Y. Supp. 191, 196, 47 Misc. Rep. 37.

The word "upon," as used in a bond in which the condition is that if within one year, upon request and payment of a certain sum, the obligor shall make and execute a valid deed of a piece of land, is equivalent in meaning to the words "at the time of," and requires the obligor to execute his deed within a reasonable time after request made and money paid or tendered, if done, within a year. Brown v. Clough, 39 Me. 566, 568.

Condition precedent

The words "on payment," in a contract of sale providing that, "on payment" of the contract price and interest, the vendor would execute and deliver a warranty deed of the said premises, make the conditions of the contract concurrent as to time and dependent, so that the payment of the money is a condition precedent to the delivery of the deed which is intended by the parties to take place at the same time. Hunt v. Lake, 97 N. Y. Supp. 298, 299, 48 Misc. Rep. 570.

As contiguous, near to, or at

When used as indicating relative situation, "on" means at, near, or adjacent to, without implying contact or support. O'Mara v. Jensma, 121 N. W. 518, 519, 143 Iowa, 297.

The word "on" in Laws 1905, p. 114, making it unlawful for a person to be in an intoxicated condition on any public street or highway, is not synonymous with "near," and one could not be convicted under the act for being intoxicated on a porch or shed of a store, within 15 to 30 feet of a public road. Hutchinson v. State, 70 S. E. 63, 65, 8 Ga. App. 684.

Where a deed described the land as lot 10, of block V of the Mott tract, "the same being the lot on the corner of First street on the east side of F. street, being 65 feet front by 165 feet deep," and a map of the Mott tract showed lot 10 of block V, as a lot fronting 60 feet on F. street with a depth of 165 feet, and as located 60 feet from First street, and lot 9 of the same dimensions lying between it and First street, and fronting on F. street, the quoted words did not render the description uncertain as inconsistent with the other description, for the word "on" in the quoted description might be construed as equivalent to "near to" or "at," as simply denoting proximity. Hall v. Bartlett, 112 Pac. 176, 178, 158 Cal. 638.

As in or during

The word "on" is often given the meaning of "in" or "during," and this meaning is well recognized when used to designate a date or calendar division of time, and is always its meaning when used with reference to a named day. Henry v. Lovenberg (Tex.) 128 S. W. 675, 676.

As on surface of

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 6116, providing that before granting any franchise for constructing and operating an elevated, underground, or other street railroad "on," "over," or under any street or alley, etc., the word "over" means "over," and can only apply to elevated roads; and "under" means beneath," and can refer only to underground roads; and "on" means "on," and can only refer to a surface road on the street. Ruckert v. Grand Ave. Ry. Co., 63 S. W. 814, 818, 163 Mo. 260.

As over

An indictment alleging that accused practicing medicine without a license treated a patient, and that the treatment consisted in physical manipulations with accused's hands "over" the patient, is sustained by proof that accused placed his hands "upon" the patient and rubbed and manipulated his hands "upon" his body; the words "upon" and "over" being synonymous. Milling v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 434, 436.

When synonymous

The words "on or upon," when affecting the quality of an estate in reference to the time of its vesting or enjoyment, are synonymous with "when." In bequests of personal property these words usually import a condition, and, unless explained or controlled by some expressions or other provisions of the will, they are annexed as conditions precedent to the gift and render the interest contingent. While several modern text-writers and many decisions seem to give these words the same significance in reference to devises of real, and bequests of personal, property, the older authorities hold that in respect to realty they import usually a condition subsequent determinative of the estate according to the terms of the condition, and that in the meantime the estate would vest. But all of the authorities are agreed that both as to real and personal property they may be so explained and controlled by other expressions and provisions of the will that they do not import a condition at all, but simply refer to the time of enjoyment, and that the interest conferred will vest at the testator's death to be possessed and enjoyed at the time indicated. Hooker v. Bryan, 53 S. E. 130, 131, 140 N. C. 402.

ON AND AFTER

The provision in section 33, Tariff Act July 27, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 213, that "on and after" that date merchandise previously Imported should be subjected to the duties imposed by said act, is not limited to merchandise imported prior to that date, but applies also to that imported on that day. John B. Ellison & Sons v. United States, 136 Fed. 989, 972, 973.

Where certain guaranties of payment expressly applied to all goods sold on credit "on and after" their dates from time to time, and for any balance or balances of account of such goods, including interest thereon "after maturity," and which were made to continue until notice of their discontinuance of further liability thereon, given by the subscribers in writing to the seller, the guaranties were continuing, notwithstanding the amount of the liability was limited, and were applicable to all future sales made prior to notice of discontinuance. Bond v. John V. Farwell Co., 172 Fed. 58, 65, 96 C. C. A. 546.

ON OR ABOUT

An admission that a notice was served "on or about" June 16, 1906, cannot be construed as an admission that the notice was served June 15th or prior thereto. Hope v. Scranton & Lehigh Coal Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 372, 378, 120 App. Div. 595.

A contract for the sale of calendars, containing the name of the buyer and matter advertising his business as insurance agent, stipulated that the calendars should be shipped by freight and delivered f. o. b. cars "on or about" November 1st. On December 8th, following, the seller shipped the goods by express, and the buyer received them 6 days later. It would take a package from 8 to 22 days to be carried by freight. Held, that time was of the essence, and the seller failed to deliver in time. Brown & Bigelow v. Bard, 118 N. Y. Supp. 371, 374, 64 Misc. Rep. 249.

Where a note is payable on a fixed day, and not "on or about" a fixed date, and the debtor makes payment before the maturity of the note, he is not entitled, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, to interest on the payments from the time they are made to the date on which the note is due. Blackshear Mfg. Co. v. Stone, 70 S. E. 29, 30, 8 Ga. App. 661.

"Among the meanings of the word 'about,' as given in Webster's Dictionary, are 'concerning;' 'with regard to;' 'on account of;' 'touching.'" Acts 1898, p. 1169, c. 502, subjecting every building to a lien for the payment of debts contracted for work done "on or about" the same, eliminates the right of a lien for materials furnished for a building, and gives a lien for labor only. A subcontractor agreed with the principal contractor to "carve, furnish the models, and * * * erect in place and finish all the exterior marble work" for a building. The material was taken to the subcontractor's yard, where stonecutters put the stones into proper shape. The stones were then loaded on cars and transported to the side of the building where they were unloaded, and then hoisted from the sidewalk and placed in the building in proper place. Held, that the subcontractor furnished work "on or about" the building within the act. Evans Marble Co. v. International Trust Co., 60 Atl. 667, 672, 101 M. 210, 109 Am. St. Rep. 568, 4 Ann. Cas. 83.

Comp. Laws, § 10,714, requires the filing of a claim of mechanic's lien within 60 days of the time of furnishing the last materials. A claim was filed on April 30th, stating that the last materials were furnished on or about March 3d. Held, that as the phrase "on or about" is a relative term, not showing definitely when the materials were furnished, and as the claim showed on its face that the last materials were furnished at least 60 days before lien filed, it was not a compliance with the statute. Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Kline, 133 N. W. 523, 529, 167 Mich. 6 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 496).

In civil pleadings

There is no fatal variance between an allegation that a contract was made "on or about September, 1905," and proof that was entered into on October the same year. Kerr v. Blair, 105 S. W. 548, 551, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 406.

There is no variance between a complaint in trover alleging that the conversion occurred on or about October 18th and the proof that it occurred on October 21st. Blair v. Riddle, 57 South. 382, 383, 3 Ala. App. 292 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 496).

In indictments or informations

Charging that the offense was committed "on or about" a certain day is indefinite and uncertain, and is fatal upon motion in arrest of judgment. Morgan v. State, 40 South. 828, 829, 51 Fla. 76, 7 Ann. Cas. 773.

The words "on or about," in an indictment alleging that defendant "did, on or about the 1st day of April, 1901," commit the offense charged, do not render the month and the year, as well as the day, uncertain. The meaning of the language to the general understanding is that the time of the crime was near the 1st day of April in the year 1901. There is no uncertainty as to the year. The words "April, 1901," mean April in the year 1901, and no resource of ingenuity can make them mean anything else. An averment in this language is of a time within the year, and if any day within the year may be proved the allegation is sufficient. An averment of time in an indictment is a matter of form, not generally material, and in view of Rev. St. § 1025, which provides that no indictment shall be deemed insufficient because of any defect in matter of form only, as well as under the Oregon statute, adopted by rule in the federal courts in that state, which provides that the precise time need not be stated, an indictment alleging the time of commission of the offense as on or at a day named is sufficient, except in cases where the time is an ingredient of the offense. United States v. McKinley, 127 Fed. 171.

The common understanding of the words "on or about," when used in connection with a definite point of time, is that they do not fix the time at large, but indicate that it is fixed with approximate accuracy. An indictment under Rev. St. § 3893, as amended by Sept. 26, 1888, c. 1039, § 2, 25 Stat. 496, depositing an obscene, lewd, and lascivious letter in the mails, is not bad because alleged that the offense was committed "on or about" a given date, where it shows that a short time elapsed between the writing of the letter and the finding of the indictment; the defect being one of form only, by which the defendant was not prejudiced, and may be disregarded under Rev. St. § 1025. Wheeler v. United States, 151 Fed. 755, 757, 81 O. A. 379.

ON OR ABOUT THE PREMISES

The Alabama statute provides that it shall be unlawful for any person without a license to sell vinous or spirituous liquors in any quantity, if the same is drunk "on or about the premises." This statutory prohibition embraces places over which the seller has no legal right to exercise authority or control, but which are so near his premises, and so situated in relation thereto, that they are within the mischief intended to be remedied; but where the liquor is taken by the purchaser, in the quart measure of the seller, at a place on the opposite side of the street, out of view of the seller's house, about fifty feet distant therefrom, and in front of another store, and is there drunk, the court will not assume, as a legal conclusion, that the place is within the statute. Easterling v. State, 30 Ala. 46, 48.

ON OR BEFORE

See, also, Before.

A written contract for the exchange of property, which provides that property is to be conveyed subject to an incumbrance due "on or before" two years, means that the incumbrance will mature in two years, but may be paid at any time on or before maturity. Wheeler v. Ballou, 97 N. E. 704, 705, 253 Ill. Ann. Cas. 1913A, 251 (citing 6 Words & Phrases, p. 4967).

In an admission that a note sued on was indorsed by the several defendants "on or before negotiation," the words "on or before" included "after," and the word "negotiation" implied delivery, that term being generally descriptive of all those acts by which a note is put into circulation or passed in its negotiation, including delivery in issue, transfer by delivery, or transfer by indorsement. Ward Knapp & Co. v. Tidewater Coal Co., 1063, 1068, 85 Conn. 147.

An indictment alleging that the theft occurred "on or before" the 21st day of July was not fatally defective because not showing that the offense was committed within the period of limitation; the state being required to prove that the offense was committed within the period of the limitation counting from the time the indictment was returned by the grand jury. Presley v. State, 131 S. W. 332, 333, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 102.

A negotiable note on which the maker indorsed after it was barred by limitations "on or before the year 1904 I promise to pay within note" became due and payable not later than January 1, 1904; the words "on or before" as used in notes meaning immediately at or any time in advance of the date named. Lovenberg v. Henry, 140 S. W. 1079, 1080, 104 Tex. 550; Henry v. Lovenberg, (Tex.) 128 S. W. 675.

Under a contract to sell potatoes to be delivered on or before November 1st under which the buyer was to furnish cars and was entitled to determine when the potatoes should be delivered, giving the natural and ordinary interpretation to the phrase "on or before," the seller was entitled to such reasonable notice of the arrival of the cars as would enable him, by the use of reasonable diligence, to complete the transportation and delivery on November 1st, and was not required, when notified on November 1st that the cars were ready to commence hauling and continue hauling and loading on that and succeeding days, where it would have been impossible for him to complete the delivery on November 1st. Pinkham v. Haynes, 68 Atl. 642, 644, 103 Me. 112 (Leader v. Plante, 50 Atl. 54, 95 Me. 341, 85 Am. St. Rep. 415; In re Public Road in Middlesex and Monmouth Counties, 4 N. J. Law, 290).

As rendering note nonnegotiable.

A note payable "on or before" a certain date is valid as a negotiable instrument. Lovenberg v. Henry, 140 S. W. 1079, 1081, 104 Tex. 550; Cunningham v. McDonald, 83 S. W. 372, 374, 98 Tex. 316.

A note payable "on or before" a certain date is negotiable. The maker of such note has the right to pay before the date named, but the holder cannot demand payment before that day. National Bank of Commerce v. Kenney, 83 S. W. 368, 371, 98 Tex. 293.

As giving option as to payment of note or other obligation

The words "on or before," in an instrument payable on or before a certain date, gives the obligor the right to pay at his option any time before the date. Henry v. Lane, 128 Fed. 243, 252, 62 C. O. A. 625 (citing Kikindal v. Mitchell, 14 Fed. Cas. 468, 2 McLean, 402).

Where the owner of lots wrote real estate agents that he would sell the lots for a given price, so much cash and the balance on long time; the agents were not authorized to sell on terms whereby notes running from one to five years, given by the purchaser for the balance, were payable "on or before" certain dates. The quoted words placed in each of the notes gave the maker the privilege of paying them at any time he might choose, and they did not comply with the terms of the authority, because they were not long-time notes. Colvin v. Blanchard, 106 S. W. 323, 325, 101 Tex. 231.

ON OR NEAR

See Property On or Near Premises.

ON ACCEPTING THIS OPTION

The first clause of an option contract for the sale of bonds provided that, in case "this option is accepted" by defendant, plaintiff would endeavor to procure the sale and delivery of $50,000 more of the same kind of bonds or such part thereof as he could obtain control of at the same price. The second clause declared, "in case this option is taken up as hereinafter provided," plaintiff agreed to sell at a certain price stock of the company that issued the bonds. The third clause contained an agreement of plaintiff to sell certain other bonds of the same kind at the same price "in case this option is accepted" by defendant; and the seventh clause declared that it was expressly understood that defendant was to purchase, "on accepting this option," $20,000 of said bonds, the proceeds to be applied to a particular purpose. Held, that the words "on accepting this option," in the seventh clause, did not mean that defendant was bound to purchase such bonds on the delivery and acceptance of the paper containing the option, but only on his election to purchase the bonds specified in the first clause. Martyn v. Hitchings, 78 N. E. 380, 381, 192 Mass. 71.

ON ACCOUNT OF

"A 'payment on account of the accident' means a payment because of accident, and may be either on account or in full settlement." Wallner v. Chicago Consol. Traction Co., 91 N. E. 1053, 1055, 245 Ill. 148.

In an assignment of all claims or causes of action for or "on account of," in trespass upon certain real estate, the words "on account of" doubtless mean by reason of. A cause of action in trover for the conversion of logs previously cut by a trespasser certainly seems to be a cause of action resulting "by reason of" the initial trespass. The conversion is a natural and legitimate result of the trespass. Dunbar v. Montreal River Lumber Co., 106 N. W. 389, 390, 127 Wis. 130.

Plaintiff having sued two corporations jointly for injuries alleged to have occurred in a collision between a street car of defendant traction company and a train belonging to defendant railroad company, received from the railroad company, $1,000 "on account of" his injury, and dismissed the suit as to it, testifying that he had no further claims against the railroad company. Held, that the words "on account of" should be construed to mean "because of the accident," and did not indicate a partial payment rather than a full settlement, and that the proof, therefore, showed a full payment and release of one of two joint tort-feasors. Wallner v. Chicago Consol. Traction Co., 91 N. E. 1053, 1055, 245 Ill. 148.

ON AND HUNG

Provision in a building contract that the third payment thereon should be made "when trim is on and doors hung" in practice refer to a stage of the work and are given a liberal construction. It is not necessary for compliance therewith that all the trim be on and doors hung, because in practice some of the doors are left unhung, although prepared to be hung for convenience in the work. Veitch v. Clark, 57 Atl. 272, 273, 67 N. J. Eq. 57.

ON ANY CONSIDERATION

Under Rev. Pen. Code, § 618, making it an offense to buy or receive in any manner, "upon any consideration," property, knowing that it has been stolen, the gist of the offense is the buying or receiving with such knowledge, and an information is not bad for omitting to allege that the property was bought or received "upon any consideration"; that phrase being synonymous with "any motive" or "for any cause." State v. Pirkey, 118 N. W. 1042, 1044, 22 S. D. 550, 18 Ann. Cas. 192.

ON ANY MILLSITE, ETC.

B. & O. Comp. § 5668, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 294, provides that, when two or more mines are claimed by the same person or persons and worked through a common shaft or tunnel or at one mill, or other reduction works, then all the mines, and all roads, tramways, trails, flumes, ditches, or pipe lines, buildings, structures, or superstructures used or owned in connection therewith, shall be deemed one mine. Held, that the words "roads, tramways, trails, flumes, ditches or pipe lines," include such appurtenances when not situated upon the mine, and that the term "upon any millsite or mill used, owned, or operated in connection with such mine," in such section, prior to its amendment, had reference to the millsite or mill not situated on the mine; the section as amended necessarily including the millsite or mills connected with the mine, without being specifically mentioned, so that a miner's lien notice need not state nor the proofs show that the labor for which the lien is claimed has been done on the mill or building on the mine to subject them to the lien. Washburn v. Inter-Mountain Mining Co., 109 Pac. 382, 385, 58 Or. 578, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 357.

ON ANY UNDERSTANDING OR AGREEMENT

Under Pen. Code, § 113 (Penal Law, § 2440; Consol. Laws, c. 40), making it a felony to give or offer to a witness, or one about to be called as a witness, any bribe upon any understanding or agreement that his testimony shall be thereby influenced, or to attempt by any other means fraudulently to induce any witness to give false testimony, the essence of the crime is the understanding under which the money was given to a prospective witness and not the giving of the money; the words "upon any understanding or agreement," and "attempts fraudulently to induce," being equivalent to "with the intent." People v. Kathan, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 1099, 136 App. Div. 303.

ON APPROVAL

In a receipt given by a dealer in diamonds to S. & Co. for a pair of diamond ear knobs, "on approval to show to my customers, said knobs to be returned to said S. & Co. on demand," the expression "on approval," as ordinarily interpreted, was not inconsistent with a mere authority "to show" nor with an obligation "to return on demand," and parol evidence was admissible to show that, in the diamond trade, such words took a recognized meaning and were understood, not to confer a power to sell, but authority merely to show diamonds to a customer and report to the owner. Smith v. Clews, 21 N. E. 160, 162, 114 N. Y. 190, 4 L. R. A. 392, 11 Am. St. Rep. 627.

ON ARRIVAL

Under the federal pure food act of 1906 (Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 768), forbidding the introduction of misbranded or adulterated liquors into one state from another, such liquors are removed from the operation of the commerce clause of the federal Constitution, and become subject to the laws of the state upon arrival within its territory and before delivery to the consignee. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 76 Atl. 268, 269, 106 Me. 135.

The expression "upon arrival in such state," as used in Act Cong. Aug. 8, 1890, c. 728, 26 Stat. 313, providing that liquors transported into any state shall, "upon arrival in such state," be subject to the operation of the laws of such state to the same extent as though they had been produced in such state, means neither on entrance within the state borders, nor on delivery to the consignee but on reaching its destination. Hudson v. State, 101 Pac. 275, 279, 2 Okl. Cr. 176.

Laws 1900, c. 20, §§ 4, 8, as amended by Laws 1906, c. 478, and Laws 1907, c. 666, prohibit the possession of deer between certain dates, etc., and provide that such possession by a common carrier unaccompanied by the owner shall constitute violation of the law.

Section 141, added by Laws 1902, c. 194, provides that, whenever in this act the possession of game is prohibited, reference is had equally to such game coming from without the state as to that taken within the state. Lacey Act May 25, 1901, c. 553, § 5, 31 Stat. 188, provides that game transported into any state shall, upon arrival therein, be subject to the laws of such state, to the same extent as though it had been there produced. Held that, in view of the latter statute, the provisions of the state statute do not attach to a shipment of foreign game while in transit, in possession of a common carrier, and until its arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee. People v. Fargo, 122 N. Y. Supp. 553, 555, 137 App. Div. 727.

ON BOARD

A marine policy, insuring "freight on board, or not on board," valued at £2,062, or actual freight, if more, "full interest admitted, the policy being deemed sufficient proof of interest," should be construed to cover the freight at risk at the valuation specified, though the freight actually at risk was much less in value. Where a marine policy insured "freight on board, or not on board," valued at a specified sum, or actual freight, if more, full interest admitted, and of the actual freight insured lost the whole, except a small salvage, there having been no abandonment, the percentage of actual freight lost should have been applied to the value in the policy. New York & Cuba Mail S. S. Co. v. Royal Exch. Assur., 154 Fed. 315, 318, 83 C. C. A. 235 (citing Arn. Ins. § 339; Adams v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. [Pa.] 1 Rawle, 97; De Longuemere v. Phoenix Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 10 Johns, 127; Same v. New York Fire Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 10 Johns, 201; Minturn v. Warren Ins. Co., 2 Allen [84 Mass.] 86).

ON CASH SALE

See Cash Sale.

ON A CONTINGENCY

See Contingency.

ON CONVICTION

The words "upon conviction," in P. L. 1906, p. 199, providing that, where the holder of a liquor license shall sell liquor contrary to the act, his license shall thereby "upon conviction" become forfeited and void, refer to the forfeiture, and it is not necessary that a petition for the revocation of a license should state that the person complained of had been convicted of the offenses charged. Davis v. Repp, 75 Atl. 169, 170, 79 N. J. Law, 394.

ON THE CURB

A sale of stock "on the curb" is a sale in the roadway near the sidewalk in Broad street in the city of New York, where brokers gather and deal in securities which are not listed at the New York Stock Exchange. Content v. Banner, 76 N. E. 913, 184 N. Y. 121, 6 Ann. Cas. 106.

ON DEMAND

In bills, notes, or bonds

In a note payable "on demand," the word "demand" is not a part of the contract, but is used to show that the debt is due. Van Vliet v. Kanter, 119 N. Y. Supp. 187, 188, 65 Misc. Rep. 48.

The term "payable on demand" in a bill imports that the debt is already due, so that limitation begins to run from the date. Cook v. Carpenter, 61 Atl. 799, 803, 212 Pa. 165, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900, 108 Am. St. Rep. 854, 4 Ann. Cas. 723.

An instrument which acknowledges an indebtedness from the maker to a person named and which promises to pay a specified sum to such person, "and in the event of my (maker's) death, I hereby authorize and direct the payment of the same out of the funds of my estate," is a promissory note payable on demand, within Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 38) §§ 26, 29, declaring that an instrument is payable on demand when no time for payment is expressed, etc.; the quoted clause being surplusage. Gilbert v. Adams, 131 N. Y. Supp. 787, 788, 146 App. Div. 864.

ON DEMAND AFTER DATE

A note payable to the order of the maker "on demand after date" at a bank designated is a note payable on demand, within Negotiable Instrument Law (Laws 1897, p. 723, c. 612, § 26), declaring that a note is payable on demand where it is expressed to be payable on demand, or in which no time for payment is expressed, and is not a note payable at a determinable future time, within section 23 (page 722), providing that a note is payable at a determinable future time which is expressed to be payable at a fixed period after date, etc., and it must be presented for payment within a reasonable time after its issue, as expressly required by section 131 (page 736). Schlesinger v. Schultz, 96 N. Y. Supp. 383, 386, 110 App. Div. 356.

ON DEPOSIT

The words "on deposit," in the writing as follows: "Received of L. $1,600 on deposit in national currency"—have a well-known meaning and imply a promise to pay upon presentation, where no other date of payment is fixed. Lewis v. Norris, 103 Pac. 134, 135, 80 Kan. 620 (quoting Long v. Strans, 6 N. E. 123, 7 N. E. 763, 107 Ind. 94, 57 Am. Rep. 87).

ON DUTY

An employé is "on duty" within the statute making it unlawful for any interstate carrier to require or permit any employé to be or remain on duty for a longer time than 16 consecutive hours, where he is at his post in obedience to rules or requirements of his superior and ready and willing to work, whether actually at work or awaiting orders, or the removal of hindrances from any cause, and the limitation of time of continuous service when applied to trainmen includes the time of duty preceding and subsequent to the time of service in actual operation of trains, as required by the rules of the employment. United States v. Chicago, M. & P. S. R. Co., 195 Fed. 783, 785.

The expression "on duty," as used in the Hours of Service Law, otherwise known as the Sixteen-Hour Law, of March 4, 1907 (chapter 2939, 34 Stat. 1415, 1416), means "to be actually engaged in work or to be charged with present responsibility for such should the occasion for it arise." United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 197 Fed. 629, 631.

Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2, 34 Stat. 1415, provides that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the act to require or permit any employé subject thereto to be or remain on duty for a longer period than 16 consecutive hours, and whenever such employé has been continually on duty for 16 hours he shall be relieved, and not required or permitted again to go on duty until he has had at least 10 consecutive hours off duty; and no such employé who has been on duty 16 hours in the aggregate in any 24-hour period shall be required or permitted to continue or again go on duty without having had at least 8 consecutive hours off duty. The act further provides in section 1 that the term "employés" as used in the act, shall be held to mean persons actually engaged in or connected with the movement of any train. Held, that where an interstate carrier had a rule requiring engineers to report 30 minutes before leaving time, during which they were required to overlook their engines in preparation for the trip, to see that they were properly oiled and the brakes O. K., and to connect the engines with their trains, the time so occupied constitutes a part of their time of duty; and this though it was the custom of the carrier not to strictly enforce the rule. United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 180 Fed. 630, 631.

ON EITHER SIDE

See Run Upon Either Side.

ON THE EXPRESS AGREEMENT

Where a deed provided that it was "upon the express agreement" of the grantee to build or cause to be built on the premises, within six months, a dwelling house to cost not less than $1,500, which agreement was considered as a part of the consideration for the conveyance, such provision constituted a mere personal covenant on the part of the grantee, and was not a condition subsequent, authorizing a forfeiture for nonperformance. Hawley v. Kafitz, 83 Pac. 248, 249, 148 Cal. 393, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 113 Am. St. Rep. 282.

ON THE FARM

Where the judgment debtor and his family lived on land belonging to his wife and her coheirs in indivision, and his sons cultivated the land under an agreement by which they received the surplus of the cotton after the supplies were paid for, and plaintiff received the other products for the support of the family, corn, hay, and cane raised on the land belonged to the debtor and were "on the farm" within the law, so as to exempt from seizure upon execution; the law not requiring that the farm belong to the person claiming the exemption. Hinton v. Roane, 50 South. 798, 799, 124 La. 927, 134 Am. St. Rep. 526.

ON FILE

The withdrawal of the deposition of a party from the files of the state circuit court where the action was begun for use on the trial of the action in the federal court after removal to the federal court does not prevent the use of the deposition on a subsequent trial within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 456, permitting the use of depositions provided they remain "on file" from the time the former action was dismissed until the time at which it was proposed to use them in a subsequent action. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Huffman, 97 N. E. 434, 437, 177 Ind. 126.

ON FINAL DISTRIBUTION

Testator bequeathed to a daughter a certain sum "to be paid out of my residuary estate upon final distribution." In a subsequent section of the will he left the residue of his estate in trust, and provided that the income should be paid to his wife during her natural life or while she remained unmarried for her maintenance and the education and maintenance of two daughters, and that when said daughters arrived at lawful age, the trustees were requested to convey to each of them a moiety of the property in their hands. Held, that the phrase, "upon final distribution," did not mean upon final distribution of the personal estate made pursuant to order of the probate court, but referred to the final distribution on the coming of age of the two daughters who were to take the property left in trust. McDevitt v. Hibben, 123 Ill. App. 438, 441; Id., 77 N. E. 586, 221 Ill. 234.

ON FIRE

A marine policy contained a clause, "Warranted free from particular average, unless the vessel or craft or the interest insured be stranded, sunk, or on fire." The libel alleged that on November 18th, while the ship was lying in port and before discharge, a fire broke out in the after 'tween-decks of the ship and burned the bulkhead forward of the lazarette, the door thereof, and a considerable portion of dunnage, and other parts of the ship. An exhibit, quoting from the ship's protest, recited that the master, on the alarm being given, went below through the lazarette and saw the reflection of the fire over the top of the bulkhead between the after 'tween-decks and the lazarette, which were then full of cargo, and that after considerable trouble the fire was extinguished with considerable damage. It was held that the words "on fire," as used in the particular average clause, were not synonymous with the word "burnt," contained in former policies, but were indicative of a happening whereby the ship was endangered by actual fire burning some part of it, necessitating extraordinary efforts to prevent serious damage, and that, under such definition, the libel was not subject to exception as stating a loss from which the insurer was exempted by the particular average clause as matter of law. Pacific Creosoting Co. v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co., 184 Fed. 947, 949.

ON THE GROUND

Under a contract to conduct a circus for four days, entitling the amusement company to draw on funds derived from advance sales of tickets when the show was "on the ground," the show was "on the ground" when the paraphernalia arrived at the show grounds and the actors at their lodgings, and the equitable title to part of funds then vested in the company's assignee, so as to preclude the other party, who had knowledge of the assignment, from defeating the assignee's rights by paying, with the company's consent, money due the actors, who refused to perform unless paid in advance. Brindze v. Atlantic City Policemen's Beneficial Ass'n, 72 Atl. 485, 437, 75 N. J. Eq. 405.

ON HAND

See Cash On Hand; Stock on Hand; Then on Hand.

A bequest by a manufacturer of a product "on hand" includes that in the hands of a selling agent in another city, as well as that at the factory. Brown v. Clothey, 79 N. E. 269, 270, 193 Mass. 271.

Where a shipper, demanding stock cars, has his stock within five miles of the station ready to be loaded within a few hours after receiving notice of the arrival of the cars, he has his stock "on hand," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 4502, relating to furnishing shippers with cars on demand, and providing that it shall be necessary for the party bringing suit against any railroad company under the provisions of this law, to show by evidence that he had "on hand," at the time demand was made, the freight necessary to load the cars. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 126 S. W. 1117, 1119, 103 Tex. 367 (citing Crouch v. Parker, 56 N. Y. 597).

The phrase "on hand," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 4502, does not require that the shipper shall have the property at the immediate point of shipment at the time of demand, but, as the statute gives the railroad company six days from demand within which to furnish cars, and the shipper 48 hours thereafter to load, the words mean that he has or owns the property so circumstanced as may be shipped within the time named. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 118 S. W. 1097, 1100, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 419.

The requirement of Rev. St. 1895, art. 4502, that the shipper prove that he had on hand, at the time of the order, the necessary freight for loading the cars forbade any character of speculation and precluded recovery by a shipper, where such freight in form and condition to be shipped is not there on hand, though he is able to show that he could have had it ready if the cars had been furnished, and a shipper of crushed stone, who intended to load from the crusher and save expense in handling the crushed product, did not have such freight "on hand," and he was not entitled to a penalty for failure to furnish the cars demanded. Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Risley Bros. & Co., 119 S. W. 897, 898, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 66.

ON HEARING IN EQUITY

An order of a Circuit Court granting a preliminary injunction made after the filing of a bill and on notice to the defendants, pursuant to which their counsel appeared specially to object to the jurisdiction, but were heard upon the merits as amici curiæ, was made "upon a hearing in equity" within the meaning of section 7 of the act (Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, 26 Stat. 828), creating the Circuit Courts of Appeals, as amended by Act April 14, 1906, c. 1627, 34 Stat. 116, and is appealable thereunder. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Pacific Coast Lumber Mfrs.' Ass'n, 165 Fed. 1, 5, 91 C. O. A. 39; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Oregon & Washington Lumber Mfrs.' Ass'n, 165 Fed. 13, 91 C. O. A. 51.

ON ITS LINE

Where a railroad company operates its trains engaged in interstate commerce with its own engines and crews over the tracks of another company, under a contract between them, such tracks are a part of its line, within the meaning of Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 6, 27 Stat. 532, as amended by Act April 1, 1896, c. 87, 29 Stat. 85, imposing a penalty on any railroad company hauling or using "on its line" any car in violation of its provisions, and it is immaterial that its trains, while on such tracks, are run subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the owner of the tracks; nor is it any defense to an action to recover the penalty for hauling a car not equipped as required by the act in one of its interstate trains on such tracks that the inspection of such cars is made by a servant of the company owning the tracks, who, in performing such duty, acts as its own inspector. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. United States, 191 Fed. 1, 2, 111 C. C. A. 661.

ON THE JOB

When plaintiff contracted with defendant city to repair a bridge, the contract providing that plaintiff's compensation should be a certain sum per thousand feet for the lumber used, and that no work should be begun until material for at least one-half of the repairs should be "on the job," and in compliance with this requirement plaintiff distributed lumber along the bridge, and had used a part of it in making repairs, when the bridge and all the lumber was destroyed by fire, he was entitled to recover for the lumber which had been used, but not for that which had not. Young v. City of Chicopee, 72 N. E. 63, 186 Mass. 518.

ON A JOURNEY

See Journey.

ON THE LIKE PROOF

"Upon the like proof," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 2891, authorizing the entry of default judgments on the applicant filing a proof of default with the clerk before applying for a judgment, and authorizing plaintiff to apply to the court for judgment when the defendant has made default "upon the like proof," means proof of default made to the court; and hence, where the application is made to the court, it is not necessary that proof of service should be filed before the rendition of judgment. Schmidt v. Hoffmann, 105 N. W. 44, 46, 126 Wis. 55.

ON THE MERITS

See Merits.

ON THE OPINION BELOW

Where a Circuit Court of Appeals affirms a decision "on the opinion below," it approves the reasoning, adopts the findings, and concurs in the conclusions of the court below; but, where the decision below is merely "affirmed," such approval and concurrence are not to be inferred, but, on the contrary, it is to be understood that for some reason the appellate court prefers not to adopt the opinion below. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Hoschke, 188 Fed. 326, 328, 110 C. O. A. 304.

ON THE PART OF

The words "on the part of the mother," as used in Tex. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1700, making bastards capable of inheriting "from and through" their mother and of "transmitting estates," and giving them the right to distributive shares of the personal estates of any of their kindred "on the part of their mother," mean of the mother's side of the genealogical tree, and the article gives the bastard kinship in law on the mother's side, but does not change his status as to the father. Berry v. Powell, 105 S. W. 845, 347, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 599.

THE PREMISES

A brewery company owned lots 8 to 10, inclusive; the brewery proper covering lots 8 to 10. The second story of the building on lots 3 and 4 was occupied by the president of the brewery as a residence, that part of the first story on lot 4 was used as his office, and that part on lot 3 was occupied as a saloon. There were partitions between the residence and office and the office and brewery proper, with entrances through them, and a public entrance to the saloon was on the corner of lot 3, through which brewery employees, who were given free beer, entered. Held, that the brewery was selling beer "upon the premises" within Code, § 2460, providing that one operating any brewery permitting any drinking, or sale at retail, of product upon the premises, shall forfeit exemption thereby granted, so that it was not exempted under section 2456, exempting manufacturers of liquor from the penalties provided by law for manufacturing brewers. Orke v. McManus, 121 N. W. 177, 142 Iowa, 654 (citing 6 Words and Cases, p. 5512).

PROPER CAUSE SHOWN

Corporation Act (P. L. 1896, p. 292) § 44, provides that the books of a corporation, except the stock and transfer books, may be taken outside the state if the by-laws or certificate of incorporation so provides, and that the Court of Chancery or the Supreme Court or any justice thereof, may, upon proper cause shown, summarily order any or all the books of the corporation to be forthwith brought within the state and kept thereat such place and for such time as may be designated in such order. Held, that the phrase "upon proper cause shown" means a cause, the propriety of which is made to appear to the judicial officer nominated in the petition, and the propriety of the "cause shown" must be submitted to the determination of such officer, and for such determination the conclusion reached by applicant for order from undisclosed facts is not a valid substitute, and a petition for such order setting forth facts from which the officer can make such determination is insufficient. National Packing Co. v. Garven, 78 703, 706, 79 N. J. Law, 266.

REASONABLE TERMS

The phrase "on reasonable terms" in a common parlance means the charges for services rendered or the price of goods sold and delivered. State v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 161 Atl. 194, 196, 81 Vt. 463, 130 Am. St. Rep. 5.

SALE (In Patent Law)

See, also, Public Use (In Patent Law).

Proof of a mere contract to construct machine plans, and to deliver in the future, a machine or manufacture not shown to have been previously built, is insufficient to establish that the machine or manufacture was "on sale" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4886, so as to defeat a patent therefor not applied for until more than two years after such contract was made, in the absence of any evidence that the invention had been reduced to practice at the time the executory contract was made. McCreery Engineering Co. v. Massachusetts Fan Co., 195 Fed. 498, 501, 115 C. C. A. 408.

A single unrestricted sale by the inventor of his invention is a public sale, or puts it "on sale," within the meaning and intent of Rev. St. U. S. § 4886, but a single sale of an invention by the inventor for experimental purposes, where he is unable otherwise to make proper tests, does not put the invention "on sale." In re Mills, 25 App. D. C. 377, 383.

A machine put out for trial, under a "sale or return" contract, does not constitute a being on sale two years before the patent application, unless the trial period expired, or unless there was actual acceptance more than two years before the application. William B. Mershon & Co. v. Bay City Box & Lumber Co., 189 Fed. 741, 748.

Where the inventor of a cigar pocket for more than two years before applying for a patent therefor made and sold such pockets in the regular course of his business, such articles were in "public use" and "on sale," and defeated his right to a patent under Rev. St. § 4886, although they were not kept by him in stock, but were made up only on orders received; it being the custom of the trade to take such orders by sample. A device will be "on sale" and in "public use" if it is offered for sale, whether any specimen of it is actually sold or not. Dittgen v. Racine Paper Goods Co., 181 Fed. 394, 398 (citing Walk. Pat. [11th Ed.] p. 96).

ON STOCK

No obligation to honor any draft except one for the price of stock shipped to the drawee is assumed by a live stock commission firm in writing to a bank, "We will honor P's draft for one thousand dollars on hogs or cattle." There is a manifest difference between the expressions "for stock" and "on stock." The one merely relates to the use the drawer is to make of the money he obtains for the draft, and the other is equivalent to "against stock," and clearly implies that the draft is to be drawn on the strength of the stock; that the stock is to be made in a way security for the draft. Stough v. E. J. Healy, 89 Pac. 898, 899, 75 Kan. 526, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 918.

ON SUSPICION

Where the consignee refused to accept certain cigars, and the consignor directed them to be delivered to a third person, such conduct indicates that the cigars were sent out "on suspicion" (that is, in expectation that they would be accepted), and not that they had been bought or ordered by the consignee or by such third person. New York & N. J. Steamboat Co. v. New Jersey Produce Co., 68 Atl. 209, 210, 75 N. J. Law, 298.

ONCE A WEEK

Proof that a summons was published for "six successive weeks" in a weekly newspaper sufficiently shows a publication "once a week" for six successive weeks. McHenry v. Bracken, 101 N. W. 960, 961, 963, 93 Minn. 510 (citing Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Jacobson, 66 N. W. 453, 8 S. D. 292).

Const. 1901, § 108, provides that no local law shall be passed, unless notice of the intention to apply therefor shall have been published at least once a week for four consecutive weeks in some newspaper published in such county or counties, or, if there is no newspaper so published, then by posting a notice for four consecutive weeks at five different places in the county or counties, prior to the introduction of the bill. Held, that the posting clause requires that the notice must be posted during a period of 4 weeks, or 28 days, before the introduction of the bill, but that the word "a" in the clause "once a week for four consecutive weeks," in the publication clause, was used in the sense of "in each," so that, where the notice was published in a newspaper once a week in each of four consecutive weeks prior to the introduction of the bill, the constitutional requirement was complied with, though 28 days did not intervene between the first publication and the introduction of the bill. Lower v. State (Ala.) 59 South. 611, 612.

As requiring full number of weeks

A tax sale notice published once in each week for four consecutive weeks prior to the day of sale complies with the requirements of section 7639, Gen. St. 1901, providing that notice shall be published "once in each week for four consecutive weeks prior to the day of sale," though the first publication was made 25 days only before the sale. Tidd v. Grimes, 71 Pac. 844, 845, 66 Kan. 401.

ONCE A YEAR

Where a policy of fire insurance provides that "the insured shall take an 'inventory' of the stock hereby covered, at least 'once a year,' during the life of this policy," the assured has a year from the date of the policy in which to make an inventory, although the policy runs for one year only. Tucker v.

ONE BUILDING

Under Liquor Tax Law, Laws 1897, p. 220, c. 312, § 17, subd. 8, requiring the consent of the owners of two-thirds of the number of buildings used exclusively as dwellings and situate within 200 feet of premises to be used for the liquor traffic to the carrying on of such traffic, an ordinary frame building, in a country village, intended and used for two families, is one building. In re Clement, 103 N. Y. Supp. 157, 158, 118 App. Div. 575.

ONE DWELLING HOUSE

The words "one dwelling house," as used in a conveyance of land declaring that the grantee shall not occupy the premises, except for one dwelling house to each lot, are used in the sense in which the words are ordinarily used. A building planned and designed for two or more dwellings cannot properly be described as one dwelling house. A building designed and planned for two families, one to occupy the ground floor and one the second floor, each to have a separate entrance, violates the restriction in the conveyance. Harris v. Roraback, 100 N. W. 391, 392, 137 Mich. 292, 109 Am. St. Rep. 681.

A double two-story building, comprising four flats under a single roof, with a division wall running through it on the center line of the lot from front to rear and from cellar to roof, on either side of which was a bay front, intended for the occupation of several families, was not "one dwelling," within a restrictive building covenant providing that not more than "one dwelling" should be erected on each lot. Sanders v. Dixon, 89 S. W. 577, 582, 585, 114 Mo. App. 229.

ONE-HALF GALLON

Gen. Laws 1909, c. 123, § 52, imposing a penalty for the sale or keeping for sale by retail druggists, without first obtaining a license, of enumerated liquors, and declaring that the finding of any liquors enumerated on the premises of any retail druggist in quantities exceeding one-half gallon shall be considered evidence that the same is kept for sale, when construed in the light of chapter 32, § 3, providing that every word importing the singular number only may be construed to include the plural, and every word importing the plural number only may be construed to embrace the singular, prohibits the keeping of intoxicating liquor in quantities exceeding one-half gallon, whether it consists of one kind only, or is the aggregate of several kinds. State v. Almy, 79 Atl. 962; 963, 32 R. I. 415.

ONE HOUSE

The erection of a house or flat two stories high under a single roof, planned for separate occupancy by two families, one on each floor, with separate entrances, did not constitute a breach of a building restriction in a deed providing that not more than "one house" should be erected on each 40-foot frontage. Pank v. Eaton, 89 S. W. 586, 587, 115 Mo. App. 171.

ONE LOT

The words "one town or city lot," in Act Dec. 8, 1852, limiting the extent of the homestead, mean the lot or piece of ground on which the head of a family has a house, with the appurtenances which he uses as a home, though it contains more than one lot, according to the plat and survey of the town or city. Owens v. Jabine, 115 S. W. 383, 384, 88 Ark. 463.

ONE PLACE

On a trial for keeping a liquor nuisance, the proof showed that defendant conducted a hotel and in the rear of it about three feet therefrom is a small building, and that, to gain entrance to it, it is necessary to pass through the hotel. The evidence showed that defendant sold liquor in the basement of the hotel and in this building. Held that, within Rev. Codes 1905, § 9373, the building constituted "one place" for the maintenance of a liquor nuisance, and it was not error to deny defendant's motion to require the prosecution to elect which place they would rely on as the place of sale. State v. Ildvedsen, 126 N. W. 489, 490, 20 N. D. 62.

ONE RAILROAD

Circular No. 325 of the railroad commission, declaring that continuous mileage rates shall apply to the Central Railroad and the Wadley Southern Railway Company for transportation of passengers and freight passing between those railroads or over any portion of either, such rates to be governed by the freight and passenger tariffs prescribed by the Georgia railroad commission for the Central of Georgia Railway Company, is a clear and complete fixing of a continuous mileage rate between the two roads, without necessity of resorting, to ascertain its meaning, to rule No. 1 of the commission, declaring that, when two or more connecting lines of railroad are operated by one management, or where the majority of the stock of each is controlled by one of such companies, the lines of railroads of all shall be considered as constituting but one railroad, and the rates shall be computed on a continuous mileage basis. Hill v. Wadley Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 795, 800, 128 Ga. 705.

ONE SUBJECT

See Subject (Of Statute).

ONEROUS

"Onerous" means burdensome or oppressive. Meador v. Adams, 76 S. W. 238, 239, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 167.

ONEROUS DONATION

An "onerous donation" is a gift burdened with charges imposed by the donor. A manual gift may be free, onerous, or remunerative, and when the donor makes such a gift, omnium bonorum, on condition that the donee shall maintain him for the rest of his life, it will be dealt with as an onerous donation, and not as a commutative contract. Ackerman v. Lerner, 40 South. 581, 587, 116 La. 101.

ONLY

See Fit Only.

The word "only," in Pol. Code Mont. § 4350, providing that the county treasurer must disburse the county moneys only on county warrants issued by the county clerk, based on orders of the board of county commissioners, or as otherwise provided by law, limits the power of the treasurer to pay out the money of the county, both as to the amount and the precedent conditions of payment. Ex parte Farrell, 92 Pac. 785, 786, 36 Mont. 254.

Seattle City Charter, art. 16, § 12, declares that every employé in the classified civil service shall hold office until removed or retired; that any employé may be removed by the appointing power "only" on the filing with the Civil Service Commission of a statement of the reasons therefor; that an employé removed may demand an investigation, which the Commission shall make, and certify its decision to the appointing officer, and if the removal is not sustained the employé shall be reinstated. The Commission is given power to require the attendance of witnesses. Section 4 provides that the Commission "shall make rules for examinations, appointments, and removals." Article 24, § 8, provides that every officer, board, or department authorized to appoint any employé shall have the right to remove the person so appointed. Article 16, § 20, provides that any officer who has been convicted after trial before the Commission shall be dismissed from the service. Held, that the Commission has no power to dismiss a clerk in the police department who has been appointed by the chief of police; such power of removal being in the chief of police. "only," and the action of the Commission authorized by the charter being a mere basis for action by the removing power. Eason v. City of Seattle, 73 Pac. 496, 498, 32 Wash. 405.

In a written warranty that "it is understood that the goods are warranted only against breakage caused by manifest defects in material," the word "only" necessarily excludes all other warranties. Giving the word its ordinary meaning, and applying it in its restrictive sense, as qualifying the word to which it naturally belongs, the conclusion cannot be escaped that it restricts the meaning to be given to the verb warranted. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Mahon, 101 N. W. 903, 13 N. D. 516.

In limitation in deed or lease

A conveyance, "for railroad purposes only" entitles the company to the use and possession of the entire strip so long as any part of it is used for such purposes. Ritter v. Thompson, 144 S. W. 910, 911, 102 Ark. 442.

Where grantors of a shore front at a summer resort reserved the right to build a pier, covenanting not to permit the sale of commodities thereon, and to charge "only an entrance fee," their covenant is not broken by charging for the use of roller skates at a rink on the pier, where all who pay the entrance fee may go to every part of the pier, including the rink. Atlantic City v. Associated Realities Corp., 67 Atl. 937, 938, 72 N. J. Eq. 634.

In limitation of jurisdiction

Using Webster's definition of "only" as "utterly, entirely, wholly" (Webst. Dict. p. 913), jurisdiction cannot be founded only on one ground, when another and equally important constitutional ground is presented in the same suit. Cound v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 173 Fed. 527, 533.

The word "only" in the judiciary act (Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 1, 24 Stat. 552, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 433), providing that, where jurisdiction is founded "only" on the fact of diversity of citizenship, suit may be brought in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant, is equivalent to "solely"; and a suit within the general jurisdiction of the federal courts, both on the ground of diversity of citizenship and because founded upon a law of the United States, can be brought only in the district where defendant resides. Whittaker v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 176 Fed. 130, 131 (citing Cound v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 173 Fed. 527; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Walthers, 10 Sup. Ct. 485, 124 U. S. 41, 33 L. Ed. 888).

ONLY ADVISORY

The phrase "only advisory," within the rule holding that a master's findings are only advisory to the court, simply mean that such findings are not conclusive upon the court, but, on the contrary, his conclusions both of law and fact may be reviewed by the chancellor. In other words, the master's conclusions do not bind the court on any questions of law or fact. Guarantee Gold Bond, Loan & Savings Co. v. Edwards, 104 S. W. 624, 633, 7 Ind. T. 297.

ONLY CHILDREN

A complaint on a note, which averred that the payee died intestate leaving no widow and that he left plaintiffs as his children and only children and "only heirs at law," that all claims against him and his estate had been paid, and that no letters of administration had been granted on the estate, was sufficient to show the plaintiffs' right to sue as owners of the note, though the quoted words be taken to state a mere conclusion, the words "only children," standing unqualified, including deceased as well as living children. Barrett v. Sipp, 98 N. H. 310, 311, 50 Ind. App. 304.

ONYX

So-called Mexican onyx is dutiable as "onyx" rather than as "marble," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 114, 30 Stat. 158. Blochman Banking Co. v. Blake, 168 Fed. 572.

OONTZ

It was held in Commonwealth v. Kammerer (Ky.) 13 S. W. 108, under a statute providing that "Whoever * * * shall set up, carry on or conduct * * * a keno bank, faro bank, or other machine or contrivance used in betting," etc., "shall be fined," etc., that "oontz," which is played with dice on a table or other surface was not within the meaning of "other machine or contrivance." White v. State, 76 N. E. 554, 555, 37 Ind. App. 95.

OPAL

OPAQUE

The term "opaque," as employed in describing a patent for a current controlling device for telephone circuits, and in defining a circuit in its relation to the energizing current, is a circuit containing a condenser or equivalent device which prevents the passing through the circuit of an appreciable or substantial amount of current—that is, a sufficient amount to affect the operation of the system to an objectionable degree—and by the term "opaque," when referring to the talking current, is contemplated that characteristic of the circuit which will prevent the passage of the talking currents there-through in sufficient amount to materially affect the transmission of the talking currents through the path containing the tele-receiver. Kallogg Switchboard & Supply Co. v. Dean Electric Co., 168 Fed. 549, adopting definition given in description of patents in Congress).

Defendant owned a tract lying between plaintiff's land and a certain creek, and the defendant made a contract by which plaintiff was to furnish labor "to clean off right of way and dig ditch through C. pond and to clean out and open the old ditch" on defendant's land; plaintiff agreeing "to dig this ditch not less than six or eight feet wide and of proper depth necessary and not to extend more than three feet in the new ditch." The contract further provided that defendant should furnish plaintiff's water right of way through the ditch, through the pond to the creek, for the purpose of keeping the ditch clean and open.

The new ditch referred to was to connect with the old ditch, which was to furnish an outlet to the creek; the purpose being to provide one drainage ditch by digging the new ditch to meet the old. Held that, under the contract "to clean out and open the old ditch," plaintiff was required not merely to remove the rubbish therefrom, but to widen the ditch so as to make it an unobstructed outlet for the water; the word "open" meaning to clean out by cutting, cleaning, removing, or pushing aside whatever impedes or hinders. Anderson v. Smith, 57 South. 104, 107, 34 App. 501.

Saloon

A saloon is "open" on Sunday, in violation of Mills' Ann. St. (Rev. Supp.) § 1346d, if it is not kept open in the same manner as on week days; it being enough that it is so that access may be had thereto by persons not employed about it, and that, though the saloon is not kept open, it is opened on application for admission. Birmingham v. Peacock, 90 Pac. 1121, 40 Colo. 362.

Under a statute forbidding the keeping of a tippling-house on the Sabbath, the defendant does not concern itself with the length of time during which it was open, but does so in some circumstances justify the opening of a house used as a saloon on secular days, even on the Sabbath day, and a charge against the defendant failed to present the distinction between the lawful and unlawful opening of a house, but charged that the offense was complete whenever it appeared that the defendant in question was a tippling-house and that it was open on the Sabbath day and that the law did not concern itself with the purpose for which it was open, too greatly extended the purposes for which a saloon may be open on the Sabbath day. Richardson son v. State, 59 S. E. 916, 917, 3 Ga. App. 318.

Street or road

The expression "to open," as applied to a street or road, is used almost indifferently to express two very different processes—the act of establishing or creating a highway, and that of actually putting in shape for travel one already having a legal existence. Board of Com'rs of Cowley County v. Johnson, 90 Pac. 805, 807, 76 Kan. 65.

In an ordinance, which proposes to vacate a part of a street and open it on other lines, the words "open on other lines" are only applicable to an already existing highway. Erie Ry. Co. v. City of Pasaic, 74 Atl. 338, 79 N. J. Law, 19.

Where an ordinance, entitled "An ordinance to open, grade, macadamize and otherwise improve" a new street designated in such title, contained provisions for the taking of the lands required for such street, by condemnation, and the payment of proper damages for such taking, it was held, that the word "open" implies the acquisition by condemnation, if such acquisition be necessary, of the lands required for such opening, and that the title sufficiently indicates an intent to condemn. Beechwood Park Land Co. v. City of Summit, 73 Atl. 57, 58, 78 N. J. Law, 182.

A charter giving a city authority to "open, alter, widen, establish, abolish," etc., streets, does not give it authority to alienate streets. Krause v. City of El Paso (Tex.), 101 S. W. 828, 833.

The method of opening a street in Jersey City is prescribed in its charter, which declares that a street must be opened in that manner and not otherwise. Every street "opened" in the city involves: (1) The acquisition of the necessary lands; (2) the obligation of the city to improve, maintain, and keep in repair the streets of the city; and (3) the assessment for benefits. City of Jersey City v. National Docks R. Co., 26 Atl. 145, 148, 55 N. J. Law, 194.

The word "opened," as used with reference to streets and public places, refers to the time when the city becomes vested with the title to the land on which the street or avenue is to run. But it was not used in that sense in Laws 1895, p. 2037, c. 1006, § 2, relating to the discontinuing and closing of streets, and providing that the contiguous street bounding the plot or square wherein is situated the land sought to be closed and occupied has been opened; but the purpose of the act was to substitute one system of the public highways for another by opening new streets and closing old ones, and it was not intended to physically close the streets of one system without providing something to take their places. Johnson & Co. v. Cox, 86 N. Y. Supp. 601, 603, 42 Misc. Rep. 301.

Where J. avenue was opened under Laws 1867, p. 953, c. 400, under which act the city acquired only an easement for street purposes, and thereafter proceedings were instituted to acquire land to widen the avenue, when a part of it then in use was abandoned under Laws 1895, p. 2037, c. 1006, § 2, providing that, when the public easement in a street was legally abandoned, the owner regained complete possession thereof, and, after the new street was opened, could occupy the abandoned part, and the cemetery association owned the fee in land which was included within the abandoned portion of J. avenue, the new street was not "opened," within the statute, until there had been an actual physical opening, and hence the abandoned part of the avenue was not exempted from assessment as "land actually used for cemetery," by Laws 1879, c. 301, § 1. In re Jerome Ave. in City of New York, 85 N. E. 755, 756, 192 N. Y. 459.

Laws 1895, p. 2037, c. 1006, relating to the discontinuing and closing of streets and other thoroughfares in New York city, provides (section 2) that on the filing of a map showing the intention of the public authorities to close or discontinue any street, road, or other thoroughfare which has been in actual and physical use, the owner of the fee thereof shall be permitted to close and use and occupy the same as fully as if the same had not been laid out, dedicated, established, or used, provided the contiguous street bounding the plot or square wherein the land sought to be closed and occupied has been "opened." Held, that the term "opened" as used therein meant actually opened so that a road could be used, and that till a road, intended to take the place of a discontinued thoroughfare, was "physically opened and capable of public use" owners of premises abutting the old road are properly prohibited from closing or fencing the roadbed in front thereof. Isaac G. Johnson & Co. v. Cox, 89 N. E. 454, 457, 196 N. Y. 110.

OPEN ACCOUNT

Money advanced under a contract or at the instance and request of another is not an "open account" within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3102, providing that on all open accounts, when no interest is agreed on by the parties, interest shall be allowed from the first day of January after the same are made. Couturie v. Roensch, 134 S. W. 413, 416.

Items for unliquidated damages set forth in a petition do not constitute an "open account," within Rev. St. 1909, § 1799, providing that in actions on an open account where the items are set forth in the petition, defendant, who makes default, shall be deemed to admit the account to be due as set forth in the petition, and a petition in an action by a subcontractor against the principal contractor for damages for failure to procure for the subcontractor access to the grounds on which the work is to be done, is not enlarged by items of unliquidated damages incorporated in the petition. W. W. Brown Const. Co. v. MacArthur Bros. Co., 139 S. W. 104, 108, 236 Mo. 41.

Civ. Code 1895, § 4130, which provides the mode of proof and defense in a suit in a justice's court on an "open account," does not apply to an action for the loss of or damage to personal property by a common carrier, even though the cause of action is set out in detail in a statement attached to the summons and verified by the affidavit of the plaintiff. E. E. Lowe Co. v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 51 S. E. 653, 123 Ga. 712.

"An account current" is an "open or running account" between two or more parties, or an account which contains items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them is or can be ascertained, from which it follows that such an account comes under the terms of an "open account" in so far as it is running, unsettled, or unclosed." Where supplies of coal for a vessel were ordered and delivered at different times, a bill being rendered after each delivery, the several charges do not constitute a running account, but each constitutes a separate and distinct cause of action, and to entitle the seller to a lien for any item under the New York statute notice thereof must have been filed within 30 days after such item was furnished or suit to enforce the lien must have been instituted within that time. The Golden Rod, 153 Fed. 171, 173, 82 C. C. A. 345 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Cyc. p. 363).

Where petition alleged that plaintiff sold and delivered certain goods to defendant, the amounts and prices of which were itemized in an exhibit, and paid certain freight charges for defendant, and that correct bills and invoices were made out at the time of the shipments, and received by defendant, who agreed to pay the sums set forth and itemized, an affidavit as to the correctness of the items was no proof thereof, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2323, providing that in an action on an open account an affidavit of its correctness shall be prima facie evidence thereof, as the petition showed an account stated so far as the sales were concerned, and the freight charges were evidently based on a special contract, which formed no part of the account for goods sold. An "open account" is one in respect to which nothing has occurred to bind either party by its statements; an account which is yet fully open to be disputed. An account consisting of many items based on agreements as to each item as to price and time of payment is not an open account any more than one in which the price and time of payment has been fixed by an agreement made after all the items of the account have been consummated by sale and delivery. The word "open" indicates that there is something undetermined by contract of the parties, or by the application of settled rules of law, and an account cannot be said to be "open" when there remains no term of contract to be settled by agreement. "Open account" is used in opposition to "stated account," wherein the account is closed by the assent to its correctness by the party charged. An "account stated" is an agreement between two persons who have had previous transactions fixing the amount due in respect to such transactions and promising to pay them. In other words, an "account stated" is one consisting of many items based on agreements as to each item as to the price and time of payment. Wroten Grain & Lumber Co. v. Mineola Box Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 95 S. W. 744, 745 (citing McCamant v. Batsell, 59 Tex. 363; Abb. Law Dict.; Whittlesey v. Spofford, 47 Tex. 13).

OPEN AND APPARENT

A hazard is open and apparent which can be discovered by the exercise of ordinary care by the party charged with the duty of exercising such care. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Holtsclaw, 82 N. E. 986, 989, 41 Ind. App. 520.

OPEN AND NOTORIOUS ADULTERY

A married man was not guilty of "open and notorious adultery" because he lived in adultery with his brother's wife, under such circumstances that the community in which he lived believed that they were married and where their adulterous relation was kept secret. People v. Salmon, 83 Pac. 42, 43, 148 Cal. 303, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268.

OPEN AND NOTORIOUS POSSESSION

An instruction that the sale of goods or property by one who is involved deeply in debt and unable to meet his obligations in order to be valid against the creditors of the grantor must be accompanied by open and notorious change of possession, and that by "open and notorious possession" I mean the public change of possession, which is to continue and to be manifested continually by the outward and visible signs, such as render it evident that possession of the judgment debtor has ceased, is correct. Swartzburg v. Dickerson, 73 Pac. 282, 12 Okl. 566.

OPEN AND OBVIOUS DEFECT

An open and obvious defect is one manifest to the sense of observation, whether it arises from the nature of the business, the manner in which it is conducted, or the use of defective and unsafe appliances. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Rombold, 106 N. W. 213, 216, 73 Neb. 259.

OPEN BIDDING

Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, p. 453, c. 32, § 85, provides that the board of directors of a building and loan association shall hold such stated meetings, not less frequently than once a month, as may be provided by the by-laws, at which the money in the treasury shall be offered for loan in open meeting, and that the stockholders who shall bid the highest premium for the preference or priority of loan shall be entitled to receive a loan of a certain amount for each share of stock. Held, that where at a regular meeting "money was offered for sale," and there were several bids therefor, among which was the bid in question, the requirement of the statute with reference to "open bidding" was complied with as to the bid in question, though it was made by way of written application for the money, submitted without the presence of the bidder. Savage v. Evanston Savings & Loan Ass'n, 81 N. E. 1062, 1063, 228 Ill. 431 (citing Farmers' Savings & Building & Loan Ass'n v. Kent, 30 South. 874, 131 Ala. 246; Ruppel v. Missouri Guarantee Savings & Building Ass'n, 59 S. W. 1000, 158 Mo. 613; State v. Stockton, 85 Mo. App. 477; Miller v. Missouri Guarantee Sav. & Building Ass'n of Hannibal, 83 Mo. App. 669; Edinger v. Same, 83 Mo. App. 615).

OPEN CAR

An "open car" on a trolley line is one with a running board on each side along which the conductor passes collecting the fares and discharging his general duties. Drake v. Auburn City Ry. Co., 66 N. E. 121, 122, 173 N. Y. 466.

A policy, issued to a railroad company, which covered in general terms all cotton on or in depots, platforms, or grounds adjacent thereto, and in transit, but which provided that cotton in open cars was not covered, insured cotton on a stationary flat car placed on a spur track adjacent to a depot to remain there about 12 hours, though the cotton was subsequently to be transported on the car, since the "open cars" referred to meant cars of that description commonly used for transportation, as the company sought to relieve itself from the increased hazard incident to the transportation of cotton on open cars due to sparks from locomotives in actual transportation, and since the words "in transit" meant in course of passing from point to point. Royal Ins. Co. v. Texas & G. Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 117, 120, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

OPEN CONCUBINAGE

The word "open," in Civ. Code, art. 1481, providing that those living in open concubinage are respectively incapable of making to each other any donation of immovables, means "not secret, without concealment or disguise"; so that, where the living is under the cloak of an innocent relation and sought to be kept secret, it does not give rise to the incapacity pronounced by that article. Succession of Jahraus, 38 South. 417, 418, 114 La. 456.

OPEN COURTSee Confession in Open Court.

An "open court" contemplates the presence of the judge and the clerk of the court, or a duly qualified deputy, the regular opening and closing of the court, and the presence of the clerk's docket, upon which should be entered, under the eye of the court, the successive steps taken in open court in each case. Hays v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 58 Atl. 439, 441, 99 Md. 413.

Written application filed with the clerk, and not brought to the court's attention, is not made in "open court," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3188, providing that no jury trial shall be had, unless application therefor be made in open court. Gibson v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. (Tex.) 147 S. W. 285, 286.

In the provision of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 12, 30 Stat. 549, that a bankrupt may offer terms of composition to his creditors after he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors, etc., the term "in open court" refers to proceedings before the referee. In re Bloodworth-Stembridge Co., 178 Fed. 372, 373.

Pub. Laws 1911, c. 702, § 2, provides that theaters afterwards erected should have an open court or space on sides not bordering on streets or alleys which should be at least six feet wide, etc. This act took the place of Pub. Laws 1909, c. 472, § 27, providing for similar courts from the proscenium line to the line of the street in front parallel with the adjoining street, which declared that such courts should be "open to the sky opposite the whole length of the auditorium." Held, that "open court," as used in the act of 1911 was one completely uncovered and open to the sky, and that a covered passageway was not in compliance therewith. Greenough v. Allen Theater & Realty Co., 80 Atl. 260, 261, 83 R. I. 120.

Continuous session distinguished

The term "open court," as used in Acts 1898, No. 108, p. 155, providing that appeals in criminal cases shall be taken by motion, either verbal or in writing, in open court within three days after sentence shall have been pronounced, means the actual session of the court while the judge is on the bench, as contradistinguished from the continuous session of ten months provided for by article 117 of the Constitution. State v. Vicknair, 43 South. 635, 637, 118 La. 963.

Hold court synonymous

Acts 1888-89, p. 64, is not violative of Const. 1875, art. 4, § 19, providing that no bill shall be so altered or amended on its passage through either house as to change its original purpose; the change having been only from a bill to fix the time of "opening" courts to one to fix the time of "holding" courts, and the terms as used in the connection being synonymous. Letcher v. State, 48 South. 805, 806, 159 Ala. 59, 17 Ann. Cas. 716.

OPEN CROSSING

The expression "open crossing," when applied to railroads, has a well-understood meaning, and the use to be made of it necessarily depends somewhat upon the character of the land on each side of the track and the purposes to which the owner put it, and where a railroad company agreed to give the owner an "open crossing," where the road intersected a 220-acre pasture, the parties contemplated an "open crossing" for the passage of stock between the separate parts of the farm. Hartshorn v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 113 N. W. 840, 841, 137 Iowa, 324.

OPEN FOR BUSINESS

Where an insurance policy warranted that insured should keep an inventory and his books of account in a fireproof safe during the hours when his drug store "was not open for business," and insured was in the habit of keeping his store open for business until 11 or 12 o'clock at night, the policy did not require that such books should be placed in his safe during his temporary absence from the store at about 9 o'clock on the evening of the fire, answering a professional call, as a physician, about a block distant from the store. Major v. Insurance Co. of North America, 86 S. W. 883, 884, 112 Mo. App. 235.

Where a store containing insured's fixtures and stock was locked for a half hour at noon while the persons in charge were at lunch, and during that time the property was destroyed by fire, the store was not then "open for business," within a provision of the iron-safe clause in the policy, requiring that assured shall keep his books and inventory locked in a fireproof safe when the building is not actually open for business, or in some place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building. Joffe & Mankowitz v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 81 Atl. 281, 283, 116 Md. 155, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1217.

OPEN HOUSE

Under Acts 81st Leg. c. 17, § 15, defining an "open house" as one in which no screens obstructing the view through the place of entrance into such house are used, a saloon conducted in a wing of the entrance lobby of a hotel in plain view of the entrance thereto is conducted in an "open house." Doyle v. Scott (Tex.) 134 S. W. 829, 830.

Acts 30th Leg. c. 138, § 15, requiring persons engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drunk upon the premises to give bond conditioned that they will keep an open house, and defining an "open house" as one in which no screen or other devices are used inside or outside such house that will obstruct the view through the open door or of entrance where the liquors are sold, not require that ordinary doors used at entrances shall be constructed of transparent material, and a failure to so construct is not a breach of the bond, where there is no other screen or device to obstruct the view through the open door. State v. W. C. D. & Sons (Tex.), 135 S. W. 182, 183.

OPEN MARKET

In an action against a carrier for damage to a shipment of cattle, in a requested instruction for defendant that there was no evidence to show that the cattle in certain lots were not sold in "open market" on a certain date, the words "open market" unexplained would necessarily have confused and misled the jury, and, if by "open market" meant that the sale was made before the close of the regular market as held that the request should have been so framed to express that meaning. Baltimore & O. Co. v. Whitehill, 64 Atl. 1033, 1039, 1042, 295.

OPEN MORTGAGE CLAUSE

The indorsement on a fire policy that if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee is mortgage interest may appear, designating the payee of any loss which, for the purposes of distinction, has been called "open mortgage clause," but does not bring insurer and mortgagee into contractual relations with each other, either directly or through an assignment of the policy, and neither does the mortgagee thereby become a person whose property or property interests are insured under the policy, and the contract for indemnity remains one exclusively between insurer and the owner of the property. Collinsville Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co., 60 Atl. 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

OPEN, NOTORIOUS, AND CONTINUOUS CHANGE OF POSSESSION

The words "open, notorious, and continuous change of possession," used to describe one of the requisites of a valid sale of property as against the seller's creditors, means the possession taken must be actual, and not be of such a character as to apprise the community, or those who are accustomed to deal with the seller, that the goods have changed hands, and that the title has passed from the seller and into the buyer. Wills v. Youtsey, 131 S. W. 705, 706, 151 Mo. 69.

OPEN POLICY

An open or unvalued policy is one in which the value of the interest at risk is not stated in the policy, but is estimated by a certain standard, and in case of loss is made out by proof. Peninsular & O. S. S. Co. v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 185 Fed. 172, 174.

An "open policy of insurance" is one where the value of the property insured is not agreed on or liquidated. On an open policy of marine insurance on a cargo, the recovery in case of a total loss is the value of the cargo, at the place of shipment, and does not include a loss of profits. Leonard v. Bosch, 68 Atl. 56, 73 N. J. Eq. 438.

Under a marine insurance policy covering an importation valuing the property at the invoice, an invoice, not stating the actual cost or actual market value, as required by Act Cong. June 10, 1890, c. 407, 26 Stat. 131, to be stated in the "invoice" accompanying importations, was not such an invoice as the contract contemplated; and hence the policy was an open and not a valued one, and, the insured, having paid in reliance on the valuations given in such invoice, might recover back the excess over the actual value. Insurance Co. of North America v. Willey, 98 N. E. 677, 679, 212 Mass. 75.

Civ. Code, § 1793, defines insurance as a contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss. Section 1845 provides that a policy is either open or valued. Section 1846 defines an open policy as one in which the value of the thing insured is not agreed upon, but left to be ascertained in case of loss. Section 1847 defines a valued policy as one which provides that the thing insured shall be valued at a specified sum. Section 1877 provides that double insurance exists where the same person is insured by several insurers in respect to the same subject. Section 1878 provides that in case of double insurance each insurer shall contribute ratably toward the loss. Sess. Laws 1905 c. 128, prescribes a standard form of fire policy which provides that the amount of insurance written therein on real property shall be taken conclusively to be the true value. Held that, under the standard policy, the value of real property on total loss is conclusively fixed by the total of all the insurance written therein which is the amount of the policy and concurrent insurance, and the total amount of loss is the sum total of insurance, and, the value of the property being conclusively fixed at a sum equal to the loss, the several policies cannot be prorated. Lawver v. Globe Mut. Ins. Co., 127 N. W. 615, 619, 25 S. D. 549.

OPEN SHOP

An employer who does not discriminate between union and nonunion labor, but leaves the matter to the voluntary choice of his employes, maintains an "open shop." Shine v. Fox Bros. Mfg. Co., 156 Fed. 357, 86 C. C. A. 811.

The term "open shop" has a distinctive trade meaning, and in reference to trade matters means that in selecting employes there should be no discrimination against union or nonunion men. The term excludes the idea of discrimination against men because of their membership in a union. The moment men are discriminated against with reference to their employment because they are union men, the shop pursuing this policy becomes a "closed shop." The principle of an "open shop" is that in it men are employed regardless of whether they are union or nonunion. This is the sense in which the term "open shop" is invariably used. Sackett & Wilhelms L. & P. Co. v. National Ass'n of Employing Lithographers, 113 N. Y. Supp. 110, 114, 61 Misc. Rep. 150.

OPEN STORE

The keeping of a fruit stand open on Sunday for the sale of fruit is the keeping of an "open store" within Code Miss. 1906, § 1367, providing that a person shall not keep open his store on Sunday for the purpose of disposing of any wares or merchandise, etc. City of Gulfport v. Stratakos, 43 South. 812, 90 Miss. 489, 13 Ann. Cas. 855.

OPEN TO USE

The words "open to use," as used in an act providing that every railroad company or corporation whose lines or road, or any part thereof, is "open to use," shall within six months after the passage of the act maintain fences on the sides of their roads, or the part thereof "open to use," where the same passes through, along, or adjoining inclosed or cultivated fields or uninclosed lands, and that any such railroad company failing to maintain such fences shall be liable to the owners of live stock killed, injured, or damaged by their agents, employes, engines, or cars, do not include a railroad which the evidence shows was built in 1872, and further, that an owner of stock had done business with the "Rio Grande" for 25 years. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Kelso, 90 Pac. 65, 66, 40 Colo. 84.

OPEN VISIBLE RISK

An "open visible risk" is such a one as would instantly appeal to the senses of an intelligent person familiar with the business, and about which there can be no difference of opinion in the minds of intelligent persons; and it is not required that the servant make close scrutiny into all the details of the instrumentalities with which he deals to determine the risk involved. Millen v. Pacific Bridge Co., 95 Pac. 196, 199, 51 Or. 538.

OPENING OF THE COURT

Code 1882, § 4926, providing that defendant shall file his answer in writing on or before the "opening of the court" at the return term of the suit, is mandatory, and a rule of court providing that new cases shall be called for assignment on the second Monday of the term, and that defendants should have until such call to file answer in all cases where an appearance has been entered during the first day of the term, is void, it being an unwarranted construction to extend the meaning of the words "opening of the court" to include any other day except the first day of the term. If the plea could be filed after the first day of the term, it could be filed on the last day, as well as on any intermediate day. To give any other construction to this statute would be to deprive it of a definite meaning in this regard. Lippman v. Aetna Ins. Co., 47 S. E. 593, 594, 120 Ga. 247.

OPENING STATEMENT

As pleading, see Pleading.

OPENLY

An answer setting up that a waste ditch was used continuously, openly, peaceably, etc., sufficiently shows that the use was not clandestine, as the word "openly" sufficiently shows that fact. Abbott v. Pond, 76 Pac. 60, 142 Cal. 393.

OPENLY OUTRAGE PUBLIC DECENCY

The statute (St. 1893, § 2552; Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2650) making it an offense to commit any act which "openly outrages public decency" and is injurious to public morals is directed against acts which are committed openly and affect the public. A doctor's private office is not such a place as will give an act committed therein the character of an open act, especially when no one was present except the one against whom the act was committed. Gunn v. Territory, 91 Pac. 861, 862, 190 Okl. 240.

OPENLY POSSESS

Where a petition alleges that the plaintiffs own and "openly possess" land, the petition is not drawn under Act No. 38 of 1908, authorizing suits to establish title to real estate where neither of the claimants are in actual possession, since the quoted phrase cannot be construed as an averment simply of title to the land, but means to possess in an open manner; publicly; not in private; without secrecy; by some word or act which is an open declaration to those in the neighborhood that they are exercising the rights of ownership. McHugh v. Albert Hanson Lumber Co., 58 South. 636, 637, 129 La. 690.

OPENNESS, NOTORIETY, AND EXCLUSIVENESS OF POSSESSION

An instruction that "openness, notoriety, and exclusiveness of possession" are shown by such acts in respect of the land in its condition at the time as comport with ownership, such acts as would ordinarily be performed by the true owner in appropriating the lands or its avails to his own use, or preventing others from the use of it as far as reasonably practicable, was correct. Alaba- ma State Land Co. v. Matthews, 53 South. 174, 175, 168 Ala. 200.

OPERA

The word "opera" is different in meaning from the words "opera house," in that the former may have no relation to the building in which it may be rendered, and so a "theater" may mean a place where plays are produced, whereas a "theater building" may be such whether plays are produced therein or not. Neher v. Viviani, 110 Pac. 695, 698, 15 N. M. 460.

OPERATE

See Cease to be Operated; Constructed, Run, and Operated; Continuously Operated; In Operation; Physical Operation of Switch; Properly Operated; Under the Control, Management, or Operation.

The word "operate" is defined as "to put in action and supervise the working of, as to operate a machine," or as "to put into or to continue in operation; to work, as to operate a machine." Thus, by a strict definition, the meaning of the phrase "operating a machine," as used in Labor Law, § 81, providing that children under 16 years of age shall not be permitted to operate, or assist in operating, dangerous machinery of any kind, would be to work the machine, or, in other words, to regulate and control its management and operation. Gallenkamp v. Garvin Mach. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 378, 384, 91 App. Div. 141 (dissenting opinion by Ingraham, J., adopted in 72 N. E. 1142, 179 N. Y. 588. Citing Stand. Dict.; Imp. Dict.).

In an action against an abutting owner for injuries from defects in the cover of a coal hole, where the complaint predicates negligence of the defendant in the management, operation, and control of the sidewalk, and in keeping the coal hole in defective order, and in failing to provide proper warning as to the defective state of the coal hole cover, there is no legal differentiation between the terms "management" "operation," and "control," and any one of them would be sufficient to justify the admission of testimony to sustain a delinquency intended to be charged. Maldosky v. Germania Bank, 127 N. Y. Supp. 292, 293.

Under Code Va. Supp. 1898, § 2485, providing that "all persons furnishing supplies to a mining or manufacturing company necessary to the operation of the same shall have a prior lien upon the personal property of such company other than that forming part of its plant," etc., supplies necessary to the "operation of a manufacturing establishment" are such as pertain to its output, and do not include material or machinery necessary to the construction, equipment, and completion of its plant, and for the latter the statute gives no lien. American Wood-working Machinery Co. v. Agelasto, 136 Fed. 399, 400, 69 C. C. A. 243.

The phrase "purchasing or constructing," as used in Const. art. 10, § 12a, and Laws 1903, p. 93, authorizing certain cities with the assent of two-thirds of the voters thereof, voting at an election for the purpose, to become indebted in a larger amount than specified in Const. art. 10, § 12, not exceeding an additional 5 per cent. of the value of the taxable property for the purpose of purchasing or constructing waterworks or electric light plants to be owned exclusively by the city so purchasing or constructing the same, do not give cities the power to issue bonds for the purpose of maintaining and operating waterworks or electric light plants, for the power to maintain and operate waterworks and electric light plants is not necessarily incident to or implied in the power to purchase or construct waterworks or electric light plants, for the word "maintain" does not mean to provide or construct, but to keep up and preserve, and the word "operate" means to put into or continue in operation or activity. State ex rel. City of Chillicothe v. Wilder, 98 S. W. 465, 467, 200 Mo. 97.

The expression "operate as a grant," used by the Supreme Court of the United States in construing the confirmatory act of June 13, 1812 (2 Stat. 748, c. 99), to operate as a grant of the fee from the United States to the claimant of land, is in no case used by that court in any different sense. It is simply a judicial construction to the effect that Congress intends by an act of confirmation, where there is a conferee or class of conferees to take thereunder, that the same shall operate to vest in the confirmer any legal title which may be in the United States. Catron v. Langhlin, 72 Pac. 26, 31, 11 N. M. 604.

Operating house of prostitution

Since a conviction of a violation of Act April 26, 1909, punishing one who shall engage or assist in operating or managing any house of prostitution, cannot be had unless it is shown that accused had control of and conducted or assisted in the management and operation of the affairs of the house in some manner, or that he was able to bring about or assist in bringing about prostitution, a charge that if accused in any manner aided or abetted a third person in the management of the house he is guilty is erroneous; the word "management" meaning the act of managing; the manner of treating, directing, carrying on, or using for a purpose; and the word "operate" meaning to put into or to continue in operation or activity; the word "manager" meaning one who has the conduct or direction of anything; and the phrase "to carry on," when applied to business, meaning to prosecute, to help forward, to continue, etc. Trozso v. People, 117 Pac. 150, 154, 51 Colo. 323.

Operating railroad

Engaged in operation of railroad, see Engaged.

Code, § 2071, makes every railroad company liable for damages to employes by the mismanagement of the engineers or other employes, when such wrongs are in any manner connected with the "use and operation" of any railway about which they shall be employed. Plaintiff was a machinist's helper in the machine shop of defendant railroad company where engines were brought for repairs; his duty being to block the wheels of an engine when placed over the draw pit in the shop and to remove such blocks when the engine was to be moved. After one set of wheels had been put on an engine and it was about to be moved by another engine, in order to put on the second pair of drivers, plaintiff attempted to brush a chock from under the wheel of the dead engine, when the other engine started without warning and crushed his hand. The operating department of the railroad had no control over the machine shops, which were used only for repairing disabled equipment which had been withdrawn from service, and not merely for temporary repairs and cleaning, as were the roundhouses. Held, that the statute referred to the physical "use and operation" of the railroad in transportation, and the rails on the shop floor did not constitute a "railway," nor was the movement of the repaired engine by the other engine done in the "use and operation" of the railway, within the meaning of the statute, so that the company was not liable for the negligence of the engineer in starting the live engine. Slaats v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 63, 64, 149 Iowa, 735, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 642.

The risk of injury attending the removal from the track of a hand car used for the transportation of a section crew and materials is peculiar to the "operation of railroads," within Rev. St. 1898, § 1816, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 741, c. 448, providing that every railroad shall be liable for damages to its employes, provided the same shall arise from a risk peculiar to the "operation of railroads." Hardt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 110 N. W. 427, 431, 130 Wis. 512.

Where a section hand, engaged with others in trucking rails, was injured by a rail which he was standing astride being suddenly dropped to the ground, in view of the necessity of haste caused by frequently passing trains and the embarrassment of standing ground between rails and ties, the injury was one arising from a risk peculiar to the operation of railroads within St. 1898, § 1816, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 741, c. 448, making the company liable for such injuries, though caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. Meo v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 344, 138 Wis. 340.

The complete control and management of the track is the very essence of "operating" a railroad. Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co. v. Oman, 134 Fed. 441, 450.

The word "operate," in St. 1898, § 1810, requiring railroads to be fenced and provided with cattle guards within three months from the time of commencing to "operate the same," refers to the transportation of goods and passengers, and not to the running of construction trains. Nordean v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 135 N. W. 150, 151, 148 Wis. 627.

A joint traffic arrangement under which one line hauls the cars of another within the state does not constitute the "operation of a railroad." Slaughter v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 119 N. W. 398, 400, 106 Minn. 263.

A blacksmith engaged in construction of a railroad bridge, and injured by the act of a fellow servant in letting a coil of rope fall while they were both at camp, is not injured in the "operation of a railroad," within the meaning of the railway fellow-servant act (Revisal 1905, § 2646). O'Neal v. South & W. R. Co., 67 S. E. 1022, 1023, 152 N. C. 404.

A cause of action against a railroad operating a road in front of premises accrues when every part of the road is adjusted according to its final construction and it begins to carry passengers, for until that time it is not in "operation," defined as active exercise of some specific function of office, or power exercised in producing an effect, though prior to that time construction and experimental trains had been operated. Rothman v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 200, 201, 66 Misc. Rep. 378.

An employe of a railroad company, engaged in trucking freight from a warehouse to a freight car, is within the protection of Rev. St. 1899, § 2873, making every railroad corporation liable for all injuries to a servant while engaged in the work of operating the railroad by reason of the negligence of any other servant. Orendorff v. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 92 S. W. 148, 149, 116 Mo. App. 348.

The fellow servant act (Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, § 1), giving a servant of any railroad company "operating" in the state a right of action against the company for injuries sustained through the negligence of a fellow servant, is not applicable to an injury sustained by a servant assisting in the construction of a railroad at a point five or six miles from the completed track, and still further from the track on which trains were being operated. The word "operating," as applied to a railroad, means operation in the course of its business in any of its departments but not in the course of its construction. Nicholson v. Transylvania R. Co., 51 S. E. 40, 41, 138 N. C. 518.

While the mere repair of a roadbed or track is not operation of a railroad, yet the risk of injury attending the removal from the track of a hand car used for the transportation of a section crew and materials is peculiar to the "operation of railroads" within a statute providing that every railroad shall be liable for damages to its employes from risks peculiar to the "operation of railroads." Hardt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 110 N. W. 427, 431, 130 Wis. 512.

Under the statute providing that every railroad corporation owning or operating a railroad shall be liable for all damages sustained by any servant, "while engaged in the work of operating such railroad, by the negligence of any other agent or servant thereof," a fireman who, after attending to the headlight of his engine, stood in front of the pilot a short time, and, while returning to the cab, was struck by lumber projecting from the door of one of the passing cars, was engaged in the "operation of a railroad." St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bussong, 90 S. W. 72, 73, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 476.

A contractor to furnish logs to a saw-mill over a logging railroad, to which spurs were connected and on which a log skidder was operated solely to haul logs to a point where they could be loaded on cars and transported to the mill, was a person "operating a railroad" within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560h, providing that all persons engaged in the common service of a person operating a railroad in the same grade of employment and together doing the same character of work at the same time and place are "fellow servants," and that employes who do not come within such provisions are not fellow servants. Hampton v. Woolsey (Tex.) 139 S. W. 888, 890.

Ann. St. 1906, § 2873, makes every railroad liable for damages sustained by a servant while engaged in operating the railroad by reason of the negligence of another servant. Section 1192 requires railroads to carry a limited amount of baggage for each passenger, and section 1100 requires them to give checks therefor. Plaintiff was injured while engaged with another employe in transferring baggage from and to passenger trains to the baggage rooms of defendant railroad terminal company. Held, that plaintiff was engaged in "operating the railroad," within section 2873. Turner v. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 111 S. W. 841, 842, 132 Mo. App. 38.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2873, provides that every railroad corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state shall be liable for any damages sustained by any agent or servant thereof while engaged in the work of operating such railroad by reason of the negligence of any other agent or servant thereof. Held, that the work of repairing or reconstructing a bridge over which a railroad company's track was laid is work performed in "operating such railroad," within the meaning of the statute. Huston v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 107 S. W. 1045, 1048, 129 Mo. App. 576.

Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2873, providing that every railroad corporation shall be liable for all damages sustained by any servant while engaged in the work of "operating such railroad," by reason of the negligence of any other agent or servant thereof, is not limited in its application to the servants of the railroad company actually engaged in the operation of trains thereon, but includes all servants whose work is directly necessary for the running of trains, and therefore includes section hands engaged in repairing the road. Callahan v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal Ry. Co., 71 S. W. 208, 170 Mo. 473, 60 L. R. A. 249, 94 Am. St. Rep. 746.

Under Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1113, c. 565, § 101) as amended by Laws 1897, p. 776, c. 688, relating to street surface railroads, and providing that no corporation constructing and operating a railroad under the provisions of this article, etc., shall charge any passenger more than five cents for one continuous ride from any point on its road, "or on any road, line or branch operated by it, or under its control," to any other point thereof, etc., and Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1096, c. 565, § 39) imposing a penalty on any railroad corporation receiving more than the lawful rate of fare, etc., the operation or control of a road within the meaning of such sections means a control of the operation of the road, and not merely a control of the corporation or individuals operating it by reason of the ownership of a majority of the road's capital stock. Judgment, Senior v. New York

City R. Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 645, 111 App. Div. 39.

Where a railway company for a fixed rental furnished to a brewing company a locomotive for the exclusive use of the brewing company in a yard containing tracks and switches, the ties and rails for which were owned by the railway company and the real estate by the brewing company, and the engineer and fireman operating the locomotive were selected by the railway company and paid by the brewing company, the maintenance and operation of such yard was the operation of a railway, within Rev. Laws 1905, § 2042, providing that every company owning or operating a railroad shall be liable for all damages sustained within the state by any agent or servant thereof, without contributory negligence on his part, by reason of the negligence of any other servant thereof, so that neither the railway company nor the brewing company could escape liability to an injured person upon the ground that the injury resulted from the negligence of a fellow servant, if the injured employé was exposed to a railroad hazard. Schoen v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 127 N. W. 433, 434, 112 Minn. 38, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 841.

In Gen. Laws 1899, p. 214, c. 125, § 1, providing that whenever freight, baggage, or other property has been transported over two or more railroads operating any part of their roads in this state and having an agent in this state, or operated by any assignee, trustee, or receiver of such railways, suit for loss or damages thereto may be brought against any one or all of such railroad corporations, the term "operating any part of their roads in this state" means that such corporations are engaged in the transportation of freight, baggage, or other property within the state. Where the undisputed evidence showed that a railway track did not extend into the state, and that the company was not engaged in the transportation of any freight, baggage, or other property within the limits of the state, but, in the course of business between it and another railroad company as connecting lines, the engines and cars of each road reciprocally passed over the boundary line of the states of Texas and Arkansas, in no sense could it be said that such interchange of business is within the term "operating any part of their roads within this state." St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. J. H. White & Co., 80 S. W. 77, 79, 97 Tex. 493.

Operating sawmill

An employé engaged in cutting and delivering logs to his employer's sawmill is not entitled to a lien, under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5919, giving a lien for labor in the operation of a sawmill, etc., but he may assert a lien on the logs cut and delivered under section 5390 et seq., giving to a person performing labor on logs a lien thereon, etc.

Graham v. Gardner, 89 Pac. 171, 172, 45 Wash. 648.

Operating street railway

Authority to an electric company to "operate" its railway on a certain street does not authorize it to exclude the public from the street nor to operate the railway so as to render the street unnecessarily dangerous. McKim v. City of Philadelphia, 66 Atl. 340, 342, 217 Pa. 243, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508.

It has been held that a street railroad company running its cars over portions of the lines of another company by virtue of a lease is not "operating" a railroad, as that term is employed in the Constitution and in Railroad Law, §§ 91, 102, requiring the consent of abutting owners to the construction or operation of a street railroad. Topham v. Interurban St. R. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 295, 299, 42 Misc. Rep. 503 (citing Ingersoll v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 52 N. E. 545, 157 N. Y. 453, 43 L. R. A. 236).

Operating trains, locomotives, or cars

Where plaintiff was injured while blocking up a turntable so as to turn a push car by the car being derailed and a timber thereon falling on plaintiff, he was "operating a car," within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, making railroads liable for injuries to employes while operating cars, etc., by negligence of other employes. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Bailey, 115 S. W. 601, 605, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 295.

Injury to a railway sectionman, caused by his foreman suddenly stopping a hand car on which they were riding, did not arise in the operation of railroad trains, within the employer's liability act (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8017), making railroad companies liable for injuries to employes in enumerated cases. Richey v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 96 N. E. 694, 697, 176 Ind. 542.

Where sectionmen in building a temporary track used a push car to bring the rails and plaintiff was injured by the falling of a rail while being removed from the car to the track, the injury did not occur while engaged in the work of "operating a car," within the fellow servant rule of Batts' Ann. Civ. St. art. 4560ea. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Anderson, 118 S. W. 127, 102 Tex. 402.

"Operate: * * * (2) To effect any result; exert agency; act. (3) To bring about a specified result. (4) To produce the proper or intended effect." Under Rev. St. art. 4560f, providing that every corporation operating a railroad shall be liable for damages sustained by any servant while engaged in operating its cars by reason of the negligence of any other servant, though a fellow servant, an employé in a quarry was engaged in operating a car, where he and another employé loaded it with rock, started it, and mounted it when loaded, and by the use of brakes regulated its speed down the track to the crusher, and after unloading it pushed it back. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Webb, 72 S. W. 1044, 1046, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 498 (quoting and adopting Office Stand. Dict.).

In a complaint, in an action by a servant for injuries, ascribing the injury to the negligent operation of a train by an engineer, the word "operation" means management or conduct, and presupposes the existence of the subject of operation, and does not extend to negligence in the composition of the train, and evidence tending to show negligence in the composition of the train does not support the averment. Reeves v. Henderson-Boyd Lumber Co., 55 South. 191, 192, 172 Ala. 526 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4992).

The term "operation," in an instruction in an action for injuries to a passenger caused by the negligent handling and running of the train, in which the court declared the prima facie liability of the carrier for the negligent "operation" and running of the train, is synonymous with the term "running," and the instruction is not objectionable as not confining the negligence to the running of the train. Louisville, & N. R. Co. v. Willis, 51 South. 134, 136, 58 Fla. 307.

"Operation" means how cars shall be run, and what shall be done in that respect by a street railway company, and does not relate to fare. A provision in a contract between a city and a street railway company that the city should not reduce fares below five cents was not abrogated by a subsequent contract providing that in the construction, maintenance, and "operation" of its lines the company should be subject to all present or future ordinances of the city. Minneapolis St. R. Co. v. City of Minneapolis, 155 Fed. 989, 1000.

Where a "fire knocker," for the purpose of moving blocked cars of wood, to unload which was a part of his duty, was attempting to remove the block so as to move the cars a short distance, and another "fire knocker" was on top of the cars signaling the engineer for the same purpose, they were engaged in operating cars under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4560f, exempting persons engaged in "operating the cars" from the fellow-servant rule. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 118 S. W. 1117, 1118, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 495.

One employed as night hostler in a railroad yard charged with the duty, pursuant to the orders of his superior, of turning engines when they come in the yard, seeing that they get fuel, sand, and water, and are oiled, wiped, and dispatched on the road, is not, while inspecting a switch engine to determine whether it has been properly wiped, engaged in the operation of a locomotive, within the statute relating to employes engaged in the work of operating locomotives. Galveston, H. & N. Ry. Co. v. Cochran, 109 S. W. 261, 263, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 591.

Where a railroad section foreman was injured while assisting his collaborators in loading rails onto a flat car composing part of a train, while the train was at rest, he having no duty to perform with reference to the movement of the train, he was not engaged in operating a car, locomotive, or train within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, providing that every person, receiver, or corporation operating a railroad shall be liable for damages sustained by any servant or employé while engaged in operating cars, locomotives, or trains, by reason of the negligence of any fellow servant. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. McGee (Tex.) 141 S. W. 1054, 1055.

An allegation in a petition that injury occurring upon the derailment of a train was caused from the manner in which the engine and cars were being "operated," refers to that which was being done by the employes on the engine and cars at the time of the accident, and not to the manner in which the train was ordered to be run by the officials of the road. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Poole, 133 S. W. 239, 240, 104 Tex. 36.

A freight handler negligently run into by an engine while he was pushing a car to a freighthouse by direction of his superior is within Laws 1893, c. 220, making railroad companies liable for injuries to any employé through the negligence of another employé, without contributory negligence on his part, while engaged in "operating cars." Ean v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 69 N. W. 997, 998, 95 Wis. 69.

Plaintiff was engaged with others in distributing ties along a railway track. The ties were placed on a car which was pushed along the track by plaintiff and the other workmen and the ties pulled or thrown off where needed without stopping the car, if possible. It was the duty of plaintiff to assist in starting, stopping, and moving the car as well as throwing off the ties. While he was moving a tie thrown off, a co-employé caused another to slide off, which injured him. Held, that plaintiff was injured while engaged in operating a car within the meaning of the statute, declaring that the fact that injury in such cases is due to the act of a fellow servant does not defeat recovery. Freeman v. Shaw (Tex.) 126 S. W. 53, 55.

Where railroad employes were transporting ballast on a push car for repair of a track, and had to remove the car from the track between trips and replace it on the track, they were "operating the car" within a statute providing that a railroad company shall be liable for injuries to a servant, in operating a car, through the negligent act of any other servant. Seery v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co., 77 S. W. 950, 951, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 89.

Under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2864, as amended by Laws Mo. 1905, pp. 135-137, providing that whenever any person, including an employé of the corporation or individual hereinafter referred to, whose death is caused by the negligence of a coemployé thereof, shall die from an injury resulting from or occasioned by the negligence, unskillfulness, or criminal intent of any officer, agent, servant, or whilst running, conducting, or managing any locomotive, car, or train of cars, or any street car, or of any master, pilot, engineer, agent, or employé whilst running, conducting, or managing any steamboat, or of any driver of any stage, automobile, or other public conveyance whilst in charge of the same as a driver, and when any passenger shall die from an injury resulting from any defect or insufficiency in any railroad, or in any locomotive, car, street car, steamboat, stage, automobile, or other public conveyance, the corporation, or individual in whose employ any such officer, agent, servant, master, pilot, engineer, or driver shall be when such injury is committed, or who owns, operates, or conducts any such railroad, locomotive, car, street car, automobile, coach, or other public conveyance when any injury is received resulting from or occasioned by any defect or insufficiency, unskillfulness, negligence, or criminal intent above declared, shall forfeit and pay as a penalty for every such person, employé, or passenger so dying not less than $2,000, nor more than $10,000 in the discretion of the jury, which may be sued for and recovered by persons bearing specified relations to deceased, the words "operates or conducts" do not include a mere servant of a railroad company or other public carrier, but has reference to the railroad company or individual, using the locomotive, cars, or other conveyances of another railroad company or individual, as lessee or bailee for the particular purpose. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Stepp, 151 Fed. 908, 913.

The term "operation," as used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, providing that every person or corporation operating a railroad shall be liable for all damages sustained by any servant thereof while engaged in the work of operating cars of such railroad by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant, comprehends something more than the mere running of cars, locomotives, and trains of a railroad company. It includes within its meaning every employé who when injured was performing some work in the line of his duty directly connected with or incident to the movement and operation of a car, locomotive, or train. A servant of a railroad company injured while unloading ties from a box car in a train used for distributing the ties along the track by the negligence of a fellow servant was engaged in work proximately and necessarily connected with the operation of the cars at the time of his injury and was entitled to the protection of the statute. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co.

of Texas v. Thornton, 103 S. W. 437, 438, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 649.

Operating under patent

A license to "operate under a patent" does not authorize the licensee to buy up infringing articles made by others, who have been adjudged infringers, and resell them under its own name. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., 178 Fed. 577, 578.

Where defendant, which had been enjoined from infringing a patent owned by complainant, covering a sound-producing apparatus for talking machines, including the sound record, under a subsequent contract with complainant was given the right to "operate" under such patent, in return for the granting of a like right under a patent of its own, it had the right to sell records made by another, as well as those of its own make, and was not chargeable with violation of the injunction because it sold records made by another, who had been held as a contributory infringer of complainant's patent; such records, however, not being a direct infringement. American Graphophone Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 188 Fed. 580, 581, 106 C. C. A. 348.

OPERATE SUBSTANTIALLY AS DESCRIBED

The words "to operate substantially as described," at the end of a claim in an application for a patent, do not import into the claim elements described in the specification but not mentioned in the claim for the purpose of either extending or limiting it. General Electric Co. v. International Specialty Co., 126 Fed. 755, 758, 61 C. C. A. 329; De Long Hook & Eye Co. v. Francis Hook & Eye & Fastener Co., 150 Fed. 601, note.

OPERATED WITHOUT LICENSE

See License (Governmental Regulation).

OPERATING EXPENSES

The "operating expenses" of a railroad include the value of the use of property that is used but not consumed in rendering the service, as well as the value of labor and management used, and of property used and consumed, in rendering the service. State ex rel. Railroad Com'rs v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 57 South. 673, 676, 63 Fla. 274.

It has been held that taxes, rents, and cost of construction are "operating expenses" of a railroad. There are some kinds of construction, some kinds of rents, and some kinds of taxes, that ought not to be charged as "operating expenses"; but whether or not rents, taxes, and cost of construction are "operating expenses" depends on the circumstances of each particular case, to be determined by the evidence. Schmidt v. Louisville, C. & L. Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 314, 318, 119 Ky. 287.

Liabilities incurred by the receiver of a railroad for car rentals, for cars destroyed by fire, for rolling stock, equipment and traffic balances due other roads, and for damages for injuries to persons or property caused by torts of the servants of the receiver are legally classed as items of "operating expenses." St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Texas Southern Ry. Co. (Tex.) 126 S. W. 296, 300.

OPERATION

See Mining Operation; Negligent Operation.

A policy indemnifying an employer against liability for claims for personal injuries to its employés while engaged in "operations connected with the business of iron and steel works," covers injuries received by an employé by reason of the construction of a building by the employer for use in his business. Hoven v. Employers' Liab. Ass'n Corp., 67 N. W. 46, 48, 93 Wis. 201, 32 L. R. A. 388.

The word "thing" is defined as "that which is or may become the object of thought; that which has existence or is conceived or imagined as having existence; any object, substance, attribute, idea, fact, circumstance, event, etc. A thing may be material or ideal, animate or inanimate, actual, possible, or imaginary." And the word "operation" is defined as "the course of action or series of acts by which some result is accomplished; process. (a) In surg., the act or series of acts and manipulations performed upon a patient's body, as in setting a bone, amputating a limb, extracting a tooth, etc." An indictment under the federal statute for mailing a letter giving information where and how and of whom and by what means articles and things designed and intended for the procuring of an abortion might be obtained states an offense, where it sets out a letter written to defendant inquiring for some medicine or other means for accomplishing such result, and a letter, alleged to have been mailed by defendant in reply, which, when read in connection with the letter of inquiry, in effect offers for a stated consideration to effect the desired result by some treatment or operation, although the particular means is not specified; the word "thing," as used in the statute, being a comprehensive term, which includes any kind of treatment or operation. United States v. Somers, 164 Fed. 259, 261, 262 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

The term "operation," in an accident insurance policy issued to a physician which covered "that class of injuries known as septic wounds, caused by accident while performing any 'operation' pertaining to the business of the insured," means treatment pertaining to the business of insured, and the company was liable where death was caused by septicæmia resulting from a wound from a broken bottle which he broke while preparing medicine for a patient. Central Accident

Ins. Co. v. Rambe, 77 N. E. 123, 126, 220 Ill. 151, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 110 Am. St. Rep. 235, 5 Ann. Cas. 155.

A surgical "operation" begins when the opening is made into the body and ends when this opening has been closed in a proper way after all appliances necessary to the successful operation have been removed from the body." Harris v. Fall, 177 Fed. 79, 84, 100 C. C. A. 497, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1174 (quoting and adopting definition in Akridge v. Noble, 41 S. E. 78, 114 Ga. 949).

OPERATION AND REPAIR

Labor performed in mowing grass, weeds, and bushes off a railway right of way is work done in the "operation and repair of a railroad," within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3312. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Bryan (Tex.) 107 S. W. 572, 576 (citing Pittsburg & B. Pass. Ry. Co. v. City of Pittsburg, 80 Pa. 72, 74; Arthur v. City of Charleston, 41 S. E. 171, 51 W. Va. 132).

OPERATION OF LAW

See Domicile by Operation of Law.

The suing out of an injunction to restrain a performance of a contract for street improvements is not a prevention of performance by the "operation of law" within the meaning of that phrase as used in Civ. Code, § 1511, providing that the want of performance of an obligation is excused when such performance is prevented or delayed by the "operation of law." Union Contracting & Paving Co. v. Campbell, 84 Pac. 805, 806, 2 Cal. App. 534.

Civil engineer

A civil engineer is not entitled to a lien for wages earned by him in the construction of a railroad under Rev. St. art. 3312, being neither a "mechanic," "laborer," nor "operative." Gulf & B. V. R. Co. v. Berry, 72 S. W. 1049, 1050, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 3.

OPERATOR

See Confidence Operator; Telegraph Operator.

In an arbitration proceeding between a railroad company, and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, in which the question was submitted whether members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers in the employ of the railroad company should legislate for train dispatchers relative to rates of pay, hours of service, or otherwise, expert or opinion evidence tending to show that a train dispatcher was an entirely different functionary from a telegrapher or "operator," that while the dispatcher might be an operator he was not necessarily such, his duties being very dissimilar in character, largely administrative, and of much greater importance not only to his employer in carrying on the service but to the safety and convenience of the public, that he stood in a different relation to his employer, as well in fact as in law, and representing him in the discharge of his duties as an alter ego or vice principal in his relations with other employes, was competent. In re Southern Pac. Co., 155 Fed. 1001, 1004.

Operative distinguished

An "operator" is one who operates or produces an effect, while an "operative" is a skilled workman, an artisan, or mechanic. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Continental Trust Co., 166 Fed. 597, 600.

OPINION

See Fixed Opinion; Intimation of Opinion; Matter of Impression or Opinion.

An "opinion" is "a notion of conviction founded on probable evidence; belief stronger than an impression, less strong than positive knowledge." In re Clark, 103 S. W. 1105, 1108, 126 Mo. App. 391 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

"Opinion" arises when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by the evidence of probability that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not without a mixture of uncertainty or doubt. Bilton v. Territory, 99 Pac. 163, 167, 1 Okl. Cr. 568.

While the word "opinion," in a close and strict sense, means a court's decision upon pleadings and facts duly presented in a cause, yet in a broader sense it means one's "notion," "idea," "view," or even one's "sentiments." Ex parte Clark, 106 S. W. 990, 998, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

In an action for injuries to a passenger, testimony of plaintiff that she slipped on material on the platform of the car which "looked like old ice" is not an "opinion" in its ordinary sense, which is an inference as to what will follow from a given state of facts, "but is the observation of an existing condition." Murphy v. North Jersey St. Ry. Co., 80 Atl. 331, 334, 81 N. J. L. 706, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592.

As disqualifying a juror

As applied to the opinion of a juror when challenged for bias, an "impression" of the juror is correctly defined as an opinion, remembrance, or belief, especially when that is somewhat indistinct or vague. Under St. § 7278, providing that if a juror has formed an "opinion" the court may examine him and permit him to serve if satisfied that the juror will render an impartial verdict on the evidence, "opinion" is a conclusion or a judgment held with confidence but falling short of positive knowledge, facts held to show that the court did not abuse its discretion in overruling a challenge for bias after an examination on voir dire. Lindsey v. State, 69 N. E. 126, 131, 69 Ohio. St. 215.

False representation distinguished

See False Representation.

Impression or understanding

There is "a marked distinction between a matter of 'opinion' and a matter of 'impression' or 'understanding.' The former is predicated upon the existence or nonexistence of a fact. The latter is only a deduction drawn from the assumption of that fact, so that, while the one may rise to the standard of evidence, the other is universally rejected as such." Cross v. Aby, 45 South. 820, 822, 55 Fla. 311 (quoting and adopting definition in Chaires v. Brady, 10 Fla. 133, 140).

An "opinion," within the meaning of Bates' Ann. St. § 7278, providing that if a juror has formed an opinion the court shall thereupon proceed to examine him on the grounds of such, opinion, etc., is well defined as being a conclusion or judgment held with confidence but falling short of positive knowledge, and while an "opinion" and an "impression" are alike in mind, there is an essential difference between the two in degree, an impression as applied to this subject-matter being correctly defined as, a notion, remembrance, or belief especially one that is somewhat indistinct or vague. Lindsey v. State, 69 N. E. 126, 131, 69 Ohio St. 215.

Within Gen. St. 853, § 205, providing that it shall be good cause of challenge to a juror that he has formed or expressed an opinion on the issue or any material fact to be tried, an impression depending only on the newspaper account of the truth of which he had no knowledge is not an opinion. State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 257, 279.

Judgment distinguished

See Judgment (Of Court).

Statement of fact distinguished

"To distinguish 'opinions' from 'statement of facts,' the general rule is if the vendor, knowing them to be untrue, makes statements with the intention of misleading the vendee, and if the latter, relying upon them, is misled to his injury, or if he induces the vendee not to make inquiries with respect to value, or any extrinsic facts affecting values, or makes statements in such a manner that the vendee, instead of being put on inquiry, is put off his guard, it has been held that a substantial right to recover damages is created, or the vendee may, at his option, avoid the contract. To effect this, however, the representations must, as a rule, be coupled with other circumstances, as where they are fraudulently made of particulars in relation to the estate which the vendee has not equal means of knowing, and where he is induced by the vendor's artifice to forbear inquiries which he would otherwise have made; but whether a representation as to value is merely an expression of 'opinion' or belief, or an affirmation of fact to be relied on, is a question for the jury, and should properly be left to their decision. Again, while the purchaser must rely upon his own judgment in questions of value, yet, in regard to any extrinsic facts affecting the quality or value of the subject of the contract, he may rely upon the assurances of the vendor; and, if he does so rely, and those assurances are fraudulently made to induce him to enter into the contract, he may maintain an action for the injury sustained." Oneal v. Welsman, 88 S. W. 290, 292, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 592 (quoting and adopting definition 2 Warv. Vendors, § 946).

A statement of a salesman of a seller of an automobile that the tires of the machine were as good as new was merely an expression of "opinion" as to their condition, and not a statement of a present existing fact, necessary to constitute a warranty. Warren v. Walter Automobile Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 396, 398, 50 Misc. Rep. 605.

OPINION (Of Court)

See On the Opinion Below.

An "opinion" is a written statement by the court of its reasons for the conclusion reached from an examination of the law and of the facts in controversy, but forms no part of the judgment, though it may with propriety be consulted to explain an ambiguity therein. State v. Gray, 71 Pac. 978, 979, 42 Or. 261 (adopting definition in Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec. 565; Keane v. Fisher, 10 La. Ann. 261).

The "opinion" of a court giving the reasons on which its judgment is based is never called a "report." In appellate tribunals, when in a given case the court has reached its conclusion, and is ready to pronounce its judgment, some member of the court is usually designated to prepare the opinion, but he is never said to report it. The opinion is delivered, not reported, by him. Gillette v. Peabody, 75 Pac. 18, 20, 19 Colo. App. 356.

In Pennsylvania practice, the docket entry, "rule absolute for new trial," implies all that is meant by the words "judgment vacated, verdict set aside, and new trial granted," and following that practice in the United States Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, the words "opinion granting a new trial filed," entered in the appearance docket of the United States court, have the effect of disposing of any docket entries which stand in the way of the order, and imply all that is meant by the words "judgment vacated, verdict set aside, and new trial granted." Evans v. Freeman, 140 Fed. 419, 423 (citing Fisher v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. Ry. Co., 40 Atl. 97, 185 Pa. 602).

Decision distinguished

Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1955, providing that a plaintiff may take a nonsuit before the jury retires, and, on trial by the judge, before decision is announced, the term "decision" is not equivalent to "opinion," and, though the court in a case tried without a jury expressed an opinion indicating that he intended to render a decision in favor of the defendants, the plaintiffs would not be precluded thereby from having a nonsuit (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1901). Kidd v. McCracken, 150 S. W. 885, 887, 105 Tex. 383.

As judgment

See Judgment (Of Court).

OPINION EVIDENCE

"Opinion evidence" is that which is given by a person of ordinary capacity who has by opportunity for practice acquired a special knowledge outside of the limits of common observation and which may be of value in elucidating a matter under consideration. The experiential qualifications of the witness, including his opportunity to observe the very thing under inquiry, being first shown, his special knowledge may be imparted in aid of the jurors at the trial under questions in ordinary form. Crosby v. Wells, 67 Atl. 295, 298, 73 N. J. Law, 790.

All matters of physical facts are not "opinion evidence" in the legal sense of that term. They are not theoretical, nor conclusions drawn by inference, but a statement of facts from personal observation, and hence also they are not "expert evidence." The exceptions to the rule that witnesses cannot give opinions is not confined to the evidence of experts testifying on subjects requiring special knowledge, skill, or learning, but it includes the evidence of common observers testifying the result of their observations made at the time in regard to common appearances, facts, and conditions which cannot be reproduced and made palpable to a jury. Britt v. Carolina Northern R. Co., 61 S. E. 601, 603, 148 N. C. 37.

OPIUM

OPPORTUNITY

See Clear Opportunity.

By "opportunity" is meant "fit or convenient time; suitable occasion; time or place favorable for executing the purpose or doing the thing in question." Under a provision in a policy of insurance that a delinquent should have the "opportunity for reinstatement on similar conditions," the context showing that the term "similar conditions" had reference to the payment of past-due premiums, assessments, and other indebtedness, a delinquent was entitled to reinstatement, and, if the company refused to reinstate him, to recover the premiums paid in the absence of anything in the policy which required the approval of the company, or any of its officers as a condition precedent to reinstatement. Lane v. Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co., 54 S. E. 854, 855, 142 N. C. 55, 115 Am. St. Rep. 729.

The rule that opportunity to know the truth will prevent recovery means merely that one may not blindly act on statement in disregard of knowledge of their falsity or with such opportunity that by the exercise of ordinary observation, not necessarily by search, he would have known thereof. Jacobsen v. Whitely, 120 N. W. 285, 286, 138 Wis. 434.

OPPOSITE

The term "opposite," in a stipulation in a contract between a railroad company and landowners, providing that the former should have certain rights respecting land in consideration of the construction of its railroad, and that the company would cause its railroad to be constructed within one year and in operation "opposite" lands of the parties by a time fixed, must be liberally and reasonably construed so as to carry into effect the general intent expressed in the contract, and means a place or places from which the land can be reached for development of its resources, it being underlaid with coal, economically and conveniently, considering the topography of the land and all material circumstances, and completion of the road to a point 10 miles distant from the place from which this can be done, is not a compliance with the stipulation, though it is possible to build a branch road to the land from that point. Adams v. Guyandotte Valley Ry. Co., 61 S. E. 341, 343, 64 W. Va. 181.

Adverse synonyms

"Opposite" is a synonym of "adverse." Prunty v. Consolidated Fuel, etc., Co., 108 Pac. 802, 803, 82 Kan. 541 (citing Webst. Universal Dict.).

OPPOSITE PARTY

The term "opposite party," as used in a statute providing for the reversal of a decree entered on a bill taken for confessed, and requiring reasonable notice to the opposite party of the motion to reverse, does not mean only the plaintiff, but any party to the suit, who has an interest in upholding the decree sought to be reversed, whose pecuniary or profiting interest would be prejudiced by reversal. It means opposite in interest. Mor- ison & Co. v. Leach, 47 S. E. 237, 238, 55 W. Va. 126.

The phrase "opposite party," in the statute providing that when a suit is prosecuted or defended by heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person, the "opposite party" shall not be admitted to testify to matters equally within the knowledge of decedent, refers to the real party in interest who must be concluded by the determination of the suit. Where on appeal by heirs from an order allowing the final account of the administrator, the issue was whether certificates of deposit in favor of decedent and which had been in the hands of the administrator were a part of the estate, the testimony of a witness on behalf of the administrator that the property belonged to her by gift causa mortis from decedent was not incompetent; the witness not being the real party in interest. Reed v. Whipple, 103 N. W. 548, 553, 140 Mich. 7.

OPPOSITE TO

Laws 1815, c. 199, § 1, supplementing Rev. Laws 1813, c. 74, § 4, allowed the commissioners of the land office to grant to "adjacent" owners land under the water surrounding Staten Island, which grant was not to extend more than 500 feet from low-water mark. A riparian landowner applied for a grant of land opposite to and "adjoining" his, and extending to a point 500 feet from low-water mark, and an affidavit appended to his application described his land as being bound by the low-water mark. The Attorney General recommended that applicant be granted the land "opposite to" that now held by him, and the commissioners passed a resolution that letters patent be issued to him for the land under water applied for. A patent was issued, describing the land granted as beginning at low-water mark and extending to a point 500 feet out. Held, that the words "adjoining" and "opposite to" must be understood to be equivalent to "adjacent" as used in the statute, and the application must be taken to apply to land immediately contiguous to that of the applicant, and as declaring that he owned the land to low-water mark, and hence was broad enough to include any land lying between his actual boundary and low-water mark, so that the patent must be construed as granting to applicant all the land lying between his land and a line 500 feet out from low-water mark, as any other construction would not be in accord with the commissioners' resolution, and would render the patent void under the statute. Bardes v. Herman, 129 N. Y. Supp. 723, 726, 144 App. Div. 723; Warth v. Same, 129 N. Y. Supp. 730, 144 App. Div. 943.

OPPRESSION

A police officer is guilty of "oppression" under Pen. Code, § 556, where he enters a saloon, and, without any justification, points a pistol at a woman who is there, and detains her against her will, and commits acts whereby she is injured. People ex rel. Reardon v. Flynn, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1067, 58 Misc. Rep. 624.

Where a person goes to a billiard room to collect a bill, and while there the place is raided by the police on information that gambling was going on there, and an officer, though told by such person of the reason for his presence, struck him and took him before a magistrate for disorderly conduct, on which charge the magistrate discharged him, and such person was neither gambling nor in the commission of any overt act authorizing his arrest, the police officer was guilty of "oppression" under Pen. Code, § 556. People ex rel. Reardon v. Flynn, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1065, 1066, 58 Misc. Rep. 621.

"Oppression" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as "the act of subjecting to cruel and unjust hardships." The mere omission to repair a damage unintentionally, though negligently done, cannot be said to be subjection to cruel and unjust hardship. Civ. Code, § 3294, authorizing an award of punitive damages in an action not arising from contract, where defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied, does not apply to a case of simple negligence. That defendant constructed a bulkhead adjoining plaintiff's property for the purpose of retaining dirt, gravel, sand, etc., so negligently that it gave way, and precipitated gravel, dirt, etc., onto plaintiff's premises, destroying a portion of his fence and chicken house, was insufficient to show such gross negligence, wantonness, or oppression as to justify an award of punitive damages. Spencer v. San Francisco Brick Co., 89 Pac. 851, 852, 5 Cal. App. 126.

OPPRESSIVE ACT

There is no fatal inconsistency between a general verdict against a sheriff on the theory that he was a trespasser in making an execution levy and special findings showing that he acted "oppressively," though the jury do not affirmatively find that the writ was in his hands more than 60 days before the levy so as to make him liable on the theory that the writ was functus officio; an "oppressive" act in its ordinary sense being an act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exaction, domination, or excessive use of authority. Gallegos v. Sandoval, 106 Pac. 373, 376, 15 N. M. 216.

OPTIC

OPTICAL INSTRUMENT

Certain small slightly made magic lanterns not sufficiently substantial to be used by mature persons, but rather by children as toys, are not dutiable as "optical instruments," under Tariff Act 1894, § 1, Schedule B, par. 98. Borgfeldt v. United States, 124 Fed. 457, 458.

OPTICIAN

Itinerant optician, as merchant, see Merchant.

An "optician" is a maker of optical instruments, and applies to a man who fits glasses to the eyes. One who diagnosed his patient's diseases by a microscopic examination of a drop of blood, and treated them by placing them under the rays of electric arc lights, is not an "optician" within Acts 1901, p. 115, c. 78, excepting opticians from its provisions as to licensing persons practicing medicine. O'Neil v. State, 90 S. W. 627, 628, 115 Tenn. 427, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

OPTICS

The term "optics," as defined by the Standard Dictionary, is "the science that treats of light and vision, the organs of sight, chromatics, and all that is connected with the phenomena of sight. It includes: (1) Geometrical optics. (2) Physical optics, embracing (a) the undulatory theory, and the effect explained by it, as polarization, refraction, and interference; and (b) electro-optics, treating of such phenomena as depends on bodily function or brain action." O'Neil v. State, 90 S. W. 627, 628, 115 Tenn. 427, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

OPTION

See At the Option of Either Party;
Buyer's Option; Local Option Law;
On Accepting this Option.
Agency distinguished, see Agency.
As property, see Property.
As sale, see Sale.
See, also, Attempt to Purchase.

An "option" is an exclusive privilege to buy; and a contract for an option is the agreement by which the privilege is created. Benedict v. Pincus, 84 N. E. 284, 286, 191 N. Y. 377.

An "option" is a right acquired by contract to accept or reject an offer to purchase property at a fixed price within a specified time. Winslow v. Dundon, 125 Pac. 136, 138, 46 Mont. 71.

An "option" is a continuing offer which the offerer may not withdraw until the expiration of the time limited. Adams v. Peabody Coal Co., 82 N. E. 645, 646, 230 Ill. 469.

An "option" is simply a contract, by which the owner of property agrees that another shall have a right to buy it at a fixed price within a certain time. The owner does not sell the property, but sells the privilege to buy at the option of the other person. McGregor v. Ireland, 121 Pac. 358, 86 Kan. 426 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5001).

tion, advertise to sell the same at auction, and where he does so the vendor may object to the sale and assert ownership in the premises. Thacher v. Weston, 83 N. E. 360, 361, 197 Mass. 143.

M. agreed in writing to sell certain land to plaintiff at a specified price per acre and convey it to any one to whom plaintiff might sell it on payment of such sum. The agreement recited a consideration of a dollar paid by plaintiff, and required payment of the balance within 12 months. Held that, plaintiff not being bound to purchase, the agreement was a mere "option," terminable at M.'s election before acceptance. Noble v. Mann (Ky.) 105 S. W. 152.

A letter from plaintiffs to defendant reading: "We will withdraw [certain land] from the market until January 1st, 1904, during which time you may send your men to look it over, and if, at the expiration of the time, * * * you desire to take this land, we will sell you eight-ninths and give you warranty deed on the same at the rate of $20 per acre, and in the meantime we will try to get the consent of the parties holding the other one-ninth at the same price, but will not guaranty their consent"—was not an "option," but a mere offer to sell the land, having no consideration to uphold it, and hence was revocable at plaintiff's pleasure before acceptance by defendant. Comstock Bros. v. North, 41 South. 374, 375, 88 Miss. 754.

A contract which gives to a broker the exclusive right to procure a purchaser of real estate of the owner for a specified price with the right to retain for his services any excess which a purchaser may pay, and which provides that the option shall run to a designated date, and that the owner will furnish an abstract of title and warranty deed to the broker or to any one designated by him, is an agreement to pay a commission for selling land; the word "option" relating to the exclusive right to sell within the limited time. Brittson v. Smith, 130 N. W. 599, 601, 165 Mich. 222.

An instrument whereby an owner of a mining claim leased the same and agreed to convey the claim to the lessee for a specified sum, payable in installments on designated dates, and whereby the lessee was given possession with a right to carry on mining operations on accounting for a part of the value of the ore mined, and providing that, if the lessee should fail to pay the price on the last designated date, the agreement to convey should be void, when construed as an entity, as it must be, was but an option; an "option" being a right acquired by contract to accept or reject a present offer within a limited or reasonable time in the future. Snider v. Yarbrough, 115 Pac. 411, 412, 43 Mont. 203.

Plaintiffs entered into a written agreement that defendant should have the exclusive license to manufacture and sell skates under and during the term of their patent, except as hereinafter provided; and defendant agreed to pay plaintiffs $500 for such right, and also a certain royalty. Defendant further agreed that, if the royalty in any one year should not amount to $500, it would either pay plaintiffs that sum within 60 days of the termination of the year, as liquidated damages, or submit to the cancellation of the license, at plaintiffs' "option." Held, that such agreement did not entitle plaintiffs to demand the money or cancel the license, but gave defendant the right to retain the license on failure to pay $500 as royalty in any one year, by payment of a sum equal thereto, or to cancel the agreement, at its option. Prouty v. Union Hardware Co., 57 N. E. 352, 353, 176 Mass. 155.

The owner of one-half of a patent conveyed his half to a third person in trust to form a corporation, to convey his interest in the patent to this corporation for one-half of its stock, and to so distribute his stock that the trustee should receive 21 $\frac{1}{2}$ %/250 of his share and should hold 215 $\frac{1}{2}$ %/250 thereof in trust for his wife and child. The owner of the other half of the patent at the same time, in consideration of this deed, agreed with him in writing to convey his half of the patent to the corporation for one-half its stock and to convey to the trustee as his own personal property 21 $\frac{1}{2}$ %/250 of his share in consideration of services rendered and to be rendered by the latter in the organization and promotion of the corporation. Held, this was not a unilateral contract or an agreement for an "option," but an executed agreement on the part of the first party and an executory one on the part of the second party. Howe v. Howe & Owen Ball Bearing Co., 154 Fed. 820, 824, 83 C. C. A. 536.

A loan contract between an insurer and insured and the beneficiary for the pledge of the policy to secure a loan, which stipulates that insurer shall loan a specified sum, and that insured and beneficiary shall assign the policy as collateral, and that, in the event of the nonpayment of the debt at maturity, insurer may, at its "option," cancel the policy, and apply the cash surrender value to the payment of the debt, evidences a loan transaction, and not a sale or option to sell; the word "option" in the contract meaning that insurer may, on default, at its pleasure, apply the cash surrender value in payment of the loan. Frese v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 105 Pac. 265, 270, 11 Cal. App. 387.

A contract binding one party to sell certain land upon certain terms, and binding the other party to purchase same upon such terms, was a "contract of sale," and not an "option." Heimberger v. Rudd, 138 N. W. 374, 377, 39 S. D. 289.

ly v. Wattersen, 10 S. E. 536, 39 W. Va. 214; Donnally v. Parker, 5 W. Va. 301).

"An 'option' is in a sense a continuing offer of a contract, and if the offeree decides to exercise his right to demand the conveyance or other act contemplated he must signify that fact to the offerer." Hence a lessee's acceptance of an option to purchase creates a contract for purchase. Sizer v. Clark, 93 N. W. 539, 541, 116 Wis. 534.

In a sense all options are contingent because they may or may not be exercised within the time or upon the conditions stipulated; and such contingency does not render the options invalid. An option is a unilateral agreement binding upon the party who executes it from the date of its execution, and becomes a contract inter partes when exercised according to its terms. Boyer v. Nesbitt, 76 Atl. 103, 105, 227 Pa. 398, 136 Am. St. Rep. 890.

The phrase "option of either party," in an agreement between a dealer in electric lamps and a manufacturer, whereby the dealer agreed to carry the manufacturer's lamps in stock at all times, with privilege "to settle by return of lamps at any time at option of either party and by a sixty-day notice by either party," must receive a construction in harmony with the entire agreement, and the manufacturer did not have the right to elect to take lamps in payment, but the election related to the time of payment. Union Trust Co. v. Michigan Electric Co., 103 N. W. 556, 557, 140 Mich. 131.

An "option to purchase" is merely an agreement whereby the buyer may upon compliance with certain terms and conditions become the owner of the property, the seller giving him that option, and an "option to purchase" differs from an "option to return," in that in the former the property does not pass, while it does pass in the latter, subject to the right to rescind. In re Allen, 183 Fed. 172, 174.

An "option" to purchase if one likes is essentially different from an option to return a purchase if one should not like it, and in the one case title will not pass until the option is determined, while in the other the property passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return. State v. Betz, 106 S. W. 64, 66, 207 Mo. 589 (quoting and adopting definition in Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198, 200).

"An 'option to purchase' if he liked is essentially different from an option to return a purchase if he should not like. In one case, the title will not pass until the option is determined; in the other, the property passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return." The option given by an agreement for a transfer of corporate stock, together with the owner's proxy as director, in consideration of a specified sum "to be considered an option," running until a given date, when an additional sum is to be paid, or, in lieu thereof, all the property delivered under the agreement is to be returned, is not an option to purchase, but one to return; and, if not exercised at the time named, the sale is complete, and the promise to pay the purchase price becomes absolute. Guss v. Nelson, 26 Sup. Ct. 260, 261, 200 U. S. 298, 50 L. Ed. 489 (quoting and adopting definition in Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198, 200, quoted approvingly in Sturm v. Boker, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 104, 150 U. S. 312, 320, 37 L. Ed. 1093, 1100).

An "option" being a mere right to purchase, the consideration of the contract is the consideration given for the right to purchase, and not the value of the subject-matter of the contract; therefore the recording fee for recording an option contract to purchase land will under Act March 17, 1910 (Acts 1910, c. 315), which graduates the fees for recording such contracts according to the consideration, be based upon the consideration given for the contract and not upon the land in question. Stearnes v. Goad, 69 S. E. 1101, 111 Va. 834.

Where a contract for the division of corporate stock between promoters provided that plaintiff should have one-half of a certain block of the stock on his selling or paying for a specified portion of the corporation's bonds, it was not error for the court to refer to the contract as an "option," defined to be a right to choose between one of two or more alternatives. Malloy v. Drumheller, 122 Pac. 1005, 1009, 68 Wash. 106.

An instrument reciting that plaintiff has an "option" to purchase land with all growing crops for $10,200, to be paid $250 cash and the balance on or before August 15, 1903, otherwise the cash payment was to be forfeited, and declaring that the $250 was a part payment on the land, etc., constituted a mere option to purchase; there being no mutuality of obligation on the part of plaintiff. White v. Bank of Hanford, 83 Pac. 608, 699, 148 Cal. 552.

Where an offer of sale was based on a valuable consideration, it amounted to an "option" binding the promisor to make the proposed sale if accepted by the promisee, and was irrevocable until the expiration of the time agreed upon by the parties, during which the offer was to remain open, and, if acceptance was made within such time, it would complete the contract. Simpson & Harper v. Sanders & Jenkins, 60 S. E. 541, 543, 130 Ga. 265.

A vendor, contracting to sell for a specified sum described real estate, providing that the contract shall be void after a designated date, gives to the purchaser only an "option" to purchase on payment of the price, and the purchaser cannot, before exercising his op-be read "and." Manson v. Dayton, 153 Fed. 258, 269, 82 C. C. A. 588 (citing End. Interp. St. § 303; Thomas v. City of Grand Junction, 56 Pac. 665, 667, 13 Colo. App. 80, 84, 85; Kitchen v. Southern Ry., 48 S. E. 4, 6, 68 S. C. 554, 1 Ann. Cas. 747).

An instruction is not erroneous for authorizing the conviction of one who "advised 'or' encouraged" another in the commission of a crime instead of "advised 'and' encouraged," in accordance with the definition of a principal in Pen. Code, § 41. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 182, 34 Mont. 403.

A warrant of attorney contained in a joint and several note signed by eight makers authorizing the holder to have judgment against "us, or any or either of us," is not exhausted by the entry of judgment against one or more but not all of the makers, but is the equivalent of eight separate warrants, signed by one of the makers, and the holder may at his election enter a several judgment against each maker. It cannot be doubted that in this case "or" includes "and." Otherwise the power would be exhausted if the judgment was entered against only one of the signers—a result that is so absurd as hardly to need refutation. George D. Harter Bank v. Straus, 170 Fed. 489, 492.

Same—In deeds and conveyances

Where, in an oil and gas lease, it is stipulated that the lessee shall complete one well within one year, "or" pay at the rate of $4 quarterly, in advance, for each additional three months such completion is delayed, and it is expressly declared that the contract is made "for the sole and exclusive purpose of mining and operating for oil and gas," and it is otherwise manifest from the instrument as a whole that the intention of the parties was not that the lessee should have the right to simply hold the land during the term of the lease—not exploring it himself for oil and gas, and not allowing any one else to do so—but that he should be bound to complete a well within one year, the obligation to pay $4 quarterly will be held to be a mere penal clause, and not an alternative obligation, and the making of said payments will be held not to be a fulfillment of the principal contract, in whole or in part, but merely the payment of liquidated damages. Murray v. Barnhart, 42 South. 489, 492, 117 La. 1023.

A trust deed, stating in the granting clause, "has and hereby does grant, bargain, sell and convey unto said party of the second part or his successors in trust," is not void for uncertainty as to the grantee by reason of the use of the word "or"; it being the intention of the grantor to vest the legal title of the property in the trustee, with power, on conditions named, to substitute a trustee. Empire Ranch & Cattle Co. v. Stratton, 126 Pac. 1084, 22 Colo. App. 577 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5002).

Same—In civil statutes

"Or" and "and" may be read convertibly in construing a statute, to effect legislative intent. Ransom v. Rutherford County, 130 S. W. 1057, 1063, 123 Tenn. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1356; In re Steinruck's Insolvency, 74 Atl. 360, 225 Pa. 461; People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 903, 125 App. Div. 384.

The word "and" may be substituted for the word "or" when necessary to make a statute express the true legislative intent as gathered from the context and the circumstances attending its enactment. James v. United States Fidelity & Guarantee Co., 117 S. W. 406, 409, 133 Ky. 290; State v. Hooker, 98 Pac. 964, 972, 22 Okl. 712; James v. United States Fidelity & Guarantee Co., 117 S. W. 406, 409, 133 Ky. 299.

As used in the proviso limiting the general right of a wife to inherit the real estate of her husband, as given in section 8 of act concerning descents and distributions (section 2510, Gen. St. 1901), which declares that the wife shall not be entitled to any interest under the provisions of this section, in any land to which the husband has made a conveyance, when the wife at the time of the conveyance is not "or" never has been a resident of this state, the word "or" should be read "and," with the effect that a wife who had ever been a resident of this state is entitled to the benefits of the act. Kennedy v. Haskell, 73 Pac. 913, 914, 87 Kan. 612.

As used in Rev. St. 1887, § 4842, providing that an appeal from a justice's court is not effectual unless an undertaking be filed for $100 for the payment of the costs on appeal, or if a stay of proceedings be claimed in a sum equal to twice the judgment, the word "or" means "and," and the statute requires that an undertaking be given for the sum of $100 for the payment of costs, and if a stay of proceedings be claimed, then in an additional sum equal to twice the judgment. Libby v. Spokane Valley Land & Water Co., 98 Pac. 715, 717, 15 Idaho, 467.

Where a landlord had entered for the tenant's breach of the lease and claimed possession, it was entitled to answer in summary proceedings by the tenant's agent to recover possession of a part of the premises from a subtenant under Code Civ. Proc. § 2244, providing that the person to whom the precept is directed or his landlord or any person in possession "or" claiming possession of the premises or a part thereof, may answer; the word "or" being used in such section in its copulative and not in its disjunctive sense. Cohen v. Carpenter, 113 N. Y. Supp. 168, 171, 128 App. Div. 862.

Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 468, c. 415, § 20, as amended by Laws 1890, p. 351, c. 192), providing that, if hoisting apparatus is used in a building in the course of construction, the "contractors or owners" shall cause the openings in each floor to be inclosed, places such duty on the owner of a building as to an employé of an independent contractor, as well as on the contractor, though all the work on the building is being done by independent contractors and the hoisting machine is installed by a hoisting machine company, paid by the contractors for the use thereof. Rooney v. Brogan Const. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 1, 5, 107 App. Div. 258.

In Act N. J. April 18, 1884, § 4, providing "that this act shall not apply to railway, canal, 'or' banking corporations, * * * 'or' manufacturing companies 'or' mining companies carrying on business in this state," the word "or" is used in its copulative, and not in its disjunctive, sense, and the qualifying words "carrying on business in this state" relate to all the corporations designated in the act, and not merely to mining companies. Standard Underground Cable Co. v. Attorney General, 19 Atl. 733, 735, 46 N. J. Eq. 270, 19 Am. St. Rep. 394.

Laws 1905, p. 163, c. 103, § 6, providing that one who has not purchased "one complement" of school land "under this act or former law" may buy not to exceed eight sections in designated counties, or such part thereof as will complete "his complement," under this act, including the purchase under the act of 1901, when taken in connection with section 5, authorizing a lessee of school land or an assignee of an entire lease to purchase land included in the lease, provided the applicant has not purchased one complement, as provided by this act or other law, which announces a general rule applicable to all lands except those mentioned in section 6, and defines the rights of lessees and assignees, authorizes one who has purchased four sections in one of the designated counties the full amount allowed by the act of 1901 to purchase four sections additional in such county; the word "complement" in section 6 meaning eight sections, and the phrase therein, "under this act or former law," meaning "under this act and former law." Ross v. Terrell, 90 S. W. 1093, 1095, 99 Tex. 502.

Same—In penal statutes

When necessary to give effect to any part of a statute of the intention of the Legislature, the word "and" may be substituted for "or," and vice versa. Williams v. State, 137 S. W. 927, 928, 99 Ark. 149, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1056; State v. Hooker, 98 Pac. 964, 972, 22 Okl. 712.

Kirby's Dig. § 5242, which is part of an act regulating the practice of medicine, provides that any itinerant vendor of drugs intended for the treatment of disease "or" who may, by writing, print, or other methods, profess to cure diseases by any drug, shall, unless he has a certificate, be in violation of this law. Other parts of the act provide for an examining board to issue certificates, and section 5241 makes it an offense to practice medicine without a license, and section 5243 defines what constitutes the practice of medicine. Held, that in view of the general scope of the act, and that, if construed otherwise, the clause "who may by writing, print or other methods profess to cure disease," etc., would be rendered ineffective, this section must be taken to require only those itinerant vendors of drugs who profess to cure disease to secure a license; the word "or" being construed as "and." Williams v. State, 137 S. W. 927, 99 Ark. 149, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1056.

Acts 1901, c. 78, entitled "An act to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery," as amended by Acts 1907, c. 543, provides in section 4 that it shall be unlawful for any itinerant physician, or vendor of any drug, nostrum, or application, to sell "or" apply the same. Held that, in view of Const. art. 2, § 17, prohibiting a bill from embracing more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, the disjunctive "or," used between "sell" and "apply," must be construed as "and," to bring the act within the title, so that the statute, thus being a regulation of the practice of medicine, is not open to the objection that it prohibits the sale of property, and works a deprivation of the same, contrary to Const. art. 1, § 8, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14. Kirk v. State, 150 S. W. 83, 84, 126 Tenn. 7, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1239.

Enforcing Act (Laws 1907-08, p. 606, c. 69) art. 3, § 8, providing that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath describing, as particularly as may be, the place to be searched "or" the person or thing to be seized, was evidently intended by the Legislature to follow Const. art. 2, § 30 (Bunn's Ed. § 39), providing that no search warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath describing the place to be searched "and" the person or thing to be seized, and, the word "or" being inserted by inadvertence, and to carry out the evident legislative intent, the same will be construed by substituting the conjunctive particle "and" in place of the disjunctive "or." State v. Hooker, 98 Pac. 964, 972, 22 Okl. 712.
